§ 5. —Amount of License Fee.—Where the legislature itself has exercised its discretion as to what is a reasonable license fee, the courts interfere reluctantly, and then only when it is clear that there has been an abuse of discretion.[12] As to the imposition of fees by municipalities, much depends upon the particular authority conferred upon the municipality by the legislature.[13] A power to license auctioneers for the purpose of revenue must be expressly conferred upon a municipal corporation by statute; mere authority to license and regulate auctioneers does not authorize the imposition of a tax,[14] although some courts have adopted the liberal rule that license fees imposed under the police power may be sustained even though a revenue is incidentally derived therefrom.[15] Also, the principle that a license fee in excess of the cost may be imposed upon occupations which, when too freely engaged in, are harmful to the public has been applied to auctioneers.[16] When a tax upon auctioneers is authorized, the necessity of the taxing power is the only limit, unless an unreasonable burden is imposed as compared with that placed on other callings.[17]

---

[20] Chicago v. Ornstein, 323 Ill. 258, 154 N. E. 100, 52 A.L.R. 489; Goshen v. Kern, 63 Ind. 468, 30 Am. Rep. 234.
Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 307; 131 Am. St. Rep. 480; Ann. Cas. 1915B, 816.

[1] Clein v. Atlanta, 164 Ga. 529, 139 S. E. 46, 53 A.L.R. 933; Minneota v. Martin, 124 Minn. 498, 145 N. W. 383, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 812; Sipe v. Murphy, 49 Ohio St. 536, 31 N. E. 884, 17 L.R.A. 184; Dornberg v. Spokane, 125 Wash. 72, 215 P. 518, 31 A.L.R. 295.
While the business of an auctioneer is one that is subject to legislative regulation, the business is a lawful and useful one, and the right to regulate does not include the right to prohibit it. Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A. 1915B, 151.

[2] Carrollton v. Bazzette, 159 Ill. 284, 42 N. E. 837, 31 L.R.A. 522.
The power conferred on a municipality to tax, license, and regulate auctioneers authorizes the adoption of any reasonable ordinance for that purpose, but does not authorize the imposition of unreasonable tax or license regulations. Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 306, s. 39 A.L.R. 773, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491; Ann. Cas. 1915B, 815.
Whether the amount of a license fee or tax is reasonable is a question of law for the court, and not one of fact for the jury. Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 306; Ann. Cas. 1915B, 815.

[3] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 307; Ann. Cas. 1915B, 816.

[4] Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A.1915B, 151.
Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 304, 307.

[5] See infra, § 5.

[6] Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A.1915B, 151.
Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 304; 61 A.L.R. 346.

[7] Carrollton v. Bazzette, 159 Ill. 284, 42 N. E. 837, 31 L.R.A. 522 (ordinance requiring license fees of temporary residents and imposing none on permanent residents).
Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 307; 61 A.L.R. 346; 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 290; Ann. Cas. 1915B. 815, 816.

[8] Sipe v. Murphy, 49 Ohio St. 536, 31 N. E. 884, 17 L.R.A. 184.
Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 310.

[9] Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A. 1915B, 151.
Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 305; 20 L.R.A. 725.

[10] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 305.

[11] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 306.
The license of an auctioneer may not be forfeited, however, in a civil suit brought by a neighboring merchant. Gilly v. Hirsh, 122 La. 966, 48 So. 422, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 972. Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 305.

[12] Minneota v. Martin, 124 Minn. 498, 145 N. W. 383, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 812.

As regards the amount of the fee imposed, substantial fees have been upheld in some jurisdictions,[18] while similar fees in other jurisdictions have been held invalid.[19]

Statutes graduating the amount of fees payable by auctioneers according to the population of the places where they do business are not invalid as discriminatory.[20]

§ 6. Effect of Failure to Obtain License.—Under most license regulations, the act of selling property at auction without a license constitutes a misdemeanor.[1] Under some statutes or ordinances, the auctioneer may be precluded from recovering for his services; under others, his right to compensation is not affected.[2] The sale is not, however, vitiated by the fact that the auctioneer did not have the required license unless the statute or ordinance imposing it requires a different construction.[3]

[13] Stull v. De Mattos, 23 Wash. 71, 62 P. 451, 51 L.R.A. 892.

[14] Fowle v. Alexandria, 3 Pet. 398, 7 L. ed. 719; Minneota v. Martin, 124 Minn. 498, 145 N. W. 383, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 812.

Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 306, s. 39 A.L.R. 773, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491; Ann. Cas. 1915B, 815.

[15] Carrollton v. Bazzette, 159 Ill. 284, 42 N. E. 837, 31 L.R.A. 522.

Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 306, s. 39 A.L.R. 773, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491; Ann. Cas. 1915B, 815.

[16] Minneota v. Martin, 124 Minn. 498, 145 N. W. 383, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 812.

[17] Stull v. De Mattos, 23 Wash. 71, 62 P. 451, 51 L.R.A. 892 (holding that while a fee of $25 per day could not be sustained as a regulation, it could be sustained as a tax).

Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 306, s. 39 A.L.R. 773, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491; Ann. Cas. 1915B, 815 et seq.

Although a statute may authorize villages to license and tax auctioneers, where it is plain that an ordinance imposing a license fee made no attempt to tax, the legality of the fee must rest on its reasonableness within the scope of a proper exercise of the police power. Minneota v. Martin, 124 Minn. 498, 145 N. W. 383, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 812.

[18] Minneota v. Martin, 124 Minn. 498, 145 N. W. 383, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 812 (construing a statute authorizing a village council to require a license, and providing that $25 a day should be a reasonable fee for an auctioneer's license); Stull v. De Mattos, 23 Wash. 71, 62 P. 451, 51 L.R.A. 892 (holding that while a fee of $25 a day could not be sustained under the police power, yet it could be sustained as a tax).

Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 310, s. 39 A.L.R. 776, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491; 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40; Ann. Cas. 1915B, 816.

[19] Carrollton v. Bazzette, 159 Ill. 284, 42 N. E. 837, 31 L.R.A. 522 (fee of $10 per day imposed on "itinerant merchants" held plainly unreasonable and prohibitive); Sipe v. Murphy, 49 Ohio St. 536, 31 N. E. 884, 17 L.R.A. 184 (holding an ordinance requiring a license fee of $25 per day for selling at auction merchandise imported into the city invalid).

Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 310, s. 39 A.L.R. 776, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491; 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40; Ann. Cas. 1915B, 817.

[20] Toyota v. Hawaii, 226 U. S. 184, 57 L. ed. 180, 33 S. Ct. 47.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1915B, 815.

[1] Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A.1915B, 151.

The fact that the auctioneer acted without compensation has been held to be no defense to a prosecution for selling at auction without a license. Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 304.

[2] Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 851, s. 42 A.L.R. 1228.

[3] Ley v. Babcock, 118 Cal. App. 525, 5 P. (2d) 620, citing R. C. L.; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075.

That an auctioneer who conducted a land sale was not licensed does not affect the validity of a sale of land conducted by him as between the vendor and purchaser.

One employed by the auctioneer to use the hammer and make the outcry under the personal supervision and direction of the auctioneer is not ordinarily required to have an auctioneer's license;[4] nor will the auctioneer's occasional absence during the sale subject his substitute to the penalties of the statute or ordinance against selling by auction without a license.[5] However, an ostensible relationship of employer and employee, entered into as a subterfuge to evade payment of the auctioneer's license tax, is no defense to an action to recover the statutory penalty for carrying on the business without a license.[6]

§ 7. Regulation Other than Requirement of License.—In addition to prohibiting auctioneering except through licensed auctioneers, the state or municipality may, in the exercise of the police power, impose such other regulations on the conduct of the business as are reasonable and not wholly arbitrary.[7] On the other hand, regulations which unreasonably limit the right of an auctioneer to sell the goods of another, having no reasonable relation to the public health, comfort, morals, or welfare, are unenforceable.[8] Among the many and varied regulations which have been imposed upon the conduct of auctions are regulations with respect to the time[9] and place[10] of sale, the kind of goods to be sold,[11] as well as various miscellaneous regulations.[12] There is some difference of opinion as to the validity of a regulation which prohibits auction sales at night.[13] Some courts hold such a regulation to be unreasonable and invalid.[14] Others take the view that it is a valid police regulation,[15] particularly when directed toward auctions of jewelry.[16] Stat-

---

Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075.

[4] A statute expressly forbidding an auctioneer to authorize any person to act as his substitute does not prevent him from employing a crier if he superintends the sale in person. Annotation: 50 Am. St. Rep. 115.

[5] Kimmins v. Montrose, 59 Colo. 578, 151 P. 434, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 407.

Annotation: 50 Am. St. Rep. 115.

[6] Kimmins v. Montrose, 59 Colo. 578, 151 P. 434, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 407 (under the facts of this case, the burden of proof was held to be on the defendant to show that he was acting as the assistant of another regularly licensed auctioneer).

[7] Clein v. Atlanta, 164 Ga. 529, 139 S. E. 46, 53 A.L.R. 933; People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127, 152 N. W. 1053, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 830; Biddles v. Enright, 239 N. Y. 354, 146 N. E. 625, 39 A.L.R. 766; Holsman v. Thomas, 112 Ohio St. 397, 147 N. E. 750, 39 A.L.R. 760.

[8] People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127, 152 N. W. 1053, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 830; Miller v. Greenville, 134 S. C. 314, 132 S. E. 591, 46 A.L.R. 155; Dornberg v. Spokane, 125 Wash. 72, 215 P. 518, 31 A.L.R. 295.

The courts will ordinarily presume that a legislative body acted reasonably and that the regulation adopted has some relation to the public health, safety, convenience, or welfare; yet, in the final analysis, the reasonableness thereof is a judicial question. Dornberg v. Spokane, 125 Wash. 72, 215 P. 518, 31 A.L.R. 295.

[9] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 303, s. 39 A.L.R. 775, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491.

[10] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 302, s. 39 A.L.R. 774, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491.

An ordinance forbidding public auctions within a prescribed portion of the business district of a city is invalid, the fact that crowds are attracted by an auction being insufficient to warrant such regulation. Dornberg v. Spokane, 125 Wash. 72, 215 P. 518, 31 A.L.R. 295.

[11] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 302, s. 39 A.L.R. 775, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491.

An ordinance providing that no jewelry may be sold at auction for a period greater than sixty days in any one year and that the goods and the owner must be on the premises six months has been upheld as a valid police regulation. Holsman v. Thomas, 112 Ohio St. 397, 147 N. E. 750, 39 A.L.R. 760.

An ordinance that limits auctions of jewelry to six successive days in any calendar year has been held an unreasonable limitation on the right of the auctioneer to sell the goods of another. Miller v. Greenville, 134 S. C. 314, 132 S. E. 591, 46 A.L.R. 155.

[12] Annotation: 39 A.L.R. 775, s. 46 A.L.R. 157.

An application for a permit to hold an auction for the sale of jewelry may be required to be accompanied by an inventory of the articles to be sold. Holsman v. Thomas, 112 Ohio St. 397, 147 N. E. 750, 39 A.L.R. 760.

[13] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 303, s. 39 A.L.R. 775, 46 A.L.R. 157, and 52 A.L.R. 491.

[14] People v. Gibbs, 186 Mich. 127, 152 N. W. 1053, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 830 (ordinance prohibiting auction sales between the hours of 6 o'clock P. M. and 8 o'clock A. M.).

[15] Biddles v. Enright, 239 N. Y. 354, 146 N. E. 625, 39 A.L.R. 766 (statute prohibitutes and ordinances sometimes require an auctioneer to post a bond, designed to protect the owner of the goods as regards payment of the proceeds as well as to protect purchasers from fraud and misrepresentation.[17]

III. AUTHORITY AND AGENCY OF AUCTIONEER

§ 8. Generally.—The mere fact that an auctioneer is sometimes required to take out a license in order to exercise his calling [18] does not constitute him a public officer. His business is essentially a private one.[19] His authority to conduct a particular sale is derived from the person whose property he undertakes to sell,[20] and he is primarily the agent of that person, being selected and remunerated by him, acting in his interests, and, in a measure, being subservient to his wishes.[1] However, upon the acceptance of a bid upon the property being sold,[2] the auctioneer becomes, for the purpose of drawing up and signing the memorandum that takes the transaction out of the operation of the statute of frauds, the agent of the purchaser as well as the agent of the seller. This dual agency is solely for the purpose of drawing up and signing such memorandum, and even as to this purpose, the auctioneer's agency in behalf of the buyer is generally more restricted than his agency in behalf of the seller. This authority must be exercised contemporaneously with the sale, and not thereafter.[3]

Ordinarily, an auctioneer's authority to sell either land or goods need not be evidenced by any written instrument,[4] even though the contract of sale must be in writing.[5] In many jurisdictions, however, statutes require that the auctioneer's authority to sell be evidenced by a writing signed by the owner.[6]

§ 9. Scope and Extent of Authority.—An auctioneer's authority is commensurate with the nature and extent of the agency thus conferred upon him, and when he exceeds the scope of his authority, he does not bind the owner of the property.[7] As to matters on which the express terms of his agency are silent, his authority is to be measured by the general usage of the business.[8] In general, the manner of conducting the sale lies wholly within ing the conduct of the business of auctioneering at night between sunset and sunrise).

---

Excepting books and prints, art work, animals, farm products, and goods sold in original packages from a statute forbidding auction sales at night is not such discrimination as to render the act unconstitutional. Ibid.

[16] Clein v. Atlanta, 164 Ga. 529, 139 S. E. 46, 53 A.L.R. 933.

[17] Clein v. Atlanta, 164 Ga. 529, 139 S. E. 46, 53 A.L.R. 933; Holsman v. Thomas, 112 Ohio St. 397, 147 N. E. 750, 39 A.L.R. 760.

Annotation: L.R.A.1917B, 1013.

[18] See supra, § 3.

[19] Seemuller v. Fuchs, 64 Md. 217, 1 A. 120, 54 Am. Rep. 766.

[20] Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195.

[1] Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018; McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93; Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 262; Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A.1915B, 151; Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 480.

See Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Agency, p. 10.

As to whether an auctioneer acts in a "fiduciary capacity" under the Bankruptcy Act, see annotation: Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1297.

[2] See infra, § 17.

[3] See infra, §§ 30, 31.

[4] Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 407, 60 Am. Dec. 756; Dawson v. Miller, 20 Tex. 171, 70 Am. Dec. 380.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 482.

[5] See infra, § 33.

[6] Baham v. Bach, 13 La. 287, 33 Am. Dec. 561.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 482.

[7] Broughton v. Silloway, 114 Mass. 71, 19 Am. Rep. 312; Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163; Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261, 84 Am. Dec. 343.

[8] Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163.

An auctioneer may assume that he has the authority usually exercised in such employment, or which has been exercised previously by him when representing the principal, unless restrictions are imposed. Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Agency, § 34b.

the auctioneer's discretion, and in the reasonable exercise of such discretion, he is justified in adjourning the sale to another day.[9] He also has implied authority to receive payment of the purchase price of merchandise sold for the principal, except where the latter has given notice to the purchaser to pay direct to him.[10] Usually, however, he has no authority to sell the goods on credit unless he has the owner's express direction or consent.[11] Likewise, where the terms of sale require payment in cash, the auctioneer has no authority, by virtue of his employment as such, to receive a check in payment, and the vendor is not bound by such an unauthorized act even in the absence of notification to the purchaser that he repudiates the transaction.[12] The auctioneer's authority is confined to making the sale, and he cannot rescind it even before the payment of the purchase money.[13]

The auctioneer's misrepresentation or other fraudulent conduct which deceives a purchaser to the latter's injury and inures to the benefit of the owner entitles the purchaser to redress in an action against the owner,[14] regardless of whether he authorized or was aware of the fraud.[15]

§ 10. —Power to Warrant.—The general rule is that in the absence of express authority, an auctioneer has no power to warrant the goods he offers at auction so as to bind the seller; his agency to sell does not carry with it, by implication, power to warrant,[16] although the vendor may, of course, ratify his statements and thus render the warranty binding upon himself.[17] Moreover, the auctioneer may bind himself personally by a warranty.[18] In some instances statutes have conferred on auctioneers authority to give particular warranties, except where such authority is specially restricted; and in such a case the buyer may rely on the auctioneer's warranty and obtain redress against the seller unless he has actual or constructive notice of such a restriction.[1]

§ 11. Duration of Agency; Right to Terminate.—Except where an auctioneer's authority as agent of the vendor is coupled with an interest in the goods to be sold, it is subject at any time to the revocation of his principal the same as all other relations of agency. Thus, at any time before the fall of the hammer, the vendor may withdraw the property offered for sale,[2] and, according to some authorities, he may revoke the auctioneer's authority to sign the memorandum of sale in his behalf, even after the fall of the hammer.[3] As to the vendor, on the other hand, it is to be noted that the agency of the auctioneer is far more extensive than in the case of the vendee. Being primarily the agent of the former, his authority usually commences prior to the date of sale, since he is ordinarily given charge of the proceedings and arrangements leading thereto, and continues for some time after the auction until the sale is actually consummated in all its details.[4] His authority in each case, however, would depend upon the particular facts and circumstances.[5]

---

[9] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43; Roberts v. Roberts, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 639, 70 Am. Dec. 435; McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 45 Wash. 285, 88 P. 199, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 748.

Annotation: 9 Am. St. Rep. 882.

[10] Annotation: 8 A.L.R. 227.

After the sale is made and the goods have been delivered, the auctioneer has no implied authority subsequently to receive the purchase price. Annotation: 8 A.L.R. 227.

[11] Broughton v. Silloway, 114 Mass. 71, 19 Am. Rep. 312; Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163.

[12] Broughton v. Silloway, 114 Mass. 71, 19 Am. Rep. 312.

[13] Annotation: 18 L. ed. 43.

[14] Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018; Roberts v. French, 153 Mass. 60, 26 N. E. 416, 10 L.R.A. 656, 25 Am. St. Rep. 611 (misstatement as to dimensions of tract of land); Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1915C, 581.

[15] Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018.

Where sham bids are employed by an auctioneer to enhance the price of property far beyond its true value, the defrauded purchaser may maintain an action against the vendor who has adopted the sale and received the benefits of it, however innocent the latter himself may have been of any intent to defraud. Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018.

[16] The Monte Allegre, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 616, 6 L. ed. 174; Court v. Snyder, 2 Ind. App. 440, 28 N. E. 718, 50 Am. St. Rep. 247; Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163; Cysewski v. Fried, 24 N. D. 152, 139 N. W. 104, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 579.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 496; Ann. Cas. 1915C, 581.

The principal may, of course, ratify the auctioneer's statements. Annotation: 96 Am. Dec. 264.

See also AGENCY, Vol. 2, p. 105, §§ 131 et seq.

[17] See annotation: 96 Am. Dec. 264.

[18] See infra, § 57.

[1] Cysewski v. Fried, 24 N. D. 152, 139 N. W. 104, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 579.

§ 12. Delegation of Authority.—Special trust and confidence are placed in an auctioneer which he cannot delegate in the absence of a direct authorization on the part of his principal. He may employ necessary clerks and servants, and, in the course of a protracted sale, employ others to make the outcry, use the hammer, enter the bids, and do other acts incident to the sale, when this is done under his immediate direction and supervision,[6] but he may not appoint deputies to make sales at different places in his absence.[7]

§ 13. Interest of Auctioneer in Purchase.[8]—The principle that an agent having the power to sell or convey the property of his principal cannot, directly or indirectly, purchase such property without the consent of his principal[9] precludes an auctioneer, without the consent of his employer, from becoming the purchaser or interested in the purchase of the property which he is employed to sell.[10] If re does so and the owner seeks to impeach the sale, no inquiry will be permitted into the fairness or unfairness of the transaction.[11] Such a sale, however, is voidable, not absolutely void; strangers to the property may not question it.[12]

IV. CONDUCT AND VALIDITY OF SALE

§ 14. The Advertisement.—The main purpose of the advertisement of an auction is to give notice of the sale; it may announce the terms and conditions and include a description of the property to be sold.[13] In the case of voluntary auctions, it is ordinarily purely optional with the owner whether the sale shall be preceded by an advertisement,[14] although an advertisement is a necessary prerequisite to a valid judicial sale.[15] There is some conflict of authority on the question as to whether or not representations as to goods to be sold at auction, contained in newspaper advertisements, catalogues, circulars, etc., become a part of the contract and constitute an express warranty for breach of which the seller will be liable in damages to a purchaser who relies thereon to his injury, or give rise to an action for fraud or misrepresentation. Some cases take the view that the advertisement is simply for the purpose of inducing the buyer to attend the sale, and that representations contained therein are not a part of the contract of sale unless such statements are expressly adopted at the time of the sale.[16] Others hold that a representation contained in an advertisement may amount to a warranty.[17] The effect of such a representation may be altered by declarations made by the seller or the auctioneer at the time of the sale.[18] In some instances, the advertisement may expressly negative a warranty of the goods to be sold.[19]

---

[2] Tillman v. Dunman, 114 Ga. 406, 40 S. E. 244, 57 L.R.A. 784, 88 Am. St. Rep. 28.
Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 784.

[3] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 481.
See also infra, § 30.

[4] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 481.
And see infra, § 31.

[5] See infra, § 31.

[6] Annotation: 50 Am. St. Rep. 115; 131 Am. St. Rep. 482.

[7] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 482.

[8] As to whether an auctioneer may bid in behalf of a third person, see infra, § 21.

[9] See Agency, Vol. 2, p. 207, § 256.

[10] Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. (U. S.) 494, 14 L. ed. 787; Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018; Mills v. Goodsell, 5 Conn. 475, 13 Am. Dec. 90; Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 296; Remick v. Butterfield, 31 N. H. 70, 64 Am. Dec. 316; Roberson v. Ramsey, 147 Tenn. 25, 245 S. W. 413, citing R. C. L.

Annotation: 20 L.R.A. 503; 131 Am. St. Rep. 482, 485; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1175.

The rule does not prevent an auctioneer from being interested in a corporation which is selling the property, as an auctioneer may sell his own property. Annotation. 131 Am. St. Rep. 483.

In Swires v. Brotherline, 41 Pa. 135, 80 Am. Dec. 601, however, it is stated that if an auctioneer bids at his own sale fairly and openly, it tends to enhance the price and is no ground for treating the sale as fraudulent.

Generally, as to who may bid at an auction sale, see infra, § 21.

[11] Mills v. Goodsell, 5 Conn. 475, 13 Am. Dec. 90; Remick v. Butterfield, 31 N. H. 70, 64 Am. Dec. 316.

[12] Remick v. Butterfield, 31 N. H. 70, 64 Am Dec. 316. See also Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018.

[13] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1001, 1002.

[14] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 484.
As to advertisement and notice on re-

It is settled beyond dispute that an advertisement of an auction is not an offer to sell which becomes binding, even conditionally, on the owner when a bid is made. On principle and authority, the correct rule is that an announcement that a person will sell his property at public auction to the highest bidder is a mere declaration of intention to hold an auction at which bids will be received.[20]

§ 15. Terms and Conditions of Sale.—It is the right of the owner of property sold at auction to prescribe, within reasonable limits, the manner, conditions, and terms of sale.[1] Usually the auctioneer, at the time and place appointed for the auction, announces these terms and conditions.[2] The auctioneer should specifically announce the name of his principal; otherwise he may be personally liable as vendor.[3] Terms and conditions so announced generally are deemed to supersede all others and to bind the purchaser even though he did not hear or understand the announcement or was not present at the time of the announcement and such terms were not brought to his actual attention.[4] The conditions of sale may be incorporated in an advertisement of the auction;[5] in such case, a reference thereto at the time and place of sale is a sufficient announcement of the terms and conditions of the sale.[6] sale of property held to fix the seller's damages, see infra, § 45.

---

[15] See Judicial Sales [Also 16 R. C. L. p. 55, § 39].

[16] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1001, 1002.

[17] Henshaw v. Robins, 9 Met. (Mass.) 83, 43 Am. Dec. 367.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1004.

[18] Hadley v. Clinton County Importing Co. 13 Ohio St. 502, 82 Am. Dec. 454.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1001.

[19] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1001, 1005.
See also Mottram v. United States, 271 U. S. 15, 70 L. ed. 803, 46 S. Ct. 386 (through an error, a catalogue listed the quantity of an article at 100 times greater than the actual quantity, the catalogue stating that the supplies were sold subject to errors in description, the amount of the bid being subsequently refunded).

[20] Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379.
See also infra, § 17.

[1] Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1128.

[2] Kennell v Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127; Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.
Annotation: 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1129.

[3] Annotation: 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 586.
See infra, § 57.

[4] Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127; Definite Contract Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Tumin, 158 Va. 771, 164 S. E. 562, citing R. C. L.; Keske v. Boeder, 168 Wis. 369, 170 N. W. 247, citing R. C. L.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1003; 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 488; 131 Am. St. Rep. 484; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1131.

[5] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1002, 1003; 131 Am. St. Rep. 484.

[6] Morgan v. East, 126 Ind. 42, 25 N. E. 867, 9 L.R.A. 558; Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1132.
The terms and conditions set forth in the advertisement of an auction sale of government property are binding alike up-

Particular care should be taken that the conditions announced and the representations made are perfectly complete and accurate.[7] If the vendor wishes to fix a minimum price below which the property will not be sold, or to reserve to himself the right to bid, in person or through another, he must make an express announcement thereof in order that no one will be misled, for otherwise the sale will be deemed to be without reserve.[8] The seller may waive the terms of the sale by not insisting upon a compliance therewith by the buyer.[9]

It has been held that the announced terms of sale may be varied as to the actual purchaser by a prior agreement with him.[10] This, however, would seem contrary to the principle that it is essential to every fair public auction that all the bidders shall stand upon an equal footing,[11] and the contrary view has been taken.[12]

§ 16. —Conflict between Printed and Oral Conditions.—The courts differ as to the effect of a parol modification by the auctioneer, at the time of the sale, of terms previously announced in a written or printed notice of sale. Some courts take the view that the advertisement or advance announcement has no special significance other than to give notice of the fact that a sale is intended,[13] so that the terms contained in such advertisements or notices may be modified or added to by the auctioneer at the beginning of the sale.[14] Others take the view that the printed terms may not be varied or contradicted by parol evidence of the verbal statements made by the auctioneer at the time of the sale,[15] although it is otherwise where the oral declarations are not repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the advertisements or notices, but are merely explanatory.[16] Some hold that the parol declarations of the auctioneer subsequent to and variant from the advertisements can not change the printed terms of sale unless such declarations are shown to have been made known to the purchaser.[17]

§ 17. The Bidding; Offer and Acceptance; Withdrawal of Property from Sale.—A sale at auction, like every other sale, must have the assent, express or implied, of both seller and buyer.[18] An announcement of an auction or the

---

on the United States and the bidders. Erie Coal & Coke Corp. v. United States, 266 U. S. 518, 69 L. ed. 417, 45 S. Ct. 181.

[7] It has been held that a notice at an auction of lots in a residence tract, that the property is restricted as to buildings and against nuisances, does not give fair notice to bidders of a provision which, after restricting the property, character of buildings, and usage, empowers the grantor or his assignees to annul any restriction at pleasure in favor of any lot owner. Sohns v. Beavis, 200 N. Y. 268, 93 N. E. 935, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927.

[8] Miller v. Baynard, 2 Houst. (Del.) 559, 83 Am. Dec. 168; Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379; Davis v. Petway, 3 Head (Tenn.) 667, 75 Am. Dec. 789.

[9] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 484.

[10] Mitchell v. Zimmerman, 109 Pa. 183, 58 Am. Rep. 715.
Annotation: 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1132.

[11] Mott v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 30 Pa. 9, 72 Am. Dec. 664. See also Manhattan Taxi Serv. Corp. v. Checker Cab. Mfg. Co. 253 N. Y. 455, 171 N. E. 705, 69 A.L.R. 1190.

[12] Annotation: 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1132.

[13] Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1131.
See supra, § 14.

[14] Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127; Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1002; 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 488; 131 Am. St. Rep. 484; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1131.

[15] Chouteau v. Goddin, 39 Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1130.
See also Lewis v. E. F. Schlichter Co. 137 Md. 217, 112 A. 282, citing R. C. L.
Parol evidence of the auctioneer's declarations is admissible, however, for the purpose of proving fraud. Chouteau v. Goddin, 39 Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1131.

[16] Lewis v. E. F. Schlichter Co. 137 Md. 217, 112 A. 282, citing R. C. L.; Chouteau v. Goddin, 39 Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1130.

[17] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1003; 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1131.

[18] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3

act of putting property up for sale thereat does not constitute an offer to sell capable of acceptance by the making of a bid.[19] It is rather a mere invitation to those attending the sale to make offers by bids.[20] The contract becomes complete only when the bid is accepted, this being ordinarily denoted by the fall of the hammer.[1] The bidder may withdraw his bid at any time before its acceptance.[2] His right to do so cannot be curtailed by rules or conditions, prescribed by the auctioneer, forbidding the retraction of a bid once it is made.[3] On the other hand, the auctioneer, unless he has announced that the sale shall be "without reserve," may withdraw the goods from sale at any time before the fall of the hammer, in which case even the highest bidder has no claim to the property.[4] If the sale is expressly announced to be "without reserve," however, the owner may be held liable for a withdrawal of the property from the sale after a bid.[5] In that case after a bid has been made the auctioneer cannot

---

Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43; McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 45 Wash. 285, 88 P. 199, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 748.

Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 543.

[19] Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 492.

[20] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43; Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379; Fisher v. Seltzer, 23 Pa. 308, 62 Am. Dec. 335; Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A. 1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841 (under Uniform Sales Law).

Annotation: 18 L. ed. 43; L.R.A.1917A, 76; 131 Am. St. Rep. 492; Ann. Cas. 1918A, 851.

Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Contracts, § 27.

[1] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43; Tillman v. Dunman, 114 Ga. 406, 40 S. E. 244, 57 L.R.A. 784; Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379; Fisher v. Seltzer, 23 Pa. 308, 62 Am. Dec. 335; Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841 (under Uniform Sales Law); McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 54 Wash. 285, 88 P. 199, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 748.

Annotation: 18 L. ed. 43; L.R.A.1917A, 76; Ann. Cas. 1918A, 851.

As stated by the American Law Institute the auctioneer merely invites offers from successive bidders which he may accept or reject unless, by announcing that the sale is without reserve or by other means, he indicates that he is making an offer to sell at any price bid by the highest bidder. Restatement, Contracts, § 27.

The fall of the auctioneer's hammer in response to a fictitious bid by an agent of the property owner does not conclude a contract with the one who made the highest bona fide bid. Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63.

[2] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43; Tillman v. Dunman, 114 Ga. 406, 40 S. E. 244, 57 L.R.A. 784, 88 Am. St. Rep. 28; Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W 39, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379; Fisher v. Seltzer, 23 Pa. 308, 62 Am. Dec. 335; Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841 (under Uniform Sales Law).

Annotation: 18 L. ed. 43; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1129.

Even though the sale is announced to be without reserve any bidder may withdraw his bid until the auctioneer by fall of the hammer, or in other customary manner, announces that the sale is complete. Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Contracts, § 27.

[3] Fisher v. Seltzer, 23 Pa. 308, 62 Am. Dec. 335.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1129.

[4] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43; Tillman v. Dunman, 114 Ga. 406, 40 S. E. 244, 57 L.R.A. 784, 88 Am. St. Rep. 28; Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379; Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841 (under Uniform Sales Law); McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 45 Wash. 285, 88 P. 199, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 748.

Annotation: 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133; L.R.A. 1917A, 74; Ann. Cas. 1918A, 851; 16 Ann. Cas. 386.

Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Contracts, § 27.

The conflict and confusion in the earlier cases (annotation: 57 L.R.A. 784) generally has been resolved by the later decisions. See annotation: L.R.A.1917A, 74.

By withdrawing his property under such circumstances the owner does not infringe upon any right of the bidder, for the latter merely offers to purchase, and if his offer is declined, he has no remedy even though he may have lost a bargain and incurred expense and loss of time in attending the sale. Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379.

Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 787.

[5] Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841.

Annotation: L.R.A.1917A, 76.

Statutes which have provided that where an announcement that the sale will be without reserve is made, the highest bidder has an absolute right to the completion of the sale to him, have nevertheless provided also that bids may be withdrawn at any time before the hammer falls. Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 788, withdraw.[5a] These common-law principles are adopted by the Uniform Sales Act.[6]

Once a bid has been accepted, the parties occupy the same relation toward each other as exists between promisor and promisee in an executory contract of sale conventionally made. Thereafter, as a rule, the seller has no right to accept a higher bid, nor may the buyer withdraw his bid.[7] Where, however, the statute of frauds requires a memorandum in writing, the bidder, according to some authorities, has an opportunity, between the time of the fall of the hammer and the writing of his name in the memorandum, to revoke the authority of the auctioneer, as his agent, to sign such memorandum in his behalf, and thus, in this instance, indirectly accomplish a retraction of his bid.[8]

§ 18. Mode of Making Bids.—There is no formal or prescribed mode of bidding for property put up at auction.[9] A bid may be made by words spoken aloud or put in writing, by a wink or nod, or by any mode by which the bidder signifies his willingness and intention to give a particular price.[10] It is improper, however, for any bidder to have a secret arrangement with an auctioneer whereby he denotes his bids by means of a private signal, for the effect of this would be to give that bidder an advantage over others,[11] and it is of the essence of an auction that there shall be full and free opportunity for competition among bidders.[12] It is not essential to the validity of a bid at an auction that the bidder be personally present at the sale;[13] he may employ another person to bid for him.[14] Again, a bid at auction may be made by letter, and if it proves to be the highest made, the writer will be deemed the purchaser of the property put up for sale.[15] Ordinarily, the auctioneer has the right to prescribe the rules of bidding as a part of the terms and conditions of sale, and any bid not in conformity with the terms and conditions of sale as advertised and announced by the auctioneer is not entitled to consideration.[16]

§ 19. Mode of Accepting Bids.—The acceptance of a bid at auction is denoted by the fall of the hammer or by any other audible or visible means signifying to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid according to the terms of the sale.[17] The most usual mode is by the fall of the hammer, and from this method are derived the expressions that the property is "struck off," or "knocked off," or "knocked down" to the bidder.[18]

[5a] Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Contracts, § 27.

[6] Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841.
Annotation: 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133.

[7] Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117; State v. School Land Comrs. 27 Wyo. 54, 191 P. 1073, 11 A.L.R. 539.
Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 545; 131 Am. St. Rep. 491.
One to whom property offered for sale at auction is knocked down cannot avoid his bid because the auctioneer was signaled to accept it for the purpose of preventing an objectionable bidder from making a higher bid. Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117.

[8] See infra, § 30.

[9] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 543.

[10] Tyree v. Williams, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 365, 6 Am. Dec. 663; State ex rel. Fitch v. State Bd. of School Land Comrs. 27 Wyo. 54, 191 P. 1073, 11 A.L.R. 539.
Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 543; 131 Am. St. Rep. 484.
The bid may be made in words, uttered aloud in the hearing of the bystanders, or spoken privately to the auctioneer. State ex rel. Fitch v. State Bd. of School Land Comrs. 27 Wyo. 54, 191 P. 1073, 11 A.L.R. 539.

[11] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 484.

[12] Manhattan Taxi Serv. Corp. v. Checker Cab Mfg. Co. 253 N. Y. 455, 171 N. E. 705, 69 A.L.R. 1190.

[13] Farr v. John, 23 Iowa, 286, 92 Am. Dec. 426; Tyree v. Williams, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 365, 6 Am. Dec. 663; State ex rel. Fitch v. State Bd. of School Land Comrs. 27 Wyo. 54, 191 P. 1073, 11 A.L.R. 539.
Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 544.

[14] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 544; 131 Am. St. Rep. 486.

[15] Tyree v. Williams, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 365, 6 Am. Dec. 663; State v. State Bd. of School Land Comrs. 27 Wyo. 54, 191 P. 1073, 11 A.L.R. 539.
Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 544.

[16] Farr v. John, 23 Iowa, 286, 92 Am. Dec. 426.
Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 545; 131 Am. St. Rep. 485; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1129.
Where each successive bid is required to be a stipulated amount in advance of that of the previous bidder, the auctioneer may disregard a bid not conforming to such rule. Farr v. John, 23 Iowa, 286, 92 Am. Dec. 426. Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 491; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1128.

§ 20. Discretion of Auctioneer as to Acceptance of Bids.—An auctioneer is possessed of a large measure of discretion in the conduct of the sale.[19] He may refuse to accept a bid whenever, in his judgment, it is not made in good faith,[20] or whenever the bidder is irresponsible or is laboring under some incapacity.[1] Generally the auctioneer has the right to prescribe rules of bidding, such as a rule that successive bids be a stipulated amount in advance over the previous bid,[2] and irrespective of such a rule, he may refuse bids that are only trifling advances over those previously made.[3]

Where two or more persons each claim to have been the first to offer the highest bid reached, it is proper for the auctioneer to put the property up again at the price bid and as the bid of such one of the competitors as the auctioneer, in the exercise of his best judgment, believes entitled thereto.[4]

An auctioneer may, in the exercise of his discretion, refuse to accept a bid, when it would be a virtual sacrifice of the property to accept it, and either adjourn the auction[5] or withdraw the property from sale.[6] In fact, in such a case it would be his duty to withdraw the property.[7] However, all that can be required of him is that he exercise his best judgment, use due diligence in ascertaining the circumstances, and act in good faith.[8]

---

[17] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43; Tillman v. Dunman, 114 Ga. 406, 40 S. E. 244, 57 L.R.A. 784, 88 Am. St. Rep. 28; Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379; Fisher v. Seltzer, 23 Pa. 308, 62 Am. Dec. 335; State ex rel. Fitch v. State Bd. of School Land Comrs. 27 Wyo. 54, 191 P. 1073, 11 A.L.R. 539.

Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 545; 131 Am. St. Rep. 491.

Under the Uniform Sales Act a sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer announces its completion by the fall of the hammer or in some other customary manner. Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841.

If an auctioneer passes to a second article after receiving a bid on the first, without the express assent of the bidder, this is equivalent to a rejection of the bid. Annotation: 18 L. ed. 43.

Certain expressions such as "going, going, gone," or "sold," are also used by the auctioneer to indicate his acceptance. Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 546.

[18] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 545.

[19] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43; McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 45 Wash. 285, 88 P. 199, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 748.

Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 785, 787, 788; 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133; 131 Am. St. Rep. 492; 96 Am. Dec. 265.

[20] McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 45 Wash. 285, 88 P. 199, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 748.

Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 788.

[1] See infra, § 21.

[2] Farr v. John, 23 Iowa, 286, 92 Am. Dec. 426.

[3] Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 16 Ann. Cas. 379.

Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 788; 131 Am. St. Rep. 492.

[4] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 492.

[5] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43.

[6] McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 45 Wash. 285, 88 P. 199, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 748.

Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 787; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1133.

It has been held, in an action to set aside a sale under a trust deed brought by the owner of the equity, that where, by the terms of the trust deed, the property must be sold for the "highest and best" price, this means the best price obtainable under the circumstances, and does not mean that where there is only one bidder, the auctioneer may not accept his offer. Lathrop v. Tracy, 24 Colo. 382, 51 P. 486, 65 Am. St. Rep. 229.

[7] Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 787; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1133.

An auctioneer may be held liable to the owner where he has failed to exercise any discretion or caution whatever, so that the property was sold at a ruinous sacrifice, even though no minimum figure below which the property should not be sold had been stated to him. Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 787.

[8] Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 18 L. ed. 43; McPher-

§ 21. Who May Bid.—Inasmuch as an auction is an open sale, with few exceptions, anyone is qualified to become a bidder. There is no obligation upon an auctioneer, however, to receive the bid of an insolvent or irresponsible person,[9] nor should he give consideration to the bids of persons who labor under any incapacity, such as infants, lunatics, drunken persons, or persons standing in a fiduciary relation to the property sold.[10] One qualified to become a bidder may delegate an agent to act in his behalf. When property is struck off to one who is in fact the agent of another for that purpose, and such agency is disclosed by the memorandum of sale, the contract may be enforced against the principal when discovered.[11] Obviously if one bids without disclosing the name of his principal either to the auctioneer or to the vendor, he incurs a personal liability on his bid, as purchaser. Similarly, by virtue of estoppel, one who stands by and permits his name to be set down as purchaser by the direction of the bidder may be bound as purchaser, although the bidding was without his authority.[12]

The auctioneer may not, without the consent of the owner, bid on his own account, or, either directly or indirectly, have an interest in the purchase of the property he is engaged to sell.[13] And, although there is some authority to the contrary, it is generally held that the auctioneer may not act as agent for a third person in bidding for the property, without the seller's knowledge and consent.[14] He may, however, undertake an agency simply to bid a particular sum for a purchaser, amounting to no more than receiving from the purchaser, before the auction, a bid which is to be treated as if made there by the purchaser himself.[15] By the great weight of authority, the owner of the property, at whose instance the sale is held, may not engage in the bidding, either directly or indirectly, unless it is expressly announced that he reserves such privilege; he is not allowed to make secret bids with the design of enhancing the price of the property.[16] However, the rule that the seller himself may not bid does not apply to one who merely has a pecuniary interest in the property or in the proceeds of the sale, provided the sale is not under his control.[17] Thus, one joint owner of property may himself, or in

---

son Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 45 Wash. 285, 88 P. 199, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 748.

[9] Annotation: 57 L.R.A. 785, 788; 131 Am. St. Rep. 492; 96 Am. Dec. 265.

[10] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 492; 96 Am. Dec. 265.

[11] Episcopal Church v. Wiley, 11 S. C. Eq. (2 Hill) 584, 30 Am. Dec. 386.

Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 544; 131 Am. St. Rep. 486.

[12] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 486.

[13] See supra, § 13.

[14] Annotation: 20 L.R.A. 508; 131 Am. St. Rep. 485.

It is impossible in good faith to combine the inconsistent capacities of crier and bidder in one and the same transaction. If the auctioneer faithfully discharges his duties, he will, of course, honestly obtain the best price he can for the property. On the other hand, if he undertakes to become the purchaser for another, his interest and his duty alike prompt him to obtain the property upon the most advantageous terms. Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 486.

[15] Richards v. Holmes, 18 How. (U. S.) 143, 15 L. ed. 304; McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93; James v. Kelley, 107 Ga. 446, 33 S. E. 425, 73 Am. St. Rep. 135; Harrison v. McHenry, 9 Ga. 164, 52 Am. Dec. 435.

[16] See, as to "puffing," §§ 22 et seq.

Where it is improper for the seller to bid for himself, it is equally improper for the auctioneer to bid in his behalf. Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018.

The act of knocking down the property to a sham bidder acting as agent for the owner must at least be given the effect of a withdrawal of the property from the sale; the highest bona fide bidder at the sale, whose bid was not accepted, has no claim to the property. Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841.

[17] McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93; Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117; Manuel v. Haselden, 206 Ky. 796, 268 S. W. 554, citing R. C. L.; Rowley v. D'Arcy, 184 Mass. 550, 69 N. E. 325, 64 L.R.A. 190.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 128; 131 Am. St. Rep. 485.

Where the seller is a lodge, the mere fact of membership in the lodge does not deprive one of the right to bid for the property offered at the sale. Osborn v.

conjunction with a stranger, bid at the auction sale, where he was not authorized so to act by the other joint owners, and did not purport to act in their behalf.[18]

§ 22. By-bidding or Puffing—In General.—The presence at auction sales of persons who bid for the purpose of inflating the value of the property in behalf of those interested in the sale is a matter of very common occurrence, and has been from the time that auction sales were first known. A person of the character referred to is usually denominated a "puffer." Other terms used to designate such a person are "sham bidder," "by-bidder," "capper," "decoy duck," and "white bonnet."[19] A puffer, in the strictest meaning of the word, is a person who, without having any intention to purchase, is employed by the seller at an auction to raise the price by fictitious bids, thereby increasing competition among the bidders, while he himself is secured from risk by a secret understanding with the seller that he shall not be bound by his bids.[20] The criterion by which a puffer is to be determined is that he is acting for a person who has such control of the auction that the latter can of his own volition release a bidder from all responsibility for his bid. Accordingly, the mere fact that a person interested in the property to be sold or in the proceeds of such sale procures another to bid, either openly or secretly, in his behalf, under an agreement that such agent shall suffer no personal loss thereby, does not constitute such bidder a puffer if the one employing such bidder has not himself such control of the sale that he could absolutely release the bidder from all responsibility growing out of his having participated in the sale in that capacity. If, notwithstanding such agreement, the auctioneer can hold the bidder responsible for the amount of his bid, then such bidder would not be a puffer, within the meaning of the law.[1]

§ 23. —Legal Effect of Puffing; Majority Rule.—In the United States it is held by the great weight of authority that unless a right in the seller to bid is reserved, fictitious bidding by the auctioneer or by any other person acting on behalf of the seller is a fraud on legitimate bidders, entitling the successful bidder to rescind his contract,[2] even though the purchaser was

---

Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117.

And see infra, §§ 22, 24.

[18] Manuel v. Haselden, 206 Ky. 796, 268 S. W. 554, citing R. C. L.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 129.

[19] McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93;

[20] McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93; Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117; Manuel v. Haselden, 206 Ky. 796, 268 S. W. 554, citing R. C. L.; Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338, 48 Am. Rep. 398.

Annotation: 12 L. ed. 1018; 131 Am. St. Rep. 490.

In Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117, it is held that where there is a secret agreement between one conducting an auction and a bidder for property that the latter shall have the property at a specified price regardless of the price bid, such person is not technically a by-bidder, but it is suggested that one injuriously affected by such an arrangement might have equities arising out of it.

[1] McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93; Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117; Manuel v. Haselden, 206 Ky. 796, 268 S. W. 554, citing R. C. L.; D'Arcy v. Rowley, 184 Mass. 550, 69 N. E. 325, 64 L.R.A. 190.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 128; 131 Am. St. Rep. 489, 491.

See infra, § 24.

As to bidding by one joint owner of property, see supra, § 21.

[2] Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018; Miller v. Baynard, 2 Houst. (Del.) 559, 83 Am. Dec. 168; McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93 (dictum); Bunts v. Cole, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 265, 41 Am. Dec. 226; Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117; Burdon v. Seitz, 206 Ky. 336, 267 S. W. 219, citing R. C. L.; Baham v. Bach, 13 La. 287, 33 Am. Dec. 561; Moncrieff v. Goldsborough, 4 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 281, 1 Am. Dec. 407; Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Bellows v. Russell, 20 N. H. 427, 51 Am. Dec. 238 (dictum); Mc-contending with real bidders at the time the property was knocked down to him.[3] The Uniform Sales Act applies this rule in substance to sales of personalty at auction.[4] It is immaterial whether such fictitious bidding was employed merely to prevent a sacrifice of the property or whether the purpose was to enhance the price unduly.[5] Nor is the fact that the property was worth what was bid, in other words, that the price was reasonable, material according to the view expressed in several decisions.[6] It is also immaterial that the owner had no knowledge of the employment of puffers by the auctioneer or of by-bidding done by the auctioneer himself.[7]

Any secret arrangement having a tendency to mislead a bidder is a serious departure from fair dealing, and if the price is thereby enhanced, it amounts to a deception practiced by the seller upon the purchaser, advantageous to the former and injurious to the latter.[8] If the vendor, with a view to preventing a sacrifice of his property, desires to have any restrictions upon the right of the highest bona fide bidder to take the property, he should make such a provision as one of the conditions of the sale, or start the property at a certain price, or reserve a bid to himself. But if he puts the property up for sale without any reservation, then the purchaser is entitled to buy at an undervalue if he can fairly do so, and any secret contrivance by way of puffing which deprives him of this right vitiates the sale.[9]

Where a large tract of land is cut up into lots, and sales of the lots are made at the same time and as parts of the same transaction, there is a pre-

---

Dowell v. Simms, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 130, 57 Am. Dec. 595; Flannery v. Jones, 180 Pa. 338, 36 A. 856, 57 Am. St. Rep. 648; Staines v. Shore, 16 Pa. 200, 55 Am. Dec. 492; Pennock's Appeal, 14 Pa. 446, 53 Am. Dec. 561; Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841; Edmunds v. Gwynn, 157 Va. 538, 161 S. E. 892, reversing on rehearing 157 Va. 528, 159 S. E. 205, citing R. C. L.; Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338, 48 Am. Rep. 398.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 123; 12 L. ed. 1018; 131 Am. St. Rep. 485.

In Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018, the court ordered that the sale be rescinded, with the proviso, however, that if the seller refunded to the purchaser the excess bid by him over and above the highest bona fide bid, the sale might stand.

As to when action to rescind should be taken, see infra, § 47.

[3] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 488.

[4] Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 128.

[5] Burdon v. Seitz, 206 Ky. 336, 267 S. W. 219, citing R. C. L.; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Edmunds v. Gwynn, 157 Va. 538, 161 S. E. 892, reversing on rehearing 157 Va. 528, 159 S. E. 205, citing R. C. L.; Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338, 48 Am. Rep. 398.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 124.

The American courts have quite consistently refused to recognize the former English chancery rule that an owner may employ a by-bidder to prevent a sacrifice of his property, though not to enhance the price unduly. The owner's remedy is to fix publicly a minimum selling price. Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195. Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 124.

[6] Burdon v. Seitz, 206 Ky. 336, 267 S. W. 219, citing R. C. L.; Staines v. Shore, 16 Pa. 200, 55 Am. Dec. 492; Edmunds v. Gwynn, 157 Va. 538, 161 S. E. 892, reversing on rehearing, 157 Va. 528, 159 S. E. 205, citing R. C. L.; Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338, 48 Am. Rep. 398.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 125; 131 Am. St. Rep. 488.

Where there is only a single parcel offered at a sale held without reserve, if there is secret by-bidding, the purchaser has the absolute right to repudiate the contract, and the presumption that he has been imposed upon is absolute. Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117.

[7] Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018; Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 125.

[8] Miller v. Baynard, 2 Houst. (Del.) 559, 83 Am. Dec. 168; Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Flannery v. Jones, 180 Pa. 338, 36 A. 856, 57 Am. St. Rep. 648.

[9] Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018; Miller v. Baynard, 2 Houst. (Del.) 559, 83 Am. Dec. 168; McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93; Baham v. Bach, 13 La. 287, 33 Am. Dec. 561; Moncrief v. Goldsborough, 4 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 281, 1 Am. Dec. 407; Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Doe ex dem. Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564; Pennock's Appeal, 14 Pa. 446, 53 Am. Dec. 561; Flannery v. Jones, 180 Pa. 338, 36 A. 856, 57 Am. St. Rep. 648; Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338, 48 Am. Rep. 398.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 124; 12 L. ed. 1018; 57 Am. St. Rep. 653; 78 Am. St. Rep. 105; 131 Am. St. Rep. 489.

sumption that the last bidders are influenced and injured by fictitious bids upon lots previously sold, and they may avoid the sale without further proof that they were influenced and injured, if there is no evidence tending to control or rebut such presumption.[10] This presumption may be rebutted by the facts and circumstances, and if it is shown that the by-bidding had no effect upon the purchaser's bid, the latter cannot avoid his contract.[11] While it has been held that in a bill to rescind a contract for land purchased at auction on the ground that the vendor employed puffers, it is necessary to allege that by reason of the bidding the plaintiff was induced to give more for the land than it was worth, or more than he had previously made up his mind to give,[12] the better view seems to be that the employment of a puffer is a legal fraud, and not merely a fraud in fact, so that prejudice is presumed.[13]

§ 24. —When Rule Inapplicable.—Obviously if the price is enhanced by bidders who are not puffers in the strict legal sense of the word,[14] the purchaser cannot avoid his contract. One is not a puffer unless the person employing him has such control of the sale that he could absolutely release the bidder from all responsibility.[15] The mere fact that the person employing the bidder is interested in the property or in the proceeds of the sale does not enable a purchaser to avoid the sale on the ground of puffing.[16] Thus, if, unknown to an auctioneer and an assignee in insolvency for whom he is conducting a sale, the creditors of the estate combine to enhance the price by fictitious bids, the sale is not rendered void.[17] And where the seller is a lodge, the fact that bids are made by one who is a member of the lodge will not be held to invalidate the sale.[18]

§ 25. —Minority Rule.—The English courts of equity, to guard against the seeming hardship of the rule of the law courts which gave the purchaser the option of avoiding an auction sale at which puffers or by-bidders were employed,[19] at an early date adopted the rule that a vendor might employ a by-bidder as a defensive precaution to prevent a sacrifice of his property, all that was required of him was that he act in good faith.[20] A few American jurisdictions have followed this rule of chancery, holding that where an auction has not been announced to be without reserve, the vendor of the property legally may employ a puffer to make fictitious biddings, provided such employment is for the bona fide purpose of preventing a sacrifice of the property, and not a mere pretext for enhancing the price above its true value.[1] In England, however, this doctrine of equity has been abrogated by statutory enactments with regard to sales of both real and personal property.[2] In this country the Uniform Sales Act[3] declares in effect that a buyer at an auction sale may treat the sale as a fraudulent one if the seller, without giving notice that he reserves a right to do so, bids at the sale on his own behalf or employs or induces others to make bids in his behalf.

---

[10] Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117; Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.
Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 131.

Where several lots sold separately at auction are of the same general value, the employment of a puffer to enhance the price of the first lot sold invalidates the sale of the others, though there is no puffing therein. Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 131.

[11] Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117; Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.
Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 131.

An instruction to the jury that any by-bidding on any of the lots, without directing the jury to inquire whether or not the bids of the purchaser were influenced by such by-bids, is erroneous, as it requires them to find that the sale was avoided if there was any by-bidding, even if the evidence satisfied them that the purchase was in no way induced or influenced by the fraud. Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.

[12] Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 125.

[13] Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.
Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 130.

One who has shown that puffers or by-bidders are employed has made out a case, and he who seeks to uphold a contract so tainted has upon him the burden of showing that by-bidding did not actually affect the sale. Edmunds v. Gwynn, 157 Va. 538, 161 S. E. 892, citing R. C. L.

[14] See supra, § 22.

[15] McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345; Manuel v. Haselden, 206 Ky. 796, 268 S. W. 554, citing R. C. L.; D'Arcy v. Rowley, 184 Mass. 550, 69 N. E. 325, 64 L.R.A. 190. See also Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117.
Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 128; 131 Am. St. Rep. 489, 491.

[16] McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93; Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117; Manuel v. Haselden, 206 Ky. 796, 268 S. W. 554, citing R. C. L.; D'Arcy v. Rowley, 184 Mass. 550, 69 N. E. 325, 64 L.R.A. 190.
Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 128, 130; 131 Am. St. Rep. 489, 490.

On a judicial sale of land by executors, the persons entitled to the proceeds of the sale may engage a third person to bid the property up to a specified price, with an agreement that if it is sold to such bidder, the persons employing him will take it off his hands. McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 72, 35 S. E. 334, 48 L.R.A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93.

[17] D'Arcy v. Rowley, 184 Mass. 550, 69 N. E. 325, 64 L.R.A. 190.

As to right of joint owner to bid, see supra, § 21.

[18] Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117.

§ 26. Stifling of Competition.—Auction sales should be fairly and openly conducted,[4] with full and free opportunity for competition among bidders.[5] It is the policy of the law that a fair price be received by the parties interested in the property sold and that this be not prevented by the stifling of competition among bidders.[6] Generally speaking, any conduct, artifice, agreement, or combination, the purpose and effect of which is to stifle fair competition and chill the bidding, is against public policy and will cause the sale to be set aside.[7] Furthermore, as an agreement to suppress bidding at a public

---

[19] See supra, § 23.

[20] Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 132; 12 L. ed. 1019; 131 Am. St. Rep. 489.

[1] Reynolds v. Dechaums, 24 Tex. 174, 76 Am. Dec. 101; Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338, 48 Am. Rep. 398.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 132; 131 Am. St. Rep. 489.

It is a question of fact whether the employment of a by-bidder is with the bona fide intention of preventing a sacrifice of the property, and not for the purpose of enhancing the price above its true value. Reynolds v. Dechaums, 24 Tex. 174, 76 Am. Dec. 101. Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 489.

In Tennessee, the rule of Davis v. Petway, 3 Head (Tenn.) 667, 75 Am. Dec. 789, has been abrogated by the adoption in that state in 1919 of the Uniform Sales Act. Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 132.

[2] The Act of 30 & 31 Vict. chap. 48 declares that "whenever a sale by auction of land would be invalid at law by reason of the employment of a puffer, the same shall be deemed invalid in equity as well as at law," and § 58 of the English Sale of Goods Act is substantially identical with § 21 of the Uniform Sales Act. Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 123.

[3] Uniform Sales Act, § 21 (4).

[4] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 486.

[5] Manhattan Taxi Serv. Corp. v. Checker Cab Mfg. Corp. 253 N. Y. 455, 171 N. E. 705, 69 A.L.R. 1190; Nash v. Elizabeth City Hospital Co. 180 N. C. 59, 104 S. E. 33, citing R. C. L.; Owens v. Wright, 161 N. C. 127, 76 S. E. 735, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 1021; Doe ex dem. Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564; Hamilton v. Hamilton, 19 S. C. Eq. (2 Rich.) 355, 46 Am. Dec. 58. See also Farr v. Sims, 9 S. C. Eq. (Rich. Cas.) 122, 24 Am. Dec. 396.

"A sale at auction is a sale to the best bidder; its object a fair price, its means competition. Any agreement, therefore, to stifle competition is a fraud upon the principles on which the sale is founded." Doe ex dem. Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564.

[6] Bunts v. Cole, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 265, 41 Am. Dec. 226; Nash v. Elizabeth City Hospital Co. 180 N. C. 59, 104 S. E. 33, citing R. C. L.; Doe ex dem. Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564; James v. Fulcrod, 5 Tex. 512, 55 Am. Dec. 743.

[7] Konen v. Konen, 165 La. 288, 115 So. 490, citing R. C. L.; First Nat. Bank v. Hebert, 162 La. 703, 111 So. 66, citing R. C. L.; Swain v. Kirkpatrick Lumber Co. 143 La. 30, 78 So. 140, 20 A.L.R. 665; McLane v. McLane, 145 Md. 186, 125 A. 588, citing R. C. L.; Stewart v. Severance, 43 Mo. 322, 97 Am. Dec. 392; Manhattan Taxi Serv. Corp. v. Checker Cab Mfg. Co. 253 N. Y. 455, 171 N. E. 705, 69 A.L.R. 1190; Hopkins v. Ensign, 122 N. Y. 144, 25 N. E. 306, 9 L.R.A. 731; Nash v. Elizabeth City Hospital Co. 180 N. C. 59, 104 S. E. 33, citing R. C. L.; Blythe v. Lovinggood, 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 20, 37 Am. Dec. 402; Doe ex dem. Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564; Hamilton v. Hamilton, 19 S. C. Eq. (2 Rich.) 355, 46 Am. Dec. 58; Farr v. Sims, 9 S. C. Eq. (Rich. Cas.) 122, 24 Am. Dec. 396.

Annotation: 20 L.R.A. 545.

An unsuccessful attempt by a purchaser to prevent another from bidding does not sale is contra bonos mores, the law will not assist either party to enforce it.[8]

§ 27. —Agreements Not to Bid.—Agreements not to bid at an auction, if made for the purpose of stifling competition and to enable a person to purchase the property at an advantageous price, are generally held to be invalid as against public policy,[9] and a sale under such circumstances may be set aside upon the application of the seller or anyone else interested in the proceeds of the sale.[10] This rule, however, extends only to combinations having for their object the stifling of fair competition, with the desire of obtaining the property at a price less than the fair value.[11] Agreements to buy jointly property at a public sale are not invalid where made for the legitimate purpose of combining the parties' resources, and not to chill or suppress bidding.[12] The English courts have held that an agreement between intending bidders at an auction, made to keep down the price, that they will not bid against each other, but that only one shall bid and the goods shall be shared between them, is valid and enforceable.[13] In every association formed to bid at a sale, whereby one is designated to bid in behalf of the rest, there is an agreement, express or implied, that no other member will participate in the bidding, and hence in one sense it may be said to have the effect of preventing competition. However, it does not necessarily follow that if the association had not been formed, and if each member had been left to bid on his own account, the competition at the sale would be as strong and efficient as it would by reason of the joint bid for the benefit and upon the responsibility of all.[14] This is especially true in the case of a union of several persons formed on account of the magnitude of the sale, or where the quantity offered to a single bidder exceeds the amount which an individual might wish to purchase on his own account.[15] The courts will look to the intention of the parties, and if that is fair and honest, and the primary purpose is not to suppress competition, but to protect their own rights or advance their own interests, and there is no fraudulent purpose to injure or defraud vitiate the sale. Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 486.

---

In Nash v. Elizabeth City Hospital Co. 180 N. C. 59, 104 S. E. 33, citing R. C. L., where one purchased property at an auction sale at less than its value by secretly bidding through another individual who was understood by those present to be bidding for a charitable organization, other bidders being deterred by the belief that the property was being purchased for the public benefit, it was held that the sale should be set aside.

See Judicial Sales [Also 16 R. C. L. p. 1].

[8] Owens v. Wright, 161 N. C. 127, 76 S. E. 735, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 1021; Blythe v. Lovinggood, 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 20, 37 Am. Dec. 402 (holding that a note given in consideration of an agreement stifling bidding is unenforceable if not in the hands of a bona fide purchaser); Doe ex dem. Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564; James v. Fulcrod, 5 Tex. 512, 55 Am. Dec. 743.

[9] Drury v. Cross (Drury v. Milwaukee & S. R. Co.) 7 Wall. (U. S.) 299, 19 L. ed. 40; Fletcher v. Johnson, 139 Mich. 51, 102 N. W. 278, 111 Am. St. Rep. 401; Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302, 61 Am. Dec. 248; Dudley v. Odom, 5 S. C. 131, 22 Am. Rep. 6.

Annotation: 20 L.R.A. 547; 10 B. R. C. 296, 297.

Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Contracts, § 517.

[10] United States v. Addyston Pipe Steel Co. (C. C. A. 6th) 85 F. 271, 46 L.R.A. 122, modified in 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96; Mills v. Rogers, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 217, 13 Am. Dec. 263; First Nat. Bank v. Hebert, 162 La. 703, 111 So. 66, citing R. C. L.; Doe ex dem. Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564; Walter v. Gernant, 13 Pa. 515, 53 Am. Dec. 491; James v. Fulcrod, 5 Tex. 512, 55 Am. Dec. 743.

Annotation: 20 L.R.A. 547.

[11] James v. Fulcrod, 5 Tex. 512, 55 Am. Dec. 743.

[12] Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. (U. S.) 494, 14 L. ed. 787; Stack v. Roth Bros. Co. 162 Wis. 281, 156 N. W. 148, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 741.

[13] Rawlings v. General Trading Co. [1921] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 635, 10 B. R. C. 278.

Annotation: 10 B. R. C. 295.

[14] Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. (U. S.) 494, 14 L. ed. 787.

Annotation: 20 L.R.A. 551; 131 Am. St. Rep. 487.

[15] Leland v. Ford, 245 Mich. 599, 223 N. W. 218, citing R. C. L.; Smith v. Ullman, 58 Md. 183, 42 Am. Rep. 329; Doe ex dem. Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 486.

others interested in the result of the sale, the agreement is not unlawful.[16] The intention with which the parties enter into such an agreement is a question of fact for the determination of the jury.[17]

V. STATUTE OF FRAUDS

§ 28. Generally.—Present-day authorities universally agree that sales by auction, unless expressly exempted, are within the provisions of the statute of frauds.[18] Thus, a sale of land at auction is within the statute to the same extent as any other sale or contract of sale relating to land,[19] and an auction sale of chattels is within the operation of the provision relating to the sale of chattels.[20] An auction sale made by a trustee, acting solely under a

---

[16] Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. (U. S.) 494, 14 L. ed. 787; Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302, 61 Am. Dec. 248; Smith v. Ullman, 58 Md. 183, 42 Am. Rep. 329; James v. Fulcrod, 5 Tex. 512, 55 Am. Dec. 743.

See also Hopkins v. Ensign, 122 N. Y. 144, 25 N. E. 306, 9 L.R.A. 731; Henderson v. Henrie, 61 W. Va. 183, 56 S. E. 369, 11 Ann. Cas. 741.

Annotation: 20 L.R.A. 552; 131 Am. St. Rep. 486.

[17] Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302, 61 Am. Dec. 248.

[18] Sachs v. Blewett, 206 Ind. 151, 185 N. E. 856, 188 N. E. 674, 91 A.L.R. 1285; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54; Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302, 61 Am. Dec. 248; Davis v. Rowell, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 64, 13 Am. Dec. 398; Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63, 12 Am. Rep. 48; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243; Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075; Parrott v. Dickson, 151 S. C. 114, 148 S. E. 704, 63 A.L.R. 965; Davis v. Robertson, 8 S. C. L. (1 Mill, Const.) 71, 12 Am. Dec. 611; Meadows v. Meadows, 14 S. C. L. (3 M'Cord) 457, 15 Am. Dec. 645; Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616.

Chaney v. Maclow [1929] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 461, 15 B. R. C. 710—C. A.

See also Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 492.

Although in the absence of an express exception there is no more reason for exempting such sales than for exempting those effected in any other manner, some of the earlier cases took the view that they were impliedly exempted from the operation of the statute for the reason that the latter could never have been intended to apply to sales at auction, since the publicity and solemnity incident to auction sales removed the dangers from perjury to which private sales were subject. See Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243; Davis v. Robertson, 8 S. C. L. (1 Mill, Const.) 71, 12 Am. Dec. 611; Meadows v. Meadows, 14 S. C. L. (3 M'Cord) 457, 15 Am. Dec. 645.

[19] Robinson v. Garth, 6 Ala. 204, 41 Am. Dec. 47; Craig v. Godfroy, 1 Cal. 415, 54 Am. Dec. 299; Seymour v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. 116 Ga. 285, 42 S. E. 518, 94 Am. St. Rep. 131; Sachs v. Blewett, 206 Ind. 151, 185 N. E. 856, 188 N. E. 674, 91 A.L.R. 1285; Maher v. Ætna L. Ins. Co. 116 Ind. 486, 9 Am. St. Rep. 880; Thomas v. Harrodsburg, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 298, 13 Am. Dec. 165; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54; Singstack v. Harding, 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 186, 7 Am. Dec. 669; McGovern v. Hern, 153 Mass. 308, 26 N. E. 861, 10 L.R.A. 815, 25 Am. St. Rep. 632; Bent v. Cobb, 9 Gray (Mass.) 397, 69 Am. Dec. 295; Tull v. David, 45 Mo. 444, 100 Am. Dec. 385; Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065; Gwathney v. Cason, 74 N. C. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 484; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075; Meadows v. Meadows, 14 S. C. L. (3 M'Cord) 457, 15 Am. Dec. 645; Episcopal Church v. Wiley, 11 S. C. Eq. (2 Hill) 584, 30 Am. Dec. 386; Adams v. Scales, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 337, 25 Am. Rep. 772; Dawson v. Miller, 20 Tex. 171, 70 Am. Dec. 380; Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616; Bamber v. Savage, 52 Wis. 110, 8 N. W. 609, 38 Am. Rep. 723.

Chaney v. Maclow [1929] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 461, 15 B. R. C. 710—C. A.

Annotation: 102 Am. St. Rep. 241; 131 Am. St. Rep. 492.

[20] Craig v. Godfroy, 1 Cal. 415, 54 Am. Dec. 299; Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127; Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302, 61 Am. Dec. 248; Davis v. Rowell, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 64, 13 Am. Dec. 398; Meyer v. Redmond, 205 N. Y. 478, 98 N. E. 906, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 675; Davis v. Robertson, 8 S. C. L. (1 Mill, Const.) 71, 12 Am. Dec. 611; Bamber v. Savage, 52 Wis. 110, 8 N. W. 609, 38 Am. Rep. 723.

It has been said that there are special reasons for so holding. The persons present frequently constitute a tumultuous crowd; the sales are generally conducted in a manner that affords the least possible opportunity for deliberation; the crier passes rapidly from one article to another; no person present takes an interest in anything except what regards himself, and that no longer than while the article is immediately under the hammer; and although many persons might be present, one probably could not be found, not even the auctioneer himself, who could recollect the price or purchaser of any particular article, shortly after it was knocked off. Davis v. Robertson, 8 S. C. L. (1 Mill, Const.) 71, 12 Am. Dec. 611.

The payment or part payment of the price will take such sales out of the operation of the statute as in case of ordinary power of sale contained in the deed of trust, is within the statute; such a sale is to be distinguished from a judicial sale made by a chancery court acting through its commissioner.[21]

§ 29. Entire and Divisible Contracts.—In applying the statute of frauds to auction sales, it frequently becomes important to determine whether several purchases made by one bidder constitute so many separate and distinct contracts, or are to be considered as but one entire contract.[22] The solution of this question depends on the surrounding circumstances of each individual case, the manner in which the transactions between the parties were concluded, and their understanding and intentions in the matter, rather than on the fact that the various items were sold at auction and were struck off to the same party at the same sale. This is equally true, whether the subject-matter of the sale is realty or personalty, though of course the nature of the property sold may have a bearing on the intention of parties.[23] It is immaterial whether the auction continues one day or several days, or whether the bids are made on different days or not, provided it is one and the same auction and the terms of sale are the same upon the whole.[1]

§ 30. Authority of Auctioneer to Make Memorandum—In General.—Obviously, to meet the requirements of the statute of frauds, it is essential that the memorandum of sale be signed by the party to be charged. So far as the vendor is concerned, it is manifest that the auctioneer, as his authorized agent to conduct the sale, has authority to sign the memorandum thereof in his behalf,[2] and the authorities are practically unanimous in holding that upon the acceptance of a bid the auctioneer becomes the agent of the purchaser as well as of the seller for the purpose of drawing up and signing the memorandum that takes the transaction out of the operation of the statute of frauds, the rule applying to sales both of realty and of personalty.[3] In some sales. Meyer v. Redmond, 205 N. Y. 478, 98 N. E. 906, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 675.

---

See Statute of Frauds [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 617, §§ 232 et seq.].

[21] Seymour v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. 116 Ga. 285, 42 S. E. 518, 94 Am. St. Rep. 131; Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741; Tull v. David, 45 Mo. 444, 100 Am. Dec. 385; Adams v. Scales, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 337, 25 Am. Rep. 772.

Annotation: 102 Am. St. Rep. 243.

A sale by a sheriff acting as substituted trustee under a power contained in a mortgage or deed of trust, such substitution being provided for by the terms of the mortgage or deed of trust, is within the statute. Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741.

[22] A delivery and acceptance of part of the goods take the entire transaction out of the operation of the statute of frauds where the separate purchases are construed to constitute but one entire contract. See Statute of Frauds [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 632, § 256].

[23] Traiman v. Rappaport (C. C. A. 3d) 41 F. (2d) 336, 71 A.L.R. 475; Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63, 12 Am. Rep. 48; Messer v. Woodman, 22 N. H. 172, 53 Am. Dec. 241; Coffman v. Hampton, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 377, 37 Am. Dec. 511.

For discussion of divisible and indivisible contracts, see Contracts [Also 6 R. C. L. p. 858, § 246].

[1] Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63, 12 Am. Rep. 48.

[2] Craig v. Godfroy, 1 Cal. 415, 54 Am. Dec. 299; Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 407, 60 Am. Dec. 756; Garth v. Davis, 120 Ky. 106, 85 S. W. 692, 117 Am. St. Rep. 571; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54; Brown v. Doherty, 185 N. Y. 383, 78 N. E. 147, 113 Am. St. Rep. 915; Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075; Parrott v. Dickson, 151 S. C. 114, 148 S. E. 704, 63 A.L.R. 965 (partition sale); Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616; Bamber v. Savage, 52 Wis. 110, 8 N. W. 609, 38 Am. Rep. 723.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1071; 15 B. R. C. 735.

Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Contracts, § 212 (1).

It is one of the duties of the auctioneer to his principal to see that a proper memorandum is made so as to comply with the statute, and if he neglects to do so, he may be held answerable to his principal. See infra, § 56.

As to the necessity that such authority be evidenced in writing, see infra, § 33.

[3] Robinson v. Garth, 6 Ala. 204, 41 Am. Dec. 47; Craig v. Godfroy, 1 Cal. 415, 54 Am. Dec. 299; Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 407, 60 Am. Dec. 756; Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127; Garth v. Davis, jurisdictions, the rule is expressly recognized by statute.[4] Theoretically, the purchaser, by the act of bidding, calls on the auctioneer to put down his name as purchaser, and the entry, being made in his presence, is presumed to be made with his sanction and to indicate his approval of the terms written down.[5]

The majority of the courts which have passed on the question hold or assume that between the fall of the hammer and the signing of the memorandum, the auctioneer's authority to sign a memorandum may be revoked, by either the seller [6] or the purchaser.[7] This view accords with the rule adopted by the American Law Institute to the effect that the power of the auctioneer and of his clerk to sign a memorandum may be revoked by a buyer or seller at any time before the power is exercised.[7a] The view is taken by some courts, however, that the auctioneer's authority cannot be revoked by either the vendor or the purchaser after the fall of the hammer.[8] In cases of this kind, the length of time which has elapsed between the close of the sale and the actual signing of the memorandum may be of considerable importance.[9]

The rule as to the agency of the auctioneer to bind the purchaser is not

---

120 Ky. 106, 85 S. W. 692, 117 Am. St. Rep. 571; Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 262; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54; Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302, 61 Am. Dec. 248; Batturs v. Sellers, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 117, 9 Am. Dec. 492; Singstack v. Harding, 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 186, 7 Am. Dec. 669; Bent v. Cobb, 9 Gray (Mass.) 397, 69 Am. Dec. 295; Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A. 1915B, 151; Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 107 Minn. 296, 120 N. W. 39, 131 Am. St. Rep. 462, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1133, 16 Ann. Cas. 379; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243; Brown v. Doherty, 185 N. Y. 383, 78 N. E. 147, 113 Am. St. Rep. 915; Woodruff v. Piedmont Trust Co. 173 N. C. 546, 92 S. E. 496, L.R.A.1917E, 897; Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065; Gwathney v. Cason, 74 N. C. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 484; Pugh v. Chesseldine, 11 Ohio, 109, 37 Am. Dec. 414; Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075; Parrott v. Dickson, 151 S. C. 114, 148 S. E. 704, 63 A.L.R. 965 (partition sale); Episcopal Church v. Wiley, 11 S. C. Eq. (2 Hill) 584, 30 Am. Dec. 386; Gordon v. Saunders, 7 S. C. Eq. (2 M'Cord) 151; Meadows v. Meadows, 14 S. C. L. (3 M'Cord) 457, 15 Am. Dec. 645; Davis v. Robertson, 8 S. C. L. (1 Mill, Const.) 71, 12 Am. Dec. 611; Adams v. Scales, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 337, 25 Am. Rep. 772; Dawson v. Miller, 20 Tex. 171, 70 Am. Dec. 380; Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616; Smith v. Jones, 7 Leigh (Va.) 165, 30 Am. Dec. 498; Bamber v. Savage, 52 Wis. 110, 8 N. W. 609, 38 Am. Rep. 723.

Chaney v. Maclow [1929] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 461, 15 B. R. C. 710—C. A.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 492; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1069; 15 B. R. C. 731.

As stated by the American Law Institute in a sale and in a contract to sell at auction the auctioneer or his clerk, if not interested in the subject-matter of the sale otherwise than in his functions as auctioneer or auctioneer's clerk, is authorized to make and sign a memorandum on behalf of both the buyer and seller, immediately after the sale. Restatement, Contracts, § 212 (1).

The recognition of this principle is one of those judicial encroachments on the terms of the statute inherited with the statute itself from England, and grew out of what the courts considered a necessity. Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741.

Some of the early English cases drew a distinction between a sale of personalty and a sale of realty, recognizing the auctioneer's power to sign in behalf of the purchaser in the former, but denying it in the latter; this rule, however, was departed from at an early date. Meadows v. Meadows, 14 S. C. L. (3 M'Cord) 457, 15 Am. Dec. 645; Episcopal Church v. Wiley, 11 S. C. Eq. (2 Hill) 584, 30 Am. Dec. 386. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1072.

[4] Howell v. Shewell, 96 Ga. 454, 23 S. E. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 148.

[5] Bent v. Cobb, 9 Gray (Mass.) 397, 69 Am. Dec. 295; Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075; Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1069.

[6] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1075, 1076.

[7] Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741; Gwathney v. Cason, 74 N. C. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 484.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 492; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1070.

[7a] Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Contracts, § 212 (2).

[8] Chaney v. Maclow [1929] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 461, 15 B. R. C. 710—C. A.

[9] Chaney v. Maclow [1929] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 461, 15 B. R. C. 710—C. A.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1075, 1076. And see infra, § 31.

applicable to bind one who called upon the auctioneer the day following an auction sale and agreed to purchase some of the unsold property.[10]

It must, of course, appear with reasonable certainty that the auctioneer's memorandum refers to the particular individual sought to be charged.[11] The auctioneer is the mutual agent of both parties solely for the purpose of drawing up and signing such memorandum of sale.[12] He is a mere special agent, having no general authority from the purchaser to prepare and execute a contract, but merely to sign a contract conforming to the sale as made. Consequently, if he signs a memorandum that does not conform to the terms of the sale, his act is unauthorized, null, and void.[13]

§ 31. —When Memorandum Must Be Made; Termination of Auctioneer's Authority to Sign.—The law, in allowing the auctioneer to act in the nearly unprecedented relation of agent for both parties, imposes a qualification not applied to the usual cases of agency, and requires that the single act which, almost from necessity, he is authorized to perform for the buyer, shall be done at the time of the sale and before the termination of the proceedings. The dual character of his agency ceases at that time and an entry by him in his sales book at a subsequent period does not bind the purchaser.[14]

A distinction, however, is taken between the agency of the auctioneer for the buyer and his agency for the seller. As to the seller, the auctioneer's authority may continue after the sale, being determined in each case by the scope and duration of his agency.[15] He may bind the vendor by a memorandum signed within a reasonable time after the sale,[16] but a vendor may not be bound by a memorandum signed by the auctioneer some time after the sale and after his authority has been expressly revoked by the vendor, to the knowledge of the vendee.[17]

---

[10] Annotation: 15 B. R. C. 748.

[11] Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741.

[12] Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1070.

See also Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A.1915B, 151; Freeman v. Poole, 37 R. I. 489, 93 A. 786, L.R.A.1917A, 63, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 841.

[13] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1072; 15 B. R. C. 737.

[14] Craig v. Godfroy, 1 Cal. 415, 54 Am. Dec. 299; Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741; Gwathney v. Cason, 74 N. C. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 484; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075; Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616; Bamber v. Savage, 52 Wis. 110, 8 N. W. 609, 38 Am. Rep. 723.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 492; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1074; 15 B. R. C. 744 et seq.

A memorandum made on the day following the sale by a member of the firm of auctioneers who was not present at the sale and who was not authorized to make such memorandum is not binding. Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616.

Under a statute requiring that the auctioneer enter in a sale book a memorandum, "at the time of sale," it has been held that an entry made after the sale, although at a later hour of the same day, would not bind the purchaser. Craig v. Godfroy, 1 Cal. 415. 54 Am. Dec. 299.

In England the view has been taken that the signing of a memorandum by the auctioneer at his office within two hours after the sale formed a part of the transaction of the sale and was binding on the purchaser. Chaney v. Maclow [1929] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 461, 15 B. R. C. 710—C. A. See also Episcopal Church v. Wiley, 11 S. C. Eq. (2 Hill) 584, 30 Am. Dec. 386 (the auctioneer at the sale simply entered the purchaser's name on a loose slip of paper, and upon his return to his office entered the sale in his sales book; the court, in upholding the memorandum, said: "The entry in the auctioneer's book was made as early as practicable"). Annotation: 15 B. R. C. 737.

[15] Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075; Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1075; 15 B. R. C. 735.

[16] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1075; 15 B. R. C. 736, 749.

The signing of a memorandum of sale by the auctioneer on the day following the sale has been held to be within the scope of his agency for the seller, and binding on the seller. Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075.

A memorandum made a month after the sale has been held not to be binding upon the seller. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1075; 15 B. R. C. 749.

[17] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1075; 15 B. R. C. 749, 750.

§ 32. —Qualification of Rule as to Authority of Auctioneer.—The rule that the auctioneer may bind the purchaser in making the memorandum of sale does not apply where the auctioneer himself is the owner of the goods being sold. The chief reason in support of the rule that he may be the agent of the purchaser to bind him by his memorandum is that he is supposed to be a disinterested person, having no motive to mistake the bargain and entitled equally to the confidence of the purchaser. This reason fails when he is the party to the contract and the party in interest also; the rule accordingly is that where the auctioneer himself is the owner of the goods being sold, he has no implied authority to make the memorandum of sale on behalf of the purchaser.[18] This latter rule applies to an auctioneer who acts as vendor in a fiduciary character, such as executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee.[19] Again, it has been held that a person acting as an auctioneer who did not exercise the public business of an auctioneer is not authorized to sign the memorandum so as to bind the purchaser.[20] Another qualification has been imposed upon the rule allowing the auctioneer to bind the purchaser by a memorandum of the sale where the auctioneer himself seeks to enforce the sale by an action in his own name.[1]

§ 33. —Necessity that Auctioneer Have Written Authority to Sign Contract.—The general rule is that although a contract for the sale of property must be in writing, an agent may be authorized by parol to make the contract unless the statute expressly requires his authority to be in writing.[2] Hence, where the statute merely requires that a contract be signed by the party to be charged or his duly authorized agent and does not expressly provide that the latter shall be authorized in writing, it is not necessary that the authority of an auctioneer be conferred by writing to render his memorandum effective.[3] Where, however, the statute expressly requires that a contract for the sale of lands be signed by the party to be charged or by his agent duly authorized in writing, an auctioneer's memorandum will be binding upon a party to the contract only when he is authorized in writing to make the memorandum[4] or when his unauthorized act in making the memorandum is subsequently ratified in writing.[5]

---

[18] Bent v. Cobb, 9 Gray (Mass.) 397, 69 Am. Dec. 295; Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741; Adams v. Scales, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 337, 25 Am. Rep. 772; Bamber v. Savage, 52 Wis. 110, 8 N. W. 669, 38 Am. Rep. 723.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 480; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1071; 15 B. R. C. 739 et seq.

In Adams v. Scales, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 337, 25 Am. Rep. 772 (cited in Annotation 15 B. R. C. 740), it was stated that when the seller is himself present, directing and controlling the sale, and engages a crier simply to cry the property and knock it off to the best bidder, the seller himself standing by and doing everything else except simply crying the bids, this is not such a sale by an auctioneer as would give to his memorandum the effect of constituting a contract.

[19] Bent v. Cobb, 9 Gray (Mass.) 397, 69 Am. Dec. 295 (wherein a guardian acted as auctioneer in selling his ward's realty); Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741 (wherein a sheriff, as substituted trustee, acted as auctioneer); Tull v. David, 45 Mo. 444, 100 Am. Dec. 385 (wherein the trustee in a deed of trust with power of sale acted as auctioneer).

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1072; 15 B. R. C. 740.

As to whether the sale applies to a sale by an executor or administrator, see STATUTE OF FRAUDS [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 600, § 207].

[20] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1070.

[1] Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1071; 15 B. R. C. 741.

See, however, Bent v. Cobb, 9 Gray (Mass.) 397, 69 Am. Dec. 295.

This disqualification, however, has been held not to apply to the auctioneer's clerk. See infra, § 34.

[2] And see STATUTE OF FRAUDS [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 534, § 122; p. 685, § 324].

[3] Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 407, 60 Am. Dec. 756.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 482; Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1296; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1071.

[4] Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741 (action against purchaser).

§ 34. Authority of Auctioneer's Clerk to Sign Memorandum.—The purchaser may, of course, expressly authorize the auctioneer's clerk to sign the memorandum of sale in his behalf or may subsequently ratify the clerk's act in doing so,[6] but as a general rule, his authority to do so is not dependent upon express authorization. According to the weight of authority, the clerk of the auctioneer, acting under the auctioneer's immediate direction, may sign a memorandum of sale as agent for both seller and purchaser. His entry of the purchaser's name on a memorandum at the time of the sale is a sufficient signing by the purchaser under the statute of frauds, assuming, of course, that the statute does not require the agent's authority to be in writing.[7] Some courts, however, take the view that the mere position as clerk to the auctioneer does not carry implied authority to sign the memorandum of sale on behalf of the purchaser.[8] There is also some difference of opinion as to the authority of a clerk or agent of the vendor, who also acts as the auctioneer's clerk at the sale, to sign a memorandum so as to bind the purchaser. Some courts hold that the agent of the seller may not act as clerk of the auctioneer for the purpose of making a memorandum good under the statute of frauds,[9] but there is contrary authority also.[10] In any event, the memorandum prepared by the auctioneer's clerk must be one which the auctioneer has expressly or impliedly authorized the clerk to make.[11] The reason for holding that an auctioneer is disqualified for the purpose of signing in behalf of the purchaser if he subsequently seeks to bring suit upon the contract in person[12] does not apply to the clerk of the auctioneer. Consequently, it has been held that in a suit in the name of an auctioneer against a purchaser to recover the price of the goods, the signing of the purchaser's name by the clerk of the auctioneer, upon the successful bid being announced, is a sufficient signing within the statute.[13]

Annotation: 15 B. R. C. 743.

On an auction sale of homestead property, a memorandum made by the auctioneer is insufficient to bind the seller, under the statute of frauds relating to realty and requiring an agent's authority to be in writing, the auctioneer not being so authorized, even though the owner and his wife were present at the sale. Annotation: 15 B. R. C. 743.

[5] See STATUTE OF FRAUDS [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 687, § 327].

Under the general rule of agency, the act of ratification must be of the same nature as that which would be required for conferring the authority in the first instance. See AGENCY, Vol. 2, p. 172, § 215.

[6] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1074.

[7] Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 407, 60 Am. Dec. 756; Norris v. Blair, 39 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 135; Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243; Burton v. Jones, 147 Tenn. 624, 250 S. W. 548, 28 A.L.R. 1111; Smith v. Jones, 7 Leigh (Va.) 165, 30 Am. Dec. 498.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1118; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1072.

No reason for the disability of the clerk to act as agent for the purpose of making the signature of the purchaser can be adduced which will not operate equally to exclude the auctioneer, where the litigation is directly between the vendor and purchaser. The question, in every case, is one of fact, whether the person by whom the signature has been made was an agent lawfully authorized to make the same. Auctioneers, by virtue of their business, by the usages of trade, are assumed to have such authority; and where the auctioneer's clerk, or a volunteer, acts openly at a sale in entering the successful bids, as they are publicly announced, his authority to act for the purchaser in the premises is established. Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243.

Where a statute provides in effect that certain entries by the auctioneer in a sales book made at the time of the sale fulfil the requirements of the statute of frauds, and the sales book is kept by the auctioneer's clerk, who makes entries in the book in the presence of the auctioneer and the bidder the moment the bid is accepted, such a sales book must be regarded as if kept by the auctioneer personally. Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1120.

[8] Meadows v. Meadows, 14 S. C. L. (3 M'Cord) 458, 15 Am. Dec. 645.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1120; 51 Am. St. Rep. 148; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1073.

[9] Howell v. Shewell, 96 Ga. 454, 23 S. E. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 148.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1122; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1074.

[10] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1121, 1123.

[11] Burton v. Jones, 147 Tenn. 624, 250 S. W. 548, 28 A.L.R. 1111.

[12] See supra, § 32.

[13] Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243.

§ 35. Form and Contents of Memorandum.—In order to satisfy the statute of frauds, the memorandum of an auction sale should contain everything necessary to show the contract between the vendor and the purchaser.[14] No particular form is necessary, however, so long as the essential facts are stated.[15] It may be in the form of mere entries in the auctioneer's sales book.[16] The memorandum should contain a description of the property sold, a statement of the price, the terms of credit, any conditions upon which the sale was made,[17] the name of the vendee or purchaser,[18] and, according to the great weight of authority, when made by the auctioneer in behalf of the vendor or seller, the name of the vendor or seller or a description by which he or she can be identified.[19] Some authorities, however, take the view that a memorandum signed by the auctioneer in behalf of the vendor or seller is sufficient although the latter is not named or described.[20] The necessity for the signatures of both parties may be affected by different forms of statutes, some of which require the signing by the "party" to be charged, and others the signing by the "parties" to be charged.[1] Under a form of statute which requires that the memorandum be signed by the party to be charged, the signature of the purchaser at an auction is sufficient.[2] Generally speaking, in order to constitute a signing of a contract, it is not necessary that the name of the party be subscribed.[3] Accordingly, the memorandum of an action is sufficient if the name of the party to be charged appears in the body of the instrument and the intention is manifested thereby to bind him by the instrument.[4]

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 1121; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1073.

If the auctioneer's clerk is the owner himself or an agent of the owner, the rule, of course, is otherwise. Howell v. Shewell, 96 Ga. 454, 23 S. E. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 148.

[14] Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1076.

[15] Sherburne v. Shaw, 1 N. H. 157, 8 Am. Dec. 47.
Annotation: 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 254.
See Statute of Frauds [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 643, § 273].

[16] Sherburne v. Shaw, 1 N. H. 157, 8 Am. Dec. 47; Parrott v. Dickson, 151 S. C. 114, 148 S. E. 704, 63 A.L.R. 965 (partition sale); Davis v. Robertson, 8 S. C. L. (1 Mill, Const.) 71, 12 Am. Dec. 611.

[17] Grafton v. Cummings, 99 U. S. 100, 25 L. ed. 366; Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 407, 60 Am. Dec. 756; Norris v. Blair, 39 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 135; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54; Davis v. Rowell, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 64, 13 Am. Dec. 398; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243; Meadows v. Meadows, 14 S. C. L. (3 M'Cord) 458, 15 Am. Dec. 645.
Annotation: 77 Am. St. Rep. 746; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1076; 13 Am. Dec. 398; 15 B. R. C. 736.

A book entry made by an auctioneer employed to conduct a partition sale of the number of lots sold, the amount of the bid, the terms of the sale, and the name of the purchaser satisfies the requirements of the statute of frauds. Parrott v. Dickson, 151 S. C. 114, 148 S. E. 704, 63 A.L.R. 965.

[18] Grafton v. Cummings, 99 U. S. 100, 25 L. ed. 366; Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 407, 60 Am. Dec. 756; Meadows v. Meadows, 14 S. C. L. (3 M'Cord) 458, 15 Am. Dec. 645.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1076; 15 B. R. C. 736.

[19] Grafton v. Cummings, 99 U. S. 100, 25 L. ed. 366; Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 55 S. W. 233, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741; Sherburne v. Shaw, 1 N. H. 157, 8 Am. Dec. 47; Mentz v. Newwitter, 122 N. Y. 491, 25 N. E. 1044, 11 L.R.A. 97, 19 Am. St. Rep. 514; Meadows v. Meadows, 14 S. C. L. (3 M'Cord) 458, 15 Am. Dec. 645.
Annotation: 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 733; 12 Ann. Cas. 487; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1076; 15 B. R. C. 743.

The seller need not be specified by name if he is otherwise sufficiently identified. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1076. See also Mentz v. Newwitter, 122 N. Y. 491, 25 N. E. 1044, 11 L.R.A. 97, 19 Am. St. Rep. 514.

Generally, as to the necessity and sufficiency of the designation of the parties, see Statute of Frauds [Also 25 R. C. L. pp. 655 et seq., §§ 288, 290, 292].

[20] Annotation: 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 735; 12 Ann. Cas. 488; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1071, 1076; 15 B. R. C. 739.

[1] See Statute of Frauds [Also 25 R. C. L. pp. 670 et seq., §§ 306–309].

[2] Laythoarp v. Bryant, 2 Bing. N. C. 735, 132 Eng. Reprint, 283, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 239.

[3] See Statute of Frauds [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 667, § 303].

[4] Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065.

A mistake in the auctioneer's memorandum may be corrected by a court of equity under its general power to reform instruments.[5]

§ 36. —Inclusion, by Reference, of Terms in Separate Writings.—The memorandum of an auction sale may, by reference to other papers, supply what otherwise would be deficiencies;[6] parol testimony may be received to aid in identifying additional papers that are made a part of the signed memorandum by a reference therein,[7] but in the absence of such a reference, other writings may not be connected with the memorandum by resort to parol testimony.[8] Handbills and newspaper notices of the sale not referred to in the memorandum [9] or conditions of sale read before the bidding commenced, but not signed by the purchaser or referred to in the memorandum in a sales book,[10] are not admissible to supply essential terms and conditions omitted from the memorandum of sale. Where the auctioneer signed the name of the purchaser and the price bid on the margin of the advertisement of the sale, which contained the full terms, and was signed by the seller, the memorandum was held to be sufficient to bind the purchaser.[11] Similarly, where the memorandum was indorsed on the back of the notice of sale, the two may, according to some authorities, be read together.[12] The contrary has been held, however, upon the ground that an indorsement of that character does not refer to the contents of the paper upon which it is written.[13]

§ 37. Evidence; Proof of Memorandum.—Where the memorandum of the sale is an entry in the auctioneer's sales book, the original entry is the best evidence of the memorandum and should ordinarily be produced; under the general rule as to best evidence, its place cannot be supplied by a copy or oral evidence of its contents until the nonproduction of the original has been satisfactorily accounted for.[14] Where, however, the entry of a sale has been lost, its existence and loss may be proved by the person who made the sale.[15]

---

[5] Pugh v. Chesseldine, 11 Ohio, 109, 37 Am. Dec. 414.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 493.

As to the effect of the statute of frauds on the general jurisdiction of a court of equity to reform instruments, see STATUTE OF FRAUDS [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 713, § 358].

[6] Atwood v. Cobb, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 227, 26 Am. Dec. 657; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243.

Annotation: 13 Am. Dec. 399; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1076.

[7] Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243.

[8] Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 407, 60 Am. Dec. 756; Ridgway v. Ingram, 50 Ind. 145, 19 Am. Rep. 706; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243.

Annotation: 13 Am. Dec. 399; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1076.

"The memorandum of the auctioneer must, however, on its face or in connection with some other writing, contain everything necessary to show the contract between the parties, so that there be no need of parol proof to ascertain the terms of sale or the intention of the parties." Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 407, 60 Am. Dec. 756.

[9] O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243; Dickerson v. Simmons, 141 N. C. 325, 53 S. E. 850, 8 Ann. Cas. 361.

The printed advertisement of an auction sale of land is not sufficient for the purpose of satisfying the statute of frauds where it neither contains nor is connected with any writing showing the price bid and the purchaser. Dickerson v. Simmons, 141 N. C. 325, 53 S. E. 850, 8 Ann. Cas. 361.

[10] Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243.

Annotation: 13 Am. Dec. 399.

[11] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1076; 15 B. R. C. 742.

[12] Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065.

See also Laythoarp v. Bryant, 2 Bing. N. C. 735, 132 Eng. Reprint, 283, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 239 (memorandum signed by purchaser).

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1076; 15 B. R. C. 742.

A memorandum made by the auctioneer on the back of the notice of a sale of land signed by the seller, and stating the price and the purchaser's name has been held binding on the purchaser. Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065.

[13] Ridgway v. Ingram, 50 Ind. 145, 19 Am. Rep. 706.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1077.

[14] Davis v. Robertson, 8 S. C. L. (1 Mill, Const.) 71, 12 Am. Dec. 611.

See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. pp. 903 et seq.].

VI. EFFECT, OPERATION, AND ENFORCEMENT OF SALE

§ 38. Deposit or Earnest Money.—The successful bidder at an auction is usually required to make a deposit as security for compliance with his bid. Payment thereof need not necessarily be made in cash; a check, if satisfactory to the seller or auctioneer, may fairly be said to be a "deposit" within the general understanding of that term as used in sales by auction,[16] although it has been held that in the absence of the seller's sanction, the auctioneer possesses no authority, by virtue of his employment as such, to accept a check as a deposit where it is drawn on a bank in which the drawer had at the time no funds.[17] Although the printed conditions of the sale require that the deposit be made on the day of the sale, payment on that day is not essential in the absence of some further provision; and unless prohibited by the seller, the auctioneer's authority to receive the deposit continues after the day of the sale.[18] If the vendee refuses to make the deposit of earnest money required by the terms of the sale, it being provided therein that such sum shall be forfeited upon the buyer's default, such amount may be recovered in an action against him even though the property is subsequently sold for more than it brought at the first sale.[19]

§ 39. —Disposition upon Failure to Consummate Sale.—In the event of the noncompletion of the sale by reason of the vendor's default[20] or in case of its rescission by the vendee upon the ground that he was induced to purchase by means of fraudulent representations[1] or by reasons of puffing,[2] then the vendee is entitled to a return of his deposit. Similarly, where the vendee returns his purchase to the vendor for not being as warranted, he may recover his deposit from the auctioneer if it is in the hands of the latter, for, upon rescission, the auctioneer holds it for the benefit of the vendee.[3] On the other hand, it is well settled that where the vendee defaults, he is not entitled to the return of his deposit, made under an agreement that it will be forfeited to the seller in the event the vendee fails to perform.[4] According to some decisions, this is true even in the absence of a clause of forfeiture, especially where it has been designated "an earnest" by the terms of sale.[5] It has been asserted, however, that the default of the vendee does not work a forfeiture of his deposit in the absence of an express agreement to that effect, the vendor merely being entitled to deduct therefrom the actual damages he may have sustained.[6]

[15] Parrott v. Dickson, 151 S. C. 114, 148 S. E. 704, 63 A.L.R. 965.

The uncontradicted and corroborated statement of the auctioneer as to the fact that entries were made in a book and as to the contents of such entries must be accepted as conclusive. Parrott v. Dickson, 151 S. C. 114, 148 S. E. 704, 63 A.L.R. 965.

See Evidence [Also 10 R. C. L. pp. 914 et seq.].

[16] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 495; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

[17] Broughton v. Silloway, 114 Mass. 71, 19 Am. Rep. 312.

[18] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

[19] Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353.

[20] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 495.

[1] Roberts v. French, 153 Mass. 60, 26 N. E. 416, 10 L.R.A. 656, 25 Am. St. Rep. 611; Sohns v. Beavis, 200 N. Y. 268, 93 N. E. 935, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 479.

[2] Annotation: 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 482.

[3] Annotation: 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481.

Generally as to the liability of the auctioneer in reference to the custody and disbursement of earnest money, see infra, § 55.

[4] Donahue v. Parkman, 161 Mass. 412, 37 N. E. 205, 42 Am. St. Rep. 415.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 495.

[5] Donahue v. Parkman, 161 Mass. 412, 37 N. E. 205, 42 Am. St. Rep. 415 (dictum).

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 494.

[6] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 495.

§ 40. Payment of Purchase Price; Vendor's Lien; Sale on Credit.—Payment of the purchase price of property sold at auction ordinarily is made to the auctioneer, whose general agency authorizes him to receive it in behalf of the vendor, except where the subject of the sale is realty, in which case payment should be made to the vendor himself unless the terms of sale provide to the contrary.[7] An auctioneer's authority to receive payment, however, does not warrant his acceptance of a check drawn upon a bank wherein the drawer has no funds, and his act in doing so has no binding effect.[8] Where the terms of sale are cash on delivery, the vendor is entitled to a lien on the property to secure the payment of the purchase price, and may retain possession to secure its payment even though title has passed to the vendee.[9] If by the terms of the sale credit is extended to the vendee upon condition that he furnish approved security, he must comply with such requirement within a reasonable time, or within the time stipulated, in order to be entitled to the subject of his purchase. If, therefore, the goods are delivered to the purchaser and he refuses to give such security, then the seller may either reclaim the goods or treat the sale as an absolute one, without credit, and sue immediately for the purchase money.[10] The relinquishment of the vendor's lien for the purchase price is not a necessary prerequisite to the institution of such a suit, where delivery of the property has not been made.[11] Where the purchaser attempts to furnish security as required, the seller is not obliged to accept it unless he knows or has the means of knowing that it is perfectly good. Neither the vendor nor his auctioneer may arbitrarily refuse to accept the security tendered, however,[12] for by "approved security" is meant such security as ought to be approved.[13] The burden of showing that a tender of security has been wrongfully declined rests upon the purchaser.[14] Although it has been held that a provision in the terms of sale that, on sums over a certain amount, credit "will be given on notes bearing interest with approved security," would be construed to give the purchaser the option of paying the purchase money in cash or of taking the credit,[15] on the other hand, where a sale was made on a credit of six months, the purchaser being required to give his note, drawing interest, with good security, it was held that if the purchaser elected to pay the purchase money in cash, he must add thereto the interest for six months, and that a tender of the amount of the price without interest was not sufficient.[16] The determination of such a question would seem to depend upon the intention of the parties as indicated by the particular circumstances of each case.

§ 41. Passing of Title.—The vendor and vendee, upon the acceptance of the latter's bid at an auction, occupy the same relation towards each other as exists between the promisor and promisee of an executory contract of sale conventionally made. The acceptance of the bid upon the fall of the hammer

---

As to recovery of damages, see infra, § 50.

[7] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

[8] Broughton v. Silloway, 114 Mass. 71, 19 Am. Rep. 312.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 495.

[9] Wade v. Moffett, 21 Ill. 110, 74 Am. Dec. 79; Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63, 12 Am. Rep. 48.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 494; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

[10] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

Delivery of the goods sold to the purchaser, however, without insistence upon the terms of sale as to security for the purchase money, may constitute a waiver of such terms. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

[11] Wade v. Moffett, 21 Ill. 110, 74 Am. Dec. 79.

[12] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 495.

[13] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

[14] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 495.

[15] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

[16] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

gives rise to contract rights which may be enforced, but does not necessarily convey the property.[17] The general rules with regard to the passing of title in the case of ordinary sales[18] are applicable. Many cases hold that in an auction sale of chattels, when the sale is without condition and where nothing remains to be done to the property before its delivery, either to separate it from other property or to put it in condition ready for delivery, the title, as between the parties, passes to the purchaser upon the acceptance of his bid, without payment of the price, even though the right to possession does not pass until the price is paid or arranged for to the satisfaction of the seller.[19] According to some decisions, however, the title does not pass, when there is no agreement for credit, until the price is paid.[20] The intention of the parties derived from the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case primarily determines the question as to when title passes.[1] The fact that there have been a delivery and acceptance of the subject-matter of the sale would ordinarily indicate either that payment was not a condition to the transfer of title or that the condition has been waived.[2] Generally where the notice of sale provides that the sale shall be upon certain terms and conditions, a bidder may not acquire title to the property unless there is a compliance with such terms.[3] Ordinarily, an actual delivery is not necessary to vest title in the buyer where goods are ascertained and in a deliverable state and it is the intention of the parties that title pass.[4] Where, however, anything remains to be done by the vendor to render the property fit for delivery, title thereto does not vest in the vendee prior to a valid tender of the property and acceptance thereof by the purchaser.[5]

§ 42. Delivery.[6]—As the vendor of property sold for cash at an auction is entitled to a lien thereon to secure the payment of the purchase price,[7] the vendee acquires no right to the possession of the object of his purchase until such payment is made.[8] Just as a tender of payment of the purchase price is a necessary prerequisite to the vendee's right to demand a delivery of property sold for cash, similarly, compliance with the terms of the auction is essential where the sale was one upon conditions of a different nature.[9] Once the vendee has complied with the terms of the sale, however, he is entitled to have the property delivered to him, and a refusal of delivery is a breach of contract.[10] On the other hand, where the seller has the goods ready for delivery upon payment of the price, and the buyer fails to pay for them and take them away, the latter is in default and may be held liable on his contract.[11] Again, where the vendee neglects to pay or to fulfil the conditions of the contract within the time specified, and the vendor retains possession of the goods, asserting his purchase money lien thereon, delivery has been held not to be a condition precedent to the institution of a suit for the recovery of the price bid.[12] It has been held, however, that an action for goods sold and delivered, as distinguished from an action for damages for breach of contract, may not be maintained against the purchaser unless the property in a deliverable state is not only offered to him but accepted by him as well.[13] Where the terms of sale require the removal of the goods by the purchaser within a specified time thereafter, the vendee does not lose his right to remove them merely by failing to call for the goods until the day following the expiration of such period, unless such condition is of the essence of the contract.[14]

---

[17] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 494.

[18] See Sales [Also 24 R. C. L. p. 15, §§ 274 et seq.]; Vendor and Purchaser [Also 27 R. C. L. p. 463, § 177].

[19] Wade v. Moffett, 21 Ill. 110, 74 Am. Dec. 79; Richardson v. Landreth (Mo. App.) 260 S. W. 128, citing R. C. L.; Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63, 12 Am. Rep. 48.
Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 494; 16 Ann. Cas. 386.
See Sales [Also 24 R. C. L. p. 23, § 284].

[20] Hardesty v. Wilson, 2 Gill (Md.) 481, 41 Am. Dec. 439.
Annotation: 9 L.R.A. 558; 9 Am. St. Rep. 882; 131 Am. St. Rep. 494.

[1] Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63, 12 Am. Rep. 48.

[2] Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63, 12 Am. Rep. 48.
Annotation: 23 Eng. Rul. Cas. 526.

[3] Morgan v. East, 126 Ind. 42, 25 N. E. 867, 9 L.R.A. 558.
Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 494.
Where the conditions of sale, verbally announced by the auctioneer before the sale began, were a "sixty days' note, with security, or 6 per cent off for cash, satisfaction to be given before stock is removed," title does not pass until the terms are complied with. Mitchell v. Zimmerman, 109 Pa. 183, 58 Am. Rep. 715.

[4] Even where the property is not cumbrous and may be readily delivered, actual delivery is not a necessary prerequisite to the vesting of title in the purchaser. Annotation: 74 Am. Dec. 83.
See Sales [Also 24 R. C. L. p. 35, § 298].

[5] Messer v. Woodman, 22 N. H. 172, 53 Am. Dec. 241.

[6] As to necessity and effect of delivery as regards the passing of title, see supra, § 41.

[7] See supra, § 40.

[8] Coffman v. Hampton, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 377, 37 Am. Dec. 511.
Annotation: 9 L.R.A. 558.

[9] Morgan v. East, 126 Ind. 42, 25 N. E. 867, 9 L.R.A. 558.
Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 494.

§ 43. Enforcing the Sale Generally.—As the acceptance of a bid at an auction sale gives rise to an executory contract, the same as the acceptance of any other offer, either party may enforce the rights he thereby acquires by a civil suit for breach of contract.[15] Accordingly, where the vendee neglects to comply with the terms of the contract[16] or, prior to the expiration of his time to perform, announces his intention not to be bound by the sale,[17] the vendor may bring an action for damages in his own name, though where credit has been given he cannot sue for the purchase price as such until the expiration of the time allowed for payment.[18] Where the allowance of credit, however, is conditioned upon the furnishing of security, and the vendee neglects to fulfil the condition, the vendor may consider the sale an absolute one for cash and sue immediately for the purchase price.[19] Delivery is not a necessary prerequisite to the institution of such a suit, for the vendor is not obliged to relinquish his lien until the purchase price is paid.[20] Moreover, where the vendor brings an action for the recovery of damages rather than the purchase price, it is not necessary, as a rule, that he should have resold the property previously in order to fix the amount of his loss.[1] But where the terms of sale expressly provide for such a contingency by authorizing a resale of the property in the event of the vendee's default, then a resale is absolutely essential to the vendor's right to maintain an action against the vendee for the latter's failure to comply with his contract.[2] Where the subject of the sale is land, either the vendor or vendee may obtain the specific performance of the contract, in a proper case, by invoking the aid of a court of equity.[3] The right to specific performance in a particular case is governed by the ordinary principles of equity. Thus, it will not be denied, on the petition of the vendor, where the sale is made in good faith, the title is good, and the quantity of the land is the same, even though the description may vary in a slight degree.[4] This is so even where a statute affords another means of relief, for in the absence of express provision to the contrary, such a statutory method is deemed to be cumulative, and not exclusive of the old common-law and equitable remedies.[5] Here, as elsewhere, laches on the part of the applicant seeking specific performance may bar his right thereto.[6]

---

[10] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 494.

[11] Coffman v. Hampton, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 377, 37 Am. Dec. 511.

[12] Wade v. Moffett, 21 Ill. 110, 74 Am. Dec. 79.
See supra, § 40.

[13] Messer v. Woodman, 22 N. H. 172, 53 Am. Dec. 241.

[14] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1134.

[15] Richardson v. Landreth (Mo. App.) 260 S. W. 128, citing R. C. L.

[16] Coffman v. Hampton, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 377, 37 Am. Dec. 511.
Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 497.

[17] Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332; Girard v. Taggart, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327.

[18] Girard v. Taggart, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327.
The written record of an auction sale is admissible in evidence in an action to recover damages for failure to comply with the bid. Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127.

[19] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.
See supra, § 40.

[20] Wade v. Moffett, 21 Ill. 110, 74 Am. Dec. 79.
See supra, § 40.

[1] See infra, § 45.

[2] Webster v. Hoban, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 399, 3 L. ed. 384.
Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 497; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

§ 44. Suit by Auctioneer in Own Name.—With respect to auctions of personal property, the general rule is that the auctioneer may maintain an action in his own name against the purchaser for either the price or the property itself[7] unless the principal or real owner elects to bring the action.[8] This doctrine stands upon a special property or interest in the auctioneer in the goods intrusted to him for sale, including the possession of the goods and a lien thereon for his charges and commissions.[9] It is not necessary that the existence of this special property or interest be proved, for it flows as a matter of course from his position as an auctioneer.[10] But even where the auctioneer sues upon the contract in his own name, the purchaser may set off a debt due him from the seller.[11] With respect to auctions of real estate, however, the auctioneer has no such special property or interest as will enable him to enforce the contract.[12] Ordinarily, he would not be entitled to receive the price.[13]

[3] Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065; Pugh v. Chesseldine, 11 Ohio, 109, 37 Am. Dec. 414; Sweeney v. Brow, 35 R. I. 227, 86 A. 115, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1075; Smith v. Jones, 7 Leigh (Va.) 165, 30 Am. Dec. 498.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 497.

An auctioneer holding the deposit on a purchase may be made a defendant in an action for specific performance. It is proper to make him a party where the deposit is large, unless he has paid it into court before action brought, but as a general rule it is not good practice to make him a defendant when the deposit is of small amount. Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 125.

While it has been held that a vendor seeking specific performance could not introduce evidence of a verbal statement by the auctioneer to remove an apparent discrepancy between the particulars and the conditions of sale, in a subsequent suit by the purchaser to enforce the same contract, the vendor was allowed, by way of defense, to introduce such evidence in order to avoid a contract being forced on him by mistake or surprise. Annotation: 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 714.

[4] King v. Bardeau, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 38, 10 Am. Dec. 312.

And see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 197].

[5] Dawson v. Miller, 20 Tex. 171, 70 Am. Dec. 380.

[6] Annotation: 57 Am. Dec. 598.

[7] Robinson v. Garth, 6 Ala. 204, 41 Am. Dec. 47; Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353; Girard v. Taggart, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498; 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 586.

Am. Law Inst. Restatement, Agency, § 364.

If the purchaser, by artifice, obtains possession of the goods without paying the price in full, and the auctioneer is thereby obliged to make good the shortage to his principal, he may sue the purchaser in his own name as for goods sold and delivered and recover the balance. Williams v. Millington, 1 H. Bl. 81, 126 Eng. Reprint, 49, 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 583.

[8] Girard v. Taggart, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327.

Annotation: 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 586.

[9] Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498; 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 586.

The auctioneer may maintain an action for the price of merchandise sold, although he has previously received his advances and commissions from the owner, where the purchaser is estopped to deny that he has contracted directly with the auctioneer. Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

[10] Annotation: 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 586.

[11] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

[12] Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353; Gibson Land Auction Co. v. Brittain, 182 N. C. 676, 110 S. E. 82, 20 A.L.R. 211.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 214, s. 97 A.L.R. 858.

[13] Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

As to the auctioneer's right to maintain an action against the purchaser for the loss of his commissions as a result

However, when the terms of the auctioneer's employment, and of the authorized sale, contemplate the payment of a deposit into his hands at the time of the auction and before the completion of the sale by the delivery of the deed, he stands, in relation to such deposit, in the same position as he does to the price of personal property sold and delivered by him. He may receive and receipt for the deposit, his lien for commissions will attach to it, and he may sue for it in his own name whenever an action for the deposit, separate from the other purchase money, may become necessary.[14]

§ 45. Resale of Property on Default of Buyer.—When the successful bidder at an auction fails to perform his contract after the property has been knocked down to him, the vendor may order the property to be resold at the vendee's risk and hold him responsible for the resulting loss.[15] Ordinarily it is purely optional with the vendee whether or not he shall adopt this method of determining the extent of his damages, but where the terms of sale expressly provide for such a contingency by authorizing him to resell the property at the vendee's risk in case of the latter's default, compliance with such provision has been held to be a necessary prerequisite to the vendor's right to maintain an action against the vendee to recoup his loss.[16] Where the vendor does undertake to resell the property, whether of his own volition or not, such resale must be fairly conducted with a view to securing the highest possible price.[17] The second sale must be upon the same terms as the first, or at least not upon conditions of a more onerous character.[18] The property may be sold without being readvertised where the second sale takes place immediately upon the conclusion of, or during the progress of, the auction and before the bidders depart, but if it takes place after the bidders at the first sale have dispersed, the resale must be advertised anew.[19] Furthermore, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, a notice to the defaulting buyer that the sale is to be at his risk has been held necessary.[20] Where, however, of the purchaser's failure to comply with his agreement, see infra, § 53.

---

[14] Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

[15] Robinson v. Garth, 6 Ala. 204, 41 Am. Dec. 47; Hendrick v. Davis, 27 Ga. 167, 73 Am. Dec. 726; Hardesty v. Wilson, 2 Gill (Md.) 481, 41 Am. Dec. 439; Coffman v. Hampton, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 377, 37 Am. Dec. 511.

Annotation: 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927; 9 Am. St. Rep. 882; 131 Am. St. Rep. 493.

See also Uniform Sales Act, § 60 (1).

[16] Webster v. Hoban, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 399, 3 L. ed. 384.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

[17] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 493; 96 Am. Dec. 266.

In order to conclude the defaulting vendee in this manner, it must appear that the resale was made without unreasonable delay, with the same publicity and as far as possible under the same conditions as the first, and with an honest effort to get the best price obtainable. Green v. Ansley, 92 Ga. 647, 19 S. E. 53, 44 Am. St. Rep. 110.

The seller is bound to exercise reasonable care and judgment in making a resale. Uniform Sales Act, § 60 (5).

[18] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 493; 96 Am. Dec. 266.

[19] Love v. Harris, 156 N. C. 88, 72 S. E. 150, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065.

Annotation: 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927.

[20] Green v. Ansley, 92 Ga. 647, 19 S. E. 53, 44 Am. St. Rep. 110.

Annotation: 44 Am. St. Rep. 113; 131 Am. St. Rep. 493.

The property resold at the risk of the defaulting buyer is regarded as in some sense his own, and the result of the resale is in the nature of an adjudication against him; consequently, before he is charged with the deficiency, he should be afforded an opportunity to protect his interest and prevent a sacrifice of the property. Unless notice is given him of an intention to resell the property at his risk, he may assume that the vendor elected to retain and deal with the property as his own. The resale price may not be taken to indicate the measure of damages; the vendor must establish the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time the contract was broken. Green v. Ansley, 92 Ga. 647, 19 S. E. 53, 44 Am. St. Rep. 110.

And see infra, § 50.

While in some cases, notice of the time and place of the resale has also been required, other authorities adopt the view that where there is notice of the election to resell and hold the other party bound for the deficiency, no further notice is necessary, and it has been held that such the Uniform Sales Act is applicable, it is not essential to the validity of a resale that notice of an intention to resell the goods or of the time and place of sale be given by the seller to the original buyer, though the giving of or failure to give such notice is relevant on the question whether the buyer had been in default an unreasonable time before the resale was made.[1] Where the vendor wantonly delays the resale or is guilty of negligence or grossly improper conduct in disposing of the property upon a second sale, the loss occasioned thereby falls upon him.[2] On the other hand, mere unskilfulness or slight carelessness on the part of the vendor in reselling the property will not render him responsible for the loss where he has acted in good faith.[3] In order further to protect the interests of the vendee, it has been held that the vendor may not bid at the second sale for the purpose of charging the purchaser with the difference in prices,[4] though the contrary has been held where the second sale was fairly conducted by a licensed auctioneer.[5]

§ 46. Warranties; Claims Based on Defects in Property Sold.—In accordance with the prevailing rule that a vendor of personal property in possession thereof impliedly warrants his title thereto,[6] it is generally held that the seller of chattels disposed of at auction impliedly warrants that he has good title to the property sold.[7] Warranty of title, however, is the only warranty that is implied on the part of the vendor,[8] for the maxim of caveat emptor applies not only to the ordinary sale of chattels[9] but to sales of goods at auction as well.[10] Consequently, in the absence of fraud, the vendor is responsible for neither the quality nor the goodness of property sold unless there is an express warranty upon his part.[11] He will not be bound by a warranty made by the auctioneer unless he expressly authorized the auctioneer to make the warranty or subsequently ratified it.[12] However, aside from any warranty, the buyer may be entitled to rescind because of misrepresentations made by either the seller or the auctioneer.[13] Where the description of property is substantially true, even though it may vary in a slight degree, the purchaser is not entitled to be relieved from his purchase, though the variance may be such as to warrant an allowance on the price bid.[14] The additional notice may at least be dispensed with where the second sale, as well as the first, is at public auction, duly advertised in the same locality. See Green v. Ansley, 92 Ga. 647, 19 S. E. 53, 44 Am. St. Rep. 110, wherein the court stated: "In such case the party sought to be charged with the deficiency is sufficiently protected by the requirement already referred to, that the second sale shall take place within a reasonable time and be given equal publicity with the first. If this is done, one who has been notified of the intention to resell at his risk need have no difficulty in ascertaining the time and place of the sale." Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 493.

---

[1] Uniform Sales Act, § 60 (3), (4).

[2] Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.

[3] Ibid.

[4] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 493.

[5] Ackerman v. Rubens, 167 N. Y. 405, 60 N. E. 750, 53 L.R.A. 867, 82 Am. St. Rep. 728.
Annotation: 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 676.
And see SALES [Also 24 R. C. L. p. 113, § 381].

[6] See SALES [Also 24 R. C. L. p. 182, § 454].

[7] Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63, 12 Am. Rep. 48.
Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 496.

[8] Swett v. Colgate, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 196, 11 Am. Dec. 266.

[9] See SALES [Also 24 R. C. L. p. 179, § 452].

[10] Court v. Snyder, 2 Ind App. 440, 28 N. E. 718, 50 Am. St. Rep. 247.
Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 496.

[11] Swett v. Colgate, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 196, 11 Am. Dec. 266.
As to what will constitute an express warranty, see SALES [Also 24 R. C. L. p. 164, §§ 437 et seq.].

[12] See supra, § 10.

[13] And see infra, § 47.

[14] King v. Bardeau, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 38, 10 Am. Dec. 312; Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.
See also infra, § 47.
A provision in the conditions of sale that mistakes in the description of the property, or any other material error in the particulars of sale, shall not annul the sale, but that compensation shall be vendee claiming that he is entitled to such a reduction should be prompt in making his complaint, for it is frequently provided by the terms of sale that all complaints must be made within a specified time after the sale. Such a provision is perfectly valid and binding even though the matter complained of was not discovered until after the expiration of that time. This method of limiting the liability of the vendor is not unreasonable, for the vendee, by purchasing under and acceding to such conditions, precludes himself from objecting to them.[15]

§ 47. Rescission of Contract—By Vendor.—Contracts of sale entered into at an auction may be rescinded by either the vendor or the vendee where proper grounds exist.[16] Thus, where bidding has been stifled,[17] or where the purchaser fails or refuses to comply with the terms and conditions of his purchase,[18] the seller may elect to rescind the sale. Ordinarily, such election must be made by the vendor personally, for the auctioneer possesses no authority to rescind a sale; his agency is limited to selling the property.[19] A right to a rescission may be expressly provided for in the terms and conditions of the sale as an equivalent for a reservation of the right to reject bids.[20]

Where the property is knocked down to a by-bidder who fraudulently agreed with the owner to run up the price of the property, the owner cannot avoid the sale by reason of such fraudulent agreement.[1]

§ 48. —By Vendee.—The vendee at an auction sale may withdraw from his contract to purchase where he was influenced in his bidding by fraudulent bids made at the instigation of the vendor,[2] as indicated in the previous discussion of "by-bidding" or "puffing."[3] Obviously the failure or inability of the vendor to give good title to the property justifies the vendee in refusing to complete the purchase.[4] Likewise, where the article purchased does not comply with the seller's warranty, the purchaser may rescind.[5] Aside from a warranty, a misrepresentation as to a material matter, whether made made, is valid and effective unless the misdescription complained of is the result of fraud. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1129.

---

It has been held that such a provision has no application where the thing sold turns out to be of a different nature from that contracted to be sold, as where the sale was of copyhold and the title turns out to be freehold. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1132.

[15] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1129.

[16] Welcome State Bank v. Martens, 153 Minn. 264, 190 N. W. 185, citing R. C. L.

[17] Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302, 61 Am. Dec. 248.

[18] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 497.

[19] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 497.

[20] Erie Coal & Coke Corp. v. United States, 266 U. S. 518, 69 L. ed. 417, 45 S. Ct. 181, holding that where an auction of United States government property was advertised under terms and conditions providing that the government might rescind the sale at any time before a date mentioned, the highest bidder at the sale, to whom the property was knocked down, has no cause of action against the government in the event the latter, within the time specified, refuses to confirm the sale.

[1] Troughton v. Johnston, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 328, 2 Am. Dec. 626.
Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 128.

[2] Flannery v. Jones, 180 Pa. 338, 36 A. 856, 57 Am. St. Rep. 648; Davis v. Petway, 3 Head (Tenn.) 667, 75 Am. Dec. 789.

A secret agreement between one conducting an auction sale and a bidder for property that he shall have the property at a specified price regardless of the price bid does not avoid a sale to another of other property for which there was bona fide competitive bidding, where there is nothing to show that such person was influenced in his action by the bidding for the property to which the understanding related, at least where the owner has reserved the right to reject any and all bids. Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, 213 Ky. 533, 281 S. W. 500, 46 A.L.R. 117.

[3] See supra, §§ 22 et seq.

[4] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 496.

However, an erroneous opinion of counsel, though of admitted standing and ability, that the title of the vendor is invalid will not justify a purchaser in receding from the contract when the title is in fact perfect and a conveyance is tendered. Montgomery v. Pacific Coast Land Bureau, 94 Cal. 284, 29 P. 640, 28 Am. St. Rep. 122.

[5] McClean v. Stansberry, 151 Iowa, 312, 131 N. W. 15, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481.

by the seller or the auctioneer, is a good cause for rescission, especially where it is of such a nature or was made under such circumstances that it was out of the question for the vendee to verify it before making his bid.[6] Many cases are to be found also in which the purchaser at an auction sale has sought rescission on the ground of mistake; such cases are decided largely upon their own particular facts.[7] Ground for rescission exists in the case of a purchase made while laboring under a mistake as to the identity of the property bid upon,[8] or in the case of a serious mistake as to the quantity, character, or quality of the property purchased.[9] However, where land is sold by the acre, whether the quantity is more or less than the estimate, the vendee is not entitled to rescind simply because the excess is larger than he calculated.[10] A mistake as to restrictive covenants which is of slight consequence does not constitute sufficient ground for avoidance,[11] but failure, in making an announcement that property is restricted, to state that the original grantor and his assignees reserved the privilege of annulling any restriction in favor of a lot owner at pleasure, entitles the vendee to rescind.[12] A vendee is also entitled to repudiate his purchase where the property, though sold with the true owner's consent, was put up by the auctioneer as belonging to another.[13] Where, however, the matter complained of is an error in the advertisement which was corrected by announcement at the beginning of the sale, the vendee is not entitled to rescind.[14] Moreover, as a general rule a vendee cannot be relieved from a purchase made in reliance upon a mistaken view as to the law,[15] nor can a bidder rescind his contract on the ground that he has refused to pay the auction duty pursuant to the conditions of the sale, notwithstanding the statute provides that in case of such refusal the bidding shall be null and void to all intents and purposes, for under such circumstances he cannot avail himself of his own wrongdoing.[16] Where valid grounds for rescission exist, a provision for compensation in case of error or mistake has no application where the property turns out to be of a different nature.[17]

§ 49. —Time within Which to Rescind; Return or Tender of Property.—If the vendee desires to rescind, he should elect to do so within a reasonable time after discovery of the ground upon which his right to rescission is based.[18] Thus, if he desires to rescind because the price was enhanced by puffing, he must act with reasonable promptness on discovering the fraud, and if he is guilty of laches, relief will be denied.[19] He should also tender a return of the property if it is in his possession, since by retaining it he becomes responsible for the price.[20] In other words, he should put the seller in statu quo so far as is possible.[1] However, if he does not discover his right to rescind until it is impossible to return the property, his defense in an action on his note given for the property may be complete without an offer to return.[2]

---

[6] Roberts v. French, 153 Mass. 60, 26 N. E. 416, 10 L.R.A. 656, 25 Am. St. Rep. 611; Welcome State Bank v. Martens, 153 Minn. 264, 190 N. W. 185, citing R. C. L.; Sohns v. Beavis, 200 N. Y. 268, 93 N. E. 935, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927; McCall v. Davis, 56 Pa. 431, 94 Am. Dec. 92.

Annotation: 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 928; 28 Am. St. Rep. 128; 131 Am. St. Rep. 496.

[7] Annotation: 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927.

[8] Annotation: 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927; 131 Am. St. Rep. 496.

[9] Annotation: 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 928–932.

[10] Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.

[11] Annotation: 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 930.

[12] Sohns v. Beavis, 200 N. Y. 268, 93 N. E. 935, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 937.

[13] Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 262.

[14] Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127; Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353.

[15] Annotation: 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932.

[16] Annotation: 25 L.R.A. 569.

[17] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1132.

[18] McDowell v. Simms, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 130, 57 Am. Dec. 595.

Annotation: 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 930; 131 Am. St. Rep. 497.

[19] Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134, 12 L. ed. 1018; McDowell v. Simms, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 130, 57 Am. Dec. 595; Backenstoss v. Stahler, 33 Pa. 251, 75 Am. Dec. 592.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 131; 131 Am. St. Rep. 488.

§ 50. Damages.—Where a vendee at an auction sale defaults in the performance of his contract to purchase, the vendor may treat the property as that of the purchaser, retain his lien thereon for the amount bid, and sue for the purchase price, or he may resell the property at the vendee's risk and hold him liable for the resulting loss.[3] If the seller adopts the former course, obviously his recovery is ordinarily measured by the amount of the bid together with interest thereon from the time payment became due. On the other hand, where he retains the property as his own or elects to sell it at the vendor's risk, the real damages are measured by the difference between the price contracted to have been paid and the value of the thing when it ought to have been accepted.[4] This difference is usualy determined by a resale of the goods,[5] but while the jury are at liberty to determine the amount of damages by taking the difference between the contract price and the price obtained upon a resale, they are not bound to do so if they can discover any other mode of estimation better calculated to arrive at the truth.[6] In the absence of a forfeiture agreement which may be construed as intending to treat the deposit made to bind the sale as liquidated damages, in the event of default on the part of the vendee, the vendor's damages will not be limited necessarily to the amount of the deposit.[7] Of course, the conditions of the original sale may expressly provide that the property may be resold upon the default of the buyer and that the latter shall be liable for any resulting deficiency, and in such case, the measure of damages would be determined by the resale price.[8] While the difference of price on a resale is a proper measure of damages where the vendor has acted bona fide and with reasonable care, his conduct may be so grossly improper as to cast a loss from it on himself, as where the resale is wantonly delayed while the property is notoriously falling in price, or the business is managed negligently; these and many other circumstances may properly be left to the jury. Mere unskilfulness, however, without mala fides, or even negligence, unless it is plain and palpable, will not be sufficient to charge him. The vendee ought not to cast the responsibility of the resale on the vendor and, by his own wrongful act, charge anyone else with the consequences.[9] The purchaser is likewise responsible for the costs of the resale, according to the better view,[10] although there is some authority to the contrary.[11] Furthermore, where, by reason of the vendee's default, the vendor is obliged to incur necessary expense in taking care of the articles or in removing them to a secure and proper place, the former is answerable for this expense.[12] Obviously, where the purchaser has made a deposit of earnest money, the forfeiture of the same should be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of damages.[13] Where the vendor is the defaulting party and the vendee is seeking to recover damages, the recovery is not limited to the amount of the purchase price actually paid, as the vendee's loss is measured by the real value of the goods and not by the amount bid.[14] If the purchaser proceeds directly against the auctioneer for the recovery of earnest money deposited with the latter, he is not entitled to interest thereon unless he demanded the return of the deposit prior to starting suit, in which case interest is recoverable only from the time the demand was made.[15]

---

[20] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 497.

[1] Staines v. Shore, 16 Pa. 200, 55 Am. Dec. 492.
Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 132.

[2] Staines v. Shore, 16 Pa. 200, 5 Am. Dec. 492.
Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 132; 131 Am. St. Rep. 497.

[3] See supra, § 45.

[4] Annotation: 9 Am. Dec. 335.

[5] Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.
Annotation: 96 Am. Dec. 266.
See also Uniform Sales Act, § 60 (1).

[6] Girard v. Taggart, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327; Coffman v. Hampton, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 377, 37 Am. Dec. 511.
And see Sales [Also 24 R. C. L. p. 114, § 382].

[7] Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.
In certain cases a deposit with an agreement for forfeiture has been treated as liquidated damages. See Donahue v. Parkman, 161 Mass. 412, 37 N. E. 205, 42 Am. St. Rep. 415.

[8] Webster v. Hoban, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 399, 3 L. ed. 384; Robinson v. Garth, 6 Ala. 204, 41 Am. Dec. 47.
In such case a resale is a condition precedent to an action against the defaulting purchaser.
See supra, § 45.

[9] Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437.

[10] Annotation: 96 Am. Dec. 266.

VII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF AUCTIONEER

§ 51. Generally.—An auctioneer, in selling property for another at auction, is the agent of the owner,[16] and his rights and liabilities with respect to the owner are governed by the general principles of the law of agency. He must exercise ordinary care and skill in the performance of the duties confided to him,[17] and good faith toward his employer with respect to the matters with which he has been intrusted.[18] If he assumes a position that is entirely inconsistent with that of his agency relationship, he may lose his right to compensation for his services,[19] and he may be held accountable to his principal for any secret profit received by him as a result of the sale, which he does not disclose to the principal.[20]

§ 52. Right to Compensation.—The compensation of an auctioneer is usually a matter of private agreement between him and his principal. In some jurisdictions, however, auctioneers' fees are a matter of statutory regulation where they have not been agreed upon in advance. In addition to such statutory commissions, auctioneers are usually entitled to an allowance for disbursements and incidental expenses made in connection with the sale,[1] including reasonable compensation for extraordinary services rendered prior or subsequent to the actual conduct of the sale. Commissions, however, do not accrue unless a sale is effected, nor may they be recovered on a bid not complied with. Thus, double fees cannot be recovered where the sale is adjourned, though they would possibly be allowed where a resale was ordered through no fault of the auctioneer. Commissions accrue upon each sale where lots are knocked down severally. It has been held, however, that where the contract provides for a specified fee for each "parcel" sold, only one fee is recoverable where several lots are sold in a single parcel.[2]

---

[11] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 494.

[12] Coffman v. Hampton, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 377, 37 Am. Dec. 511.

[13] Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332.

[14] Annotation: 9 L.R.A. 558.

[15] Annotation: 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 483.

[16] See supra, § 8.

[17] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

[18] Hippisley v. Knee Bros. [1905] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 1, 5 B. R. C. 193—Div. Ct.

[19] See infra, § 52.

[20] See infra, § 56.

[1] Hippisley v. Knee Bros. [1905] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 1, 5 B. R. C. 193—Div. Ct.

Where, however, by the terms of the employment, such disbursements are limited to actual "out of pocket expenses," the employer may not be charged with the full amount of an advertising bill on which the auctioneer has received a trade discount not disclosed to the employer, even though such trade discounts to auctioneers on the part of newspaper proprietors may be customary. Ibid.

[2] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 501.

The faithful discharge of his duties is a condition precedent to any recovery upon the part of an auctioneer for the services he has rendered his principal; bad faith or fraudulent conduct on his part is a defense to an action for the recovery of his commissions. If, for example, an auctioneer accepts a secret profit or commission in a matter having a direct bearing on his main duty, so as to place him in a position wholly inconsistent with that of agent for his employer, he will lose his right to compensation.[3] But the mere acceptance of a secret trade discount on an advertising bill from a newspaper proprietor will not deprive the auctioneer of his right to his commission, in the absence of a fraudulent or dishonest intent,[4] although he may be required to account to his principal for the profit thus made.[5] In addition to the requirement of good faith toward his principal, the auctioneer is under a duty to exercise ordinary care and skill in the performance of his duties.[6] Thus, it has been held that an auctioneer who fails to make a sufficient memorandum to take a transaction without the operation of the statute of frauds may not recover his commissions from his employer unless, notwithstanding the insufficiency of the memorandum, the transaction between the owner and the bidder is consummated.[7]

§ 53. Right to a Lien; Recovery of Compensation from Purchaser.—An auctioneer employed to sell property of another has a lien for his charges and commissions on the property intrusted to him.[8] This lien upon the property depends upon possession and is lost by delivering it to the purchaser.[9] The auctioneer may, however, maintain an action against the purchaser for the purchase price of personal property which he has sold for another,[10] and he may retain his commissions from the amount recovered, as he has a lien upon all sums coming into his hands and may retain his fees and disbursements therefrom. In fact, it has been said that he may forbid payment to his principal so far as concerns duties and commissions.[11] Where, however, the subject of the auction is real estate, the auctioneer cannot bring suit in his own name to enforce the contract of sale,[12] nor can he recover damages against the purchaser for the loss of his commissions caused by the failure of the purchaser to comply with his contract with the owner of the land,[13] especially where the latter refused to comply with his bid because of a misunderstanding and was released from his contract by the owner.[14] Where, however, by the terms of sale the fees are payable by the purchaser directly to the auctioneer, the latter may sue in his own name to recover them.[15] Where, by the announced terms of the sale, a deposit is to be paid into the hands of the auctioneer at the time of the auction and before the completion of the sale by the delivery of the deed, the auctioneer may sue for it in his own name, whenever an action for the deposit, separate from the other purchase money, may become necessary, and his lien for commissions will attach to it.[16]

---

[3] Hippisley v. Knee Bros. [1905] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 1, 5 B. R. C. 193—Div. Ct.

Annotation: 5 B. R. C. 188.

Where an auctioneer's remuneration is to be paid for the performance of several inseparable duties, if he is unfaithful in the performance of any of these duties by reason of his receiving a secret profit in connection with it, it may be that he will forfeit his compensation, but where the several duties to be performed are separable, the receipt of a secret profit in connection with one of these duties would not, in the absence of fraud, involve the loss of the compensation which has been fairly earned in the proper discharge of the other duties. Hippisley v. Knee Bros. [1905] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 1, 5 B. R. C. 193—Div. Ct.

[4] Hippisley v. Knee Bros. [1905] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 1, 5 B. R. C. 193—Div. Ct.

[5] See infra, § 56, note 17.

[6] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

[7] Butler Cotton Oil Co. v. Millican, 216 Ala. 472, 113 So. 529, citing R. C. L.

[8] Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353; Williams v. Millington, 1 H. Bl. 81, 126 Eng. Reprint, 49, 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 583.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 501.

An auctioneer has a possession coupled with an interest in the goods which he is employed to sell. Williams v. Millington, 1 H. Bl. 81, 126 Eng. Reprint, 49, 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 583.

But where he undertakes to sell in behalf of one having no title to the property, he is not entitled to a lien upon either the property or the proceeds thereof. Hone v. Henriquez, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 240, 27 Am. Dec. 204. Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 502.

[9] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 502.

[10] See supra, § 44.

[11] Girard v. Taggart, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327.

[12] See supra, § 44.

[13] Gibson Land Auction Co. v. Brittain, 182 N. C. 676, 110 S. E. 82, 20 A.L.R. 211.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 214, s. 97 A.L.R. 858.

§ 54. Liability of Auctioneer Generally.—Except where an auctioneer infringes upon the rights of others, as where he sells at auction property to which his principal has no title,[17] his liability generally depends solely upon the contractual relations he may voluntarily assume.[18] Nevertheless, under certain circumstances, an auctioneer may be under a public duty as well. To illustrate, an auctioneer who is also a public warehouseman may not refuse to receive the product of any producer, or exclude from the warehouse any person desiring to become a bidder, especially where the producer and buyer almost of necessity are compelled to deal with him, such conduct being a violation of public duty as imposed by the rule of the common law. The rule is particularly applicable where several warehousemen within a city having a virtual monopoly over a product combine in an attempt to ban certain individuals from bidding at the sales.[19] But it is only by virtue of being engaged in an enterprise of a public service character that an auctioneer incurs liability for refusing to sell the goods of one or for declining to accept the offer of the highest bidder. Although there are numerous dicta to the effect that the highest bidder at an auction has a right of action against the auctioneer where the latter refuses to knock down to him the property bid for, such a doctrine has never been put into practice, as it is generally recognized that with the single exception noted above, an auctioneer does not incur any personal liability for refusing to accept the offer of the highest bidder.[20] It has been held that an auctioneer having a consignment of goods for sale may not be garnished in an execution suit against the owner of the goods.[21] Similarly, an auctioneer selling goods under orders of a sheriff and receiving the proceeds may not be held a trustee for persons who have claims against the sheriff for the proceeds, as he is accountable to the sheriff only.[1] Although an auction is not a nuisance per se if properly held in observance of the law, it may be conducted in such a manner as to constitute it either a public or a private nuisance, or both; and where such is the case, the auctioneer conducting it is liable accordingly.[2]

§ 55. Liability for Custody and Disbursement of Deposit Money.—The authorities are practically uniform in holding that upon an auction sale of real estate, the auctioneer receives a deposit of earnest money in the capacity of a stakeholder[3] and, in the interim before the sale is completed, should not pay the deposit money to either party without the consent of the other.[4] Thus, an auctioneer is liable to the vendor for wrongfully returning a deposit to the vendee, even though he did so under a mistaken belief that the vendor's title was defective.[5] On the other hand, in the event that the title proves bad,[6] or the vendor fails to complete the conveyance,[7] or there has been a misdescription in a material matter of real property sold under circumstances in which the purchaser was entitled to rely upon the description, especially in the case where the untrue description has been made fraudulently,[8] the auctioneer becomes responsible to the buyer for the return of the deposit. Of course, where the understanding of the parties contemplates the immediate payment by the auctioneer to his principal, before the close of the transaction, of money paid by the purchaser as a down payment, the auctioneer may not be considered a stakeholder as respects such payment.[9] In any event, it would seem that the auctioneer is liable to the purchaser for the return of the deposit money, although he has paid it over to his principal, where this was done after notice that the principal's title was defective[10] or where the auctioneer has bound himself personally by signing the memorandum of sale in his own name.[11]

---

[14] Gibson Land Auction Co. v. Brittain, 182 N. C. 676, 110 S. E. 82, 20 A.L.R. 211.

[15] Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243.
Annotation: 97 A.L.R. 860.

[16] Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 353.
Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

[17] See infra, § 60.

[18] See infra, §§ 55–59.

[19] Nash v. Page, 80 Ky. 539, 44 Am. Rep. 490.
See WAREHOUSES [Also 27 R. C. L. p. 951, § 4].

[20] McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 45 Wash. 285, 88 P. 199, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 748.
Annotation: 16 Ann. Cas. 386.
See supra, § 20.

[21] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 500.

[1] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 500.

[2] Gilly v. Hirsch, 122 La. 966, 48 So. 422, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 972.
Annotation: 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 972.

Where both the vendor and the vendee are adverse claimants to the deposit money, the auctioneer may file a bill of interpleader, except where he himself claims an interest therein.[12]

---

[3] Cohn v. Valentine, 88 Cal. App. 430, 263 P. 846, citing R. C. L.; Montgomery v. Pacific Coast Land Bureau, 94 Cal. 284, 29 P. 640, 28 Am. St. Rep. 122; Gossage v. Waddle, 230 Ky. 148, 18 S. W. (2d) 975, citing R. C. L.; Noble v. Clarke, 214 Ky. 569, 283 S. W. 975, citing R. C. L.

Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 125; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 481; 131 Am. St. Rep. 499.

Where, however, a written agreement is entered into between the vendor and vendee immediately after the sale and the first payment required thereby is made by check payable to the vendor, which check is thereupon indorsed over by the vendor to the auctioneer in payment for his services, the auctioneer does not become a stakeholder as to the amount of such check. Noble v. Clarke, 214 Ky. 569, 283 S. W. 975, citing R. C. L.

[4] Montgomery v. Pacific Coast Land Bureau, 94 Cal. 284, 29 P. 640, 28 Am. St. Rep. 122.

Annotation: 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481; 131 Am. St. Rep. 499.

The auctioneer, pending the examination of the title, became a stakeholder for the parties. But when the title was shown to be perfect, the deposit then became, according to the terms of sale, a portion of the cash payment and the property of the vendor, less the charges and commissions of the auctioneer. Montgomery v. Pacific Coast Land Bureau, 94 Cal. 284, 29 P. 640, 28 Am. St. Rep. 122.

[5] Montgomery v. Pacific Coast Land Bureau, 94 Cal. 284, 29 P. 640, 28 Am. St. Rep. 122.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1133.

[6] Noble v. Clarke, 214 Ky. 569, 283 S. W. 975, citing R. C. L.

Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 125; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 481; 131 Am. St. Rep. 499.

[7] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 126; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 482.

The rule is not inflexible, however, and the purchaser may, by his conduct and delay, lose the right to hold the auctioneer for a deposit which he has paid over to the seller. Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 125; 131 Am. St. Rep. 499.

Where the terms of the agreement expressly provide that the deposit is to be paid to the vendor if good title shall be made, otherwise to be returned to the purchaser, notice of the rescission of the contract by the latter is not a necessary prerequisite to maintaining an action against the auctioneer to recover the deposit for a failure to make out good title. Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 125; 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481, 482.

To entitle the vendee to interest upon his deposit as against the auctioneer, however, a demand for the return thereof must be made before the institution of suit; and even where a demand is made, interest is recoverable only from the date thereof. Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 126; 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 483.

Where the money was paid to the auctioneer's clerk, who still retains possession thereof, an action to compel the return of the money may be maintained against the clerk. McClean v. Stansberry, 151 Iowa, 312, 131 N. W. 15, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481.

[8] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 126.

[9] Gossage v. Waddle, 230 Ky. 148, 18 S. W. (2d) 975, citing R. C. L.

[10] Green v. Crye, 158 Tenn. 109, 11 S. W. (2d) 869, citing R. C. L.

Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 125; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 482.

[11] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 124; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 483.

See infra, § 59.

[12] Cohn v. Valentine, 88 Cal. App. 430, 263 P. 846, citing R. C. L.

§ 56. Liability to Seller.—As the relation between an auctioneer and one for whom he undertakes to conduct an auction is purely contractual,[13] the nature and extent of his liability to the vendor depend in each instance upon the terms of the particular contract existing between them. For a failure to live up to the terms thereof and carry out the instructions of his employer he is answerable in damages the same as any other agent.[14] An auctioneer is personally responsible to the vendor for delivering goods upon credit, except where he is expressly authorized to do so.[15] He is also personally responsible for any loss that is a consequence of his failure to use ordinary care and skill in the performance of the duties confided to him. Thus, if he fails to make a memorandum at the time of the sale, as required by the statute of frauds, and the property subsequently sells for less, he is answerable to his principal for the difference between the amount first bid and the net price upon its resale.[16] An auctioneer, like any other agent, must exercise good faith toward his principal with respect to the matters with which he has been intrusted, and he may be held accountable for any secret profit received by him as a result of the sale not disclosed to the principal.[17] He is liable to the vendor for the amount of a deposit of earnest money received in the capacity of a stakeholder where he wrongfully returns it to the purchaser.[18] Obviously, it is the duty of the auctioneer to turn over the proceeds of a sale to his employer;[19] and, if sued for them, he is estopped from disputing his employer's title by setting up title either in himself or in a third person.[20]

§ 57. Liability to Buyer.—An auctioneer, by express agreement, may make himself personally responsible to a purchaser at an auction for performance on the part of his employer.[1] He may also be held liable to the buyer for fraudulent misrepresentations[2] or upon his own personal warranty as to the quality of the goods.[3] In the absence of such an agreement, however, he incurs no personal liability except as to the care and custody of such earnest money as the vendee may have deposited with him,[4] provided he discloses the name

---

Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 126, 127; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 484; 131 Am. St. Rep. 495.

An auctioneer, insisting upon retaining his commission as auctioneer and the auction duty, may not file a bill of interpleader where an action is brought against him to recover the deposit and the whole thereof. Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 126.

[13] See supra, § 8.

[14] Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A.1915B, 151.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

Where the vendor instructs the auctioneer not to sell his property below a fixed amount and the auctioneer neglects to follow his instructions and sells for less, then he is liable to his principal for the difference between the price stated and the one received. But if he does as ordered and the goods will not sell at the price instructed, he may not be held liable for the loss occasioned when the goods perish or deteriorate. Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 499.

[15] Annotation: 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 584.

If the auctioneer is authorized to sell upon credit and the vendee fails to pay, the former does not become personally responsible for the purchase price simply because the note given by the vendee was made payable to the auctioneer himself, provided he did not appropriate it to his own purposes.

Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 499.

[16] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 498.

As to liability for permitting property to be sold at a ruinous sacrifice, see supra, § 20.

[17] Hippisley v. Knee Bros. [1905] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 1, 5 B. R. C. 193—Div. Ct. (secret trade discount on an advertising bill).

Annotation: 5 B. R. C. 188, 190.

[18] See supra, § 55.

[19] Wright v. May, 127 Minn. 150, 149 N. W. 9, L.R.A.1915B, 151.

[20] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 499; 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 586.

[1] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 123; 131 Am. St. Rep. 499; 14 B. R. C. 310.

[2] Green v. Crye, 158 Tenn. 109, 11 S. W. (2d) 869, citing R. C. L.

Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 124.

[3] Annotation: 131 Am. St. Rep. 483; Ann. Cas. 1915C, 581.

[4] For a discussion of an auctioneer's liability with respect to the care and custody of earnest money, see supra, § 55.

of his principal and contracts in his behalf.[5] Accordingly, an auctioneer selling for a known principal is not responsible to the buyer for the title, in the absence of his own affirmative agreement,[6] for an auctioneer does not impliedly warrant the title of his vendor.[7] In order that he may adequately disclose his principal, it is not essential for an auctioneer to mention him by name; pointing him out to the prospective purchasers is sufficient.[8] The situation is the same where the buyer knows who the principal is.[9] It has been held that where an article purchased does not comply with the seller's warranty and the article is returned to, and accepted by, the seller, an action will lie against the clerk of the auction to recover the price paid to him, which is still in his hands, regardless of whether or not the seller has authorized the clerk to return such money.[10]

§ 58. —Effect of Failure to Disclose Principal.—It is a general rule that an auctioneer who sells property without disclosing the name of his principal will be considered as the vendor himself and, as such, is responsible to the buyer.[11] In such cases he is responsible to the buyer for the title[12] or for a breach of warranty.[13] It is immaterial that he is known to the other party to be an auctioneer or broker usually employed in selling property as the agent for others;[14] the mere fact that one sells goods at auction is no notice to the buyer that he is not selling his own goods.[15] It has been held in an English case, however, that as respects the sale of a specific chattel, as distinguished from a sale of unascertained goods, an auctioneer who discloses the fact that he is an agent but does not name his principal is not personally liable if it later appears that the principal had no right to sell.[16] It has been held that where an auctioneer, without disclosing his principal, signed a contract in which property was sold for a sum less than the minimum price authorized by the owner, in consequence of which the owner repudiated the sale, the auctioneer who knowingly exceeded his authority is personally liable to the purchaser for the amount the premises were worth over and above the price he was to pay therefor.[17]

---

[5] Meyer v. Redmond, 205 N. Y. 478, 98 N. E. 906, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 675.
Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 123; 131 Am. St. Rep. 500.

[6] Corn Land Farms Co. v. Barcus, 105 Neb. 869, 182 N. W. 487, 23 A.L.R. 119.
Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 123; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 483.

Where one acts as a clerk of an auction sale, the fact of his employment and the exercise of the duties incidental thereto do not constitute him a warrantor of the title or ownership of the property sold at the sale. Corn Land Farms Co. v. Barcus, 105 Neb. 869, 182 N. W. 487, 23 A.L.R. 119.

[7] Annotation: 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 584.

[8] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 123; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 483; 14 B. R. C. 309.

Whether there has been a sufficient disclosure of the principal to relieve the auctioneer from liability has been held to be a question for the jury. Annotation: 14 B. R. C. 309.

[9] Corn Land Farms Co. v. Barcus, 105 Neb. 869, 182 N. W. 487, 23 A.L.R. 119 (action against clerk of auction sale).

[10] McClean v. Stansberry, 151 Iowa, 312, 131 N. W. 15, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 481.

[11] Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush (Ky.) 619, 96 Am. Dec. 262; Seemuller v. Fuchs, 64 Md. 217, 1 A. 120, 54 Am. Rep. 766; Meyer v. Redmond, 205 N. Y. 478, 98 N. E. 906, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 675; Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261, 84 Am. Dec. 343.
Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 122; 131 Am. St. Rep. 499; 14 B. R. C. 307; 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 586.

The purchaser cannot, without his consent, be compelled to contract with an insolvent principal or a person who, he has reason to believe, cannot and will not carry out the terms of the contract. Instead thereof, when he bids under a notice in which the principal has not been disclosed, he may properly deem the bid to have been made upon the responsibility of the auctioneer and look to him for the fulfilment of the contract. Meyer v. Redmond, 205 N. Y. 478, 98 N. E. 906, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 675.
Annotation: 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 483.

[12] Seemuller v. Fuchs, 64 Md. 217, 1 A. 120, 54 Am. Rep. 766.

Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 122.

[13] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 123.

[14] Meyer v. Redmond, 205 N. Y. 478, 98 N. E. 906, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 675.
Annotation: 14 B. R. C. 308, 309; 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 586; 96 Am. Dec. 271.

[15] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 122; 14 B. R. C. 310.

[16] Benton v. Campbell [1925] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 410, 14 B. R. C. 295.
Annotation: 14 B. R. C. 309.

§ 59. —Effect of Manner in Which Contract Is Signed.—An auctioneer who signs a written contract in his own name merely, which contract does not upon its face show that he was acting as the agent of another, will be personally bound thereby,[18] even though he at the same time discloses the name of his principal,[19] and regardless of whether or not the principal is in fact known.[20] Similarly, when auctioneers on a sale give a bill of sale signed jointly by the owner and themselves, they are liable to the buyer as principals if the title proves bad.[1]

§ 60. Liability to True Owner.—The authorities are practically unanimous in holding that an auctioneer who sells property in behalf of a principal having no title thereto is personally liable to the true owner for conversion,[2] regardless of whether he had notice of the true owner's title,[3] or whether he acted with the utmost good faith in total ignorance thereof,[4] provided, however, that the true owner has not by his own act or assent given a color of title or an apparent right of sale to the party for whom the auctioneer acts.[5] The fact that the auctioneer has sold the goods and turned over the proceeds to his principal in innocence and good faith affords him no protection.[6] The rule of liability on the part of the auctioneer applies where he innocently sells stolen property;[7] where he sells property in behalf of the vendee under a conditional sale where title has not yet vested in the latter;[8] where he sells property in behalf of a mortgagee under a void mortgage;[9] and, in some cases, where he sells mortgaged goods at the instance of the mortgagor.[10] There is, however, some conflict in regard to the sale of chattels subject to a mortgage. Some courts take the view that an auctioneer does not, by selling mortgaged chattels on behalf of a mortgagor without notice of the mortgage, become liable in conversion to the mortgagee.[11]

---

[17] Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261, 84 Am. Dec. 343.

Annotation: 96 Am. Dec. 265.

[18] Meyer v. Redmond, 205 N. Y. 478, 98 N. E. 906, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 675.

The purchaser receiving from the auctioneer a written contract of sale signed in the name of the auctioneer is not bound by the terms of a memorandum in the auctioneer's book describing the true owner of the property made for the purpose of satisfying the statute of frauds. Ibid.

[19] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 124; 14 B. R. C. 308.

[20] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 124; 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 483; 14 B. R. C. 310.

[1] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 124.

[2] Morrow Shoe Mfg. Co. v. New England Shoe Co. (C. C. A. 7th) 57 F. 685, 24 L.R.A. 417, modified on rehearing in (C. C. A. 7th) 60 F. 341, 24 L.R.A. 425; Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 27 P. 33, 13 L.R.A. 605, 25 Am. St. Rep. 110; Higgins v. Lodge, 68 Md. 229, 11 A. 846, 6 Am. St. Rep. 437; Robinson v. Bird, 158 Mass. 357, 33 N. E. 391, 35 Am. St. Rep. 495; Milliken v. Hathaway, 148 Mass. 69, 19 N. E. 16, 1 L.R.A. 510; Hills v. Snell, 104 Mass. 173, 6 Am. Rep. 216; Kearney v. Clutton, 101 Mich. 106, 59 N. W. 419, 45 Am. St. Rep. 394; Mohr v. Langan, 162 Mo. 474, 63 S. W. 409, 84 Am. St. Rep. 503; Consolidated Co. v. Curtis, [1892] 1 Q. B. 495, 25 Eng. Rul. Cas. 162.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 135; 50 L.R.A. 654; 131 Am. St. Rep. 500; 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 585.

The contrary decision of Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 571, 56 Am. Dec. 363, was subsequently discredited in Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 27 P. 33, 13 L.R.A. 605, 25 Am. St. Rep. 110.

There is no more hardship in requiring the auctioneer to account for the value of the goods than there would be in compelling the right owner to lose them or the purchaser from the auctioneer to pay for them. Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 27 P. 33, 13 L.R.A. 605, 25 Am. St. Rep. 110.

The rule requiring the auctioneer to look well to the title of the goods which he sells and holding him responsible to the true owner in the case of feloniously obtained property has been approved as a salutary regulation on general considerations of legal policy. Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 138.

[3] Morrow Shoe Mfg. Co. v. New England Shoe Co. (C. C. A. 7th) 57 F. 685, 24 L.R.A. 417, modified on rehearing in (C. C. A. 7th) 60 F. 341, 24 L.R.A. 425; Higgins v. Lodge, 68 Md. 229, 11 A. 846, 6 Am. St. Rep. 437; Mohr v. Langan, 162 Mo. 474, 63 S. W. 409, 85 Am. St. Rep. 503.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 136; 131 Am. St. Rep. 500; 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 584.

[4] Hills v. Snell, 104 Mass. 173, 6 Am. Rep. 216 (dictum); Robinson v. Bird, 158 Mass. 357, 33 N. E. 391, 35 Am. St. Rep. 495; Kearney v. Clutton, 101 Mich. 106, 59 N. W. 419, 45 Am. St. Rep. 394.

Consolidated Co. v. Curtis, [1892] 1 Q. B. 495, 25 Eng. Rul. Cas. 162.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 136; 85 Am. St. Rep. 521; 131 Am. St. Rep. 500; 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 432.

[5] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 137.

[6] Kearney v. Clutton, 101 Mich. 106, 59 N. W. 419, 45 Am. St. Rep. 394.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 136; 131 Am. St. Rep. 500.

[7] Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 429, 54 Am. Dec. 300; Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 27 P. 33, 13 L.R.A. 605, 25 Am. St. Rep. 110; Koch v. Branch, 44 Mo. 542, 100 Am. Dec. 324 (dictum).

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 137; 131 Am. St. Rep. 500.

Where an auctioneer sells goods in behalf of one who acquired title by fraud, and hence whose title is voidable at the option of the person defrauded, the auctioneer is liable if he had knowledge of the fraud or of circumstances sufficient to put him upon inquiry.[12] If the goods are still in the possession of the auctioneer, they may be replevied by their rightful owner, for under such circumstances the auctioneer is not entitled to a lien thereon either for his commissions or for any money he may have advanced upon the property as security.[13] If the goods are no longer in his possession, he is liable to the true owner for their actual value irrespective of the price for which they may have been sold.[14]

---

[8] Robinson v. Bird, 158 Mass. 357, 33 N. E. 391, 35 Am. St. Rep. 495.

[9] Milliken v. Hathaway, 148 Mass. 69, 19 N. E. 16, 1 L.R.A. 510.
Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 138.

[10] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 138.

[11] Frizzell v. Rundle, 88 Tenn. 396, 12 S. W. 918, 17 Am. St. Rep. 908.
Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 138; 35 Am. St. Rep. 497; 131 Am. St. Rep. 500.

[12] Morrow Shoe Mfg. Co. v. New England Shoe Co. (C. C. A. 7th) 57 F. 685, 24 L.R.A. 417; modified on rehearing in (C. C. A. 7th) 60 F. 341, 24 L.R.A. 425; Higgins v. Lodge, 68 Md. 229, 11 A. 846, 6 Am. St. Rep. 437.

[13] Higgins v. Lodge, 68 Md. 229, 11 A. 846, 6 Am. St. Rep. 437.

[14] Annotation: 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 584.

AUDITA QUERELA

§ 1. Definition and General Nature.
§ 2. When Available.
§ 3. When Not Available.
§ 4. Parties to Proceeding.
§ 5. As Factor in Modern Practice.

§ 1. Definition and General Nature.—Although sometimes classified as an equitable action,[1] audita querela is basically a legal remedy,[2] deriving its name from a writ granted by the courts of common law in favor of one against whom execution had issued or was about to issue upon a judgment which it would be contrary to justice to allow to be enforced, either because of matters arising subsequent to the rendition thereof, or because of prior existing defenses which were not available to the judgment debtor in the original suit by reason of the judgment creditor's fraudulent conduct or through circumstances over which the judgment debtor had no control.[3] The purpose of the proceeding is to set aside the judgment and vacate the execution, if issued,[4] and the levy if a levy has been made.[5] The proceeding is a direct attack on the judgment; and therefore, the party seeking relief may contradict the record.[6] The writ ordinarily issues from, and is returnable to, the court wherein the judgment complained of was rendered, although the ambiguous statement has sometimes been made that it issues to the court where the record remains.[7] Unlike certiorari, it is not a writ that issues from a superior to an inferior court. Though founded on the record of the original suit,[8] it does not constitute a writ of error, but merely brings up for adjudication the alleged fraudulent conduct of the judgment creditor or other circumstances mentioned above which would require that the judgment be set aside. Moreover, the complaint in such a proceeding sounds in tort, and the proper plea thereto is "not guilty."[9] The proceeding has the usual incidents of the ordinary action, with its issues of law and of fact, the trial thereof, and judgment.[10] If the complainant in this process is successful, he recovers of the opposite party damages for the wrongful act complained of and obtains cancelation of the fraudulent judgment and the termination of all further proceedings thereunder.[11] If the basis of the complainant's recovery is that the judgment was never discharged of record, although he had previously paid it, the court will order the satisfaction thereof to be entered on the record.[12] As to the issues involved and as to all others that might have been litigated therein, the judgment rendered in an action of audita querela operates as res judicata.[13]

---

[1] Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692.

Annotation: 23 Am. St. Rep. 107.

[2] Parker v. Jones, 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 276, 75 Am. Dec. 441.

[3] Humphreys v. Leggett, 9 How. (U. S.) 297, 13 L. ed. 145; Harding v. Hawkins, 141 Ill. 572, 31 N. E. 307, 33 Am. St. Rep. 347 (dictum); Electric Plaster Co. v. Blue Rapids City Twp. 81 Kan. 730, 106 P. 1079, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1237; Elliot v. Porter, 5 Dana (Ky.) 299, 30 Am. Dec. 689; State ex rel. Gary Realty Co. v. Hall, 322 Mo. 1118, 17 S. W. (2d) 935, citing R. C. L.; Nichols v. Dissler, 31 N. J. L. 461, 86 Am. Dec. 219; Clark v. Rowling, 3 N. Y. 216, 53 Am. Dec. 290 (dictum); Longworth v. Screven, 20 S. C. L. (2 Hill) 298, 27 Am. Dec. 381; Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692.

Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405; 23 Am. St. Rep. 107.

The common-law writ of audita querela lies in favor of a judgment defendant to obtain relief against the consequences of the judgment on account of some matter of defense or discharge arising since its rendition which could not be taken advantage of otherwise. It is not available to one in whose favor the judgment has been rendered for the purpose of aiding in its enforcement by setting aside a release. Kelley v. Kelley (Mo. App.) 290 S. W. 624, citing R. C. L.

The proceeding by writ of audita querela was regarded as a direct attack on the judgment in all cases to which it could be properly applied. Annotation: 23 Am. St. Rep. 107.

[4] Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405.

[5] Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56, 36 Am. Dec. 329.

[6] Annotation: 23 Am. St. Rep. 107.

[7] See Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56, 36 Am. Dec. 329.

Annotation: 15 Am. Dec. 695.

[8] Annotation: 15 Am. Dec. 695.

[9] Little v. Cook, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 363, 15 Am. Dec. 698.

§ 2. When Available.—Recourse may be had to proceedings by way of audita querela whenever matters of avoidance arise subsequent to the rendition of the judgment the enforcement of which the complainant apprehends.[14] Thus, where execution is subsequently issued upon a judgment in spite of the fact that the judgment debtor had previously paid the same, the court issuing the execution will vacate the same upon proceedings audita querela and order the judgment to be discharged of record.[15] So also, where execution is issued upon a judgment barred by discharge in bankruptcy, the judgment debtor may obtain relief by audita querela.[16] Where a judgment has been recovered in an action of debt on a foreign judgment which is subsequently reversed on appeal, audita querela will lie to set aside the second judgment and vacate any execution that may have been issued thereon.[17] Moreover, the writ is a proper remedy even where the grounds upon which the complainant seeks relief existed prior to the rendition of the judgment, provided he did not have an opportunity to present such grounds in the original suit.[18] The writ is available as a remedy to set aside a default judgment voidable for want of service of process, either actual or constructive, and to vacate the execution issued thereon.[19] Again, where a party in whose favor a verdict has been given releases his cause of action to the party charged thereby and thereafter takes judgment upon his verdict and issues execution thereon, the same may be set aside by a writ of audita querela.[20] This is equally true where, upon the institution of a suit, the defendant pays the amount demanded upon the plaintiff's promise to discontinue the action, which promise the latter fraudulently fails to keep.[1] The judgment

---

[10] Annotation: 15 Am. Dec. 695.

Audita querela is a regular suit in which the parties may plead and take issue on the merits; it cannot, therefore, be sued out against the United States. Avery v. United States, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 304, 20 L. ed. 405.

[11] Little v. Cook, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 363, 15 Am. Dec. 698.

[12] Parker v. Jones, 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 276, 75 Am. Dec. 441.

[13] See Sartwell v. Sowles, 72 Vt. 270, 48 A. 11, 82 Am. St. Rep. 943.

[14] It lies for bail when the original judgment against the principal has been reversed, or the principal has paid the debt after judgment against the bail, or where there is judgment against a jailer for an escape and then the first judgment is reversed. Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692.

[15] Parker v. Jones, 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 276, 75 Am. Dec. 441; Longworth v. Screven, 20 S. C. L. (2 Hill) 298, 27 Am. Dec. 381.

[16] Longworth v. Screven, 20 S. C. L. (2 Hill) 298, 27 Am. Dec. 381.

Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405.

[17] Merchants' Ins. Co. v. De Wolf, 33 Pa. 45, 75 Am. Dec. 577.

[18] Annotation: 15 Am. Dec. 695.

[19] Harris v. Hardeilman, 14 How. (U. S.) 334, 14 L. ed. 444.

The right to have a judgment which is voidable for want of notice set aside by audita querela is not affected by a false statement on its face that the parties appeared by their attorneys, dispensed with a jury, and submitted the facts to the court. Landers v. Brant, 10 How. (U. S.) 348, 13 L. ed. 449.

[20] See Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692.

[1] Longworth v. Screven, 20 S. C. L. (2 Hill) 298, 27 Am. Dec. 381.

The writ lies where the defendant paid in such cases is fraudulently obtained, and the judgment debtor is considered as having had no opportunity to plead the payment and discharge.[2] The writ has also been used to set aside a judgment recovered against an infant who defended in person without a guardian ad litem being appointed to look after his interests.[3] Audita querela is likewise a proper remedy where the sole ground of relief is that the execution issued calls for an amount greater than that for which judgment was recovered.[4]

§ 3. When Not Available.—It is a general and well-settled principle that when a party has had a legal opportunity to make his defense, or when the injury of which he complains is to be attributed to his own neglect, he cannot be relieved by an audita querela.[5] He is deemed to have had this opportunity in all cases where it appears from the return of the officer that he had legal notice of the suit, unless the matter arose after the commencement of the suit and he was deprived of his opportunity by means which bring the case within the principles mentioned in the preceding section.[6] Thus, if a party suffers a judgment by default to be taken against him upon a claim barred by his discharge in bankruptcy, he is not entitled to relief by means of audita querela.[7] As the function of a writ audita querela is distinct from that of an appeal or a writ of error, the complainant's application will be denied if based upon errors of law or fact.[8] Even though the right to a writ of error has been withdrawn by statute, recourse may not be had to audita querela as a substitute.[9] It cannot be made a means of prescribing the mode in which an execution upon a valid judgment shall be enforced, and it has been said that once a judgment has been satisfied audita querela is no longer available as a means of relief.[10] If the judgment complained of is absolutely void, it has been held that a writ of audita querela will not be granted, as there is no necessity therefor.[11] Nor may relief against a judgment rendered upon an unauthorized appearance by an attorney be obtained by means of this writ.[12] As it is a legal remedy, it is not available where a judgment is sought to be avoided solely upon equitable grounds.[13]

§ 4. Parties to Proceeding.—Where proceedings audita querela are instituted, all the persons interested in the judgment sought to be vacated should be joined as parties thereto and given notice thereof.[14] Ordinarily, the action lies only between the parties to the original suit wherein the judgment complained of was rendered.[15] The death of the judgment creditor, however, the debt during the pendency of the suit and the plaintiff afterwards took judgment. Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405.

---

[2] See Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692.

[3] Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405.

Audita querela lies to vacate a judgment obtained against a lunatic whose guardian had not been notified. Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405.

[4] Wilson v. Fleming, 16 Vt. 649, 42 Am. Dec. 531.

[5] Avery v. United States, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 304, 20 L. ed. 405; State ex rel. Gary Realty Co. v. Hall, 322 Mo. 1118, 17 S. W. (2d) 935, citing R. C. L.; Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692.

Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405; 23 Am. St. Rep. 107.

[6] See Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692.

[7] Annotation: 15 Am. Dec. 696.

[8] State ex rel. Gary Realty Co. v. Hall, 322 Mo. 1118, 17 S. W. (2d) 935, citing R. C. L.; Little v. Cook, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 363, 15 Am. Dec. 698.

Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405; 23 Am. St. Rep. 107.

Audita querela does not lie where a writ of error is proper at common law. Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405.

[9] Annotation: 15 Am. Dec. 696.

[10] Longworth v. Screven, 20 S. C. L. (2 Hill) 298, 27 Am. Dec. 381.

[11] French v. White, 78 Vt. 89, 62 A. 35, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 804, 6 Ann. Cas. 479.

[12] Abbott v. Dutton, 44 Vt. 546, 8 Am. Rep. 394.

Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405.

[13] Annotation: 23 Am. St. Rep. 107.

[14] Annotation: 15 Am. Dec. 695.

[15] Longworth v. Screven, 20 S. C. L. (2 Hill) 298, 27 Am. Dec. 381; Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56, 36 Am. Dec. 329.

does not bar the right of action, as the same may be brought against his legal representatives.[16] Obviously, where the proceeding is instituted against the legal representatives of a deceased party, the action is limited to setting aside the judgment and execution, as no recovery can be had for the tortious acts of the deceased. Furthermore, a trustee under trustee process is so far a party to a judgment rendered in that form that if a void execution issues against him, he may be relieved by audita querela.[17]

§ 5. As Factor in Modern Practice.—In the great majority of jurisdictions the writ of audita querela has long since fallen into disuse and become more or less obsolete, owing to the fact that it has been almost entirely supplanted by the less expensive and more expeditious means of obtaining relief by motion upon notice to the adverse parties.[18] Wherever audita querela would have been available at common law, as a general rule, relief may now be obtained on motion.[19] In several of the states, however, the writ is occasionally resorted to as a common-law remedy, and it cannot be said to be so far obsolete that some courts would not allow it if preferred.[20] In others, its use is prescribed by statute.[21] But even in those jurisdictions where one has the option of proceeding either by motion or by a writ of audita querela, ordinarily, the better practice is to proceed by way of motion upon notice to the adverse party.[22]

---

[16] Staniford v. Barry, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 321, 15 Am. Dec. 692; Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56, 36 Am. Dec. 329 (dictum).

[17] Wilson v. Fleming, 16 Vt. 649, 42 Am. Dec. 531.

Annotation: 20 L. ed. 405.

[18] Harris v. Hardeman, 14 How. (U. S.) 334, 14 L. ed. 444; Harding v. Hawkins, 141 Ill. 572, 31 N. E. 307, 33 Am. St. Rep. 347; Clark v. Rowling, 3 N. Y. 216, 53 Am. Dec. 290; Longworth v. Screven, 20 S. C. L. (2 Hill) 298, 27 Am. Dec. 381; Steele v. Boyd, 6 Leigh (Va.) 547, 29 Am. Dec. 218; Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. (Va.) 639, 16 Am. Dec. 780.

[19] See Executions [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 1247, § 41]; Judgments [Also 15 R. C. L. p. 716, § 168].

[20] See Turknett v. Western College, 19 N. M. 572, 145 P. 138, citing R. C. L.; Longworth v. Screven, 20 S. C. L. (2 Hill) 298, 27 Am. Dec. 381.

[21] Electric Plaster Co. v. Blue Rapids City Twp. 81 Kan. 730, 106 P. 1079, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1237.

[22] See Judgments [Also 15 R. C. L. p. 716, § 168].

AUDITORS

See Certified Public Accountants.

AUTOMOBILE FILLING STATION

See Gasoline Filling Stations.

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

See Automobiles, infra, p. 495.

AUTOMOBILES

- I. INTRODUCTION.
  - A. In General.
  - B. Definitions and Descriptive Terms.
  - C. Status.
- II. PUBLIC REGULATION AND CONTROL.
  - A. Power of Regulation.
  - B. Validity of Regulations.
  - C. Specific Regulations.
    - 1. In General.
    - 2. Lights.
    - 3. Speed.
    - 4. Law of the Road.
    - 5. Exclusion from Particular Highways and Districts.
    - 6. Parking.
    - 7. Miscellaneous Regulations.
  - D. Conflict between Statutes and Local Regulations.
    - 1. In General.
    - 2. Regulations as to Speed.
    - 3. Regulations as to Licenses or Taxes.
    - 4. Miscellaneous Regulations.
  - E. Special Privileges to Particular Vehicles or Individuals.
- III. LICENSING AND REGISTRATION OF PRIVATE MOTOR VEHICLES.
  - A. In General.
  - B. Who May License.
  - C. Validity.
  - D. Vehicles within Scope of Licensing or Registration Provisions.
  - E. Persons Who May or Must Obtain Registration and Name in Which Registered.
  - F. Exemptions.
  - G. Procedure Relating to Licensing and Registration.
  - H. Registration Cards and License Plates.
  - I. License Fees and Taxes.
    - 1. Introductory.
    - 2. Validity.
    - 3. Amount of Tax.
    - 4. Purpose of Tax.
    - 5. Exemptions.
  - J. Failure to Comply with Licensing and Registration Provision.
    - 1. In General.
    - 2. Effect upon Civil Rights and Liabilities.
  - K. Nonresidents.
- IV. LICENSING AND REGISTRATION OF OPERATORS.
  - A. In General.
  - B. Regulations as to Nonresidents.
  - C. Revocation and Reinstatement of Licenses or Permits.
- V. INJURIES FROM OPERATION.
  - A. Introduction.
  - B. Negligence.
  - C. Measure of Care Required.
    - 1. Fundamental Principles.

V. C—continued.

- 2. Emergency Rule.
- 3. Physical Disability of Operator.

D. Measure of Care Required re Persons.

- 1. In General.
- 2. Pedestrians.

E. Measure of Care Required as to Particular Matters.

- 1. In General.
- 2. Equipment.
- 3. Speed.

F. Measure of Care Required in Particular Situations.

- 1. In General.
- 2. Where Vision Is Obstructed.
- 3. Skidding.
- 4. Vehicles Proceeding in Same Direction.
- 5. Vehicles Meeting and Passing.
- 6. Street or Highway Intersections.
- 7. Measure of Care at Railroad Crossings.
- 8. Right and Duty to Violate Traffic Rules.
- 9. Turning.
- 10. Backing.
- 11. Stopping.
- 12. Parking.
- 13. Operation on Curves and Hills.
- 14. Towing Cars.

VI. PERSONS LIABLE.

A. In General.

B. Owner Where Car Driven by Another.

- 1. In General.
- 2. Intrusting to Incompetent or Unlicensed Driver.
- 3. Liability Where Car Loaned.
- 4. Acts of Members of Family.
- 5. Master's Liability for Act of Servant.
- 6. Statutory Liability of Owner.

VII. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A. In General.

B. Factors Affecting Defense of Contributory Negligence.

C. Contributory Negligence of Particular Persons.

D. Last Clear Chance.

E. Imputed Negligence.

F. Comparative Negligence.

VIII. INSURANCE.

A. In General.

B. Insurable Interest.

C. Liability Insurance.

- 1. In General.
- 2. Compulsory Insurance.
- 3. Duties and Liabilities of Insurer in General.
- 4. Liability of Insurer under "Omnibus" Clause.
- 5. Duties and Liabilities of Insured.

D. Collision Insurance.

E. Fire Insurance.

F. Theft Insurance.

IX. ACTIONS.

A. In General.

B. Jurisdiction and Venue.

C. Process.

D. Parties.

E. Pleading.

IX.—continued.
- F. Evidence.
  - 1. Judicial Notice.
  - 2. Presumptions and Inferences.
  - 3. Burden of Proof.
  - 4. Admissibility, Competency, Relevancy, and Materiality.
  - 5. Tests and Experiments.
  - 6. Opinion Evidence.
  - 7. Weight and Sufficiency; Degree of Proof.
- G. Trial.
  - 1. In General.
  - 2. Questions of Law and Fact.
  - 3. Instructions.
  - 4. Findings, Verdict, and Judgment.
  - 5. New Trial; Review.

X. DAMAGE TO VEHICLES.

XI. CRIMES INCIDENT TO OWNERSHIP OR OPERATION.
- A. In General.
- B. Particular Crimes.
  - 1. Assault and Battery.
  - 2. Driving while Intoxicated.
  - 3. Driving without Operator's Permit or License.
  - 4. Failure to Comply with Regulations Relating to Lights.
  - 5. Failure to Register.
  - 6. Failure to Stop, Give Information, etc., after Accident.
  - 7. Homicide.
  - 8. Larceny.
  - 9. Lending License Plates.
  - 10. Possession of Automobile with Changed or Defaced Identifying Numbers.
  - 11. Transporting or Receiving in Interstate or Foreign Commerce Motor Vehicles Known to Have Been Stolen.
  - 12. Reckless Driving.
  - 13. Violating Speed Laws.
  - 14. Taking or Using Car without Owner's Consent.
- C. Prosecutions.
  - 1. In General.
  - 2. Indictments and Informations.
- D. Evidence.
  - 1. In General.
  - 2. Admissibility.
  - 3. Sufficiency.
- E. Trial.
- F. Witnesses.

I. INTRODUCTION.

A. In General.
- § 1. Survey.
- § 2. Scope.

B. Definitions and Descriptive Terms.
- § 3. Generally.
- § 4. Automobile as "Carriage" or "Wagon."
- § 5. Motorcycle—In General.
- § 6. —Motorcycle as Used in Statutes and Ordinances.
- § 7. —Motorcycle as Used in Insurance Policies.
- § 8. Public Conveyances.
- § 9. Streets and Highways.

C. Status.
- § 10. Generally; Right to Use Highways.
- § 11. Automobile as Dangerous Instrumentality.

I. C—continued.

- § 12. —Apparent Limitations upon Dangerous Agency Rule.
- § 13. Automobile as Nuisance.
- § 14. Automobile as Tool or Implement of Trade.

II. PUBLIC REGULATION AND CONTROL.

- A. Power of Regulation.
  - § 15. Federal Government.
  - § 16. States.
  - § 17. —State Regulation of Use of Highways by Private Motor Vehicles for Hire.
  - § 18. —State Regulation of Motor Vehicle Carriers as Affected by Interstate Commerce Clause.
  - § 19. Municipalities.
  - § 20. —Statutes Affecting Municipal Regulations.
  - § 21. State and Municipal Regulation of Federal Agencies.
- B. Validity of Regulations.
  - § 22. Generally.
  - § 23. Class Legislation.
- C. Specific Regulations.
  - 1. In General.
    - § 24. Generally.
  - 2. Lights.
    - a. In General.
      - § 25. Generally.
      - § 26. Validity of Enactments.
    - b. Construction of Enactments.
      - § 27. Generally.
      - § 28. As Affected by Purpose.
      - § 29. Time Requirements.
      - § 30. Intensity or Visibility Requirements.
      - § 31. Dimming or Casting Beam Down.
      - § 32. As Affected by Atmospheric Conditions.
      - § 33. Requirements as to Location on Car.
      - § 34. Requirements as to Location of Car.
      - § 35. Applicability to Cars Not in Motion.
      - § 36. Applicability to Towed Cars.
  - 3. Speed.
    - a. Fundamental Principles.
      - § 37. Generally.
      - § 38. Regulation by States.
      - § 39. Regulation by Municipalities.
      - § 40. Exemptions from Speed Regulations.
    - b. Indefiniteness of Speed Regulations as Affecting Validity
      - (1) In General.
        - § 41. Generally.
      - (2) Criminal Cases.
        - § 42. Generally.
        - § 43. Indefiniteness as to Locality.
        - § 44. Indefiniteness as to Rate.
      - (3) Civil Cases.
        - § 45. Generally.
  - 4. Law of the Road.
    - § 46. Generally.
    - § 47. Regulations Prohibiting Passing at Street Intersections.
  - 5. Exclusion from Particular Highways and Districts.
    - a. General Principles.
      - § 48. Generally.
      - § 49. One-way Streets.
      - § 50. Limitations upon Use of Streets by Motor Vehicles for Hire.

II. C, 5—continued.
- b. Limitations upon Weight of Vehicles, or Loads Thereon.
  - § 51. Weight of Vehicle or Load.
  - § 52. Weight as Affected by Width of Tires.
  - § 53. Reasonableness and Definiteness of Enactments.
- c. Regulations as to Dimensions or Combinations of Motor Vehicles.
  - § 54. Generally.
  - § 55. Regulations as to Length or Width.
  - § 56. Regulations as to Height.
  - § 57. Delegation of Legislative Authority.

6. Parking.
  - § 58. Generally.
  - § 59. Right of Abutting Owner to Control Cab Stands or Parking in Street.
  - § 60. Validity of Ordinance Denying to Automobiles for Hire Parking Privileges Extended to Automobiles Generally.
  - § 61. Validity of Municipal Regulation Requiring Vehicles for Hire to Use Taxicab Stands.

7. Miscellaneous Regulations.
  - § 62. Generally.
  - § 63. Regulations as to Safety Appliances.
  - § 64. Regulations as to Safety Zones.
  - § 65. Regulations as to Stopping.
  - § 66. Regulations of Use in Parks and on Toll Roads.
  - § 67. Use of Highways for Races and Speed Contests.

D. Conflict between Statutes and Local Regulations.

1. In General.
  - § 68. Generally.

2. Regulations as to Speed.
  - § 69. Generally.
  - § 70. Fixing Rate Lower than Statutory Rate.
  - § 71. Fixing Rate Higher than Statutory Rate.
  - § 72. Definite and Indefinite Rates.

3. Regulations as to Licenses or Taxes.
- a. In General.
  - § 73. Generally.
- b. On Vehicles Other than Those for Hire.
  - § 74. Generally.
  - § 75. Where Statute Purports to Be Exclusive.
  - § 76. Statutes Forbidding More than One License Number.
  - § 77. Amount of Fee as Affecting Validity.
- c. On Vehicles for Hire.
  - § 78. Generally.
  - § 79. Regulations as to Vehicles for Hire Other than Those Relating to Licenses.

4. Miscellaneous Regulations.
  - § 80. Regulations as to Passing Street Cars.
  - § 81. Requirements as to Driving or Stopping on Right Side.
  - § 82. Regulations concerning Street Intersections.
  - § 83. Regulations as to Parking.
  - § 84. Regulations as to Lights.
  - § 85. Regulations Prohibiting Noxious Gases, Smoke, Steam, etc.
  - § 86. Regulations as to Nonresidents.
  - § 87. Regulations as to Weight.
  - § 88. Regulations as to Intoxication of Drivers.

E. Special Privileges to Particular Vehicles or Individuals.
  - § 89. Generally.

III. LICENSING AND REGISTRATION OF PRIVATE MOTOR VEHICLES.

A. In General.
  - § 90. Generally.

III. A—continued.
    § 91. Nature and Purpose.
    § 92. Conflict between Statutes and Local Regulations.
  B. WHO MAY LICENSE.
    § 93. State.
    § 94. Municipal Corporations.
  C. VALIDITY.
    § 95. Generally.
    § 96. Requirement of Payment of Property Taxes as Condition Precedent to Automobile License.
  D. VEHICLES WITHIN SCOPE OF LICENSING OR REGISTRATION PROVISIONS.
    § 97. Generally.
    § 98. Motor Vehicles "for Compensation" or "for Hire."
  E. PERSONS WHO MAY OR MUST OBTAIN REGISTRATION AND NAME IN WHICH REGISTERED.
    § 99. Generally.
    § 100. Married Women.
    § 101. Agents.
    § 102. Corporations.
    § 103. Unincorporated Associations.
    § 104. Partners.
    § 105. Part Owners.
    § 106. Tradename.
    § 107. Conditional Buyer and Seller.
  F. EXEMPTIONS.
    § 108. Generally.
    § 109. Governmental Vehicles.
  G. PROCEDURE RELATING TO LICENSING AND REGISTRATION.
    § 110. Generally.
  H. REGISTRATION CARDS AND LICENSE PLATES.
    § 111. Generally.
    § 112. Liability of One Lending License Plate to Another.
  I. LICENSE FEES AND TAXES.
   1. INTRODUCTORY.
    § 113. Generally.
    § 114. Nature of Fees and Taxes.
   2. VALIDITY.
    a. IN GENERAL.
    § 115. Generally.
    § 116. Municipal Fees and Taxes.
    § 117. Local Improvement District Fees and Taxes.
    b. AS AFFECTED BY GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF TAXATION.
    § 118. Generally.
    § 119. Limitations on ad Valorem Taxes.
    § 120. Provisions against Double Taxation.
    § 121. Provisions as to Uniformity and Discrimination.
    § 122. Provisions against Local and Special Legislation.
    § 123. Prohibitions against Interference with Local Taxing Districts.
    c. AS QUESTION RELATES TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE.
    § 124. Generally.
    § 125. For Highway Purposes.
    § 126. Graduated Fees.
   3. AMOUNT OF TAX.
    a. IN GENERAL.
    § 127. Generally.
    § 128. Under Police Power.
    § 129. Under Power of Taxation.
    b. GRADUATED FEES.
    § 130. Generally.

III. I, 3, b—continued.
- § 131. Based on Weight.
- § 132. Based on Horse Power.
- § 133. Based on Seating Capacity.

4. PURPOSE OF TAX.
- § 134. Generally.
- § 135. Highway Purposes.

5. EXEMPTIONS.
- § 136. Generally.
- § 137. Of Persons.

J. FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH LICENSING AND REGISTRATION PROVISION.

1. IN GENERAL.
- § 138. Generally.

2. EFFECT UPON CIVIL RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

a. UPON RIGHT TO RECOVER FOR INJURIES.
- § 139. Generally.
- § 140. Massachusetts Rule.
- § 141. Right of Unlicensed Operator.
- § 142. Right to Recover against Municipality.
- § 143. Under Express Statutory Provision as to Liability.

b. UPON LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.
- § 144. Generally.
- § 145. Massachusetts Rule.
- § 146. Liability of Unlicensed Operator, or Owner of Car Operated by Unlicensed Driver.

c. CAR EQUIPPED WITH IMPROPER LICENSE PLATES.
- § 147. Generally.

K. NONRESIDENTS.
- § 148. Generally.
- § 149. Exemptions.
- § 150. Nonresidents of Municipalities.

IV. LICENSING AND REGISTRATION OF OPERATORS.

A. IN GENERAL.
- § 151. Generally.
- § 152. Validity of Regulations.

B. REGULATIONS AS TO NONRESIDENTS.
- § 153. Generally.
- § 154. Construction.
- § 155. Effect of Driving after Exemption Expires.
- § 156. Holder of Nonresident's License Driving Resident's Car.

C. REVOCATION AND REINSTATEMENT OF LICENSES OR PERMITS.
- § 157. Generally.
- § 158. Revocation for Nonpayment of Judgment.
- § 159. Operating during Period of Revocation.
- § 160. Reinstatement.

V. INJURIES FROM OPERATION.

A. INTRODUCTION.
- § 161. Generally.

B. NEGLIGENCE.
- § 162. Generally.
- § 163. Violation of Statute or Ordinance.
- § 164. Proximate Cause.

C. MEASURE OF CARE REQUIRED.

1. FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES.
- § 165. Generally.
- § 166. Duty to Keep Car under Control.
- § 167. Duty to Maintain Lookout.
- § 168. Duty to Anticipate Presence of Others.

V. C, 1—continued.

- § 169. Presumption that Others Will Exercise Due Care.
- § 170. Youth of Operator.

2. EMERGENCY RULE.
  - § 171. Generally.
  - § 172. Accidents Near Street Cars.
  - § 173. Accidents at Railroad Crossings.
  - § 174. Accidents at Street or Highway Intersections.
  - § 175. Accidents at Intersection of Highway and Private Way.
  - § 176. Meeting and Passing Other Vehicles.
  - § 177. Miscellaneous Applications.
3. PHYSICAL DISABILITY OF OPERATOR.
  - § 178. Generally.
  - § 179. Effect of Knowledge or Lack of Knowledge of Disability.
  - § 180. Falling Asleep.
  - § 181. Driving While Intoxicated.

D. MEASURE OF CARE REQUIRED RE PERSONS.

1. IN GENERAL.
  - § 182. Generally.
  - § 183. Motorist Engaged about Automobile on Highway.
  - § 184. Reciprocal Duties of Automobile Drivers and Riders on Bicycles.
  - § 185. Duty to Children.
  - § 186. —Children Playing in Street.
2. PEDESTRIANS.
  - a. IN GENERAL.
    - § 187. Generally.
    - § 188. Pedestrians under Disability.
    - § 189. Pedestrians on Sidewalk.
    - § 190. —Injury in Attempt to Avoid Collision.
    - § 191. Pedestrians Colliding with Side of Car.
    - § 192. Pedestrian Falling and Being Struck by Automobiles.
    - § 193. Traffic Officers.
    - § 194. Persons Working on Streets or Highways.
  - b. PEDESTRIANS SUDDENLY DARTING OR STEPPING INTO PATH OF CAR.
    - (1) ADULTS.
      - § 195. Driver's Duty Generally.
      - § 196. Pedestrian Coming from behind or around Vehicle or Alighting Therefrom.
      - § 197. Pedestrian Turning or Stepping Backwards.
    - (2) CHILDREN.
      - § 198. Driver's Duty Generally.
      - § 199. Application to Factual Situations.
      - § 200. Children near Crowds, Groups, etc.
  - c. PEDESTRIANS WALKING ALONG STREET OR HIGHWAY.
    - § 201. Generally.
    - § 202. Duty to Anticipate Presence and Action of Pedestrian.
    - § 203. Failure to Give Timely Warning.
    - § 204. Absence of Lights or Inability to See.
    - § 205. Speed or Failure to Stop or Slow Up.
    - § 206. Crowding Pedestrian.
    - § 207. Driving on Wrong Side.
    - § 208. Swerving Car.
    - § 209. Object Extending beyond Car.
    - § 210. Pedestrian Walking on Left Side of Road.
  - d. PEDESTRIANS CROSSING STREET AT UNUSUAL PLACE OR DIAGONALLY.
    - § 211. Generally.
    - § 212. Duty of Driver between Crossings.
    - § 213. Duty of Driver towards Children.
    - § 214. Duty as Affected by Statute or Ordinance.

V. D, 2—continued.

e. PEDESTRIANS ALIGHTING FROM, OR WAITING FOR, STREET CARS.
  (1) IN GENERAL.
    § 215. Generally.
  (2) ABSENCE OF SPECIFIC REGULATION.
    § 216. Duty of Driver.
    § 217. Application of Rules.
    § 218. Passenger Alighting at Regular Stopping Place Other than Intersection or from Moving Car.
    § 219. Prospective Passengers.
  (3) SPECIFIC REGULATION.
    § 220. Generally.
    § 221. Regulation Prescribing Distance for Passing.
    § 222. Enactments Regulating Speed.
    § 223. Enactment Requiring Absolute Stop.
    § 224. —Effect of Violation of Such Enactments.
    § 225. —Applicability Where Street Car and Automobile Approach from Opposite Directions.
    § 226. —Applicability Where Street Car Stops at Other than Regular Stopping Place.
    § 227. —Where Passenger Alights from Moving Street Car.
    § 228. Enactments Requiring Warning.
3. GUESTS.
  (1) IN GENERAL.
    § 229. Generally.
  (2) INJURIES DUE TO NEGLIGENT OPERATION.
    (a) INVITED GUESTS.
    § 230. General Rule.
    § 231. Minority Rule.
    § 232. Respondeat Superior.
    § 233. Applications of General Rule.
    (b) GUESTS AT SUFFERANCE.
    § 234. Generally.
  (3) INJURIES DUE TO CONDITION OF CAR.
    § 235. Generally.
  (4) INEXPERIENCE OR LACK OF SKILL OF DRIVER.
    § 236. Generally.
  (5) EFFECT OF "GUEST" STATUTES.
    § 237. Generally.
    § 238. Validity of Statutes.
    § 239. Who Is Guest.
    § 240. What Constitutes Negligence within the Statutes.
    § 241. —Gross Negligence, Wilful Misconduct.
    § 242. —Reckless Operation, etc.
    § 243. Application to Facts.
4. PASSENGERS FOR HIRE.
    § 244. Generally.
5. TRESPASSERS.
    § 245. Generally.
    § 246. Children.
    § 247. —Attractive Nuisance Doctrine.
6. PERSONS ON RUNNING BOARD OR OUTSIDE BODY OF CAR.
    § 248. Generally.
7. PERSONS COASTING IN STREET.
    § 249. Generally.
E. MEASURE OF CARE REQUIRED AS TO PARTICULAR MATTERS.
  1. IN GENERAL.
    § 250. Generally.

V. E—continued.

2. Equipment.
- § 251. Generally.
- § 252. Defective Brakes.
- § 253. Defective Lights.
- § 254. Defective Wheels, Axles, or Tires.
- § 255. Defective Steering Gear.
- § 256. Use of Trailers.
- § 257. —Defective Trailer Fastenings.
- § 258. Size or Weight of Automobile.

3. Speed.
- § 259. Generally.
- § 260. Statutory Regulation.
- § 261. Driving within Speed Limits.
- § 262. Driving in Excess of Speed Limits.
- § 263. Ability to Stop within Range of Lights.

F. Measure of Care Required in Particular Situations.

1. In General.
- § 264. Generally.
- § 265. Injuries to Animals on Highway.
- § 266. Frightening Horses.
- § 267. Noise.
- § 268. Racing.

2. Where Vision Is Obstructed.
- § 269. Generally.
- § 270. Where Blinded by Lights.
- § 271. Where Windshield Obscured.
- § 272. View Obstructed by Dust, Smoke, and Atmospheric Conditions.

3. Skidding.

a. In General.
- § 273. Generally.
- § 274. Failure to Use Chains.
- § 275. Injury to Occupant of Skidding Car.

b. In Particular Circumstances.
- § 276. Generally.
- § 277. Onto Sidewalk.
- § 278. Hitting Pedestrian.
- § 279. Collision with Other Vehicles.

4. Vehicles Proceeding in Same Direction.
- § 280. Generally.
- § 281. Stopping.
- § 282. Passing.
- § 283. —Street Cars.
- § 284. Duty Where Vehicle Attempts to Pass on Wrong Side.
- § 285. Driving Too Close in Passing.

5. Vehicles Meeting and Passing.
- § 286. Generally.

6. Street or Highway Intersections.

a. In General.
- § 287. Generally.
- § 288. What Constitutes Intersection.

b. Right of Way at Street or Highway Intersections.
- § 289. Generally.
- § 290. Regulation by Statute or Ordinance.
- § 291. Extent of Right.
- § 292. As between Horse-drawn Vehicle and Automobile.
- § 293. As between Pedestrian and Automobile.
- § 294. Right of Way of Police and Fire Apparatus, Ambulances, etc.
- § 295. Effect of Ignorance of Regulations.
- § 296. Streets or Roads Subject to Rule.

V. F, b—continued.
- § 297. Effect of Speed, Lawfulness of Driving, and Distance.
- § 298. Care Required by One Having Right of Way.
- § 299. Right to Assume Care on Part of Other Traveler.

c. INTERSECTION OF ARTERIAL OR OTHER FAVORED HIGHWAY BY UNFAVORED HIGHWAY.
- § 300. Generally.
- § 301. When Statute or Ordinance Comes into Operation.
- § 302. Rights and Duties of Driver on Favored Highway.
- § 303. Rights and Duties of Driver on Unfavored Highway.
- § 304. Effect of Failure to Comply with Statute or Ordinance.

d. PRIVATE CROSSINGS OR DRIVEWAYS.
- § 305. Turning into Driveway.
- § 306. Entering Street from Driveway.
- § 307. Duty toward Others Using Driveway.

e. RELIANCE UPON, OR DISREGARD OF, TRAFFIC SIGNALS.
- § 308. As between Vehicle and Pedestrian.
- § 309. As between Vehicles.
- § 310. Disregard of Signal.

f. CARE AS BETWEEN STREET CARS AND AUTOMOBILES AT STREET CROSSINGS.
- § 311. Generally.
- § 312. As Affected by Statutes and Ordinances on Right of Way.
- § 313. Care of Automobilist.
- § 314. —Stopping, Looking, and Listening.
- § 315. —Speed.
- § 316. Care of Street Car Company.
- § 317. —Notice of Approach.
- § 318. —Lookout.
- § 319. —Speed.
- § 320. —Doctrine of Last Clear Chance.

7. MEASURE OF CARE AT RAILROAD CROSSINGS.
- § 321. Generally.

8. RIGHT AND DUTY TO VIOLATE TRAFFIC RULES.
- § 322. Generally.

9. TURNING.
- § 323. Generally.
- § 324. Into Intersecting Street.
- § 325. —Regulations as to Line of Traffic.
- § 326. —Cutting Corners.
- § 327. Signals.

10. BACKING.
- § 328. Generally.
- § 329. On Right-hand Side of Street.
- § 330. Looking.
- § 331. Signaling.
- § 332. Application to Facts.

11. STOPPING.
- § 333. Generally.

12. PARKING.
- § 334. Generally.
- § 335. On Wrong Side of Street or Highway.
- § 336. —Wilful and Wanton Negligence.
- § 337. Stopping without Lights.
- § 338. Duty to Guard against Machine Moving.
- § 339. In Municipalities.
- § 340. In Highways outside Municipalities.

13. OPERATION ON CURVES AND HILLS.
- § 341. Generally.
- § 342. Speed.

V. F—continued.
14. Towing Cars.
§ 343. Generally.

VI. PERSONS LIABLE.
A. In General.
§ 344. Generally.
§ 345. Joint Liability of Tort-feasors.
§ 346. Liability of Common Owners or Operators.
§ 347. Liability of Dealer for Injuries from Operation.
§ 348. Liability for Negligence during Demonstration of Car by One Who Has Undertaken to Sell It.
§ 349. Dealer's Liability for Injuries from Defects in Car Sold.
§ 350. Manufacturer's Liability for Injuries from Defects in Car Sold.
§ 350a. Liability of Manufacturer of Tractor.
§ 351. Liability of Guest.
§ 352. Responsibility of Owner or Driver of One Car for Injuries Immediately Inflicted by Another Car.
B. Owner Where Car Driven by Another.
1. In General.
§ 353. Generally.
§ 354. Presence of Owner in Car.
2. Intrusting to Incompetent or Unlicensed Driver.
§ 355. Generally.
3. Liability Where Car Loaned.
§ 356. Generally.
§ 357. Furnishing Driver of Leased Automobile.
§ 358. Lending Defective Automobile.
4. Acts of Members of Family.
a. In General.
§ 359. Generally.
§ 360. Child of Owner.
§ 361. —Child as Agent of Parent.
§ 362. Wife or Husband of Owner.
§ 363. Liability to Invited Guest of Member of Family.
§ 364. Acts of Third Person Whom Member of Family Permits to Drive.
b. "Family Purpose" Doctrine.
§ 365. Generally.
§ 366. Effect of Statute.
§ 367. Child Driving with Other Members of Family.
§ 368. Car Used by Child Alone.
§ 369. Car Used by Spouse of Owner.
§ 370. Car Used by Owner's Relative.
§ 371. Car Owned by Other than Head of Family.
§ 372. Car Driven by Servant or Employee.
5. Master's Liability for Act of Servant.
§ 373. Generally.
§ 374. When Relationship Exists Generally.
§ 375. Employee Using Employer's Car for Own Pleasure or Benefit.
§ 376. —Departure or Deviation from Direct Line of Duties.
§ 377. —Commencement and Termination of Departure or Deviation; Resumption of Employer's Responsibility.
§ 378. —Car Furnished Employee for Business Uses.
§ 379. —Use of Car to Go to Meals or to and from Home.
§ 380. —Effect of Fact that Employer Derives Incidental Benefit.
§ 381. —Particular Applications.
§ 382. Person Whom Employee Permits to Drive.
§ 383. —Theory of Constructive Service Where Employee Is Present at Time of Accident.
§ 384. Chauffeur Furnished with Hired Car.
§ 385. —Presumption of Owner's Control.

VI. B, 5—continued.
§ 386. —Particular Factors to Be Considered.
§ 387. —Where Car Is Hired for Extended Period.
§ 388. —Funeral Cars.
§ 389. —When Returning Car to Owner.
§ 390. Chauffeur Furnished with Borrowed Car.
§ 391 Salesman or Collector.
§ 392. —When Independent Contractor.
§ 393. Employee Driving Own Car.
§ 394. Liability to Person Whom Employee Permits or Invites to Ride.
§ 395. —Where Employee Violates Instructions.
§ 396. Where Car Is Loaned to Employee.

6. STATUTORY LIABILITY OF OWNER.
§ 397. Generally.
§ 398. Validity of Statute.
§ 399. Construction and Application.
§ 400. —Who Are Owners within Meaning of Statute; Liability of Joint Owner.
§ 401. —Consent of Owner to Use by Another.
§ 402. —Acts for Which Owner Is Liable; Use of Car for Another Purpose.
§ 403. —Liability to Invitee or Licensee of Person Permitted to Use Car.
§ 404. —Liability for Act of Third Person Allowed to Drive.
§ 405. —Extraterritorial Operation.
§ 406. Statutes Creating Lien.

VII. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A. IN GENERAL.
§ 407. Generally.
§ 408. What Constitutes Contributory Negligence.
§ 409. Violation of Statute or Ordinance.
§ 410. —Speed Laws.
§ 411. —Rules of Road.
§ 412. —Lights on Car.

B. FACTORS AFFECTING DEFENSE OF CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.
§ 413. Generally.
§ 414. Wanton Negligence.
§ 415. Emergency.
§ 416. —Railroad Crossings.
§ 417. Contributory Negligence as Constituting Proximate Cause of Accident.
§ 418. Degrees of Negligence.

C. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF PARTICULAR PERSONS.
§ 419. Generally.
§ 420. Driver or Operator of Vehicle.
§ 421. —Violation of Statute or Ordinance.
§ 422. —Law of Road.
§ 423. —Excessive Speed.
§ 424. —Skidding.
§ 425. —Slippery Road; Collision with Street Car.
§ 426. —Insufficient Lights.
§ 427. —Parking without Lights.
§ 428. —Defective Brakes.
§ 429. —Traveling with Impaired Vision.
§ 430. —Intoxication of Driver.
§ 431. —Collisions at Intersections.
§ 432. —Turning between Intersections.
§ 433. —Turning without Signaling.
§ 434. —Backing Vehicle.
§ 435. —Parking on Wrong Side.
§ 436. —Disregard of Traffic Signal.

VII. C—continued.

§ 437. —At Railroad Crossings.
§ 438. —Injury by Frightened Horse.
§ 439. Motorcyclists.
§ 440. Bicyclists.
§ 441. Drivers of Horse-drawn Vehicles or Riders of Horses.
§ 442. Motorist Repairing Vehicle in Road.
§ 443. Police or Traffic Officer.
§ 444. Persons Working in Road.
§ 445. Persons Alighting from or Boarding Street Car.
§ 446. Pedestrians—In General.
§ 447. —Rules Applicable to Pedestrians.
§ 448. —Nature of Pedestrian's Right.
§ 449. —Walking along Road.
§ 450. —Crossing Road Generally.
§ 451. —Failure to Look While Crossing Road.
§ 452. —At Intersections.
§ 453. —Reliance on Traffic Signal.
§ 454. —Between Intersections.
§ 455. —Effect of Violation of Statute or Ordinance.
§ 456. —Diagonal Crossing.
§ 457. —Turning or Jumping Back.
§ 458. —Failure to Look Behind.
§ 459. —Obstructed View.
§ 460. —Standing on Sidewalk.
§ 461. —Crossing Private Driveway.
§ 462. —Stepping around Vehicle.
§ 463. —Struck by Backing Vehicle.
§ 464. Persons under Disability—In General.
§ 465. —Blind Persons.
§ 466. —Deaf Persons.
§ 467. —Aged Persons.
§ 468. —Intoxicated Persons.
§ 469. —Other Disabilities.
§ 470. Children.
§ 471. —Playing in Street.
§ 472. —Coasting along Road.
§ 473. —Alighting or Boarding Street Car.
§ 474. —Darting in Front of Automobile.
§ 475. Occupant of Car—In General.
§ 476. —Extent of Reliance.
§ 477. —Knowledge of Driver's Habits.
§ 478. —Duty to Warn Driver.
§ 479. —Duty to Protest.
§ 480. —Duty to Observe Danger.
§ 481. —Duty to Leave Vehicle.
§ 482. —Interfering with Driver.
§ 483. —Intoxication of Driver.
§ 484. —Riding in Dangerous Position.
§ 485. —Excessive Speed, Acquiescence in.
§ 486. —At Railroad Crossings.
§ 487. —As to Street Cars.
§ 488. —At Street Intersections.

D. LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

§ 489. Generally.
§ 490. Statement of Rule.
§ 491. Application to Various Situations.

E. IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

§ 492. Generally.
§ 493. Imputing Bailee's Negligence to Bailor.
§ 494. Imputing Driver's Negligence to Other Occupant.
§ 495. —To Passenger for Hire.

VII. E—continued.

§ 496. —Effect of Owner's Presence.
§ 497. —To Infant.
§ 498. —To Husband, Wife, or Other Relative.
§ 499. —To Employer or to Fellow Employee.
§ 500. —To Member of Joint Enterprise.
§ 501. —Test of Joint Enterprise.
§ 502. —To Prevent Recovery against Driver.

F. COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE.

§ 503. Generally.

VIII. INSURANCE.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 504. Generally.
§ 505. Nature.
§ 506. Definitions.
§ 507. Construction.
§ 508. Representations and Warranties.
§ 509. Provisions as to Uses of Car.
§ 510. Provisions as to Carrying Passengers.

B. INSURABLE INTEREST.

§ 511. Generally.
§ 512. Necessity.
§ 513. Nature and Extent.
§ 514. Sole and Unconditional Ownership.
§ 515. Change of Ownership.

C. LIABILITY INSURANCE.

1. IN GENERAL.

§ 516. Generally.
§ 517. Power to Issue Policy.
§ 518. Validity.

2. COMPULSORY INSURANCE.

§ 519. Generally.
§ 520. Validity.

3. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF INSURER IN GENERAL.

§ 521. Generally.
§ 522. Use of Car by Other than Insured.
§ 523. Use of Car by Infant or Other Unauthorized Person.
§ 524. Provisions as to Determination of Insurer's Liability in Payment of Claim.
§ 525. —Effect of "No Action" Clause.
§ 526. —Medical or Surgical Expenses.
§ 527. Recovery by Person Injured.
§ 528. Settlement with Injured Person.
§ 529. Defense of Suit by Insurer.
§ 530. Liability for Depreciation of Injured Machine.
§ 531. Effect of Death of Insured.

4. LIABILITY OF INSURER UNDER "OMNIBUS" CLAUSE.

§ 532. Generally.
§ 533. Nature and Effect.
§ 534. "Permission" or "Consent" of Assured.
§ 535. —Capacity to Grant.
§ 536. —Continuous Permission.
§ 537. —Implied Permission or Consent.
§ 538. —Effect of Deviations.
§ 539. Liability Depending on Lawful Operation of Car.
§ 540. Legal Responsibility for Operation of Car.
§ 541. Inapplicability of Clause to Certain Classes of Persons.
§ 542. Preferential Protection of Assured.
§ 543. Right of Action against Insurer.

5. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF INSURED.

§ 544. Generally.

VIII. C, 5—continued.

§ 545. Co-operation by Insured.
§ 546. —Waiver of Right or Estoppel to Set Up Breach of Clause.
§ 547. Notice of Accident or Claim.
§ 548. —Accidents Subject to Notice.
§ 549. —Time of Notice.
§ 550. —Who May or Must Give Notice.
§ 551. —Oral or Written Notice.
§ 552. —Scope of Notice.
§ 553. —Waiver of Right to Notice.

D. COLLISION INSURANCE.

§ 554. Generally.
§ 555. What Constitutes Collision.
§ 556. Collision with "Objects."
§ 557. Provisions as to "Upsets."

E. FIRE INSURANCE.

§ 558. Generally.
§ 559. Provisions against Encumbrances.
§ 560. Identification and Description of Car.
§ 561. Provision as to Renting or Use for Hire.
§ 562. Place of Keeping.
§ 563. Fire Originating within Vehicle.
§ 564. Effect of Insured's Negligence or Violation of Law.
§ 565. Proof of Loss.
§ 566. Amount of Recovery.

F. THEFT INSURANCE.

§ 567. Generally.
§ 568. What Constitutes "Theft."
§ 569. —Intent to Steal.
§ 570. —Obtaining Property under False Pretenses.
§ 571. —Open Taking under Claim of Ownership.
§ 572. —Conversion by Mortgagor or Conditional Vendee.
§ 573. —Persons Excepted from Coverage.
§ 574. Description of Car.
§ 575. Place of Keeping.
§ 576. Locking Safety Device.
§ 577. Proof of Loss.
§ 578. Effect of Recovery of Stolen Car.

IX. ACTIONS.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 579. Generally.
§ 580. Nature and Form of Action.
§ 581. Limitations.
§ 582. Abatement and Survival.
§ 583. Conditions Precedent; Notice of Claim.
§ 584. Joinder of Causes of Action.
§ 585. Splitting Causes of Action.
§ 586. Defenses.
§ 587. Payment of Insurance Money.

B. JURISDICTION AND VENUE.

§ 588. Generally.

C. PROCESS.

§ 589. Generally.
§ 590. Provisions for Constructive Service upon Nonresident Motorist—Validity.
§ 591. —Application and Construction.

D. PARTIES.

§ 592. Generally.
§ 593. Joinder of Parties.
§ 594. —Master and Servant or Principal and Agent.
§ 595. —Husband and Wife.

IX.—continued.

E. PLEADING.

§ 596. Generally.
§ 597. Complaint, Declaration, Petition, or Statement of Claim.
§ 598. —Ownership or Control of Automobile.
§ 599. —Negligence.
§ 600. —Gross Negligence.
§ 601. —Violation of Statute or Ordinance.
§ 602. Plea, Answer, or Affidavit of Defense.
§ 603. Necessity of Asserting Set-off or Counterclaim.

F. EVIDENCE.

1. JUDICIAL NOTICE.

§ 604. Generally.

2. PRESUMPTIONS AND INFERENCES.

§ 605. Generally.
§ 606. Of Negligence or of Contributory Negligence.
§ 607. Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Doctrine.
§ 608. —Particular Injuries Generally.
§ 609. —Collision between Automobiles.
§ 610. —Skidding.
§ 611. Presumptions Arising from Proof of Ownership.
§ 612. Presumption that Driver Was Acting for Owner.

3. BURDEN OF PROOF.

§ 613. Generally.
§ 614. Negligence and Contributory Negligence.
§ 615. Authority of Operator.

4. ADMISSIBILITY, COMPETENCY, RELEVANCY, AND MATERIALITY.

a. IN GENERAL.

§ 616. Generally.
§ 617. To Prove Negligence.
§ 618. Habit or Custom.
§ 619. Financial Standing of Parties.
§ 620. Infancy of Party.
§ 621. Lack of Registration or of Operator's License.
§ 622. Liability Insurance.
§ 623. Motive for Haste.
§ 624. Previous Acts and Conduct; Caution or Warning as to Danger.
§ 625. Report of Accident.

b. SURROUNDING CIRCUMSTANCES.

§ 626. Generally.
§ 627. Other Accidents.
§ 628. Position of Automobile.
§ 629. Atmospheric Conditions.
§ 630. Speed.
§ 631. Condition of Brakes.
§ 632. Skidding.
§ 633. —Tire Tracks and Skid Marks.
§ 634. Type, Size, and Weight of Vehicle.
§ 635. Physical Defect or Illness.

c. STATEMENTS, ADMISSIONS, AND DECLARATIONS.

§ 636. Generally.
§ 637. Admissions by Silence.
§ 638. Of Agent.
§ 639. Statements and Declarations Forming Part of Res Gestæ.
§ 640. —By Nondriving Occupants.
§ 641. —By Driver.
§ 642. —By Bystanders or Occupants of Other Cars.

5. TESTS AND EXPERIMENTS; PHOTOGRAPHS, MAPS, ETC.

§ 643. Generally.
§ 644. Distance within Which Car Can Be Stopped.
§ 645. Photographs, Maps, and Diagrams.

IX. F—continued.

6. OPINION EVIDENCE.

§ 646. Generally.
§ 647. Limitations upon General Rule.
§ 648. Expert Opinion.
§ 649. Matters as to Which Opinion May Be Given.
§ 650. —As to Care Exercised.
§ 651. —As to Speed.
§ 652. —Form of Opinion as to Speed.
§ 653. —Condition of Vehicle.

7. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY; DEGREE OF PROOF.

§ 654. Generally.
§ 655. Degree of Proof; Preponderance of Evidence.
§ 656. Positive and Negative Testimony.
§ 657. Sufficiency of Evidence as to Negligence.
§ 658. Sufficiency of Evidence as to Freedom from Contributory Negligence.
§ 659. Proof of Causal Connection; Proximate Cause.
§ 660. Identity of Owner and Authority of Driver.
§ 661. Proof of Ownership.
§ 662. Prima Facie Case from Proof of Ownership.
§ 663. —When Coupled with Proof that Driver Was Agent of Owner.
§ 664. —As Dependent upon Whether Automobile Is Used for Commercial Purposes or for Pleasure.

G. TRIAL.

1. IN GENERAL.

§ 665. Generally.
§ 666. Conduct of Trial.
§ 667. Taking Case from Jury.

2. QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

a. IN GENERAL.

§ 668. Generally.
§ 669. Proximate Cause.
§ 670. Intervening Cause.
§ 671. Credibility of Witnesses.
§ 672. Competency and Authority of Driver.

b. NEGLIGENCE OF DEFENDANT.

(1) IN GENERAL.

§ 673. Generally.

(2) CONDUCT TOWARDS PARTICULAR PERSONS.

§ 674. Pedestrians—Walking along Highway.
§ 675. —Crossing Street.
§ 676. —On Sidewalk.
§ 677. —Boarding or Alighting from Street Car.
§ 678. Persons Repairing Vehicle in Road.
§ 679. Person Darting in Front of Automobile.
§ 680. Traffic Officer or Person Directing Traffic.
§ 681. Bicyclist.
§ 682. Infants.
§ 683. Guests.
§ 684. Persons Riding outside Car.

(3) PARTICULAR ACTS AND SITUATIONS.

§ 685. Violation of Law of Road.
§ 686. Skidding.
§ 687. Backing.
§ 688. Driving while Asleep.
§ 689. Speeding.
§ 690. Reliance upon Traffic Signal.
§ 691. Parking on Wrong Side of Street.
§ 692. Collision—At Intersection.

IX. G, 2, b (3)—continued.
§ 693. —Vehicles Traveling in Same Direction.
§ 694. Towing Car.

(4) PARTICULAR CONDITIONS.
§ 695. Generally.
§ 696. Defects in Highway or Street.
§ 697. Blinding Lights.
§ 698. Slippery Road.
§ 699. Atmospheric Conditions.
§ 700. Obstruction in Road.
§ 701. Emergency.
§ 702. Disability or Illness.

c. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF PLAINTIFF.
§ 703. Generally.
§ 704. Walking along Highway.
§ 705. Crossing Street.
§ 706. —At Point Other than Intersection.
§ 707. Boarding or Alighting from Street Car.
§ 708. Darting in Front of Vehicle.
§ 709. Repairing Vehicle in Road.
§ 710. While Walking on Sidewalk.
§ 711. Child Crossing or Playing in Street.
§ 712. Guest or Occupant of Automobile.
§ 713. Traffic Officer.
§ 714. Workman in Road.
§ 715. Collision—At Intersection.
§ 716. —Automobile and Street Car.
§ 717. —Vehicles Traveling in Same Direction.
§ 718. Backing Automobile.
§ 719. Improper Parking.
§ 720. Disregard of or Reliance upon Traffic Signals.
§ 721. Acts in Emergency.
§ 722. Physical Defect or Illness.
§ 723. Violating Rules of Road.
§ 724. Riding on Running Board.
§ 725. Impaired Visibility.
§ 726. Blinding Lights.
§ 727. Defects in Road.

3. INSTRUCTIONS.
§ 728. Generally.
§ 729. Form and Contents Generally.
§ 730. Requests to Charge.
§ 731. Charges after Jury Have Retired.
§ 732. Duplication of Instructions.
§ 733. Invading Province of Jury; Assuming Facts.
§ 734. Instruction as to Particular Matters.
§ 735. —Negligence.
§ 736. —Weight of the Evidence.
§ 737. —Rights and Duties.
§ 738. —Proximate Cause.
§ 739. —Standard of Care.
§ 740. —Contributory Negligence.
§ 741. —Emergency.
§ 742. —Speed.

4. VERDICT, FINDINGS, AND JUDGMENT.
§ 743. Generally.

5. NEW TRIAL; REVIEW.
§ 744. Generally.

X. DAMAGE TO VEHICLES.
§ 745. Generally.
§ 746. Difference in Market Value before and after Injury

X—continued.

§ 747. —Time and Place of Valuation.
§ 748. —Evidence as to Value.
§ 749. Cost of Repairs as Measure of Damages.
§ 750. Compensation for Loss of Use during Repairs.
§ 751. Compensation for Loss of Profits through Being Deprived of Use.
§ 752. Interest on Value of Car.
§ 753. Expenses of Removal and Storage.
§ 754. Pleading and Proof as to Value in Action on Insurance Policy.

XI. CRIMES INCIDENT TO OWNERSHIP OR OPERATION.

A. In General.

§ 755. Generally.
§ 756. Right of Legislature to Prohibit Use of Automobile on Public Thoroughfare.
§ 757. Applicability of Principles of Criminal Law.
§ 758. Right to Jury Trial.
§ 759. Persons Liable.
§ 760. Applicability of Motor Vehicle Regulations to Public Officials or Employees.
§ 761. Applicability of Motor Vehicle Regulations to Motorcycles.
§ 762. Constitutionality of Statutes.

B. Particular Crimes.

1. Assault and Battery.

§ 763. Generally.
§ 764. Aggravated Assault.
§ 765. —Voluntary Drunkenness as a Defense.

2. Driving while Intoxicated.

a. Under Common Law.

§ 766. Generally.

b. Under Statutes.

§ 767. Generally.
§ 768. Construction of Statutes.
§ 769. Conflicts between Statutes and Ordinances.

c. Elements of Statutory Offense.

§ 770. Generally.
§ 771. "Driving" or "Operating" Motor Vehicle.
§ 772. Driving "Motor Vehicle."
§ 773. Driving on Public Thoroughfare.
§ 774. Intoxication—Generally.
§ 775. —Tests of Intoxication.
§ 776. Punishment.

3. Driving without Operator's Permit or License.

§ 777. Generally.

4. Failure to Comply with Regulations Relating to Lights.

§ 778. Generally.

5. Failure to Register.

§ 779. Generally.

6. Failure to Stop, Give Information, etc., after Accident.

a. In General.

§ 780. Generally.

b. Construction of Terms.

§ 781. Knowledge of Accident or Injury.
§ 782. Requirement that Operator Stop.
§ 783. Requirement that Operator Make Himself Known.
§ 784. Requirement that Operator Render Assistance.

c. Constitutionality of Statutes.

§ 785. Generally.

XI. B, 6—continued.
d. DEFENSES.
§ 786. Generally.
7. HOMICIDE.
a. IN GENERAL.
§ 787. Generally.
§ 788. As Result of Unlawful Act.
§ 789. As Result of Negligence.
§ 790. Degree of Negligence Necessary.
§ 791. Wrongful or Illegal Act as Proximate Cause of Death.
b. MURDER.
§ 792. Generally.
c. DEFENSES.
§ 793. Generally.
§ 794. Lack of Intent.
§ 795. Intoxication.
§ 796. Contributory Negligence of Deceased.
§ 797. Former Jeopardy.
8. LARCENY.
§ 798. Generally.
9. LENDING LICENSE PLATES.
§ 799. Generally.
10. POSSESSION OF AUTOMOBILE WITH CHANGED OR DEFACED IDENTIFYING NUMBERS.
§ 800. Generally.
11. TRANSPORTING OR RECEIVING IN INTERSTATE OR FOREIGN COMMERCE MOTOR VEHICLES KNOWN TO HAVE BEEN STOLEN.
§ 801. Generally.
12. RECKLESS DRIVING.
§ 802. Generally.
§ 803. As Dependent upon Rate of Speed.
§ 804. Conduct Endangering Public.
§ 805. Where Acts Are Otherwise Made Punishable.
13. VIOLATING SPEED LAWS.
§ 806. Generally.
§ 807. Indefiniteness of Speed Regulation as Affecting Validity.
§ 808. —Indefiniteness as to Rate of Speed.
14. TAKING OR USING CAR WITHOUT OWNER'S CONSENT.
§ 809. Generally.
C. PROSECUTIONS.
1. IN GENERAL.
§ 810. Generally.
2. INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.
a. IN GENERAL.
§ 811. Generally.
b. CHARGING PARTICULAR OFFENSES.
§ 812. Assault and Battery.
§ 813. Failure to Stop after Injury.
§ 814. Driving While Intoxicated.
§ 815. Homicide through Negligent or Unlawful Use of Automobile.
§ 816. Larceny; Sufficiency of Description.
§ 817. Reckless Driving.
§ 818. Violation of Speed Laws.
§ 819. Other Offenses.
D. EVIDENCE.
1. IN GENERAL.
§ 820. Generally.
§ 821. Judicial Notice.
§ 822. Burden of Proof.

XI. D—continued.
  2. ADMISSIBILITY.
    a. IN GENERAL.
      § 823. Generally.
      § 824. To Prove Intoxication.
    b. IN PROSECUTIONS FOR PARTICULAR CRIMES.
      § 825. Homicide.
      § 826. Failure to Stop Where Injury Has Been Caused.
      § 827. Larceny.
      § 828. Reckless Driving.
  3. SUFFICIENCY.
      § 829. Generally.
      § 830. To Show Intoxication While Driving.
E. TRIAL.
      § 831. Province of Court and Jury.
      § 832. Instructions—Generally.
      § 833. —As to Homicide.
F. WITNESSES.
      § 834. Generally.

I. INTRODUCTION

A. IN GENERAL

1. Survey.—Normally, a law text emphasizes rules of law and, for the purpose of illustration, applies them to specific factual situations. An article on the law of automobiles, however, accentuates the application of these rules. The introduction of automobiles as a means of conveyance upon public highways and the steady increase in their use have led to a rapid accumulation of judicial decisions concerning their operation. The principles enumerated in these cases are, to a large extent, merely special applications of common-law rules. The advent of the motor vehicle has merely created a new factual setting through which well-established legal principles are to operate. The effectiveness of these principles in such an unforeseen factual setting is a tribute to the adaptability and elasticity of the common law. The vast amount of litigation that the automobile sponsors and the variety of common-law doctrines it invokes render a distinct and modern treatment of the law of motor vehicles essential to the comprehensiveness of a legal work such as this.

§ 2. Scope.[1]—As shown in the preceding section,[2] the cases involving the use of automobiles and the statutory enactments regulating their operation have become sufficiently numerous to form a distinct branch of the law. Since the law of automobiles is primarily an application of common-law principles to the variety of factual situations the motor vehicle sponsors, the scope of this article is necessarily an extensive one. It frequently embraces case and statutory law even incidentally pertaining to automobiles. Such subjects as public regulation and control,[3] licensing and registration,[4] insurance,[5] repairs,[6] negligence,[7] damages,[8] crimes,[9] and actions are treated in detail.[10]

---

[1] For a discussion of the operation of automobiles as hazardous occupation, see generally WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION [Also 28 R. C. L. pp. 709 et seq.].

As to chattel mortgages of automobiles, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES.

As to validity of statutes relating to motor club service, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

As to damages for personal injuries, see DAMAGES.

As to duties, liabilities, compensation and lien of repairman, see GARAGES, PARKING STATIONS AND LIVERIES.

As to gasoline stations, see GASOLINE STATIONS.

Injuries from defects in highways, see HIGHWAYS, STREETS AND SIDEWALKS.

As to right of a husband or wife to sue the other for injuries arising out of an automobile accident, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

As to right of a child against a parent for injuries arising out of an automobile accident, see PARENT AND CHILD.

As to sale of automobiles, see SALES.

As to construction of statutes relating to motor club service, see STATUTES.

[2] See supra, § 1.

Despite the natural comprehension of an article on automobiles, in conformity with standard legal classification, certain exclusions are made. For example, while the validity or invalidity of motor vehicle legislation is herein indicated, a full discussion of the reasons therefor is relegated to another title.[11] The liability of a municipality for the negligent operation of motor vehicles belonging to it is likewise treated under another topic.[12] This is also true of such subjects as criminal conspiracies having for their purpose the larceny of automobiles;[13] the transportation by automobile of intoxicating liquors;[14] motor transportation companies;[15] storage;[16] and the maintenance and operation of automobiles for purposes of prostitution.[17] The principles of the law of costs[18] and verdicts against the weight of evidence[19] are likewise discussed elsewhere, although rules peculiarly applicable to automobile cases are herein noted.

While the specific statutes of the various jurisdictions are not treated with particularity, an effort has been made to formulate propositions of law applicable generally to motor vehicle legislation.

B. DEFINITIONS AND DESCRIPTIVE TERMS

§ 3. Generally.—The term "automobile" has its derivation in the Greek "autos," meaning "self," and the Latin "mobiles," meaning "movable." "Automobile," therefore, means "self-moving." It may be defined as a wheeled vehicle propelled by steam, electricity, or gasoline, and used on highways and streets for the transportation of persons or merchandise.[1] The courts, without making clear distinctions, have generally used the terms, "automobile," "motor vehicle," "motorcar,"—and, in the earlier cases, "horseless carriage,"—as synonyms.[2] Questions frequently arose as to whether statutes regulating the use of various classes of vehicles, and not directly referring to automobiles, were broad enough to apply to such machines, which, in numerous instances, were unknown at the time of the passage of the law. The better view seems to be that an automobile is to be classed as a vehicle,[3] and may properly be considered as being a vehicle for hire, under the terms of ordinances prohibiting the standing of such vehicle in the streets elsewhere than at public hack stands.[4] The term “motor vehicle” is not, however, comprehensive enough to include a boy’s sled.[5]

---

[3] See infra, §§ 15 et seq.

[4] See infra, §§ 90 et seq.

[5] See infra, §§ 521 et seq.

[6] See infra, §§ 745 et seq.

See also GARAGES, PARKING STATIONS AND LIVERIES.

[7] See infra, §§ 161 et seq.

[8] See infra, §§ 745 et seq.

[9] See infra, § 755.

[10] See infra, §§ 579 et seq.

[11] See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW [Also 6 R. C. L. p. 1].

[12] See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS [Also 19 R. C. L. p. 678].

[13] See CONSPIRACY [Also 5 R. C. L. p. 1059].

[14] See INTOXICATING LIQUORS [Also 15 R. C. L. p. 239.

[15] See MOTOR TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES.

[16] See GARAGES, PARKING STATIONS AND LIVERIES.

[17] See PROSTITUTION.

[18] See COSTS [Also 7 R. C. L. p. 779].

[19] See APPEAL AND ERROR, Vol. 3, p. 441, §§ 887 et seq.; EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 847]; NEW TRIAL [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 214]; TRIAL [Also 26 R. C. L. p. 1008].

[1] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487.

Annotation: 16 Ann. Cas. 608.

[2] Laporte v. North American Acci. Ins. Co. 161 La. 933, 109 So. 767, 48 A.L.R. 1086.

[3] Foster v. Curtis, 213 Mass. 79, 99 N. E. 961, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1188, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1116; Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396; State v. Dunklee, 76 N. H. 439, 84 A. 40, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 754.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1913B, 755.

There was some contrary authority, however. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1913B, 755.

The operation of an automobile comes within the terms of a regulation or rule providing that no person shall ride or drive faster than a designated rate of speed, since a person may be said to be driving an automobile if he is controlling the motive power.[6]

§ 4. Automobile as “Carriage” or “Wagon.”—Whether or not an automobile falls within the meaning of the word “carriage” as used in a statute depends somewhat upon the nature of the statute. In a penal statute, in a proper case, it may not be so included, while in a statute which should receive a liberal construction, it will be.[7] An automobile is a “carriage” within the broad meaning of that term.[8] Thus, a motorcar is a “carriage” within the meaning of a grant of a lot which was a part of a tract purchased for a public park, conveyed to the purchasers, “together with a right of carriage, horse, and footway through the park when laid out.”[9] But it has been held not to be a carriage, within the meaning of a statute requiring towns and cities to keep their highways “reasonably safe and convenient for travelers with their horses, teams, and carriages.”[10] Generally speaking, an automobile is not a wagon,[11] although it has been held that it is a wagon within the meaning of ordinances prohibiting the presence of “advertising trucks, vans, or wagons” upon certain streets.[12]

§ 5. Motorcycle—In General.—A motorcycle is generally held to be within the terms of a statute relating to motor vehicles, automobiles, and the like.[13] A motorcycle is not a bicycle, within the meaning of a provision excluding bicycles from the operation of an act requiring motor vehicles to exhibit certain lamps.[14]

§ 6. —Motorcycle as Used in Statutes and Ordinances.—The overwhelming weight of authority supports the view that a motorcycle is a motor vehicle within the meaning of statutes and ordinances regulating the operation of such vehicles.[15] Thus, acts pertaining to the speed,[16] lights,[17] registration, and identification[18] of motor vehicles, automobiles, or any other conveyances of a

---

[4] Gassenheimer v. District of Columbia, 26 App. D. C. 557, 6 Ann. Cas. 920; State v. Dunklee, 76 N. H. 439, 84 A. 40, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 754.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1913B, 755.

[5] Terrill v. Virginia Brewing Co. 130 Minn. 46, 153 N. W. 136, L.R.A.1915E, 1028, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 453.

[6] Com. v. Crowninshield, 187 Mass. 221, 72 N. E. 963, 68 L.R.A. 245.

[7] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1913B, 756.

[8] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216; 20 Ann. Cas. 516.

As used in particular connections, the word “carriage” has been held not to embrace an automobile. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1913B, 756.

[9] Attorney-Gen. v. Hodgson [1922] 2 Ch. 429, 11 B. R. C. 234.

Annotation: 11 B. R. C. 247.

[10] Doherty v. Ayer, 197 Mass. 241, 83 N. E. 677, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816, 125 Am. St. Rep. 355.

[11] An automobile is not exempt from levy and sale under a statute exempting a “wagon, cart, or dray.” Whitney v. Welnitz, 153 Minn. 162, 190 N. W. 57, 28 A.L.R. 68.

[12] Fifth Ave. Coach Co. v. New York, 194 N. Y. 19, 86 N. E. 824, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 744, 16 Ann. Cas. 695, affirmed in 221 U. S. 467, 55 L. ed. 815, 31 S. Ct. 709.

[13] See infra, § 6.

As to insurance policies, see infra, §§ 504 et seq.

[14] Webster v. Terry [1914] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 51, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 226—Div. Ct.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228.

[15] Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228; People v. Smith, 156 Mich. 173, 120 N. W. 581, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 607.

Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1090; s. 70 A.L.R. 1253; Ann. Cas. 1917A, 218.

[16] Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1090, 1091; s. 70 A.L.R. 1253.

[17] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1255.

[18] People v. Smith, 156 Mich. 173, 120 N. W. 581, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 607.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1917A, 218.

In People v. Smith, supra, the act defined the words “motor vehicles” to mean all vehicles propelled by power other than muscular power, except traction engines and similar type or kind are held to include motorcycles.[19] A motorcycle has likewise been regarded as a "motorcar,"[1] as a "light locomotive,"[2] and as a "carriage," within an act imposing a license fee upon "any carriage drawn or propelled upon a road or tramway, or elsewhere than upon a railway, by steam, or electricity, or any other mechanical power."[3] All of the reasons which would induce and require the legislature to regulate automobiles apply to the regulation of motorcycles.[4] Considerable importance obviously must be attached to the wording of the statute.[5] There is a recent commendable tendency upon the part of legislatures to define their terms expressly and to be quite explicit in their requirements. This tendency naturally simplifies judicial interpretation.

§ 7. —Motorcycle as Used in Insurance Policies.—Whether or not a motorcycle can be regarded as a motor vehicle within the meaning of insurance policies is not entirely settled. There is one line of authority to the effect that a motorcycle will not be regarded as a "motorcar," within the meaning of certain insurance policies. Accordingly, it is held that an insurance policy allowing recovery for loss of life caused by the wrecking or disablement of any "motor-driven car" in which the insured is riding or driving does not apply where the insured was riding a motorcycle, the term used indicating a motor-driven car with a body and having more than two wheels for support and as protection to the driver against accidents.[6] It has been suggested that a such motor vehicles as run only upon rails or tracks.

---

[19] A statute regulating "the running of automobiles, locomobiles, and other conveyances of like character propelled by . . . any power other than muscular power" includes motorcycles. Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1091, s. 70 A.L.R. 1253.

[1] Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1092, s. 70 A.L.R. 1253.

[2] Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1092, s. 70 A.L.R. 1253.

[3] Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1092, s. 70 A.L.R. 1253.

[4] People v. Smith, 156 Mich. 173, 120 N. W. 551, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 607.

It has been asserted: "A motorcycle is propelled by the same power as an automobile, the use of which power causes the same loud and rapid explosion. It moves with kindred speed, and when not propelled by human power has many of the general features of an automobile, the main difference being that it runs on two wheels instead of four. If two motorcycles should be fastened and operated together, side by side, for the purpose of carrying passengers, there would be no question that the vehicle so constructed would be of a type or kind similar to an automobile, and yet, if defendant in error's contention be correct, such contrivance ceases to be of such kind or type when separated into two distinct conveyances. The statute in question was broad in its terms, and in our judgment it would be a conversion of the plain meaning of the words of the act to say that a motorcycle, used in carrying passengers, was not similar to an automobile in either type or kind." Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1091.

[5] Where a motor vehicle act defined the term "motor vehicle" as meaning all vehicles propelled by any power other than muscular power, and used the term in all of its regulatory provisions except the one defining the degree of care to be used while driving, in which section the term "automobile" was used, it was held that, had the legislature used the term "motor vehicle" in this section, there would have been no question but that it would have been applicable to motorcycles, but that the legislature evidently used the term "automobile," instead of "motor vehicle," intentionally and "for the purpose of requiring the operators of automobiles, and not the operators of motorcycles, to exercise the highest degree of care." Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1091.

In view of a specific provision in one subdivision of a statute, to the effect that every motorcycle on the highway should carry at least one lamp giving sufficient light, to be distributed as provided in another subdivision expressly referred to, motorcycles were held to be contemplated by the provisions of that other subdivision, and apparently also by further provisions, requiring that the headlights of "automobiles" and "motor vehicles" should be of a certain character, be visible for a certain distance, and the like. Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1255.

[6] Laporte v. North America Acci. Ins. Co. 161 La. 933, 109 So. 767, 48 A.L.R. 1086. In Landwehr v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 159 Md. 207, 150 A. 732, 70 A.L.R. 1249, it is pointed out that while vehicles propelled otherwise than by muscular power are classified as motor-driven vehicles in a statute regulating the operation of such vehicles, a different classification is provided for license purposes, since the fees vary according to the horse power and carrying capacity of some of such vehicles, whereas a flat rate is imposed for motorcycles.

It has been held that a motorcycle is not a "motor-driven car" within the meaning of an insurance policy creating liability for the death of insured caused by the wrecking or disablement of any private motorcycle is a vehicle, rather than a car, since a car has four wheels.[7] Then too, the fact that a policy covered the insured while riding in, rather than on, a motor-driven car has been deemed significant.[8] Moreover, the low price of a policy has been invoked as a reason why the insurer would probably not intend to cover the hazardous risk of a motorcycle.[9] Considerable doubt, however, exists as to whether all of these decisions are still operative.[10]

§ 8. Public Conveyances.—A taxicab is a vehicle propelled by electric or gas power, held for public hire.[11] It is sometimes noted in the definitions that the charges are upon a time or distance basis,[12] and also that the vehicle is held for public hire at designated places subject to municipal control.[13]

A jitney is a vehicle of motor class, the charges of which are much lower than that of a taxicab, the stipulated fare usually being five or ten cents, directly in competition with street cars.[14]

§ 9. Streets and Highways.—The problem frequently arises as to whether or not the term "highway" as used in a statutory provision relating to vehicle traffic includes "street." This problem cannot be regarded as entirely settled. The legislative intent, as indicated by the wording of the various statutes, determines the scope of the term.[15] Although a street, which has been defined as "a public way in a city, town, or village," is a public highway,[16] the term "highway" as used in statutory provisions which pertain to vehicular traffic does not necessarily include a street in a town or city. In several cases it has been held that a city street was not within the contemplation of the general term "highway."[17] Thus, the court, in construing a statute regulating the speed of vehicles approaching highway crossings, held that it did not control the operation of motor vehicles at city street crossings,[18] and it has been held motor-driven car in which the insured is riding, the word "car" ordinarily being used in referring to and describing an automobile, and the difference between the mechanical construction of automobiles and that of motorcycles not indicating that a common designation would naturally apply to both. Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1090, s. 70 A.L.R. 1253.

---

[7] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1254.

[8] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1254.

[9] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1254.

[10] In annotation in 70 A.L.R. p. 1254, it is said: "But the above authorities (with the exception of the Maryland case, which was later decided) were distinctly repudiated in upholding a lower court's construction of an identical provision as referring to a motorcycle, . . . where at least one of the judges was influenced largely by the consideration that it was the almost universal rule in that state to construe any clause against the insurer where there was the slightest doubt as to its meaning, besides relying upon what appeared to be the view of the authors of Webster's New International Dictionary, namely, that the words "motorcycle" and "motorcar" were practically synonymous; it being noted in Webster's definition of "motorcar" that in a British statute this included motorcycle except where a contrary intention appeared, and in the dictionary definition of motorcycle, that the same statute limited the latter term to motorcars designed to travel on not more than three wheels, and the judge also cited the general statement in 2 R. C. L. p. 1167, that except where special provision is made to the contrary, a motorcycle is considered as falling within statutes which use such terms as motorcar and the like. But it further appeared in the opinion of the judge referred to that not only the insurer's agent, but also his superintendent, understood and represented that policies with this provision covered persons riding motorcycles; and, by regarding the provision as ambiguous, the judge felt justified in looking to the construction which had been placed upon the provision by the parties."

[11] Columbia v. Alexander, 125 S. C. 530, 119 S. E. 241, 32 A.L.R. 746; Anderson v. Yellow Cab Co. 179 Wis. 300, 191 N. W. 748, 31 A.L.R. 1197.

Taxicabs are the modern developments of the old hackney coach. Park Hotel Co. v. Ketchum, 184 Wis. 182, 199 N. W. 219, 33 A.L.R. 351.

[12] Columbia v. Alexander, 125 S. C. 530, 119 S. E. 241, 32 A.L.R. 746.

[13] Anderson v. Yellow Cab Co. 179 Wis. 300, 191 N. W. 748, 31 A.L.R. 1197.

[14] Columbia v. Alexander, 125 S. C. 530, 119 S. E. 241, 32 A.L.R. 746; Memphis v. State ex rel. Ryals, 133 Tenn. 83, 179 S. W. 631, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 1056.

[15] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1250.

[16] See HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND SIDEWALKS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 17, § 6].

[17] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1250.

[18] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1251.

that a statute which regulated the running of motor vehicles on public highways did not apply to the operation of automobiles in towns and cities.[19] Other cases, however, have adopted a contrary construction. Accordingly, it has been held that intersecting streets of a city are within the contemplation of a statute prohibiting the operation of vehicles on any of the highways of the state in such a manner as to endanger life or property, and requiring a person approaching a crossing of intersecting highways to operate a vehicle at a certain speed.[20] In a few decisions the courts have construed the term "highway," as used in a particular statute, to include a street in a town or city.[1] Thus, it has been held that a statute relative to the control of motor vehicles "in going around the corner, curve, or crossing in a highway" applies also to cars being operated at the intersection of streets within a city.[2] And the words "public road or highway" in a statute regulating the operation of motor vehicles on the public roads have been deemed to include a public street.[3] So, the provisions of a criminal code controlling the operation of automobiles on the highways of the state have been construed as including within their terms the streets of a city.[4] In a certain instance, where it appeared that the defendant was indicted for driving an automobile on the public highway while under the influence of liquor, it was held that the offense was committed on a public highway, when it was shown that the illegal act took place at the intersection of two streets within a city.[5]

C. Status

§ 10. Generally; Right to Use Highways.—Obviously, the use of highways by automobiles is lawful.[6] The owners and operators thereof have the right to use the highways of the state on an equal footing with the drivers of other vehicles,[7] unless the size and character of the vehicle is restricted by the legislature. The fact that vehicles are heavier than those customarily used does not give the court, or anyone else, an action for such use. A county can neither restrain an owner from using the public roads and bridges because of the size of his vehicles, nor collect damages for their reasonable use.[8] But this equality or right imposes the reciprocal duty of managing one's vehicle, whatever its character, with care and caution to avoid causing injury to others with equal right.[9]

In early cases it was declared that where highways had not been restricted by dedication to some particular mode of use, they were open to all suitable methods of transportation, and a new means of making the way useful could not be excluded merely because its introduction might tend to the inconvenience, or even to the injury, of those who continued to use the road after the same manner as formerly;[10] and although travel upon the public roads had, until a comparatively recent date, chiefly been by means of horses, persons making use of these animals for purposes of travel had no prescriptive rights or privileges superior to those who had recourse to other methods of locomotion upon the public thoroughfares.[11] The automobile was considered an ordinary vehicle of pleasure or business, furnishing a convenient and useful mode of travel and transportation not necessarily inconsistent with the proper use of the highways by others,[12] and while it was generally recognized that motor vehicles had introduced a new element of danger to travelers on the highway,[13] necessarily exacting a degree of care commensurate with their use,[14] yet such vehicles had rights upon the public roads and streets equal to those of horses, carriages, and other vehicles.[15]

---

[19] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1251.

Where it appeared that the owner of an automobile had left it parked on a sloping street of a city, with the result that it rolled down the street and injured the property of the plaintiff, the court said: "Appellants call attention to § 35 of chapter 96, Laws of 1921, which, in effect, provides that it shall be unlawful to leave any vehicle standing on the main traveled portion of any highway. This statute is not here applicable: First, because there is no semblance of proof that the car was left standing on the main traveled portion of the street. There are some allegations in the pleadings with respect thereto, but the pleadings are not evidence. Second, because we greatly doubt the intent of the legislature, by the use of the words 'main traveled portion of any highway in this state,' to mean a city street. If so, all parking on streets is unlawful, and the right of the local authorities to regulate and permit parking, which seems to be necessary under modern conditions, is wholly taken away." Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1251.

[20] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1251.

[1] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1251.

[2] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1252.

[3] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1252.

[4] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1252.

[5] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1252.

[6] Slattery v. Haley, 52 Ont. L. Rep. 95, 11 B. R. C. 1036.

[7] Com. v. Nolan, 189 Ky. 34, 224 S. W. 506, 11 A.L.R. 202; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Yeiser, 141 Ky. 15, 131 S. W. 1049, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137; Applewold v. Dosch, 239 Pa. St. 479, 86 A. 244, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 481.

[8] Sumner County v. Interurban Transp. Co. 141 Tenn. 493, 213 S. W. 412, 5 A.L.R. 765.

[9] McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 A. 750, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087.

§ 11. Automobile as Dangerous Instrumentality.—Although there is some authority to the contrary,[16] it is a principle of law well established by the great weight of authority that an automobile[17]—at least an automobile in proper repair[18]—or motorcycle[19] is not inherently a dangerous agency so as to render the owner or operator thereof liable as an insurer for injuries caused thereby. Liability, if any, must rest upon negligence.[20] The rules requiring extraordinary care of dangerous instrumentalities do not apply to automobiles.[21] In other words, automobiles are not to be regarded in the same category with locomotives, ferocious animals, dynamite, and other dangerous contrivances and agencies.[1]

---

[10] Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656; Macomber v. Nichols, 34 Mich. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 522.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 225.

[11] Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656; Bogue v. Bennett, 156 Ind. 478, 60 N. E. 143, 83 Am. St. Rep. 212.

[12] House v. Cramer, 134 Iowa, 374, 112 N. W. 3, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 655, 13 Ann. Cas. 461.

Annotation: 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 655; 13 Ann. Cas. 463.

[13] Weil v. Kreutzer, 134 Ky. 563, 121 S. W. 471, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557; Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1228, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402; Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, L.R.A.1915E, 264, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513; Com. v. Boyd, 188 Mass. 79, 74 N. E. 255, 108 Am. St. Rep. 464.

[14] Minor v. Stevens, 65 Wash. 423, 118 P. 313, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178.

Annotation: 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178.

[15] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; House v. Cramer, 134 Iowa, 374, 112 N. W. 3, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 655, 13 Ann. Cas. 461; Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1228, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402; Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 77 S. W. 196, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249; State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 102 S. W. 483, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725; Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30.

Annotation: 13 Ann. Cas. 461; 108 Am. St. Rep. 196; 120 Am. St. Rep. 671; 124 Am. St. Rep. 402.

[16] Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 80 Fla. 441, 86 So. 629, 16 A.L.R. 255.

A motor vehicle operated on the public highways is held to be a dangerous instrumentality, and the owner who intrusts it to another to operate is liable for injury caused to others by the negligence of the person to whom it is intrusted. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 80 Fla. 441, 86 So. 629, 16 A.L.R. 255.

The legislature, under its police power to protect the public from dangerous instrumentalities using the highways, has imposed rigid restraints, regulations, and restrictions upon the use of motor vehicles, thus recognizing the danger from their operation which makes owners liable in damages under the doctrine of respondeat superior as applied to dangerous agencies. Ibid.

[17] Arkin v. Page, 287 Ill. 420, 123 N. E. 30, 5 A.L.R. 216; Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; Fisher v. Fletcher, 191 Ind. 529, 133 N. E. 834, 22 A.L.R. 1392; Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656; Whitelock v. Dennis, 139 Md. 557, 116 A. 68, citing R. C. L.; McGowan v. Longwood, 242 Mass. 337, 136 N. E. 72, 23 A.L.R. 617; Woods v. Clements, 113 Miss. 720, 74 So. 422, L.R.A.1917E, 357; State v. Miller (Mo.) 234 S. W. 813, citing R. C. L.; Lewis v. Steele, 52 Mont. 300, 157 P. 575, citing R. C. L.; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670; Maloney v. Kaplan, 233 N. Y. 426, 135 N. E. 838, 26 A.L.R. 909; Elliott v. Harding, 107 Ohio St. 501, 140 N. E. 338, 36 A.L.R. 1128; McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 126 P. 742, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775; Landry v. Richmond, 45 R. I. 504, 124 A. 263, 32 A.L.R. 1500; Collette v. Page, 44 R. I. 26, 114 A. 136, 18 A.L.R. 74; Coca Cola Bottling Works v. Brown, 139 Tenn. 640, 202 S. W. 926, citing R. C. L.; Leach v. Asman, 130 Tenn. 510, 172 S. W. 303, citing R. C. L.; McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, 155 P. 437, L.R.A.1916D, 618; Blair v. Broadwater, 121 Va. 301, 93 S. E. 632, L.R.A.1918A, 1011; Cohen v. Meador, 119 Va. 429, 89 S. E. 876, citing R. C. L.; Mitchell v. Churches, 119 Wash. 547, 206 P. 6, 36 A.L.R. 1132; Bent-

In accordance with these principles, an owner of an automobile is not responsible for injuries which may be sustained by strangers from its careless and wrongful use while in the possession of another who is using it without his consent.[2] Nor can he be held responsible for the acts of his servant in operating the machine without authority, although he knew that the servant was unskilful and careless.[3] And an automobile in good condition is not such a dangerous instrument that one letting it for hire must test the competency and skill of a customer before intrusting him with it, under penalty of liability for injuries done by the hirer's negligence.[4]

§ 12. —Apparent Limitations upon Dangerous Agency Rule.—Although, as shown above,[5] it is a well-established principle that an automobile is not inherently a dangerous machine, this principle must be considered in the light

---

son v. Brown, 186 Wis. 629, 203 N. W. 380, 38 A.L.R. 1417; Hopkins v. Droppers, 184 Wis. 400, 198 N. W. 738, 36 A.L.R. 1156; Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 124 N. W. 1016, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 270; 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382; 108 Am. St. Rep. 212; 3 Ann. Cas. 495; 19 Ann. Cas. 1229.

See also §§ 161 et seq. infra.

[18] Priestly v. Skourup, 142 Kan. 127, 45 P. (2d) 852, 100 A.L.R. 916.

[19] Hopkins v. Droppers, 184 Wis. 400, 198 N. W. 738, 36 A.L.R. 1156.

[20] Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87; Akin v. Page, 287 Ill. 420, 123 N. E. 30, 5 A.L.R. 216; McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 7 Ann. Cas. 1087; Neubrand v. Kraft, 169 Iowa, 444, 151 N. W. 455, L.R.A.1915D, 691; Symington v. Sipes, 121 Md. 313, 88 A. 134, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 662; Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 107 N. W. 133, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am St. Rep. 670; McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 126 P. 742, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775; King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 217, 204 S. W. 296, L.R.A.1918F, 293; Goodman v. Wilson, 129 Tenn. 464, 166 S. W. 752, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 P. 1020, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 59; Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 92 P. 433, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915; Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 124 N. W. 1016, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 270.

An automobile is not such a dangerous instrumentality that the owner thereof is liable for an accident occurring while he is operating the same if he is guilty of no negligence in its operation. McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087.

[21] Fisher v. Fletcher, 191 Ind. 529, 133 N. E. 834, 22 A.L.R. 1392; Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81; Blair v. Broadwater, 121 Va. 301, 93 S. E. 632, L.R.A.1918A, 1011; Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 92 P. 433, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915.

[1] Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 92 P. 433, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 271.

In one case it was said: "When carefully handled, it is not dangerous either to its passengers or to other persons using the public highways who are themselves in the exercise of reasonable care. Its great capacity and power endow it with dangerous possibilities, but human agency—wanton or negligent agency—must call them into play. It would seem paradoxical to say in one breath that an automobile is a lawful vehicle, and in the next that it is dangerous per se, as dynamite, or a locomotive, or a mad bull is dangerous. If it belonged to the latter class, the rules of the common law would not permit its presence on public highways for general use." Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 271.

[2] Arkin v. Page, 287 Ill. 420, 123 N. E. 30, 5 A.L.R. 216; Daugherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371, 140 N. W. 615, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1163; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670.

Annotation: 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93; 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699; 139 Am. St. Rep. 673; Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1170.

[3] Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670.

Annotation: 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93; 139 Am. St. Rep. 673.

See §§ 373 et seq. infra.

[4] Neubrand v. Kraft, 169 Iowa, 444, 151 N. W. 455, L.R.A.1915D, 691.

As to the liability of the owner of a car for injuries inflicted when driven by someone else, see §§ 353 et seq.

[5] See §§ 11, 12.

of other principles affecting it. For example, it is a general rule in the law of negligence that the care to be exercised in the use of any instrumentality is proportionate to the possibilities of injury from its careless use; and in a number of cases the courts have referred to the automobile as a dangerous instrumentality in the sense that a high degree of care must be exercised by the person operating it.[6] This "high degree" of care may be regarded as but ordinary care under the circumstances, the fact that the instrumentality used is an automobile constituting one of the circumstances. It has been asserted that the automobile is a dangerous instrumentality "when driven upon the highways in a careless and negligent manner,"[7] and that an automobile is a machine of such "dangerous potentialities" that it is negligence for the owner to intrust it to an incompetent or inexperienced person.[8]

§ 13. Automobile as Nuisance.—Since the use of highways by automobiles is lawful,[9] the motor vehicle cannot be regarded as a nuisance per se.[10] There is a difference of opinion upon the question whether an automobile is an attractive nuisance. The general view is that it is not,[11] although under certain

---

[6] Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 272

It has been said: "The duty and responsibility of those driving them should be, and is, proportioned to the possibilities and dangers attending the use upon the public highways of such an instrumentality of travel and transportation." Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 272.

The court, in Weil v. Kreutzer, 134 Ky. 563, 121 S. W. 471, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557, said: "The degree of care one must use always bears a direct ratio to the degree of injury which would probably be caused by negligence. When one comes through the highways of a city with a machine of such deadly force as an automobile, it is incumbent upon the driver to use great care that it be not driven against or over pedestrians. An automobile is nearly as deadly as, and much more dangerous than, a street car or even a railroad car. These are propelled along fixed rails, and all that the traveling public has to do to be safe is to keep off the tracks; but the automobile, with nearly as great weight and more rapidity, can be turned as easily as can an individual, and for this reason is far more dangerous to the traveling public than either the street car or the railway train."

It has been further said: "We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that automobiles are in a manner dangerous, and that they are in a measure a menace to the traveling public. Bearing in mind the number of accidents occurring daily, and the narrow escapes that pedestrians have, and the positive discomfort suffered by many people by reason of the fear of collision from these noiseless but powerful agencies, we do not hesitate to say that the most stringent regulations should be applied to them, and that presumptions in cases of accident should be against rather than in favor of their owners. We do not hold that they are dangerous agencies in such a sense as to make the owners absolutely responsible for all damages occasioned by collision, in whose hands soever they may be. We do decide, however, that they are of such potency for harm as to warrant a very high degree of responsibility upon the owners, both as to their operation and in the selection of parties to whom they intrust them." Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 272.

Where an automobile was out of repair so as to be unmanageable, it was deemed such a dangerous instrumentality that it was negligence to allow its use on the highway; and the owner was held liable for an injury caused by the operation of the car, although his agent, in charge thereof, was not negligent. Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 271.

In Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676, wherein it appeared that an accident resulted from a defect in the brake, the court said: "One who operates on the streets of a city such a dangerous instrumentality as an automobile is bound to take notice that he may be called upon to make emergency stops, and it is negligence on his part not to keep the automobile in such condition that such stops are possible."

[7] Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 272.

In King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 217, 204 S. W. 296, L.R.A.1918F, 293, the court said: "It is true that an automobile is not a dangerous instrumentality so as to make the owner liable, as in the case of a wild animal loose on the streets; but, as a matter of practical justice to those who are injured, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that an automobile possesses excessive weight, that it is capable of running at a rapid rate of speed, and, when moving rapidly upon the streets of a populous city, it is dangerous to life and limb, and must be operated with care."

[8] Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87 (obiter).

[9] See § 10, supra.

[10] Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656; State v. 1920 Studebaker Touring Car, 120 Or. 254, 251 P. 701, 50 A.L.R. 81.

[11] Gamble v. Uncle Sam Oil Co. 100 Kan. 74, 163 P. 627, L.R.A.1917D, 875; Jackson v. Mills Baking Co. 221 Mich. 64, 190 N. W. 740, 26 A.L.R. 906.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 156, 284, 285, s. 39 A.L.R. 486, 45 A.L.R. 982, 53 A.L.R. 1344, and 60 A.L.R. 1444.

An ordinary motor truck moving along a public street cannot be regarded as an at-circumstances the automobile has been held to be such a nuisance.[12] Where the owner finds an infant of tender years in his car, he is not absolved of liability by driving it from the car, but is required to exercise reasonable care to avoid injury to the child thereafter.[13]

§ 14. Automobile as Tool or Implement of Trade.—The question occasionally arises as to whether or not an automobile is a "tool," "implement," "instrument," "utensil," or "apparatus" within the meaning of debtor's exemption laws.[14] Obviously, the determination of this question depends to a large extent upon the wording of the statute and upon the specific factual situation involved. An automobile has been held not to be a tool or implement of trade within the meaning of the exemption laws.[15] A truck and an automobile owned by a farmer and used by him for general farm purposes, including the marketing of farm produce, have been held not to be farm "tools" or "instruments" within the meaning of an exemption statute, but are to be classed as "vehicles," where the statute contains the further classification of "the wagon or other vehicle, etc.," of a farmer as being exempt.[16] It has also been held that an automobile of a licensed professional chauffeur is not within a statute exempting "the tools and necessary implements to the extent of $200, used by the execution debtor in the practice of his trade or profession." [17]

II. PUBLIC REGULATION AND CONTROL

A. Power of Regulation

§ 15. Federal Government.—The power of the Federal government to regulate interstate commerce [18] gives it control over motor vehicles engaged in business between one state and another in the same degree as such control exists as to any other class of vehicles engaged in the same occupation. However, as to what constitutes "commerce" of an interstate character, the United States Supreme Court has given a definition which fails to include pleasure vehicles engaged in interstate travel.[19] Concerning police regulations within state limits, the United States government, under ordinary circumstances, has no constitutional authority. The power to regulate commerce among the states tractive or alluring vehicle to an intelligent boy about fifteen years old who is accustomed to the traffic of the streets. Gamble v. Uncle Sam Oil Co. 100 Kan. 74, 163 P. 627, L.R.A.1917D, 875.

---

[12] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 993, s. 53 A.L.R. 1344, and 60 A.L.R. 1444.

In one instance an electric delivery truck which was left parked on the wrong side of the street so that its control lever could easily be reached from the curb side, with the switch plug in and the brakes not set, was treated as an attractive nuisance. Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 993, s. 53 A.L.R. 1344, and 60 A.L.R. 1444.

[13] Ziehm v. Vale, 98 Ohio St. 306, 120 N. E. 702, 1 A.L.R. 1381.

[14] See generally Exemptions [Also 11 R. C. L. p. 508, §§ 18 et seq.].

[15] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 827.

[16] Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 670.

[17] Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 671.

The ground of the decision is stated by one of the judges as follows: "Taking the section in its ordinary meaning, I cannot think that the legislature, when using the two words 'tools' and 'implements' in the plural, and placing a limitation in value obviously upon a number of articles taken together, intended to include a single but very valuable article in the nature of a conveyance which the debtor uses as a carrier of passengers. Even if the carriage of passengers for hire came within the meaning of the word 'trade,' which I think it does not, I do not think a single valuable chattel, like an automobile, is within the meaning of the expression 'tools and implements.' When the legislature said to a debtor, in substance, 'You may possess and enjoy the tools and implements (in the plural) of your trade up to the value in all of $200, and you cannot be disturbed in their possession by execution,' I cannot believe that it means to say, 'You may acquire a single chattel of three or four, five or ten, times that value, use it as your means of livelihood in conveying passengers, and you shall not be disturbed.' This would exempt steamboats and aeroplanes, when so used." Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 671.

[18] U. S. Const. Art. 1, § 8.

[19] Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 S. Ct. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764.

has always been understood as limited by its terms and as a virtual denial of any power to interfere with the internal trade and business of the several states.[20]

§ 16. States.—The privilege of using public highways does not amount to an absolute and unqualified right, but is subject to regulation by the state acting under its police power as sovereign authority.[1] This power of regulation has expanded to meet changing conditions.[2] With the introduction and development of automobiles as a means of conveyance, it has advanced and has conferred ample authority to regulate their use.[3] Accordingly, the legislature of each state has the power to require the licensing of every motor vehicle operated within its boundaries and to establish detailed and reasonable regulations applicable to their use upon the public highways.[4] The speed at which they may be operated on the highways[5] and the highways and localities where they may be operated [6] fall within the scope of legislative power. The state may provide by statute that a failure to comply with any of the legislative regulations shall constitute a misdemeanor[7] or that persons driving automobiles shall be responsible in damages for all injuries which may be the result of a violation of any of the statutory provisions.[8] The constitutional provisions protecting persons from being compelled to testify against themselves have been held not to be applicable to legislation regulating the operation of motor vehicles and requiring, under penalty, the display of license numbers; nor do such laws infringe the constitutional inhibition of unreasonable searches.[9]

Such regulations may be applicable to roads and streets not public highways if used for travel by the public.[9a]

[20] United States v. Dewitt, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 41, 19 L. ed. 593.

[1] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; Ex parte Kneedler, 243 Mo. 632, 147 S. W. 983, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 622, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 923; State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 102 S. W. 483, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 755; State v. Chandler, 131 Me. 262, 161 A. 148, 82 A.L.R. 1389.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601; 108 Am. St. Rep. 212; 3 Ann. Cas. 495; 11 Ann. Cas. 728; 20 Ann. Cas. 516; Ann. Cas. 1916D, 58.

The regulation, maintenance, and protection of highways, as well as the safety of travelers upon them, is within the police power of the jurisdiction maintaining them. Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534.

[2] Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 92 P. 433, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915.

McIntyre v. Coote, 19 Ont. L. Rep. 9, 16 Ann. Cas. 395.

As to delegation of legislative power, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Neither exact precision nor scientific calculation is essential to render regulations of highway traffic reasonable. Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534.

[3] State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; Dudley v. Northampton Street R. Co. 202 Mass. 443, 89 N. E. 25, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561; Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, L.R.A.1915E, 264, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513.

[4] See §§ 90 et seq.

[5] See §§ 37 et seq.

[6] See §§ 48 et seq.

[7] See § 755.

[8] Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289.

Annotation: 12 Ann. Cas. 291.

The legislature may impose a lien on an automobile for injuries done by it, which shall be superior to that of a chattel mortgage executed after the passage of the statute, but before the injury was done, and which shall be valid against the owner, although the machine was at the time of the injury in the possession of a stranger. Merchants & P. Bank v. Brigman, 106 S. C. 362, 91 S. E. 332, L.R.A.1917E, 925.

[9] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790.

Annotation: 69 L.R.A. 345; 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 215; 108 Am. St. Rep. 218; 5 Ann. Cas. 793.

[9a] Crossler v. Safeway Stores, 51 Idaho, 413, 6 P. (2d) 151, 80 A.L.R. 463.

Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 469.

It may include a privately owned and operated toll road within the corporate limits of a village. Weirich v. State, 140 Wis. 98, 121 N. W. 652, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 17 Ann. Cas. 802.

See also § 66 infra.

§ 17. —State Regulation of Use of Highways by Private Motor Vehicles for Hire.—It is well established that uniform regulations necessary for public safety and order may rightfully be prescribed by the state[10] for the government of owners and operators of motor vehicles for hire; that the state cannot, however, impose upon a private carrier the duties and liabilities of a common carrier, since such would be a taking of private property for public use without compensation and denial of due process of law, and for the same reason the state cannot arbitrarily change its status from that of a private carrier to a public carrier;[11] and that imposing on private carriers which haul freight for hire over the public highways of the state the duty of obtaining a permit from the public service commission before using the highways for that purpose from considerations of public safety and in view of the heavy burden of maintaining the highways in reasonable repair at public expense is proper regulation.[12]

The state may regulate automobiles to be rented and driven by a lessee or his privy.[12a]

§ 18. —State Regulation of Motor Vehicle Carriers as Affected by Interstate Commerce Clause.—The Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes."[13] Acting under this power, Congress has assumed the authority to regulate interstate commerce of certain kinds by means of the Interstate Commerce Act,[14] which governs interstate commerce by railroads and other designated agencies, but which clearly does not assume to regulate interstate commerce by motor vehicles. Indeed, until recently, Congress had not assumed to regulate commerce between the states carried on by this means. In the absence of action by Congress, the problem arose as to how far the states might go in regulating such commerce.[15] Within reasonable limitations, the states may regulate the use by common carriers of the public highways, but they have no right to prohibit it altogether.[16] It was formerly held that since Congress had not legislated with reference to the use of the public highways by automobiles, a common carrier by motor vehicle was not exempt, by virtue of the interstate character of its business, from the operation of a state law requiring common carriers by motor vehicle upon the state highways to obtain a certificate of convenience and necessity from the state's public service commission.[17] But it is now held by the Supreme Court of the United States that a statute which would prohibit common carriers by motor vehicle engaged exclusively in interstate traffic from using the highways of the state without a certificate of convenience and necessity is, even though Congress has not acted, violative of the purpose of the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, which, by expressly committing to Congress the power to regulate commerce among the states, impliedly withholds from the states the power to prohibit that commerce.[18]

---

[10] Frost & F. Trucking Co. v. Railroad Commission, 271 U. S. 583, 70 L. ed. 1101, 46 S. Ct. 605, 47 A.L.R. 457; Michigan Pub. Utilities Commission v. Duke, 266 U. S. 570, 69 L. ed. 445, 45 S. Ct. 191, 36 A.L.R. 1105.

Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 1056.

[11] Frost & F. Trucking Co. v. Railroad Commission, 271 U. S. 583, 70 L. ed. 1101, 46 S. Ct. 605, 47 A.L.R. 457; Michigan Pub. Utilities Commission v. Duke, 266 U. S. 570, 69 L. ed. 445, 45 S. Ct. 191, 36 A.L.R. 1105; State ex rel. Public Utilities Commission v. Nelson, 65 Utah, 457, 238 P. 237, 42 A.L.R. 849.

[12] Rutledge Co-op. Asso. v. Baughman, 153 Md. 297, 138 A. 29, 56 A.L.R. 1042; Barbour v. Walker, 126 Okla. 227, 259 P. 552, 56 A.L.R. 1049.

[12a] Levy v. Daniels' U-Drive Auto Renting Co. 108 Conn. 333, 143 A. 163, 61 A.L.R. 846; Robinson v. Bruce Rent-A-Ford Co. 205 Iowa, 261, 215 N. W. 724, 61 A.L.R. 851.

Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 895.

[13] Art. 1, § 8.

[14] U. S. C. A. title 49, §§ 1–27.

[15] Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1111, s. 38 A.L.R. 291.

For a full discussion of the Federal Motor Carrier Act, see MOTOR TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES.

[16] Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, 69 L. ed. 623, 45 S. Ct. 324, 38 A.L.R. 286.

In George W. Bush & Sons Co. v. Maloy, 267 U. S. 317, 69 L. ed. 627, 45 S. Ct. 326, it was held that the state had no right to deny the use of its highways to a carrier engaged in commerce exclusively interstate, even though the denial was placed on the ground that such use would be "prejudicial to the welfare and convenience of the public."

[17] Buck v. Kuykendall (D. C.) 295 F. 197, reversed in 267 U. S. 307, 69 L. ed. 623, 45 S. Ct. 324, 38 A.L.R. 286.

All reasonable regulations with reference to the matter of registration, license fees, and the like are within the power of the state and apply to automobiles engaged in interstate traffic, as well as to those operated exclusively within the state.[19] Accordingly, it is within the province of the railroad commissioners to impose reasonable and impartial regulations in the use of highways by persons engaged in or purposing to engage in the transportation of passengers and freight by automobile as a common carrier.[20] While uniform regulations necessary for public safety and order in respect of interstate traffic by motor vehicles may rightfully be prescribed by the state, it cannot impose upon a private carrier the duties and liabilities of a common carrier.[1]

§ 19. Municipalities.—It is well settled as a general rule that municipalities having the power to regulate the use of their streets may enact valid rules and regulations for the government of motor vehicles within their boundaries, so long as such rules and regulations are not in conflict with, or repugnant to, legislative enactments governing the use of such vehicles.[2] A city, then, in the absence of express or implied restrictions imposed by the legislature, may pass ordinances regulating the use of automobiles.[3] Thus, the right of a municipality to require the taking out of a municipal license before an automobile may be used regularly within its limits,[4] to require that persons seeking to operate automobiles shall furnish evidence of their competency,[5] to provide for license numbers[6] and their exhibition,[7] to require the use of reasonable safety appliances,[8] and to fix limitations as to speed,[9] have been sustained. Where, however, the rule is established that a municipal corporation has only such powers as may be specially granted by the legislature, in order to find authority to pass an ordinance regulating the use of automobiles, it must appear that a charter provision or statute exists which is broad enough to cover the terms of the ordinance.[10] Obviously, a provision in a statute regulating the use of motor vehicles on the highways, that nothing in it shall affect the power of the municipality to make and enforce regulations affecting vehicles which are

---

[18] Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, 69 L. ed. 623, 45 S. Ct. 324, 38 A.L.R. 286.

The court, while conceding that appropriate state regulations, adopted primarily to promote safety upon the highways and conservation in their use, are not obnoxious to the commerce clause, where the indirect burden imposed upon interstate commerce is not unreasonable, said of this statute: "The provision here in question is of a different character. Its primary purpose is not regulation with a view to safety or to conservation of the highways, but the prohibition of competition. It determines not the manner of use, but the persons by whom the highways may be used. It prohibits such use to some persons, while permitting it to others for the same purpose and in the same manner. Moreover, it determines whether the prohibition shall be applied by resort, through state officials, to a test which is peculiarly within the province of Federal action,—the existence of adequate facilities for conducting interstate commerce. The vice of the legislation is dramatically exposed by the fact that the state of Oregon had issued its certificate, which, despite existing facilities, declared that public convenience and necessity required the establishment by Buck of the auto stage line between Seattle and Portland. Thus, the provision of the Washington statute is a regulation, not of the use of its own highways, but of interstate commerce. Its effect upon such commerce is not merely to burden but to obstruct it. Such state action is forbidden by the commerce clause." Ibid. See also George W. Bush & Sons Co. v. Maloy, 267 U. S. 317, 69 L. ed. 627, 45 S. Ct. 326.

[19] Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140; Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534; Re Opinion of the Justices, 81 N. H. 566, 129 A. 117, 39 A.L.R. 1023.

A state may require private motor carriers of property on its highways to obtain a license, pay a tax, and file a liability insurance policy, where the regulations to which applicants for licenses are required to conform and the license fees required are not unreasonable and the tax and license fees over the expenses of administration go to the state highway fund. Continental Baking Co. v. Woodring, 286 U. S. 352, 76 L. ed. 1155, 52 S. Ct. 595; Hicklin v. Coney, 290 U. S. 169, 78 L. ed. 247, 54 S. Ct. 142.

Reasonable regulations of the use of highways which do not discriminate against the interstate commerce which may be affected do not impose an unconstitutional burden thereon. Continental Baking Co. v. Woodring, 286 U. S. 352, 76 L. ed. 1155, 52 S. Ct. 595, 81 A.L.R. 1402.

[20] Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1112, s. 38 A.L.R. 291.

The state is not deprived of its power and duty as trustee of the public highways for the benefit of the people of the state to enact reasonable regulations in the exercise of its police power over such highways by § 9 of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921 (42 Stat. at L. 212, chap. 119, U. S. C. A. title 23, § 1), providing that "all highways constructed or reconstructed under the provisions of this act shall be free from tolls of all kinds" (Liberty Highway Co. v. Michigan Pub. Utilities Commission, (D. C.) 294 F. 703). But such provision is sufficient to indicate the purpose of Congress that interstate traffic shall not be barred from such highways (Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, 69 L. ed. 623, 45 S. Ct. 324, 38 A.L.R. 286; Geo. W. Bush & Sons Co. v. Maloy, 267 U. S. 317, 69 L. ed. 627, 45 S. Ct. 326).

[1] Michigan Pub. Utilities Commission v. Duke, 266 U. S. 570, 69 L. ed. 445, 45 S. Ct. 191, 36 A.L.R. 1105.

A state statute imposing conditions on use of highways by motor vehicle carriers may not be construed as attempting to convert private contract carriers by motor into common carriers and thus take their property for public use without adequate compensation and to deprive them of their property without due process of law, where, though the regulations imposed upon the two classes are in some instances similar if not identical, the provisions applicable to contract carriers are distinctly set forth and separately stated, and the statute does not compel private contract carriers to assume the duties and obligations of common carriers or interfere with their freedom to limit their business to that of carrying under private contracts. Stephenson v. Binford, 287 U. S. 251, 77 L. ed. 288, 53 S. Ct. 181.

[2] Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172; Roper v. Greenspon, 272 Mo. 288, 198 S. W. 1107, L.R.A.1918D, 126.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1186.

The right of a citizen to travel upon the public highways and to transport his property thereon, either by horse-drawn carriage or wagon or automobile, is not a mere privilege which a city may permit or prohibit at will, but a common right, which he has under his right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Thompson v. Smith, 155 Va. 367, 154 S. E. 579, 71 A.L.R. 604.

It has been held, however, that the general power of a city under its charter to regulate the use of its streets did not include the right to enact an ordinance requiring the examination of operators of automobiles before the issuing of a license. (Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215), or to establish a general system of regulation and licensing of motor vehicles. (Ex parte Efferson, 61 Tex. Crim. Rep. 237, 134 S. W. 686, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 303.)

An ordinance regulating the use of automobiles in public thoroughfares must be reasonable and must not conflict with general laws. Schell v. DuBois, 94 Ohio St. 93, 113 N. E. 664, L.R.A.1917A, 710.

For a discussion of the conflict between statutes and local regulations, see infra, §§ 68 et seq.

[3] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790; Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

Annotation: 69 L.R.A. 345.

In Bogue v. Bennett, 156 Ind. 478, 60 N. E. 143, 83 Am. St. Rep. 212, it was declared that it might be stated generally that vehicles in customary use and not requiring tracks for their operation, whether drawn or driven by animal or other power, had the right, in the absence of state or local legislation, to travel upon the streets and alleys of a municipal corporation without first obtaining the consent of its governing body.

[4] See infra, § 94.

[5] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790; Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289; Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 67 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

Annotation: 69 L.R.A. 345; 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 217; 3 Ann. Cas. 495.

[6] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790; Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289; Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

[7] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790; Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289; Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

[8] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219; 108 Am. St. Rep. 218; 5 Ann. Cas. 793.

[9] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790; Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289; Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

A charter provision giving the common council authority to control, prescribe, and regulate the manner in which the highways are to be used and enjoyed is sufficient to sustain an ordinance which regulates the speed and operation of automobiles and requires their registration and numbering. People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790.

[10] Ex parte Epperson, 61 Tex. Crim. Rep. 237, 134 S. W. 685, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 303.

used within their limits for hire, does not give a municipality authority over vehicles which are operated for hire between it and another municipality or through it between other municipalities.[11]

The power of a municipality to regulate the use of vehicles or other means of transportation within the city limits extends to streets, alleys or driveways which, if properly dedicated, would be accepted and are used by the public the same as other streets and alleys within the municipality.[11a]

The police power of a municipality to regulate the use of automobiles kept for hire, to be driven by the lessee, is not dependent upon such automobiles being operated as common carriers. Such power is limited only by the extent of the public need for such regulation in the promotion of the peace, safety, and morals of the municipality.[11b]

The general rule against delegation of legislative power does not preclude the conferring upon local subdivisions or administrative officers the power to prescribe or vary regulations concerning motor vehicles used on the highways.[12] It may delegate to boards of aldermen or councilmen or to a highway commission the power to designate roads and streets on which automobiles shall not be used.[13]

In considering the subject of municipal control of automobiles, it is of importance to bear in mind that the statutes of the various jurisdictions now make elaborate provisions defining the scope of municipal regulations.

§ 20.—Statutes Affecting Municipal Regulations.—As indicated in the preceding section,[14] the statutes of the various jurisdictions now make elaborate provisions defining the scope of municipal regulations. The legislature may affirmatively authorize the passage of reasonable municipal regulations,[15] or it may, by statute, directly prohibit municipalities from enacting any ordinance regulating or licensing automobiles or excluding them from the use of the highways,[16] or, by enacting a general law, impliedly deprive the local authorities of the right to pass ordinances which would be inconsistent with the legislative provisions.[17] But simply because a state undertakes to impose certain regulations applicable to the entire commonwealth, a city is not necessarily deprived of the power of imposing other regulations adapted to its own peculiar conditions, if these are not inconsistent with those of a general character prescribed for the entire commonwealth.[18]

---

[11] Argenta v. Keath, 130 Ark. 334, 197 S. W. 686, L.R.A.1918B, 888.

[11a] Crossler v. Safeway Stores, 51 Idaho, 413, 6 P. (2d) 151, 80 A.L.R. 463.
Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 469.

[11b] Hodge Drive-It-Yourself Co. v. Cincinnati, 123 Ohio St. 284, 175 N. E. 196, 77 A.L.R. 889, affirmed in 284 U. S. 335, 76 L. ed. 323, 52 S. Ct. 144.
Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 895.

[12] Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 76 L. ed. 167, 52 S. Ct. 581; Re Hinkelman, 183 Cal. 392, 191 P. 682, 11 A.L.R. 1222; Harder's Fire Proof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536; Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534; Smith v. State, 130 Md. 482, 100 A. 778; Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, L.R.A.1915E, 264, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513; State v. Wetzel, 208 Wis. 603, 243 N. W. 768, 86 A.L.R. 274; Interstate Trucking Co. v. Dammann, 208 Wis. 116, 241 N. W. 625, 82 A.L.R. 1080.
Annotation: 87 A.L.R. 546; 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 957.

[13] Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, L.R.A.1915E, 264, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513.

Where matters of a "merely local or private nature" are assigned exclusively to a local legislative body, such body may prohibit the use of automobiles upon highways. Re Rogers, 7 East. L. R. (Pr. Edw. Isl.) 212, 15 Ann. Cas. 1167. Annotation: 15 Ann. Cas. 1169.

[14] See § 19.

[15] Annotation: 12 Ann. Cas. 291.

[16] Annotation: 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958; 15 Ann. Cas. 1170.

For a discussion of conflict between statutes and ordinances, see §§ 68 et seq.

[17] Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.
Annotation: 11 Ann. Cas. 728.

[18] Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas.

§ 21. State and Municipal Regulation of Federal Agencies.—The state, in the exercise of its police power, may, within certain limits, make regulations which affect those engaged in handling United States mails.[19] One in charge of a vehicle transporting United States mail is not exempt from the operation of state statutes and municipal ordinances regulating traffic on the highways, although by Federal statute the highways are post roads.[20] However, the state may not require qualifications in addition to those which the Federal government has pronounced sufficient by requiring a postoffice employee to cease driving a government motor truck in the transportation of mail over a post road until he obtains a license by submitting to examination before a state official and paying a fee.[1]

B. Validity of Regulations

§ 22. Generally.—Obviously, in determining the validity of regulations pertaining to automobiles, the general rules of law governing the constitutionality [2] and validity of statutes [3] and ordinances [4] apply. The law of automobiles primarily is but an application of well-established legal principles to the factual situation the advent of the motor vehicle has created. The validity of particular regulations is discussed in sections dealing specifically with such regulations.[5]

§ 23. Class Legislation.—As indicated in a preceding section,[6] the privilege of using public highways does not amount to an unqualified right, but is subject to regulation by the state, acting under its police power as sovereign authority. This power of regulation is not, however, unlimited, but, in the case of automobiles as in all cases, is subservient to the constitutional strictures against class legislation,[7] though motor vehicles have been recognized as properly and reasonably forming a separate class for legislative purposes.[8] They are so different from vehicles propelled by animals that they may be placed by the legislature in a class by themselves for the purpose of regulation.[9] Accordingly a statute or municipal ordinance is not unconstitutional as being special legislation merely because it legislates solely upon the question of the operation of automobiles, and does not attempt to regulate the operation of all vehicles using the public highways.[10] There is also room for

---

289; Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

[19] Com. v. Closson, 229 Mass. 329, 118 N. E. 653, L.R.A.1918C, 939.

[20] Com. v. Closson, 229 Mass. 329, 118 N. E. 653, L.R.A.1918C, 939.

Annotation: L.R.A.1918C, 940.

[1] Johnson v. Maryland, 254 U. S. 51, 65 L. ed. 126, 41 S. Ct. 16.

[2] See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW [Also 6 R. C. L. p. 1].

[3] See STATUTES [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 750].

[4] See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS [Also 19 R. C. L. p. 678].

[5] See §§ 24 et seq.

See also §§ 90 et seq.

[6] See § 22.

[7] See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW [Also 6 R. C. L. p. 1].

[8] Continental Baking Co. v. Woodring, 286 U. S. 352, 76 L. ed. 1155, 52 S. Ct. 595, 81 A.L.R. 1402; Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 102 S. W. 483, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725; Allen v. Smith, 84 Ohio St. 283, 95 N. E. 829, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 611.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 225; 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502; 108 Am. St. Rep. 212; 3 Ann. Cas. 495; 11 Ann. Cas. 728; 20 Ann. Cas. 516.

[9] Annotation: L.R.A.1918D, 134.

The law regulating the use of automobiles alone, of all the vehicles which use the highways, is not invalid special legislation. State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 102 S. W. 483, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725.

The constitutionality of a provision that motor vehicles operated or driven upon any highway should, within the usual period, display a rear light was upheld, principally against the contention that it was unreasonable to require an automobile at rest to display a rear light, without also requiring a farm wagon to do so. Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 815.

[10] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E.

discrimination between different classes of owners of automobiles, without infringing on these constitutional guaranties, as, for instance, an exemption from a registration statute of vehicles owned by the manufacturer or vendor thereof and kept in stock for sale, and not for private use or hire.[11] A licensing ordinance applying only to those who use their automobiles for merely private business or pleasure has, however, been considered invalid.[12]

A separate classification, for regulation purposes, of automobiles kept and used for the purpose of renting them to be driven by the lessees upon the public streets, is not an unreasonable classification.[12a]

C. Specific Regulations

1. In General

§ 24. Generally.—The advent and development of the automobile have been accompanied by a flood of legislation regulating the operation and use of motor vehicles. This legislation is of a varied nature. Because of it, a detailed consideration of particular enactments is essential to the comprehensiveness of any treatise on the law of automobiles.

2. Lights

a. In General

§ 25. Generally.[13]—The statutes of the various jurisdictions provide with considerable detail for lights on motor vehicles. These enactments specify with great particularity the time during which lights are required, the character of such lights, the different types of vehicles which must carry lights, etc. It is therefore necessary, in order to ascertain the law of any state on this point, to study the statutes of that state. Legal principles, however, may be formulated which are generally applicable.

§ 26. Validity of Enactments.—Obviously, general principles of constitutional law [14] and statutory interpretation [15] govern in determining the validity of legislation regulating the use of lights on automobiles.[16] The courts require a statute to be definite and reasonable.[17] A statute making it unlawful to operate an automobile the front lights of which project a light of such glare and brilliancy as seriously to interfere with the sight of, or temporarily blind the vision of, a driver of a vehicle approaching from the opposite direc-

---

1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; Com. v. Nolan, 189 Ky. 34, 224 S. W. 506, 11 A.L.R. 202; State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289; State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 102 S. W. 483, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725; Schultz v. State, 89 Neb. 34, 130 N. W. 972, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 403, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 495; Allen v. Smith, 84 Ohio St. 283, 95 N. E. 829, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 611.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502; 108 Am. St. Rep. 212; 3 Ann. Cas. 495; 12 Ann. Cas. 291; 11 Ann. Cas. 728; 20 Ann. Cas. 516.

[11] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; 5 Ann. Cas. 793.

[12] Annotation: 108 Am. St. Rep. 219; 5 Ann. Cas. 793.

[12a] Hodge Drive-It-Yourself Co. v. Cincinnati, 123 Ohio St. 284, 175 N. E. 196, 77 A.L.R. 889, affirmed in 284 U. S. 335, 76 L. ed. 323, 52 S. Ct. 144.

Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 895.

[13] As to the effect of a violation of regulations as to lights upon the right to recover for injuries, see infra, § 412.

[14] See Constitutional Law [Also 6 R. C. L. p. 1].

[15] See Statutes [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 750].

[16] With reference to provisions that every trailer on the highways should have in the rear at night a red light visible for at least 100 feet, and that trailers more than 6 feet wide should have also a white light at the left, so fixed as to be seen from both the front and rear, it was declared that there was no doubt as to the legislative power so to enact. Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 815.

[17] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1226, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

tion is obnoxious to the rule which requires some degree of certainty in informing one accused of crime of the nature of the accusation against him, since glare and brilliancy are not described by any standard that is certain and that may be known in advance by the citizen.[18] But an ordinance imposing absolute liability for operating a motor car upon a city street, between certain hours, without displaying a red rear light was held valid against an objection that it was invalid for failure to make intent an element of the offense.[19] A statute requiring a display of one or more white lights has been held not void for uncertainty on the ground that it does not designate the person who should be held liable for a violation thereof, it being held that the intention of the legislature was to prohibit during certain hours the use of motor vehicles not lighted in the manner designated, and that it, by implication, designated the person who should be liable for a violation, the prohibition being against the "use," and consequently the "user" being the one who was intended to be held responsible for a violation of the statute.[20] A provision of a jitney bus act requiring the maintenance of a light in the tonneau of cars during certain hours if the top is up, which was designed to prevent crime, has been held not invalid on the ground that it was unreasonable and unnecessary.[1] A statutory requirement that motor vehicles be equipped at night with lights which must be kept burning was upheld as a reasonable regulation even though the driver was required by another provision to dim his lights upon approaching cars coming in the opposite direction.[2]

The legislature may, in prescribing the quality of headlights which may be used on automobiles, establish a testing agency to determine whether or not the lights in use comply with the law.[2a]

b. CONSTRUCTION OF ENACTMENTS

§ 27. Generally.—The general rules relating to statutory interpretation[3] govern the construction of statutes or ordinances relating to lights on automobiles. The situations themselves, although ordinarily similar or analogous,[4] by virtue of variations in statutory provisions and variations in factual settings, are of a miscellaneous nature. While the legislature constitutionally may make the one in charge of an automobile absolutely liable for failure to maintain a rear light, although it may have gone out without his knowledge,[5] where the provision of the statute is that no one shall allow a motor vehicle owned by him to be operated on the streets after dark without a rear red light, knowledge, express or implied, is essential to liability.[6] Moreover, the provisions of such a statute do not impose liability upon the owner during the time that the vehicle is under the control of another person.[7]

A regulation of the lights on "motor cars," excepting from its provisions bicycles and tricycles, is applicable to motorcycles.[7a]

---

[18] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1226, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[19] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1226, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[20] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1226, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[1] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1226, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[2] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 815.

Re Hinkelman, 183 Cal. 392, 191 P. 682, 11 A.L.R. 1222.

[3] See STATUTES [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 750].

[4] For example, see §§ 28 et seq.

[5] See § 778.

[6] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1227, 1228, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[7] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1228, 78 A.L.R. 815.

The intention of the legislature is said to be to impose the liability upon any person other than the owner, when such other person was operating the vehicle and it was under his control. Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1228, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[7a] Webster v. Terry [1914] 1 K. B. 51, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 226.

§ 28. As Affected by Purpose.—In construing statutes relating to automobile headlights, the courts frequently consider the purpose of the legislature.[8] The purpose of requiring lights on automobiles is not merely to warn others on the highway, but to guide the operator of the car.[9]

A statutory provision that "every motor vehicle . . . shall, while in operation on the public highway" during a specified time, carry certain lights has been construed, in connection with other provisions, including one that every motor vehicle shall carry a lamp so placed as to illuminate conspicuously the number plate on the rear, as being only regulatory, and not prohibitory, the intention being merely to impose a penalty for noncompliance, rather than to outlaw cars not complying therewith.[10]

§ 29. Time Requirements.—In the regulations as to lights, it is usually specified in some general way the time within which lights must be shown, such as from sunset to sunrise; sometimes it is even required that lights should be shown at any time when there is not sufficient light to render objects discernible. In a case involving an ordinance making it unlawful for the driver of an automobile or other wheeled vehicle to use the streets of a city without displaying "until daybreak" one or more lights, "daybreak" was construed to mean the dawn or first appearance of light in the morning.[11] The words "and at any other time when there is not sufficient light to render clearly discernible any person on the highway at a distance of 200 feet ahead," which immediately followed the phrase "a half hour after sunset to a half hour before sunrise," were construed as intending not to limit the requirement as to lights, but to enlarge it.[12]

§ 30. Intensity or Visibility Requirements.[13]—The intensity of the lights is usually specified. The most general regulation is that they must be visible. Some statutes add to this that they must be visible a reasonable distance. In the case of headlights, a common requirement is that they must be such as to enable the driver to distinguish clearly an object a certain distance ahead. A provision that "the minimum requirements for head lamps . . . shall be such as to enable the driver to clearly distinguish a . . . substantial object 200 feet ahead, and the design, adjustment, and operation of such head lamps shall be such as to avoid dangerous glare or dazzle," does not prohibit lamps properly equipped with ordinary ribbed lenses, the court noting that any headlight projecting light of an intensity sufficient to enable the driver to distinguish an object 200 feet ahead would necessarily have some glare or dazzle.[14]

---

[8] In construing such a statute the court may take into consideration the fact that automobiles are in common use and that certain lights used on them oftentimes blind the driver of a vehicle approaching in the opposite direction, and that the purpose of the legislature was to correct this condition. State v. Claiborne, 185 Iowa, 170, 170 N. W. 417, 3 A.L.R. 392.

[9] Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30.

Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1229, s. 78 A.L.R 815.

For example, a statute providing that there shall be exhibited on automobiles operated at night "one or more lamps showing white lights visible within a reasonable distance in the direction toward which the automobile is proceeding" does not require the lights for the guidance and benefit only of those approaching the automobile, but also for the guidance and benefit of the person in charge of the car. Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30.

Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1229, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

The purpose of a statute requiring motor vehicles to have lights visible at least 200 feet in the direction in which they are proceeding was held not to be simply to warn persons in front of it of its approach, but also to light the road for the guidance and direction of the driver. Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 818.

The purpose of a statute requiring front and rear lights on automobiles is said to be to render them visible to travelers on the highway at night, in order that the public may use the highway in safety, and in any specific instance, the attainment of visibility in time to prevent disaster meets the demand of the law. Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 819.

[10] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 821.

[11] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1226, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

A light hung on the side of an inclosed milk wagon, which was visible only to those approaching the wagon with a view of such side, does not comply with a regulation that the light shall be so displayed as to be visible from the rear and front of such vehicle during certain hours of the night. Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1229, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[12] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 820.

[13] As to ability to stop within range of lights, see infra, § 263.

A road with a uniform grade, whether horizontal or otherwise, is held to be a "level road" within the meaning of a statute requiring the headlights of motor vehicles to be such that under normal atmospheric conditions and on a level road, they will produce a driving light sufficient to render clearly discernible all vehicles, persons, or substantial objects 160 feet ahead.[15] An earth embankment 6 to 8 feet high, extending across the end of a street, is a "substantial object" within the meaning of such a statute.[16]

Intensity may be limited from the standpoint of preventing glare. Some statutes expressly require testing by official agencies to determine the matter of intensity. That a headlight used on an automobile does not produce a dangerous glare does not make its use lawful where it has not been tested and sanctioned as required by statute.[17]

§ 31. Dimming or Casting Beam Down.—In some states dimming headlights or casting the beam of the light down is required when meeting and passing another car.[18] Extinguishing all the lights on a car when it is a considerable distance from another, and then proceeding forward at full speed in the dark, is not within the contemplation of a provision that a person in charge of a motor vehicle equipped with "electric" headlight or headlights should dim or extinguish it or them on approaching a vehicle proceeding in an opposite direction, when within not less than 250 feet of same, inasmuch as another provision called for showing two white lights visible for at least 200 feet.[19]

§ 32. As Affected by Atmospheric Conditions.—An interesting question arises whether or not regulations regarding lights on automobiles are applicable to situations where unusual atmospheric conditions exist. Obviously, the wording of the particular statute involved is of considerable significance in the determination of this question. The courts although not uniform in their outlook have been inclined in this connection, not to be arbitrary and dogmatic but to apply a "rule of reason." A statute requiring lights on automobiles "capable of clearly lighting the highway at least 200 feet ahead" was held to require such lighting only under ordinary conditions, and not on a dark and misty morning[20] or on a foggy and dark night.[21] Some statutes specifically limit their application to "normal atmospheric conditions," and when this is true, it is obvious that such statutes are not in force except under normal conditions.[1] Accordingly, a statute requiring automobiles to carry headlights of certain power showing lights visible "under normal atmospheric conditions" at least 500 feet in the direction toward which the car is facing, which lamp shall produce sufficient light to reveal objects 150 feet ahead, etc., has been construed as requiring sufficient light to reveal objects 150 feet ahead only under normal conditions.[2] But a provision that head lamps should be so constructed, arranged, and adjusted that, except as otherwise provided, they would, "under normal atmospheric conditions" and on a level road, produce a driving light sufficient to render clearly discernible a person 200 feet ahead, but would not project a glaring or dazzling light to persons in front, was construed as merely defining the head lamps necessary under such conditions, and as in no way relieving a driver from his duty to drive carefully where the atmospheric conditions demand greater care, and particularly when he is bound to know that under such conditions his lamps may not light up the roadway for 200 feet.[3]

---

[14] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 820.

[15] O'Rourke v. Washington, 304 Pa. 78, 155 A. 100, 78 A.L.R. 811.

[16] Ibid.

[17] Re Hinkelman, 183 Cal. 392, 191 P. 682, 11 A.L.R. 1222.

[18] The danger from glaring lights is recognized, and this means of obviating the danger is taken. State v. Claiborne, 185 Iowa, 170, 170 N. W. 417, 3 A.L.R. 392.

[19] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 821.

[20] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 819.

[21] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 819.

A duty, however, imposed by a trailer statute was held to be absolute, regardless of weather conditions. Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 820.

[1] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 819.

§ 33. Requirements as to Location on Car.—The position of the lights on the car is sometimes specified. The words "on the front," as used in a statute requiring automobiles during certain hours to display at least two lighted lamps "on the front," which shall be visible at least 500 feet in the direction in which the machine is proceeding, do not necessarily mean the very foremost part of the vehicle, but mean such a point in front of the driver as will make the light visible in the direction in which the car is proceeding for as least 500 feet.[4]

§ 34. Requirements as to Location of Car.—The statutes, either by express terms or by construction, are limited in their application to automobiles on the streets and highways. The term "highway," however, is generally interpreted in its broad sense to include every common way for travel by person on foot or with vehicles rightfully used on highways.[5]

A statute requiring lights on an automobile traveling a public highway after dark has no application to a vehicle on a private way.[6]

§ 35. Applicability to Cars Not in Motion.—A legal problem frequently arises as to whether or not statutes requiring lights on automobiles are applicable to cars not in motion.[7] Obviously, the solution of this problem depends to a large extent upon the wording of the specific statute involved. These statutes usually provide for lights on motor vehicles "operated," "driven," or "run" on the highways. Although the courts of the various jurisdictions are not entirely in accord, it is fairly well established that provisions regarding lights are applicable to automobiles not in motion.[8] This is particularly true of recent enactments.[9] An automobile standing on the street after dark with its engine at rest is within the purview of a statute prohibiting the operation of automobiles on the streets, after dark, without lights.[10] Such a car does not cease to be "driven," within the meaning of a statute providing that "every automobile or motor vehicle, when driven on any public road" between certain hours, should have "at least one lighted lamp, showing white to the front and red to the rear.[11] A truck parked across a road for the purpose of unloading is "in operation," within the meaning of a statute as to lights.[12] Stalled cars [13] or cars stopped for repairs [14] are also deemed to be in operation, and, accordingly, are required to have their rear lights burning. A disabled truck is being both "operated" and "driven" when it is temporarily parked in the highway, and it must have its tail light burning.[15]

---

[2] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 819.

A provision under which it was charged that headlights must be so constructed, arranged, and adjusted that they would under normal atmospheric conditions produce ample driving light for the use of the operator, but would not project a glaring or dazzling light to persons approaching, must be read in connection with other sections under which the "ample" light referred to was limited in certain ways other than what was suggested by that section alone. Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 820.

[3] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 819, 820.

[4] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1229, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[5] Weirich v. State, 140 Wis. 98, 121 N. W. 652, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 17 Ann. Cas. 802.

[6] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1229, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[7] For a holding as to the applicability of such statutes to a car in motion but not under its own power, see § 136.

[8] Com. v. Henry, 229 Mass. 19, 118 N. E. 224, L.R.A.1918B, 827; Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397; Jaquith v. Worden, 73 Wash. 349, 132 P. 33, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.

Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1227, s. 78 A.L.R. 816.

[9] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 816.

The reasons for holding such statutes applicable to stationary cars are obvious. An unlighted stationary automobile may be fully as great a menace to the safety of travelers as if in motion without lights. Then too, the word "operate" is deemed not limited to a state of motion produced by the mechanism of the car, but to include at least ordinary stops upon the highway, such stops being regarded as fairly incidental to its operation.[16]

Automobiles temporarily standing, as well as those moving, are within a provision that the lights of all vehicles should be so arranged, adjusted, and operated as to avoid dangerous glare or dazzle.[17] On the other hand, provisions regarding automobile lights are, according to some authorities, not applicable to cars not in motion. Thus, a provision requiring a light on the rear of an automobile "while being driven on a highway" was held inapplicable to a "dead" car which had been standing for several hours.[18] And it has been held that an automobile left standing on the street with its engine stopped is not within the contemplation of an ordinance providing that motor vehicles "operated or driven" upon the street shall, during certain hours, display two lighted lamps on the front and one on the rear, and that the rays of the latter shall shine upon the number plate in such a manner as to render the numerals thereon visible for a stated distance "in the direction from which the motor vehicle is proceeding," and that the front light shall be visible for a stated distance "in the direction in which the motor vehicle is proceeding."[19]

---

[10] Com. v. Henry, 229 Mass. 19, 118 N. E. 224, L.R.A.1918B, 827.

[11] Jaquith v. Worden, 73 Wash. 349, 132 P. 33, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.

[12] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 816.

[13] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 816.

[14] Notwithstanding a provision that every vehicle should display certain lights "while running," a car parked temporarily because of engine trouble, without a required tail light, was held within another provision making it the duty of every person who "operates, drives, or has" a car on the highway during stated times to have lights thereon, visible at least 200 feet from the front and also 200 feet from the rear. The latter provision was held applicable to a car parked temporarily while an effort to repair the headlights was being made. Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 817.

A provision that every motor vehicle should carry lights in front and back was held to require a car temporarily parked for repairs to have its rear light on, when the person responsible for it was making such repairs. Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 817.

A statute providing that "an automobile or a motor vehicle operated during the period of forty-five minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise shall display at least two lighted lamps on the front and one on the rear," construed in connection with the context immediately following, specifying that the rays of the rear light should shine upon the rear-end number plate in such a manner as to render the numerals visible for a certain distance "in the direction from which such automobile or motor vehicle is proceeding," and that the light from the front lamps should be visible a certain distance "in the direction in which the automobile or motor vehicle is proceeding," was held to have reference to automobiles and motor vehicles which were moving, and not to be violated by one who left his automobile standing unlighted on a public street. Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1228, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[15] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 816.

[16] Com. v. Henry, 229 Mass. 19, 118 N. E. 224, L.R.A.1918B, 827.

Along these lines it has been said that "highways are not maintained for the purpose of providing places for storage of automobiles. . . . Automobile traffic, like other highway traffic, involves movement from place to place. The movement involved does not, however, demand uninterrupted motion. . . . All temporary stoppings attending ordinary use of a highway by an automobile passing from place to place are incidents of operation linked with motion by necessary relationship, and in general understanding are not discriminated from motion as disconnected, independent modes of highway use. . . . The warning is more necessary when the automobile is at rest than when it is in motion." Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 817.

[17] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 817, 818.

A car temporarily stopped, with its driver in it, is within a statute which requires all motor vehicles "operated or driven" on any highway to have a visible red light on the rear. Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 816.

[18] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 818.

§ 36. Applicability to Towed Cars.—A regulation that every motor vehicle, while in use on a public highway, shall exhibit lights visible within a reasonable distance in the direction toward which the vehicle is going, and also a red light visible in the reverse direction, does not apply to "dead" cars being towed through the streets by a "live" car bearing sufficient lights.[20]

3. SPEED

a. FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES

§ 37. Generally.[1]—At common law there was no precise limit to the speed at which one might travel on the public ways. The principles of the law of negligence governed.[2] The advent and development of the automobile have been accompanied by a flood of legislation relating to the speed at which motor vehicles may be operated. The statutes and ordinances of the various jurisdictions and municipalities naturally differ. However, certain general principles of law have been formulated which apply to the interpretation and validity of enactments pertaining to speed. Limitations upon the speed of automobiles operated on the public streets and highways are primarily intended for the protection of travelers thereon.[3]

§ 38. Regulation by States.—It is a well-established principle of law that statutes fixing reasonable limits upon the speed of automobiles are valid as police regulations.[4] It is a prerequisite to the validity both of statutory provisions and of ordinances regulating the speed of motor vehicles, that the regulations be reasonable.[5] A state may establish a uniform maximum reasonable rate of speed for all motor vehicles operated anywhere in the state,[6] or it may make special regulations for particular localities, such as a prohibition against driving faster than a "common traveling pace" in a designated locality.[7] A comprehensive law intended to meet the different conditions which arise in various parts of the state may be enacted providing a designated speed limit for motor vehicles on state highways and a lower speed limit within the corporate limits of any city or borough.[8] In general, the speed limit fixed by statute and city ordinances is a maximum limit which motor cars may not exceed in any case, and not a minimum speed at which they may run under all circumstances.[9]

---

[19] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1228, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[20] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1228, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

It is stated that the statute applied to cars only "while in use on a public highway," and that it was manifest that it was the intention of the legislature to limit its provisions to such cars only as were actually being used on the highway, that is, such as were being driven by their own power. Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1229, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[1] As to effect of violation of regulations as to speed upon right to recover for injuries, see infra, § 410.

[2] See §§ 259 et seq., for a discussion of injuries from speeding.

[3] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; Walker v. Faelber, 102 Kan. 646, 171 P. 605, L.R.A.1918D, 569. Annotation: 108 Am. St. Rep. 212.

[4] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 516; Dudley v. Northampton Street R. Co. 202 Mass. 443, 89 N. E. 25, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561; Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513; Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289; Roper v. Greenspon, 272 Mo. 288, 198 S. W. 1107, L.R.A.1918D, 126; Opocensky v. South Omaha, 101 Neb. 336, 163 N. W. 325, L.R.A.1917E, 1170; Schultz v. State, 89 Neb. 34, 130 N. W. 972, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 403, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 495; Kalich v. Knapp, 73 Or. 558, 142 P. 594, 145 P. 22, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1051.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502; L.R.A.1918D, 126; 108 Am. St. Rep. 212; 3 Ann. Cas. 495; 11 Ann. Cas. 728; 12 Ann. Cas. 291; 20 Ann. Cas. 516; Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1067.

[5] Annotation: L.R.A.1918D, 135.

A statute prohibiting the operation of a motor vehicle at a speed greater than is reasonable or proper, is a valid statute. State v. Schaeffer, 96 Ohio St. 215, 117 N. E. 220, L.R.A.1918B, 945, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1137.

A statute prohibiting travel in built-up localities at a greater rate than a mile in 6 minutes or elsewhere in a city at a greater rate than a mile in 4 minutes, or outside a city, town, or village at a greater rate than 20 miles an hour, is not void for unreasonableness. Schultz v. State, 89

§ 39. Regulation by Municipalities.—The general rules relating to the power of a municipality to regulate the operation of motor vehicles are discussed elsewhere.[10] Such rules obviously apply to ordinances pertaining to the speed of automobiles and within the limits there stated, the municipality may regulate speed.[11] Principles of law applicable in construing speed statutes and determining their validity are frequently likewise applicable to speed ordinances.[12] In the absence of express or implied prohibition by the legislature, a municipality may pass ordinances fixing within reasonable limits the speed at which motor vehicles may be operated within its boundaries,[13] and it is within the province of a city council to prescribe different rates of speed for automobiles in different portions of the city according to the width of the streets, their use, and the density of population.[14] Some early limitations fixed an extremely low speed.[15] The state may delegate certain powers with reference to speed to the highway commission and to municipalities and counties.[16]

The state may expressly leave to the municipalities the right of determining within certain limits the proper maximum speed of motor vehicles, but may prohibit the passage of an ordinance or regulation requiring automobiles to travel at a slower rate of speed than a designated number of miles per hour within the closely built-up portions of such city, or at a higher rate where the houses upon any highway are more than 100 feet apart. It may also be required by law that regulations locally adopted as to speed limits shall be

---

Neb. 34, 130 N. W. 972, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 403, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 495.

[6] State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 102 S. W. 483, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725.

[7] Annotation: 11 Ann. Cas. 728; Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1067.

[8] Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

[9] Annotation: L.R.A.1918D, 145.

[10] See §§ 19 et seq.

[11] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790; Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289; Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219.

[12] For this reason it is advisable to refer to § 38, supra, for a discussion of speed statutes.

[13] Annotation: 3 Ann. Cas. 496; 11 Ann. Cas. 728; Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1068.

[14] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; 3 Ann. Cas. 495.

Such an ordinance was not held invalid because another ordinance allowed street cars to be run at a much greater rate of speed. Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; 3 Ann. Cas. 495.

As to statutes, see supra, § 38.

[15] An early ordinance fixing the maximum speed at 7 miles an hour was held reasonable. Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 220.

In an early case the court upheld as reasonable city ordinances limiting the speed of automobiles to 6 miles an hour on city streets between crossings and to 4 miles an hour at crossings (Eichman v. Buchheit, 128 Wis. 385, 107 N. W. 325, 8 Ann. Cas. 435), and even a provision that all persons having the care of vehicles should drive at a moderate foot pace was upheld. (Annotation: 3 Ann. Cas. 495; 11 Ann. Cas. 728; Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1067.) See also Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548 (where this speed limit applied only to the built-up portions of the city).

[16] Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534.

Annotation: 87 A.L.R. 546.

effective only upon notice thereof being posted at the points where the streets affected thereby join with other streets or roads.[17]

§ 40. Exemption from Speed Regulation.—Statutes and ordinances frequently limit the speed at which vehicles may be driven along streets and highways. Provisions for such limitations ordinarily apply to all vehicles except those expressly exempted thereby,[18] although there is authority to the effect that even without an express exemption, such provisions are inapplicable to public officials and the apparatus under their control, such as fire or police apparatus, while on active duty.[19]

The operation and effect of exempting certain classes of vehicles from the application of speed limitations depends upon the provisions of the particular ordinance or statute, as well as upon the conditions which may justify violation of such regulations.[20] For example, the exigencies of a fire, police, or ambulance call may require the drivers of the particular vehicles to exceed speed limits. Such excessive speed will not, of course, constitute a violation of a regulation, provided the circumstances causing it excuse compliance therewith.[21] Some ordinances regulating the speed of motor vehicles specifically except police and fire department vehicles from their operation [22] or expressly provide that such apparatus is not limited as to speed while in discharge of duty [23] or when "proceeding to a fire" or "responding for emergency work in case of fire, accident, public disaster, or impending danger.[24] Moreover, it has been held that such exceptions apply where apparatus is responding to a fire call outside the city limits.[25]

---

[17] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219.

Provisions are found in many of the acts regulating the speed of automobiles for the erection of signs warning drivers of the speed allowed in the particular locality. See annotation: L.R.A.1918D, 142.

[18] Dowler v. Johnson, 225 N. Y. 39, 121 N. E. 487, 3 A.L.R. 146.

Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 462, s. 23 A.L.R. 418.

[19] Balthasar v. Pacific Electric R. Co. 187 Cal. 302, 202 P. 37, 19 A.L.R. 452.

Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 460, s. 23 A.L.R. 418.

The provisions of a statute requiring "all vehicles approaching an intersection," in turning to the left, to go beyond the center of the intersection, and the provision that "no person" should drive a motor vehicle on the highway in excess of a certain speed, were held not applicable to fire or police apparatus, although the language used was broad enough to include them, the court applying the fundamental rule that general language should not be construed to include the government or its agencies unless expressly included by name. Balthasar v. Pacific Electric R. Co. 187 Cal. 302, 202 P. 37, 19 A.L.R. 452.

A member of the United States Naval Reserve force, on duty as a despatch bearer, is not subject to state speed laws when traveling on a public highway under orders of his superior officer, in time of war, to proceed with all possible despatch in the performance of a duty assigned him. State v. Burton, 41 R. I. 303, 103 A. 962, L.R.A.1918F, 559.

[20] Dowler v. Johnson, 225 N. Y. 39, 121 N. E. 487, 3 A.L.R. 146.

The language of an exemption from a speed law in favor of vehicles operated under the direction of the police in the chase or apprehension of violators of the law, the fire department or fire patrol vehicles when traveling in response to fire alarms, and public or private ambulances when traveling in emergencies, should be so construed as to further the purposes and policy of the act. Vandell v. Sanders, 85 N. H. 143, 155 A. 193, 80 A.L.R. 550.

Giving ambulances the right of way on city streets does not authorize them to exceed the statutory speed limit. West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

As to defenses in criminal prosecutions for excessive speed, see infra, §§ 806 et seq.

[21] Dowler v. Johnson, 225 N. Y. 39, 121 N. E. 487, 3 A.L.R. 146; Opocensky v. South Omaha, 101 Neb. 336, 163 N. W. 325, L.R.A.1917E, 1170; West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

Merely sending an ambulance for a sick person does not create such an emergency as to justify it in exceeding the speed limits on the highway. West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

[22] Hubert v. Granzow, 131 Minn. 361, 155 N. W. 204, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 563.

Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 460, s. 23 A.L.R. 418.

[23] Opocensky v. South Omaha, 101 Neb. 336, 163 N. W. 325, L.R.A.1917E, 1170; Vandell v. Sanders, 85 N. H. 143, 155 A. 193, 80 A.L.R. 550.

Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 460, s. 23 A.L.R. 418.

A member of a fire department, riding in his own car to a fire, is within the exemption from speed laws conferred upon vehicles operated under the direction of the police in the chase or apprehension of violators of the law, fire department or fire patrol vehicles when traveling in response to fire alarms, and public or private ambulances when traveling in emergencies. Vandell v. Sanders, 85 N. H. 143, 155 A. 193, 80 A.L.R. 550.

b. INDEFINITENESS OF SPEED REGULATIONS AS AFFECTING VALIDITY

(1) IN GENERAL

§ 41. Generally.—It is a well-established principle of law that where an act of the legislature is so vague, indefinite, and uncertain that the courts are unable to determine, with any reasonable degree of certainty, what the legislature intended, or is so incomplete or so conflicting and inconsistent in its provisions that it cannot be executed, it will be declared to be inoperative and void.[26] Obviously this principle applies to enactments governing the speed of motor vehicles.[1] Some narrow and different questions of law, however, arise in applying this principle to specific regulations.

(2) CRIMINAL CASES

§ 42. Generally.—The principle that an act of the legislature may be declared inoperative and void for vagueness, indefiniteness, and uncertainty[2] obviously applies to automobile speed regulations in criminal cases. Naturally a diversity of situations may arise in the application of this principle. Thus, the indefiniteness asserted may exist as to locality,[3] or as to rate,[4] or as to some other provision of the particular statute involved. For example, an act, making it a crime to operate an automobile around a curve on a public road without having the car under control or without reducing its speed to a reasonable and proper rate is held void for uncertainty not only in respect of speed, but also in respect of "control."[5] A statute which provides that the driver of any motor vehicle shall drive or operate such vehicle in a careful manner with regard for the safety and convenience of pedestrians and all vehicles of traffic upon the highway has likewise been held invalid for indefiniteness and uncertainty, as has been an ordinance attempting to make it unlawful for any person to run or operate an automobile "in a careless and reckless manner," without undertaking to define in any way what constitutes such carelessness and recklessness.[6]

Frequently the validity of statutes and ordinances attacked for uncertainty is sustained. Thus, an ordinance prescribing different rates of speed in different localities of a municipality was held not invalid for uncertainty in that it made no provision for the erection of signs at the points where the areas of limited speed began.[7] And a provision that "upon approaching a bridge, dam, high embankment, sharp curve, descent, or crossing of intersecting highways and railroad crossings, the person operating a machine shall have it under control and operate it at a speed not greater than 6 miles per hour," attacked for indefiniteness and uncertainty, was also sustained.[8] A

---

[24] Dowler v. Johnson, 225 N. Y. 39, 121 N. E. 487, 3 A.L.R. 146.

[25] Hubert v. Granzow, 131 Minn. 361, 155 N. W. 204, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 563.

[26] See STATUTES [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 810].

[1] Annotation: 3 Ann. Cas. 495; 11 Ann. Cas. 728; Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1067.

[2] See § 41.

[3] See § 43.

[4] See § 44.

[5] State v. Lantz, 90 W. Va. 738, 111 S. E. 766, 26 A.L.R. 894.

[6] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 905, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

[7] Eichman v. Buchheit, 128 Wis. 385, 107 N. W. 325, 8 Ann. Cas. 435.

[8] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 903, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

The court said: "It is insisted, in behalf of the plaintiff in error, that the word 'descent' is so general and indefinite that a person operating a machine along a high-contention that a rule of the board of park commissioners which provided that no person should ride or drive at a rate of speed exceeding 8 miles an hour was too indefinite to support a criminal proceeding because of the use of the words "ride or drive" was denied on the ground that a person may be said to be driving an automobile if he is controlling the motive power.[9]

§ 43. Indefiniteness as to Locality.—The principle that an act of the legislature may be declared inoperative and void for vagueness, indefiniteness, and uncertainty[10] obviously applies to indefiniteness as to locality in automobile speed regulations in criminal cases. While the principle involved is clear cut and well established, the cases are not entirely consistent in applying it. A statute forbidding the driving of a motor vehicle at more than a specified speed upon a highway where the territory contiguous thereto "is closely built up" was held void for indefiniteness as to territory under a constitutional provision guaranteeing to every citizen the right to know the nature and character of an accusation against him.[11] But a statute forbidding the driving of automobiles in excess of a certain speed "in the business portion" of cities was held not so uncertain and indefinite as to render it void as a violation of the constitutional provision with reference to due process of law.[12]

§ 44. Indefiniteness as to Rate.—The principle that an act of the legislature may be declared inoperative and void for vagueness, indefiniteness, and uncertainty[13] obviously applies to indefiniteness as to rate in automobile speed regulations in criminal cases. It is generally held that statutes or ordinances providing that no person shall operate or drive any motor vehicle recklessly or at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the width, traffic, and use of the highways, and the general and usual rules of the road, or so as to endanger the property, life, or limb of any person, are not invalid on the ground that they are too vague, uncertain, and indefinite to sustain a criminal conviction.[14] And acts which, in addition to the foregoing way can never know whether he is approaching a 'descent' within the meaning of the act. Words used in a legislative enactment are to be given their ordinary signification, unless the context demands a different construction. The word 'descent,' as used in . . . this act, must be construed in the light of the declared purpose of the act. It is true, as insisted by counsel for the accused, that the word 'descent,' given its literal interpretation, may include any declivity in the highway, of however small a degree, and upon this premise it is argued that it would be unreasonable to hold that the general assembly intended to make penal the operation of an automobile at a greater rate of speed than 6 miles per hour when approaching such a slight declivity in the highway that it would not ordinarily be dangerous to persons or property to operate it at a greater rate of speed. The purpose of the act being to prevent danger to the life or limb of any person, and to insure the safety of any property which might be upon the highway, the word 'descent,' as used in that act, will not be given the literal interpretation above mentioned." Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 904, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

---

[9] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 905, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

[10] See § 41.

[11] Ex parte Slaughter, 92 Tex. Crim. Rep. 212, 243 S. W. 478, 26 A.L.R. 891.

[12] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 898, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

The court said: "The difficulty in determining in any case whether territory at a particular point is either wholly or partially built up with structures devoted to business does not seem to us to be either real or apparent. Whether it is so wholly or partially built up at a particular point is a question of fact. If a maximum speed within the corporate limits of a city was fixed by statute, it would be a question of fact whether the accused was within the limits. In either case, difficulty in ascertaining the fact would not be reason for saying the statute provision was uncertain or indefinite. It may be inconvenient for the driver of a motor car to diminish or increase speed accordingly as he enters and leaves a portion of the city wholly or partially built up with structures devoted to business, but this is not a good reason for saying that the requirement is unreasonable." Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 898, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

[13] See § 41.

[14] Schultz v. State, 89 Neb. 34, 130 N. W. 972, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 403, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 495; Schier v. State, 96 Ohio St. 245, 117 N. E. 229; State v. Schaeffer, 96 Ohio St. 215, 117 N. E. 220, L.R.A.1918B, 945, Ann.

provision, contain provisions fixing rates of speed for certain localities and making an excess of that speed prima facie evidence of negligence or specifying a speed that shall be prima facie unlawful are likewise sustained.[15] But a statute making it a crime to operate an automobile around a curve on a public road, without having the same under control or without reducing the speed thereof to a reasonable and proper rate is held so indefinite and uncertain as to be void, being violative of sections of the Constitution forbidding anyone to be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law and providing that in all criminal trials the accused shall be fully and plainly informed of the character and cause of the accusation against him.[16] Obviously, a statute which provides that it shall be unlawful to drive at a rate of speed in excess of a designated number of miles per hour is not invalid for indefiniteness.[17]

(3) Civil Cases

§ 45. Generally.—The principle that an act of the legislature may be declared inoperative and void for vagueness, indefiniteness, and uncertainty[18] applies to automobile speed regulations in civil, as well as in criminal, cases.[19] In civil cases a statute or ordinance providing that it shall be unlawful to operate or run any motor vehicle upon the public highways recklessly or at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the width, traffic, and use of the highway, or so as to endanger property or the life or limb of any person, has been held merely to declare the common law, and that it is not void for unreasonableness or uncertainty.[20]

Cas. 1918E, 1137; Maxon v. State, 177 Wis. 379, 187 N. W. 753, 21 A.L.R. 1484.

Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 898, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

[15] Gallaher v. State, 193 Ind. 629, 141 N. E. 347, 29 A.L.R. 1059.

Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 901, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

A statute was held sufficiently definite which provided that no person should drive a motor vehicle at a speed greater than was reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, and providing that driving in the closely built-up portions of a city in excess of 25 miles an hour should be prima facie evidence that the vehicle was being run at a speed greater than was reasonable and proper. Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 901, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

Where a statute provided that no person should drive a motor vehicle upon any public highway at a speed greater than was reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, or so as to endanger the life or limb or injure the property of any person, and further specified what speeds in certain localities should be prima facie evidence of a violation of the act, it was held valid in a prosecution for driving over 15 miles an hour in the closely built-up residence district of a city, the speed fixed by the act, the accused having admitted that he was driving 25 miles an hour. Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 901, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

A statute was held not invalid on the ground of indefiniteness and uncertainty which provided that no person should operate a motor vehicle upon the public highway at a speed greater than was reasonable and prudent, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, or so as to endanger the life or limb or injure the property of any person, and further providing that if the rate of speed of a motor vehicle through the residence portion of a city, town, or village exceeded 15 miles an hour, such rate should be prima facie evidence that it was being run at a speed greater than was reasonable and prudent, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, or so as to endanger the life or limb or injure the property of any person. Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 902, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

[16] State v. Lantz, 90 W. Va. 738, 111 S. E. 766, 26 A.L.R. 894.

The provision of the Georgia statute making it penal to operate an automobile at a rate of speed greater than was reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highways, or so as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property was held invalid on the ground that it was too uncertain and indefinite in its terms to be capable of enforcement in a criminal action. Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 902, 903, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

[17] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 903, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

[18] See §§ 41 et seq.

[19] For application in criminal cases, see §§ 807, 808.

[20] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 905, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

Where a like statute was involved, it was held unnecessary to determine whether the statute was unconstitutional as being so vague and indefinite that it was not

4. Law of the Road

§ 46. Generally.—The "law of the road," as it stands today, is found in statutory enactments, in regulations and ordinances prescribed by various boards and commissions, and in judicial decisions extending through a wide field of facts and circumstances.[1] It is a general rule that the common-law duty of due care[2] always rests on drivers of automobiles, irrespective of statutes or ordinances, and that the requirements of such enactments are cumulative, and do not destroy this common-law duty.

§ 47. Regulations Prohibiting Passing at Street Intersections.—Numerous traffic regulations exist prohibiting motor vehicles from falling out of line and passing vehicles ahead of them at a street intersection. Such regulations must be given a reasonable construction.[3] One who drives out of a single file of cars in motion just before entering a street intersection, and proceeds abreast of it, violates a traffic ordinance forbidding attempts to pass vehicles "at a street intersection."[4] A statute, however, which provides that no vehicle shall pass another from the rear "on a curve, where the view ahead is in any wise obstructed or while the vehicle ahead is crossing an intersecting highway," does not apply so as to prohibit an automobile driver who has been following a street car from crossing an intersecting street when the street car has made a turn to the left therein and has proceeded far enough to enable him to do so. Consequently, negligence cannot be founded on his act in susceptible of enforcement, the court holding that it was, at least, sufficient as a remedial statute, imposing a civil duty, so as to render its violation negligence per se. Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 905, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

---

It has been held that while so much of an act regulating the use of automobiles on the highway and prohibiting their operation at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of such highway, or so as to endanger the life or limb of any person, is too uncertain and indefinite in its terms to be capable of enforcement, yet the measure of care laid down in the act is not too indefinite to furnish a rule of civil conduct. Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 905, s. 29 A.L.R. 1066.

In Eichman v. Buchheit, 128 Wis. 385, 107 N. W. 325, 8 Ann. Cas. 435, an action to recover for personal injuries, an ordinance providing that no automobile should be driven faster than 6 miles an hour in a city within a radius of half a mile of a certain bridge, and should slow down to 4 miles an hour "at crossings," was held not invalid on the ground that it was uncertain because there was nothing to show whether the word "crossing" meant highway crossing or railroad crossing, the court stating that the word plainly referred to street crossings, where the danger resulting from high speed is the greatest. It was further held that an ordinance providing that no automobile should be driven faster than a stated speed within a radius of half a mile of a named bridge was not uncertain because no provision was made for establishing or marking in any way the limits of the district so that a driver might know when he reached a half-mile radius, the court stating that they did not deem it necessary for the municipality to erect signs at the city limits or elsewhere to inform the traveler at what point the area of limited speed began.

[1] For discussion of injuries from operation and law of road, see §§ 280 et seq.

For general discussion of law of the road, see Highways, Streets and Sidewalks [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 270, §§ 222 et seq.].

[2] See §§ 165 et seq.

[3] Crosby v. Canino, 89 Colo. 434, 3 P. (2d) 792, 78 A.L.R. 1202.

Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 1206.

[4] Crosby v. Canino, 89 Colo. 434, 3 P. (2d) 792, 78 A.L.R. 1202. This case was an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff by reason of being struck by the defendant's truck while proceeding to the far side of the street after alighting from a street car at a street intersection. The traffic regulation involved was a local rule providing that a "driver of any vehicle must not attempt to pass another vehicle or street car at a street intersection." It appeared that when the plaintiff alighted from the car, the defendant's truck was in a line of vehicles which were waiting near the curb to proceed in the same direction as the street car, that the defendant's truck was then at the threshold of, but not in, the street intersection, and that the defendant's driver drove out of the line and passed the vehicle ahead when the street car moved on. The court overruled the defendant's contention that the traffic regulation was inapplicable because the defendant's truck had not reached the intersection when it passed the vehicle ahead of it, and, calling attention to the fact that the regulation used the word "at," not "in," said that the manifest intent and purpose of the rule was to forbid the very thing that was done.

doing so by the owner of a motor vehicle with which his automobile collided in the street intersection.[5] And in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision at a street intersection between the plaintiff's automobile which she was driving and a truck owned by the defendant, a statute prohibiting the passing of a vehicle from the rear when crossing an intersecting highway was held inapplicable where the traffic in which the plaintiff's automobile was being operated had been moving in a double line at the time of the collision and the operator of the plaintiff's automobile unintentionally moved her car in front of a truck along the side of which she had been driving because of the sudden stopping of the truck without warning and collided with the defendant's truck which came out of the intersecting street at a high rate of speed and without warning.[6]

5. Exclusion from Particular Highways and Districts

a. General Principles

§ 48. Generally.—Since no one has an absolute right to use the public streets as he chooses, without regard to the safety of others,[7] the state, acting under its police power, may establish reasonable regulations for the safety of persons using the highways[8] and, under limited circumstances, even may altogether exclude dangerous vehicles, such as automobiles, from the highways of certain districts when in its judgment the public safety so requires.[9] The power to exclude motor vehicles from certain districts and streets is one which can be specifically delegated to the local municipal authorities,[10] but a municipal corporation cannot, in the absence of statutory authority, pass an ordinance excluding automobiles from the use of its public highways.[11] Where the legislature has provided that automobiles shall not be driven on public streets and highways unless licensed, permission is impliedly granted to all persons having a license to use and operate motor vehicles upon all public thoroughfares, subject only to the conditions of such act; and therefore in some jurisdictions the courts hold that the authority given by charter to a municipality to take all needful means for securing the safety of persons and property within the commonwealth is not sufficient to sustain an ordinance excluding licensed automobiles from designated portions of narrow, crooked highways upon which the driving of automobiles or other motor vehicles may be dangerous to pedestrians and to all persons in vehicles, whether driven by motor or drawn by horses.[12] The courts have no general power to review legislative action in respect of matters affecting the general welfare, such as laws regulating automobiles and excluding them from particular highways and districts, but they may, under certain conditions, declare unconstitutional a statute which, while purporting to protect the safety of the public, has no real or substantial relation to this object or is plainly an invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law.[13]

---

[5] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 1208.

[6] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 1208.

[7] Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513.

[8] State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 102 S. W. 483, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725.

Annotation: 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502; 120 Am. St. Rep. 678; 11 Ann. Cas. 728.

See Highways, Streets and Sidewalks [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 1].

[9] State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513; People v. Rosenheimer, 209 N. Y. 115, 102 N. E. 530, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 977, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 161.

Annotation: 20 Ann. Cas. 516; 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 502.

In an early case it was held that in view of the danger to traffic involved in the use of automobiles on country roads, especially in the nighttime, a county ordinance prohibiting the running of automobiles on country roads between sunset and sunrise might be not unreasonable under certain conditions. Re Berry, 147 Cal. 523, 82 P. 44, 109 Am. St. Rep. 160. Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 222; 5 Ann. Cas. 794; 15 Ann. Cas. 1170.

[10] Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513; Re Rogers, 7 East. L. R. (Pr. Edw. Isl.) 212, 15 Ann. Cas. 1167.

Annotation: 15 Ann. Cas. 1169.

[11] Annotation: 20 Ann. Cas. 516.

In State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512, it appeared to be doubted whether a municipality, in the absence of express statutory authority, could pass ordinances excluding automobiles from particular streets or districts, acting merely under the general law authorizing municipalities to make reasonable regulations for the safety and welfare of the public.

§ 49. One-way Streets.—It is a well-established rule of law that a municipal corporation having by statute exclusive control over its streets may confine traffic by motor vehicles on narrow streets to one direction.[14] An ordinance to this effect does not violate the constitutional provision against special and discriminatory legislation, even though it fails to regulate the operation of all other vehicles using the same street.[15]

§ 50. Limitations upon Use of Streets by Motor Vehicles for Hire.—Under the well-settled rule that a municipality having the power to regulate the use of its streets may pass any reasonable ordinance within its delegated powers governing automobile traffic on the streets, it has been generally held that a municipality has the right to pass an ordinance prohibiting or limiting the use of certain streets by motor vehicles operated for hire.[16] Thus, an ordinance prohibiting jitneys from using public streets, unless they paid additional license tax, was held reasonable and valid,[17] as was an ordinance prohibiting jitney busses from operating within certain designated zones.[18] Likewise, where a motorbus line running between two cities was prohibited, by virtue of an ordinance in one of the cities, from using certain streets when running through that city, it was held that the ordinance was reasonable because it tended to relieve the congested traffic conditions of the city.[19] It has, however, been held that an ordinance forbidding duly licensed cab drivers to operate their vehicles on the principal streets of the city between certain points, except to discharge and take up passengers on prior calls, in which case the vehicle must enter and leave the street at the point nearest the place where the passenger is to be taken or discharged, is an unconstitutional interference with the rights of such drivers.[20]

---

[12] Annotation: 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502.

[13] State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512.

Annotation: 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502; 20 Ann. Cas. 516.

[14] Com. v. Nolan, 189 Ky. 34, 224 S. W. 506, 11 A.L.R. 202.

[15] Ibid.

[16] Desser v. Wichita, 96 Kan. 820, 153 P. 1194, L.R.A.1916D, 246; Hadfield v. Lundin, 98 Wash. 657, 168 P. 516, L.R.A.1918B, 909, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 942; Ex parte Dickey, 76 W. Va. 576, 85 S. E. 781, L.R.A.1915F, 840.

Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 752.

[17] Desser v. Wichita, 96 Kan. 820, 153 P. 1194, L.R.A.1916D, 246, wherein the court said: "Whatever natural right a citizen may have to traverse the streets of his city with a motor vehicle for the conveyance of his family or his friends, no inherent right exists to devote his vehicle to the public use of carrying passengers for hire, and to appropriate to himself the use of all the streets for purposes of profit. Beyond question, the city could vacate one or more of the streets over which he might desire to operate. It can not only require him to pay a license tax, but it may also regulate the manner of his carrying on his enterprise. Why may it not classify motor vehicles by themselves, and refuse to permit them to crowd congested portions of the business streets where patrons of another class of vehicles—street cars—must alight and take passage? Suppose, indeed, a company or corporation owning motor vehicles had the facilities and the desire to occupy all the streets to the utter destruction of the street car business. Would the city have nothing to say? Is the municipality a mere automaton, helpless in the presence of crowding and conflicting enterprises and scrambles for business which involve the comfort, the convenience, and the safety of the traveling public? Not so."

[18] Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 753.

In Ex parte Dickey, 76 W. Va. 576, 85 S. E. 781, L.R.A.1915F, 840, wherein it appeared that a city passed an ordinance regulating the use of jitneys on the streets, the court held the ordinance to be valid, saying: "The right of a citizen to travel upon the highway and transport his property thereon, in the ordinary course of life and business, differs radically and obviously from that of one who makes the highway his place of business and uses it for private gain, in the running of a stagecoach or omnibus. The former is the usual and ordinary right of a citizen, a common right, a right common to all, while the latter is special, unusual, and extraordinary. As to the former, the extent of legislative power is that of regulation; but, as to the latter, its power is broader,—the right may be wholly denied, or it may be permitted to some and denied to others, because of its extraordinary nature. This distinction, elementary and fundamental in character, is recognized by all the authorities."

b. Limitations upon Weight of Vehicles or Loads Thereon

§ 51. Weight of Vehicle or Load.—It has generally been held that a state, or a municipality acting under a proper delegation of authority, may reasonably limit the weight of a vehicle or the load thereon to be transported on a highway or street.[1] Power to determine matters connected with weight may be delegated to municipalities, counties, and highway departments.[2] An act authorizing a municipality to adopt by-laws "for the regulation of all vehicles used therein, by establishing the rates of fare, routes, and places of standing, and in any other respect," has been held to give authority for the adoption of an ordinance restricting loads of a certain weight to a designated portion of the street.[3]

§ 52. Weight as Affected by Width of Tires.—It has been held in a number of instances that it is within the power of the state or of a municipality reasonably to prescribe that loads above a specified weight shall not be transported on the highway except in vehicles having tires of a certain width.[4] Thus, it has been held that an act which gives power to municipal corporations to regulate the use of streets authorizes the enactment of an ordinance which prohibits the driving on the streets of a city of any loaded vehicle which, with its load, weighs 3,500 pounds or upward, unless the fellies and tires on the wheels thereof are at least 3 inches in width.[5]

[19] Annotation. 32 A.L.R. 753.

[20] Columbia v. Alexander, 125 S. C. 530, 119 S. E. 241, 32 A.L.R. 746.
Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 755.

[1] State ex rel. Bonsteel v. Allen, 83 Fla. 214, 91 So. 104, 26 A.L.R. 735; Brown v. Nichols, 93 Kan. 737, 145 P. 561, L.R.A. 1915D, 327; State v. Boardman, 93 Me. 73, 44 A. 118, 46 L.R.A. 750.
Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 747, s. 72 A.L.R. 1004.

In State ex rel. Bonsteel v. Allen, 83 Fla. 214, 91 So. 104, 26 A.L.R. 735, the court upheld a statute fixing the maximum weight which might be carried by a motor vehicle operated on the highways of the state. The statute referred to limited the load, including weight of car, to 16,000 pounds in case of motor vehicles with pneumatic tires, and 8,000 pounds if the tires were solid, and also limited the weight to be carried in trailers according to the number of wheels and the nature of the tires.

The validity of an ordinance reading as follows was upheld: "It shall be unlawful for any person to drive . . . upon . . . any public street . . . within the corporate limits of the city of Everett, any vehicle or object, which, with or without its load, shall be of such weight . . . as to destroy or permanently injure such street . . . or the surface, foundation, or other part thereof. . . ." It was said: "We hold that any city may lawfully enact and enforce ordinances which prohibit any vehicle which, with or without its load, because of the weight, destroys or permanently injures the streets." Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 749, s. 72 A.L.R. 1004.

As to liability for injury to the highway from excessive weight, see Highways, Streets and Sidewalks.

[2] Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 76 L. ed. 1167, 52 S. Ct. 581; Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534; State v. Wetzel, 208 Wis. 603, 243 N. W. 768, 86 A.L.R. 274.
Annotation: 87 A.L.R. 546.

[3] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 748, s. 72 A.L.R. 1004.

[4] Brown v. Nichols, 93 Kan. 737, 145 P. 561, L.R.A.1915D, 327.
Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 749, s. 72 A.L.R. 1004.

[5] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 749, s. 72 A.L.R. 1004.

In one case the defendant was convicted of violating a resolution of the board of supervisors, fixing the maximum load of lumber that might be hauled over the highways on tires of a certain width. The limitation on the power of the board to legislate in matters relating to the roads was that laws fixing the width of tires should not be enacted until the matter

§ 53. Reasonableness and Definiteness of Enactments.—Limitations upon the weight of vehicles or loads thereon are subject to the general requirement of reasonableness and definiteness.[6] The prohibition of the use of motor vehicles carrying more than a certain weight on highways outside municipalities is generally held not unreasonable in consideration of the character of the existing highways.[7] An enactment making it unlawful to operate a motor vehicle over a wet road "at any time at which the said roads are wet to a sufficient extent to be materially damaged by such hauling or use" was deemed not invalid because of vagueness and uncertainty.[8] A resolution requiring the hauling of wood and lumber in loads above a certain weight to be done on wide tires was deemed reasonable and necessary.[9] But an ordinance purporting to prohibit the driving of "any engine or heavy machinery upon the paved streets" of a city was held unreasonable and void, inasmuch as it operated as a prohibition of a lawful use of the public streets.[10]

c. Regulations as to Dimensions or Combinations of Motor Vehicles

§ 54. Generally.—Subject to constitutional limitations, the state has absolute control of its public streets and highways, including those of its municipal and quasi municipal corporations.[11] It is within the power of the states to enact statutes regulating the dimensions of motor vehicles and combinations of such vehicles, so long as such regulations are reasonable, make no unjust discriminations, and impose no undue burdens on interstate commerce.[12] In exercising its authority over its highways, a state is not limited to the raising of revenue for maintenance and reconstruction or to regulations as to the should be ratified at an election by a majority of qualified voters. The resolution in question was held to have been passed in compliance with this requirement. The matter of regulating the amount of loads to be carried over the public roads was considered as properly within the discretion of the authorities charged with the care of the highways. Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 750, s. 72 A.L.R. 1004.

[6] In State v. Boardman, 93 Me. 73, 44 A. 118, 46 L.R.A. 750, the defendant attacked the validity of an ordinance providing as follows: "All of that portion of Union street in Rockport, situated northerly and westerly and within fifteen (15) feet of the northerly and westerly rail of the electric railroad track, is hereby set apart and designated as the portion of said street over and upon which limestone may be transported on wheels, also all other material on wheels, where the load, exclusive of cart, wagon, or vehicle, exceeds 2,500 pounds in weight; and all persons are prohibited from using any other portion of said street for the purposes aforesaid." The court said: "By its terms all persons passing over the street named, with any vehicle on which there were loads exceeding 2,500 pounds in weight, are restricted to the use of 15 feet of the width of the street next to the electric railroad track. That this would be a reasonable, and in many cases a most salutary, regulation, we have no doubt; but such a by-law might be unreasonable, if that portion of the way to which such vehicles were restricted was allowed to become in such a condition as to be impassable, that is, if the only portion of the way which the by-law allowed to be used for heavily loaded vehicles could not be at all used, because it had been allowed to become in such a condition of want of repair as to be impassable, then that portion of the public who had occasion to use the way for this purpose would be absolutely deprived of their right to use the way for the purpose of travel. For such a by-law, then, to be reasonable and valid, with reference to such a way and in such a locality as in this case, that portion of the street which may be used by heavily loaded vehicles must be reasonably suitable for the purpose; and the by-law will be valid or invalid, depending upon whether that portion of the way to which such vehicles are restricted is or is not reasonably suitable for the purpose." It was held, further, that evidence offered to show that the portion of the street next to the railroad track was impassable should have been admitted, since, if true, the by-law became unreasonable.

[7] State ex rel. Bonsteel v. Allen, 83 Fla. 214, 91 So. 104, 26 A.L.R. 735.

[8] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 752, 753, s. 72 A.L.R. 1004.

[9] Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 754, s. 72 A.L.R. 1004.

[10] Brown v. Nichols, 93 Kan. 737, 145 P. 561, L.R.A.1915D, 327.

[11] See Highways, Streets and Sidewalks [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 163, § 143].

[12] Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 76 L. ed. 1167, 52 S. Ct. 581; Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534; State v. Wetzel, 208 Wis. 603, 243 N. W. 768, 86 A.L.R. 274.

Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 282.

manner in which vehicles shall be operated, but may prevent the wear and hazards due to excessive size of vehicles and weight of load.[13] The legislature, in classifying motor vehicles for the purpose of restricting the size of vehicles and weight of load permissible on highways, is entitled to consider frequency and character of use and to adapt its regulations to the classes of operations which, by reason of their extensive as well as constant use of the highways, brought about the conditions making such regulations necessary.[14] And a classification in a statute imposing restrictions on the size of vehicles and weight of load permissible on the highways is not invalid because it favors transportation by railroads as against transportation by motor trucks, since the state has the right to foster a fair distribution of traffic to the end that all necessary facilities shall be maintained and that the public shall not be inconvenienced by inordinate uses of its highways for purposes of gain.[15] Regulations as to size or dimensions are subjects within the broad range of legislative discretion, and to make scientific precision a criterion of constitutional power would be to subject the state to an intolerable supervision.[16]

§ 55. Regulations as to Length or Width.—Within certain limitations, a state may make regulations as to length and width of motor vehicles using the highways.[17] Thus, a statute which, after limiting the overall length of combinations of vehicles to 60 feet, provides that the overall length of a vehicle shall not exceed 33 feet and that the overall length of a semitrailer shall be measured from the rear thereof to the rear of the vehicle to which it is attached is not unconstitutional on the ground that it imposes an unreasonable burden upon interstate commerce or that it violates the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution in that it takes property without due process and denies equal protection of the law.[18] And a statute fixing a maximum length of a motor truck alone of 26½ feet, and a semitrailer truck not exceeding 30 feet, and a width of 96 inches, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it is arbitrary or a violation of the due process clause, or the equal protection clause, or that it impairs the obligation of contract with patrons for the carriage of freight; this result is reached although the statute postpones the application of a provision as to maximum weight until a stated time, but does not postpone the provision as to length and width.[19]

---

[13] Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 76 L. ed. 1167, 52 S. Ct. 581.

[14] Ibid.

[15] Ibid.

[16] Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 76 L. ed. 1167, 52 S. Ct. 581; Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534.

[17] Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 76 L. ed. 1167, 52 S. Ct. 581.

Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 282.

A statute limiting the size of vehicles and weight of loads permissible upon public highways does not deny the equal protection of the laws because it provides that the limitation as to size shall not apply to "implements of husbandry, including machinery used solely for the purpose of drilling water wells and highway building and maintenance machinery temporarily propelled or moved upon the public highways," or because it fixes the same limit of length for individual motor vehicles and for a combination of such vehicles, or because it permits an additional length of vehicle and greater load than that generally prescribed when the vehicle is operated between points of origin or destination and common carrier receiving or unloading points, or because passenger busses are not subject to the net-load limit prescribed for motor vehicles transporting freight. Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 76 L. ed. 1167, 52 S. Ct. 581.

[18] State v. Wetzel, 208 Wis. 603, 243 N. W. 768, 86 A.L.R. 274.

The statute was not held unconstitutional because it excluded from the restrictions as to length implements of husbandry temporarily propelled or moved upon the highway, or because of an exemption providing that whenever it was necessary to transport a single article which could not reasonably be divided, and which exceeded the maximum permissible weight or dimensions or both, it should be done only after the issuance of a special permit for a single trip, designating the load to be transported pursuant to authority granted under the statute, or because of another provision authorizing, under special conditions, the operation of trains of vehicles. Ibid.

The statute was held not unreasonable and invalid because it exempted public service corporations engaged in the transportation of poles and other similar materials, the court holding that there was ample room for the classification exempting such corporations from the operation of the length limitation. Ibid.

§ 56. Regulations as to Height.—Within certain limitations, a state may make reasonable regulations as to the height of motor vehicles using the highways. A statute fixing a maximum height of 11½ feet for motor trucks is not unconstitutional on the ground that it is arbitrary or a violation of the due process clause or the equal protection clause, or that it impairs the obligation of contracts.[20] But an ordinance prohibiting the operation of double-decked auto busses not equipped with pneumatic tires on the city streets has been held void as unreasonable, on the ground that the number of decks on a motorbus does not present a substantial basis for classification or regulation to conserve the highways, that the weight, and not the height, of the vehicle bears relationship to the evil designed to be prevented for the preservation and proper maintenance of the street.[1]

§ 57. Delegation of Legislative Authority.—Authority is not unconstitutionally delegated to a board or commission by giving it power to waive certain regulations as to dimensions or weight. The legislature may delegate to the state highway commission and to municipal officers power to authorize the operation, under special permit from such commission and officers, of trains of vehicles not complying with the statute,[2] at least for a limited time.[3]

6. Parking

§ 58. Generally.—In general, the right of a municipality to enact reasonable parking regulations is well established.[4] It may prohibit parking in certain congested blocks,[5] it may limit the time of parking,[5a] parking for more

---

[19] Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534.

[20] Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534.

[1] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 284.

[2] State v. Wetzel, 208 Wis. 603, 243 N. W. 768, 86 A.L.R. 274.

In Ashland Transfer Co. v. State Tax Commission, 247 Ky. 144, 56 S. W. (2d) 691, 87 A.L.R. 534, a statute fixing the length, width, and height of motor trucks was held not unconstitutional on the ground of delegation of legislative power because it authorized the highway commission to prescribe rules and regulations for the issuance of permits for the operation of trucks not complying with the requirements of the statute for special purposes or to meet unusual conditions.

[3] Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 76 L. ed. 1167, 52 S. Ct. 581.

[4] Pugh v. Des Moines (Pugh v. Crawford) 176 Iowa, 593, 156 N. W. 892, L.R.A.1917F, 345.

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 229.

Authority to enact an automobile parking ordinance may be implied from a statute granting authority "to prevent the encumbering of streets, sidewalks, crosswalks, and alleys with carriages, carts, wagons, sleighs, sleds, buggies, railroad cars, engines, boxes, lumber, firewood, or other substances or materials," and to ordain and establish ordinances and by-laws for the government and good order of the village. Wonewoc v. Taubert, 203 Wis. 73, 233 N. W. 755, 72 A.L.R. 224.

An individual has no right to permit his automobile to stand in a public highway for an unreasonable time. Pugh v. Des Moines (Pugh v. Crawford) 176 Iowa, 593, 156 N. W. 892, L.R.A.1917F, 345.

The word "Park" in an ordinance providing that drivers might park their vehicles in such streets and places as were designated, and that the city council might from time to time appoint openings through such parking areas to permit cross traffic and forbidding parking in any openings so fixed, connoted the withdrawing the vehicle from the stream of "traffic," and such ordinance is invalid where the city council was only given power to make by-laws for the purpose of "regulating traffic and processions." Schilling v. Melbourne [1928] Vict. L. R. 302, 16 B. R. C. 45.

[5] Pugh v. Des Moines (Pugh v. Crawford) 176 Iowa, 593, 156 N. W. 892, L.R.A.1917F, 345.

Annotation: L.R.A.1917F, 352; 16 B. R. C. 52.

A municipal corporation is not deprived of authority to prohibit the parking of automobiles on its congested streets by the fact that the legislature has made it unlawful to permit them to stand near corthan an hour in other blocks,[6] and parking during certain specified hours in certain districts.[7] The municipality may require parking crosswise of the center of the street[8] and parking on certain streets at a 45-degree angle, and it may forbid automobiles for hire from parking on these streets.[9] Moreover, it may make it unlawful to park vehicles operated for hire upon the public square in a municipality[10] and may authorize a commissioner of public safety to prohibit parking in streets in times of emergency.[11]

There are certain limits to the power to regulate parking. The tests of reasonableness and certainty which are applicable to legislation generally apply to parking regulations.[12] The rules governing the delegation of authority by legislative bodies apply to delegation by the legislative body of the municipality of power over parking regulations.[13] The due process of law guaranty has also been invoked against certain parking regulations.[14]

The city council cannot charge for the use of prescribed parking areas in the streets.[14a]

§ 59. Right of Abutting Owner to Control Cab Stands or Parking in Street.[15]—It is a well-established rule of law that an abutting property owner has the right to park his own vehicle in the street in front of his premises, for the accommodation of himself, his customers, or his guests, in a reasonners, hydrants, or the entrance to theaters, or with machinery running, and has forbidden municipalities to exclude them from the free use of highways. Pugh v. Des Moines (Pugh v. Crawford) 176 Iowa, 593, 156 N. W. 892, L.R.A.1917F, 345.

---

Statutory authority to control the streets, keep them free from nuisance, and regulate the driving of vehicles thereon empowers a municipal corporation, where the statute declares the obstruction of streets to be a nuisance, to forbid the parking of automobiles on streets in congested districts. Pugh v. Des Moines (Pugh v. Crawford) 176 Iowa, 593, 156 N. W. 892, L.R.A.1917F, 345.

[5a] Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 52.

[6] Annotation: L.R.A.1917F, 352.

[7] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 230.

[8] Wonewoc v. Taubert, 203 Wis. 73, 233 N. W. 755, 72 A.L.R. 224.

[9] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 230.

[10] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 231.

[11] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 231.

[12] The objection that it was unreasonable and oppressive prevailed against an ordinance which purported to make it unlawful for any automobile for hire to remain stationary or parked in any street or alley except for a reasonably sufficient time to permit passengers to embark or disembark, besides the further objection that by being, in effect, a prohibition of parking, it violated a statute which authorized municipalities simply to regulate parking. Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 231.

An ordinance requiring parking of automobiles on a certain street to be crosswise of the center of the street is not void for unreasonableness, for uncertainty because it does not define parking, or for discrimination in that it does not apply to all vehicles. Wonewoc v. Taubert, 203 Wis. 73, 233 N. W. 755, 72 A.L.R. 224.

[13] An ordinance making it unlawful for the driver of any vehicle to permit it to stand in front of a certain railway station, "unless the permission to stand has been granted by the person having the supervision over said passenger station," has been held invalid because of its attempted delegation of legislative power, and for the further reason that it violated the equal protection of the law guaranty. Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 231, 232.

In view of an ordinance empowering traffic council to make recommendations which were to have no binding force until adopted by the aldermen, another ordinance which purported to give the council more specific powers,—among which were included the designation of streets on which there should be no parking or parking for only a limited time, also the exclusion or restriction of parking on designated streets during certain hours, and the permission of angle parking in designated places, and which further purported to make the council's regulation along these lines immediately effective, pending action thereon by the aldermen,—was held to be subject to the objection that a legislative body cannot delegate its authority, but must alone exercise its legislative functions. Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 232.

An ordinance expressly intended to prohibit parking on the side of a street opposite apartment houses, as well as on the same side beyond the limits of the premises, by any owner, occupant, or visitor of such apartment houses, or their servants, was held to be arbitrary and discriminatory, and thus to violate the provision of the state Constitution that no law shall be passed granting to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens. Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 232.

[14] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 231, 232.

[14a] Schilling v. Melbourne [1928] Vict. L. Rep. 302, 16 B. R. C. 45.

[15] As to delegation of power to abutting owner to control parking, see supra, § 58.

able manner and to a reasonable number;[16] however, he cannot ordinarily prevent others from also parking their vehicles there,[17] except in so far as they unreasonably interfere with his right of ingress and egress,[18] and therefore he has no right to grant to another the exclusive privilege, as against the public, of parking on the street in front of his property.[19] The rights of the abutting owner, with respect to parking in the highway adjoining his property, are, however, subject to reasonable regulation by the proper public authorities.[20] The character of the abutting property does not generally affect the rights of the owner, with respect to parking, except in so far as it has a bearing upon the reasonableness of the extent of his use of the adjacent street.[1] In accordance with these principles, it is held that a hotel keeper may park his automobile in the street for the use of his guests;[2] that a hotel company, as an abutting owner, cannot control, as against the municipality, the street in front of its premises as a cab stand;[3] and that a hack stand established by municipal ordinance in front of a railroad depot, which does not prevent ingress or egress, does not interfere with the rights of the railroad company as an abutting owner in the street in front of its premises.[4]

The power of a municipality to make it unlawful for the driver or operator of an automobile to permit it to stand in front of a certain railroad passenger station, unless permission had been obtained from the person having supervision over the passenger station, has been held invalid as a delegation of legislative power.[4a] However, the power of a municipal corporation and a railroad company to regulate the parking of vehicles in the public highway immediately in front of the depot entrances and to prefer certain operators of transportation conveyances to others in the allotment of space has been affirmed.[4b]

---

[16] Annotation: 33 A.L.R. 355, 356.

[17] Donovan v. Pennsylvania Co. 199 U. S. 279, 50 L. ed. 192, 26 S. Ct. 91; Pennsylvania Co. v. Chicago, 181 Ill. 289, 54 N. E. 825, 53 L.R.A. 223, writ of error dismissed in (U. S.) 45 L. ed. 1258, 21 S. Ct. 921; Park Hotel Co. v. Ketchum, 184 Wis. 182, 199 N. W. 219, 33 A.L.R. 351.

[18] McFall v. St. Louis, 232 Mo. 716, 135 S. W. 51, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 471; Schopp v. St. Louis, 117 Mo. 131, 22 S. W. 898, 20 L.R.A. 783.

[19] Pennsylvania Co. v. Chicago, 181 Ill. 289, 54 N. E. 825, 53 L.R.A. 223, writ of error dismissed in (U. S.) 45 L. ed. 1258, 21 S. Ct. 921; Park Hotel Co. v. Ketchum, 184 Wis. 182, 199 N. W. 219, 33 A.L.R. 351.

[20] Ibid.

[1] Annotation: 33 A.L.R. 357.

[2] Annotation: 33 A.L.R. 357.

[3] Annotation: 33 A.L.R. 358.

This holding was sustained as against the contention of a hotel company that a cab stand unconstitutionally impaired its rights in the street in front of its property, where the ordinance established, without the consent of the hotel company, a public hack stand in front of the hotel in the identical space which the hotel company was using as a stand for the use of its guests under arrangement with a private corporation, the court holding that the only limitation upon the power of the municipality to provide for public hack stands in the streets was that the hack stand could not be of such a nature as to interfere with the ingress and egress of abutting property, and that the ordinance in question did not impair the rights of the hotel company, because the ordinance required a space of 30 feet to be left unoccupied in front of the hotel entrance to assure the hotel company's right of ingress and egress.

As the streets are for the use of all, upon equal terms, for any purpose consistent with the object for which they were established, subject to valid regulation by the public authorities for the public convenience, and as a taxicab is making a legitimate use of the city street while standing at the curb waiting for a fare, provided it does not interfere with the rights of the abutting property owner, a hotel company, though owning the fee to the center of the street, has no right to confer upon one taxicab company the exclusive privilege of parking on the street in front of the hotel, and to exclude all other taxicabs therefrom. Park Hotel Co. v. Ketchum, 184 Wis. 182, 199 N. W. 219, 33 A.L.R. 351.

In McFall v. St. Louis, 232 Mo. 716, 135 S. W. 51, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 471, upholding the validity of an ordinance allowing the municipality to grant special permission to licensed hack drivers, who can procure the consent of the abutting property owners to stand their vehicles in the street in front of such property, when the same privilege is not granted to those who do not obtain such consent, the court said that hack and carriage drivers cannot stand their vehicles upon the streets in front of abutting property, thereby obstructing the ingress and egress, without the consent of the abutting property owners, who may have them declared private nuisances.

[4] Pennsylvania Co. v. Chicago, 181 Ill. 289, 54 N. E. 825, 53 L.R.A. 223, writ of error dismissed in (U. S.) 45 L. ed. 1258, 21 S. Ct. 921.

It was held in Kenyon Hotel Co. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 62 Utah, 364, 220 P. 382, 33 A.L.R. 343, that where a depot adjoins a public street which the people, in passing to and from the trains, must necessarily pass over, the railroad company has the right to promulgate reasonable rules for the safety and convenience of the traveling public, designating the particular places in the street in front of the depot for the parking of the motor vehicles of the several hotel companies of the city and the taxicab companies, and that such rules are not void as discriminatory in that one hotel company or taxicab company may be allotted a more favorable place than another.

§ 60. Validity of Ordinance Denying to Automobiles for Hire Parking Privileges Extended to Automobiles Generally.—Ordinances which deny to automobiles used for hire the parking privileges extended to motor vehicles generally have ordinarily been held valid.[5]

§ 61. Validity of Municipal Regulation Requiring Vehicles for Hire to Use Taxicab Stands.—The regulation of those who offer to serve the public with the use of their vehicles, such as taxicab drivers, draymen, expressmen, and the like, is within the usual police powers of a municipal corporation.[6] An ordinance requiring vehicles for hire to make use of taxicab stands,[7] and excluding therefrom other vehicles, is reasonable and valid.[8] A traffic regulation which assigned designated stands near a depot for the use of vehicles operated by certain named hotels was held not to be unreasonably discriminatory in that it excluded from such stands a taxicab or omnibus operated by an independent concern.[9]

The state may delegate to a local board the designation of hack or cab stands within a city and the regulation of their use.[10]

[4a] Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 52.

[4b] Kenyon Hotel Co. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 62 Utah, 364, 220 P. 382, 33 A.L.R. 343.
Annotation: 33 A.L.R. 355.

[5] An ordinance forbidding any person to use as a stand for any vehicle operated for a fee any part of certain named streets, with a proviso that nothing in the ordinance should "be construed as depriving operators of such vehicles of the rights common to them and to operators of other vehicles to park vehicles in the streets for other purposes, as said rights are or may be determined and regulated by law," was held not invalid as discriminatory or as denying the equal protection of the law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, although another ordinance prohibited the parking of vehicles within a specified area for a period exceeding fifteen minutes between certain hours. New Orleans v. Calamari, 150 La. 737, 91 So. 172, 22 A.L.R. 106.

An ordinance was held not invalid, on the ground that it was unreasonable and confiscatory, which provided that "no taxicab, motorbus, hack, or other vehicle for hire shall park on any street within the fire limits of the city of Atlanta longer than to discharge or take on passengers, unless in actual service, except in front of railroad stations and except that three taxicabs or hacks for the exclusive use of the patrons of hotels shall be allowed to park either in front or on the side of hotels where permission is obtained in writing from the proprietor of such hotel," and that "no hotel proprietor shall give permission to park in front of any place of business occupying the store on the ground floor facing the street," and providing a fine not exceeding $50, or imprisonment on the public works not exceeding thirty days, either or both penalties to be inflicted at the discretion of the recorder for a violation of the ordinance. Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 113.

[6] Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 1132.

[7] An ordinance which empowered the police authorities to designate stands for taxicabs on the streets in the vicinity of railroad stations, and provided that they should occupy only the designated stands, was upheld against the contention that it was oppressive, unreasonable, and discriminatory by depriving other vehicles of the right to park in such stands. Kenyon Hotel Co. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 62 Utah, 364, 220 P. 382, 33 A.L.R. 343.

An ordinance which, in effect at least, required taxicabs to use stands in places outside of a prohibited zone, upon obtaining permission of the owners of abutting property, was held not to discriminate unjustly against taxicab owners either by permitting automobiles belonging to the general public to park within such zone or by providing that vehicles for hire might stop therein to load and unload merchandise. Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 1133.

[8] Com. v. Rice, 261 Mass. 340, 158 N. E. 797, 55 A.L.R. 1128.

[9] Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 1133.

[10] Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 1133.

7. Miscellaneous Regulations

§ 62. Generally.—The advent and development of motor vehicles have created a diversity of factual situations giving rise to all sorts of legislative enactments. It is within the power of the legislature to exclude motor vehicles from the use of the public highways altogether, and certainly it may call upon the users of such vehicles to contribute to the expense imposed upon the public by their use.[11] A provision in a general city ordinance regulating the use of motor vehicles, that "it shall be unlawful for any person operating a motorcycle to carry another person on said machine in front of the operator," is a valid exercise of the police power of the city with respect to the safety of travelers on the city streets and persons carried on motorcycles.[12]

§ 63. Regulations as to Safety Appliances.—The law is elementary and mandatory that the traveler shall not only provide a proper vehicle, but also that it shall be in such good order and condition as to be no menace to the safety of others on the road.[13] Thus, a state may provide by statute that automobiles must be equipped with safety devices such as lamps, bells, and horns,[14] and in like manner, a municipal corporation may pass an ordinance requiring automobiles to carry signal and other safety appliances.[15]

§ 64. Regulations as to Safety Zones.—A municipality has the power to authorize for a public purpose obstructions and erections in the streets which would otherwise be deemed nuisances, on the ground that this is merely putting the street to a new and improved use, as demanded by the necessities of the times and modern conveniences and appliances.[16] Thus, a municipal authority has been expressly declared to have power to establish safety zones for the protection of street car passengers.[17] A safety zone ordinance was upheld against five objections, namely: That it contravened the state Constitution and statutes; that the city council lacked power to enact it; that it was unreasonable and discriminatory; that its delegation of power to a police officer to direct traffic to the left of the standards marking the safety zone made it unconstitutional; and that the obstruction constituted a nuisance.[18]

§ 65. Regulations as to Stopping.—Early in the history of automobile legislation, it was held that the state might, by law, require that the operator of any motor vehicle on any public highway stop at the signal of the driver of any vehicle drawn by horses.[19] Where the horse appeared frightened, such operator had to stop the motor of the machine and all motive power, and remain stationary unless a movement forward should be deemed necessary in order to avoid accident or injury, until the horse appeared to be under control.[20] The state might also require that when an automobile approached or came up behind a vehicle drawn by horses, the driver had to manage and control his machine in such manner as to exercise every reasonable precaution to prevent the frightening of the horses and to insure the safety and protection of any person riding or driving them,[1] or even that the driver of a motor vehicle, at the indication of a horse becoming alarmed, had to go to the side of the road and remain stationary until the horse had passed.[2] Where a statute required the operator of an automobile to stop upon signal, there had to be an actual signal before he will be held responsible for negligence for violating the law.[3]

---

[11] Re Hoffert, 34 S. D. 271, 148 N. W. 20, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949.

[12] Re Wickstrum, 92 Neb. 523, 138 N. W. 733, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1068.

[13] Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656.

[14] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 220.

For a discussion of regulations regarding lights, see §§ 25 et seq.

For statutory requirement of horn or other device for signaling approach, see Henderson v. O'Leary, 177 Wis. 130, 187 N. W. 994, 24 A.L.R. 942.

[15] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219; 108 Am. St. Rep. 218; 5 Ann. Cas. 793.

[16] See Highways, Streets, and Sidewalks [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 198].

[17] District of Columbia v. Manning, 57 App. D. C. 156, 18 F. (2d) 806, 53 A.L.R. 167.

See also Jacksonville v. Bell, 93 Fla. 936, 112 So. 885, 53 A.L.R. 163, in which it was stated that the concrete "safety island" in question in that case was not a nuisance and was not prohibited by the law. Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1328.

[18] Cleveland v. Gustafson, 124 Ohio St. 607, 180 N. E. 59, 79 A.L.R. 1325.

[19] Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289; Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127.

Annotation: 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251.

Some statutes require the drivers of motor vehicles to bring their cars to an absolute stop when about to overtake a street car taking on or discharging passengers.[4] Under a statute requiring motor vehicles to stop 10 feet behind street cars stopping to permit passengers to alight, the vehicle must not be alongside the street car when it is stopped, although the passengers are to be discharged from the front end of the car.[5]

Stopping at main thoroughfares is also a common requirement now.[6]

§ 66. Regulations of Use in Parks and on Toll Roads.—When the automobile was in an early stage of development, certain regulations existed regarding its use in parks and on toll roads. Although in small parks and cemeteries, where narrow roads were constructed for carriages drawn by horses, it was customary and proper to exclude automobiles because of the danger of frightening horses,[7] park commissioners intrusted with general power to make rules and regulations for the use and government of parkways and streets under their control were not usually given the right to exclude automobiles as such from thoroughfares in the park which were open to horse-drawn vehicles,[8] though they were permitted to adopt an ordinance or regulation excluding vehicles more than 10 feet high from the tread of the wheels, whether propelled by muscular or motor power, from the driveways of the park, and such an ordinance was held reasonable and valid as applied to double-decked motor omnibuses.[9] Park commissioners were empowered to adopt and enforce regulations fixing the maximum speed limits of all vehicles using roads in the park, and a limitation of 8 miles an hour was upheld as reasonable when applied to motor vehicles as well as to those drawn by horses.[10] A state law regulating the speed of automobiles throughout the state does not necessarily abrogate all park regulations relating to automobiles, when it refers only to the speed of automobiles on public highways, streets, and ways.[11]

---

[20] Annotation: 12 Ann. Cas. 292.

[1] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 224; 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 253; 5 Ann. Cas. 793.

[2] Annotation: 13 Ann. Cas. 464.

[3] Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289.

Annotation: 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251; 12 Ann. Cas. 289.

[4] See, for example, the regulations involved in Schell v. Du Bois, 94 Ohio St. 93, 113 N. E. 664, L.R.A.1917A, 710; Frankel v. Norris, 252 Pa. 14, 97 A. 104, L.R.A.1917E, 272.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1258.

[5] Ruddy v. Ingebret, 164 Minn. 40, 204 N. W. 630, 44 A.L.R. 159.

The effect of failure to comply with such requirement upon liability for negligence is discussed in §§ 215 et seq. infra.

[6] The effect of failure to comply with such requirement upon liability for negligence is discussed in §§ 300 et seq. infra.

[7] Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513.

Where a tract of land was purchased for a park for the benefit of a municipality, and lots on one side were conveyed to purchasers, "together with a right of carriage, horse, and footway" through the park, subject to such by-laws and regulations as should be made for the purpose of "promoting safety and for establishing and maintaining the character of the park as a place of public recreation," and the corporation was given power to pass by-laws regulating the admission of vehicles to parks, a by-law passed in the interests of public safety, prohibiting any motor vehicle or other similarly driven vehicle from passing through any part of the park, to or from any of the houses on the lots conveyed, was held to be reasonable and valid. Atty.-Gen. v. Hodgson [1922] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 429, 11 B. R. C. 234. Annotation: 11 B. R. C. 247.

[8] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 222.

See PARKS AND SQUARES [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 637].

[9] Annotation: 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 503; 15 Ann. Cas. 1170.

A turnpike company, which, by its charter, is required to admit to its toll roads carriages of burden or pleasure, is without power to exclude automobiles,[12] but unless limited by their charters or forbidden by legislative enactment, the managers of highways owned by private corporations have the right, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to exclude automobiles from the use of their highways.[13]

A toll road company chartered before the invention of automobiles and given the right to exact tolls for horse-drawn vehicles has no right to take tolls from automobiles.[14] Mandamus is the proper proceeding to compel a turnpike company to permit a person to operate and use his automobile over its turnpike road, and in such cases the burden is upon the petitioner to show all the facts necessary to make out his legal right to the remedy requested, including the fact that he has complied with the requirements of the law as to the registration of motor vehicles.[15] Laws regulating automobiles while upon highways are equally applicable to them while in operation upon toll roads.[16]

§ 67. Use of Highways for Races and Speed Contests.—Owing to the fact that highways are constructed and maintained for public travel, a municipality has no power to authorize the exclusive use of a highway for the purpose of holding an automobile speed contest, in the absence of legislative sanction. Such a use, at common law, would amount to a nuisance.[17] The want of power in a municipality in this respect is more marked where a statute fixing the maximum rate of speed must necessarily be violated in the races attempted to be authorized by an ordinance, and in such a case the municipality even may render itself a participator in the illegal acts consequent upon the adoption of the ordinance.[18] Authority in a municipality for the adoption of such an ordinance is not derived from a charter provision which is in conflict with statutes subsequently enacted regulating the speed of motor vehicles on the highways of the state.[19]

D. CONFLICT BETWEEN STATUTES AND LOCAL REGULATIONS

1. IN GENERAL

§ 68. Generally.—It is a well-settled general rule that municipalities, having the power to regulate the use of their streets, may enact valid rules and regulations for the government of motor vehicles within their boundaries, so long as they are not in conflict with or repugnant to legislative enactments governing the use of such vehicles, but that such ordinances are invalid if they are in conflict with statutes relating to the subject.[20]

---

[10] Com. v. Crowninshield, 187 Mass. 221, 72 N. E. 963, 68 L.R.A. 245.
Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219; 108 Am. St. Rep. 218; 11 Ann. Cas. 728.

[11] Com. v. Crowninshield, 187 Mass. 221, 72 N. E. 963, 68 L.R.A. 245.
Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 219.

[12] Annotation: 20 Ann. Cas. 516.
See TURNPIKES AND TOLL ROADS [Also 26 R. C. L. p. 1395, § 1].

[13] Annotation: 5 Ann. Cas. 794.

[14] Peru Turnp. Co. v. Peru, 91 Vt. 295, 100 A. 679, L.R.A.1917E, 559.

[15] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 222.

[16] Weirich v. State, 140 Wis. 98, 121 N. W. 652, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 17 Ann. Cas. 802.
Annotation: 17 Ann. Cas. 804.

[17] Bogart v. New York, 200 N. Y. 379, 93 N. E. 937, 21 Ann. Cas. 466; Johnson v. New York, 186 N. Y. 139, 78 N. E. 715, 116 Am. St. Rep. 545, 9 Ann. Cas. 824.
Annotation: 9 Ann. Cas. 828; 21 Ann. Cas. 469.
See HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND SIDEWALKS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 254, § 210].

[18] Johnson v. New York, 186 N. Y. 139, 78 N. E. 715, 116 Am. St. Rep. 545, 9 Ann. Cas. 824.
Annotation: 9 Ann. Cas. 828.

[19] Bogart v. New York, 200 N. Y. 379, 93 N. E. 937, 21 Ann. Cas. 466; Johnson v. New York, 186 N. Y. 139, 78 N. E. 715, 116 Am. St. Rep. 545, 9 Ann. Cas. 824.
Annotation: 9 Ann. Cas. 828; 21 Ann. Cas. 469.

Under some modern developments of municipal government, the powers of the municipality are conferred by constitutional provision or at least are protected against change by the legislature. Where the powers so conferred are broad enough to include the regulation of automobile traffic, the power of the municipality in this regard is supreme and the legislature cannot interfere therewith.[1] But if such power is not broad enough to include the regulation of automobile traffic, then the general rule that the legislative power is supreme applies.[2]

2. REGULATIONS AS TO SPEED

§ 69. Generally.—Subject to what is said in the preceding section, it is generally held that where a municipality has power to regulate the use of vehicles within its boundaries, ordinances regulating the speed of motor vehicles therein are valid if they do not conflict with legislative enactments.[3] Of course, however, as a general rule, where an ordinance regulating the speed of motor vehicles within a municipality is in conflict with a statute on the same subject, the ordinance is invalid.[4] In accordance with these principles, it is held that an ordinance providing that the speed limit on all motor vehicles should not exceed 8 miles an hour over the streets in what is known as the fire limit, and that through any other streets the speed should not exceed 15 miles an hour, and providing for punishment by a fine of $5 for the first offense and $10 for the second offense, and for cancelation of the permit to operate automobiles for the third violation, is in conflict with certain sections of a statute, municipal corporations being expressly inhibited from passing any ordinance contrary to those statutory provisions.[5] It is also held that local authorities are without power to suspend the provisions or lessen the restriction of the sections of the motor vehicle act with respect to speed, and that the fact that park commissioners had, prior to the passage of such act, established by ordinance the rate of speed for motor vehicles in parks and boulevards, did not prevent the provisions of the motor vehicle act as to speed from being applicable to the operation of automobiles in the park in question.[6] The decisions in some cases are affected by constitutional provisions relating to the authority of municipalities.[7]

---

[20] Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172; Roper v. Greenspon, 272 Mo. 288, 198 S. W. 1107, L.R.A.1918D, 126.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1186, s. 64 A.L.R. 993; 3 Ann. Cas. 495; 11 Ann. Cas. 728; Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1067.

Regulations which merely place additional and more stringent limitations upon the operation of motor vehicles than those prescribed by the state law are not in conflict therewith. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1186, s. 64 A.L.R. 993.

That a state statute makes the operation of an automobile by a child unlawful only in the case of a child under sixteen years of age does not affect the validity of a municipal ordinance prohibiting the operation of automobiles on the streets of the city by persons under eighteen years of age, such ordinance not being in conflict with the statute, but merely imposing a superadded obligation. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Guenther, 281 U. S. 34, 74 L. ed. 683, 50 S. Ct. 165, 72 A.L.R. 1064.

[1] Kalich v. Knapp, 73 Or. 570, 142 P. 594, 145 P. 22, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1051.

Where the Constitution confers upon municipal corporations a reasonable control of their streets, the legislature cannot deprive the municipal authorities of power to prescribe the lights on automobiles which shall be used upon such streets. Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1227, s. 78 A.L.R. 815.

[2] Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172.

It has been held that the regulation of street traffic is not a municipal affair within the constitutional provision giving the municipality supremacy over the legislature in municipal affairs. Ibid.

[3] Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1187, s. 64 A.L.R. 994.

[4] Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1187, s. 64 A.L.R. 994.

[5] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1188, s. 64 A.L.R. 994.

§ 70. Fixing Rate Lower than Statutory Rate.—The determination of the validity of an ordinance which establishes a speed limit lower than the statutory rate obviously depends to a large extent upon the wording of the statute and the charter powers of the municipality. Where the statute is designed to regulate the speed limit in a municipality as well as on the state highways, an ordinance establishing a lower speed limit than the statutory limit may be held invalid because of inconsistency.[8] But where the power of

---

[6] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1188, s. 64 A.L.R. 994.

In Com. v. Crowninshield, 187 Mass. 221, 72 N. E. 963, 68 L.R.A. 245, it was held that regulations by the board of park commissioners of Boston as to the rate of speed of automobiles in parks and streets under its control were not abrogated by Mass. Stat. 1902, chap. 315, p. 235, limiting the speed of automobiles throughout the state on public highways, streets, and ways.

[7] In Kalich v. Knapp, 73 Or. 570, 145 P. 22, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1055, reversing on rehearing 73 Or. 558, 142 P. 594, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1051, where a section of the Constitution provided that the legislature should not enact, amend, or repeal any charter or act of incorporation of any municipality, and that the legal voters of municipalities were granted power to enact and amend their charters, subject to the Constitution and criminal laws of the state, and another section of the Constitution provided that the initiative and referendum powers reserved to the people were thereby further reserved to the local voters of every municipality as to all local, special, and municipal legislation of every character, in or for their respective municipalities, and declared that these provisions conferred ample and exclusive power upon the people of every municipal corporation to regulate their own affairs respecting municipal legislation, and that the legislative assembly could not pass laws to repeal or amend municipal charters, even by implication, respecting such matters, it was held that these provisions removed the legislative power over the subject of municipal traffic, and that a motor vehicle act declaring that its purpose was to limit the authority of municipalities on like subjects, and providing that local authorities should have no power to prescribe a lower rate of speed than that fixed by the act, was unconstitutional, although the act provided for a punishment for its violation.

[8] Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172.

The legislature may constitutionally fix a speed at which vehicles may be operated on the city streets, and forbid the municipal authorities to attempt to fix a lower limit. Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172.

An ordinance providing that it should be unlawful for any person to drive an automobile over any bridge within the city limits at a rate of speed exceeding 10 miles an hour, regardless of particular conditions, was held to be in conflict with the motor vehicle act which provided, in part, that motor vehicles should not be driven within the corporate limits of a city at a speed exceeding 15 miles an hour, and that no person should operate such a vehicle recklessly or at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the width, traffic, and use of the highway and the general and usual rules of the road, or so as to endanger the property, life, or limb of any person; and further providing that no city should have power to enact any ordinance requiring local registration, or other requirements in any manner excluding or prohibiting any vehicle whose owner had complied with the provisions of the motor vehicle act from the free and unobstructed use of the public highways, but providing that it should not prohibit any city from passing any ordinance in strict conformity with the provisions of such act, imposing the same penalty for a violation of any of the provisions of the act, where such violations occur within such city or town. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1191, s. 64 A.L.R. 995.

It was held that the general control of its streets given a city by a statute was subject to the general laws of the state, and must not be so exercised as to violate those laws, but that the fact that the legislature had provided limitations upon the speed of motor vehicles did not prevent further restrictions by the city, if they were reasonable and made necessary by special conditions and circumstances that were plainly not considered by the legislature, and did not prohibit or restrict the free use of the streets; and although the statute provided that in the closely built-up portion of a city, motor vehicles should not be driven at a greater speed than 1 mile in six minutes, and in other portions at a greater speed than a mile in four minutes, it was held that it was not shown that the free use of the streets was restricted by an ordinance, providing that no automobile should be driven in the streets of a city at a greater rate of speed than 8 miles an hour, and that in turning a corner of any street or avenue, or in any alley of the city, the speed should not be greater than 4 miles an hour. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1193, s. 64 A.L.R. 995.

In Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548, an ordinance which provided that no person should drive a motor vehicle at a rate of speed greater the municipality to set a speed limit is not limited and is not intended to be limited by the statute, an ordinance establishing a lower speed limit than that prescribed by the statute cannot be regarded as in conflict with it.

§ 71. Fixing Rate Higher than Statutory Rate.—The same considerations involved in determining the validity of an ordinance which establishes a speed limit lower than the statutory rate[9] seem to apply in determining the validity of ordinances fixing higher rates than the statutory rates. Thus, although there appears to be some authority to the contrary,[10] where the statute is designed to regulate the speed limit in a municipality as well as on the state highways, an ordinance establishing a higher speed limit than the statutory limit may be held invalid as inconsistent.[11]

§ 72. Definite and Indefinite Rates.—In general it may be held that an than 7 miles per hour within the built-up portions of the city, and at a greater speed than 8 miles in other portions, was held not invalid as in conflict with a statute providing that no person should be allowed to operate a motor vehicle on any of the public streets of a city at a greater speed than a mile in six minutes within the corporate limits, and that outside the corporate limits of any city, the lawful rate of speed should not exceed 1 mile in three minutes.

---

It has been held, under the provisions of the New York Motor Vehicle Act of 1904, permitting local authorities of cities and villages to "limit by ordinance, rule, or regulation hereafter adopted the speed of motor vehicles upon the public highways," that a city or village is authorized to prescribe a lower rate of speed within its territorial jurisdiction than that permitted by the motor vehicle act itself, providing the ordinance by which this is accomplished prescribes the same rate for all other vehicles, the same penalties for a violation thereof applicable to all other vehicles, and providing that before the ordinance becomes effective, signs have been erected which notify drivers, upon entering the limits of the municipality, that they are required to lessen their speed to the rate established by the ordinance. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1192, s. 64 A.L.R. 993.

[9] See § 70.

[10] In one case, an ordinance dividing the city into two districts and fixing the maximum rate of speed for one of them at 12 miles an hour and for the other at 20 miles, and providing penalties of fines or imprisonment or both, graduated in severity for first and subsequent offenses for all violations of the speed regulations where the speed attained did not exceed 30 miles an hour, and providing that where the rate exceeded 30 miles an hour a violation should be a misdemeanor and punishable by imprisonment in jail for different terms, was held not to enact regulations at variance with the provisions of, or to fix a different penalty than, the motor vehicle act, which provided for the registration of motor vehicles, and the regulation of speed at which such vehicles should be operated, and provided, for streets and highways within the boundaries of incorporated cities and towns, a maximum rate of 1 mile in six minutes where the territory was closely built up, and 1 mile in four minutes elsewhere in cities and towns, and providing for graduated penalties for first and subsequent violations of the act in the form of fines or imprisonments, or both, and limited the power of local authorities to enact any ordinance with reference to motor vehicles except in accordance with the provisions of the act. The ordinance was held to comply with the requirements of the statute that the penalties for a violation of the speed laws by motor vehicles should be similar to and no greater than those fixed for other vehicles, where it made the provisions of the ordinance in this respect applicable generally to all vehicles. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1194, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

[11] Accordingly, it was conceded that the provision of the motor vehicle act, that no person should drive a motor vehicle at a greater speed than 15 miles an hour in approaching or traversing an intersection, or in approaching or going around corners or curves when the operator's view of the way was obstructed, prevailed over an ordinance providing that any person who should drive any vehicle at a rate of speed greater than 20 miles per hour, and not greater than 30 miles an hour, upon any street in the city outside of certain territory, should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1194, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

It has been held that an ordinance fixing a uniform rate of speed for motor vehicles of 12 miles an hour for all parts of a city was in conflict with a state law providing, among other regulations, that where the operator's view of the road traffic is obstructed upon approaching an intersecting way, or in traversing a crossing or intersection of ways, or in approaching or traversing a bridge, dam, trestle, causeway, or viaduct, or in going around corners or a curve in a street or highway, the speed limit shall be 10 miles an hour. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1194, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

Where a motor vehicle act provided that it should not be construed as changing or interfering with a regulation or ordinance adopted by a municipality, regulating the running and operation of automobiles, "providing such regulation or ordinance is not in conflict with the provision of this act," and the act forbade a greater speed than 6 miles an hour on approaching crossings, an ordinance allowing a speed of 10 miles an hour at crossings in the city was held in conflict with the motor vehicle act and therefore inoperative, null, and void. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1194, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

ordinance which establishes a definite speed limit where the statutory regulation is indefinite is not invalid. Thus, it was held that a statute claiming to be exclusively controlling, and making the driving of an automobile in excess of 25 miles per hour presumptive evidence of driving at a speed not prudent, did not annul an ordinance enacted under the police power of a municipal corporation, limiting the speed at various points in the city to from 6 to 8 miles an hour.[12] And an ordinance providing that it should be unlawful to operate or run any motor vehicle upon the public highway in a certain city recklessly, or at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the width, traffic, and use of a highway, or so as to endanger property or the life or limb of any person, was held not void for inconsistency with a statute worded in substantially the same manner, but containing provisions that a rate of speed in excess of 30 miles an hour for a stated distance should be presumptive evidence of traveling at a rate of speed not careful and prudent, although the ordinance in question contained no such provision.[13]

But an ordinance fixing the speed of automobiles on city streets at a certain rate conflicts with a statute forbidding such vehicles to be driven at an unreasonable speed.[13a]

3. REGULATIONS AS TO LICENSES OR TAXES

a. IN GENERAL

§ 73. Generally.—The general rules stated above[14] obviously apply to regulations as to licenses or taxes. For the purpose of convenience, these regulations are divided into two parts—those affecting vehicles for hire[15] and those affecting vehicles other than those for hire.[16]

b. ON VEHICLES OTHER THAN THOSE FOR HIRE

§ 74. Generally.—The cases involving conflict between statutes and local automobile regulations relating to licenses or taxes on vehicles other than those for hire cannot be regarded as entirely in accord. In some cases ordinances providing for the licensing or taxing of motor vehicles other than those used for hire have been sustained as not in conflict with statutes regulating the licensing of such vehicles.[17] In other cases, ordinances imposing taxes or licenses, or requiring owners of motor vehicles not used for hire to display a city license plate, have been held invalid as in conflict with statutes regulating motor vehicles.[18]

---

[12] Roper v. Greenspon, 272 Mo. 288, 198 S. W. 1107, L.R.A.1915D, 126.

[13] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1196, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

[13a] Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172.

[14] See § 68.

[15] See §§ 78 et seq.

[16] See §§ 74 et seq.

[17] Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1196, s. 64 A.L.R. 993.

An ordinance imposing a wheel tax upon vehicles was held not forbidden by a statute which, after providing for state registration of motor vehicles, the use of brake, horns, lamps, etc., provided that "no city . . . shall make or pass any ordinance, rule, or regulation limiting or restricting the speed of motor vehicles; and no ordinance, rule, or regulation heretofore or hereafter made by any city . . . in respect to or limiting the use or speed of motor vehicles shall have any force, effect, or validity." Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1197, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

[18] Barrett v. New York (C. C.) 189 F. 268, reversed on other grounds in 232 U. S. 14, 58 L. ed. 483, 34 S. Ct. 203.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1196, s. 64 A.L.R. 993.

An ordinance requiring persons operating vehicles first to procure a license from the city for that privilege, and also to procure a state chauffeur's license from the tax collector of the county in which the city was situated, was held invalid in that it was in substantial conflict with the highway law regulating the taking out of a chauffeur's

§ 75. Where Statute Purports to Be Exclusive.—It is a well-established principle of law that a municipal ordinance relating to licenses or taxes upon vehicles other than those for hire is invalid where the state statute on the subject purports to be exclusive.[19] Thus, an ordinance requiring owners of automobiles not used for hire to pay the municipality a license tax was held invalid where the motor vehicle act in force provided that the registration fee imposed by that act should be in lieu of any county or municipal license fee, and that it should be unlawful for any county or municipality to collect any license fee on any motor-driven vehicle, but provided that an additional license tax might be charged on motor-driven vehicles used for hire.[20] Where the state act regulating the licensing of automobiles and chauffeurs provides that "local authorities shall have no power to pass, enforce, or maintain any ordinance, rule, or regulation requiring from any owner or chauffeur to whom this article is applicable any tax, fee, license, or permit for the use of the public highways, or excluding any such owner or chauffeur from the free use of such public highways, . . . and no ordinance, rule, or regulation contrary to, or in any wise inconsistent with, the provisions of this article, now in force or hereafter enacted, shall have any effect," a municipality cannot require licenses for vehicles and drivers in addition to the licenses issued by the state.[1]

§ 76. Statutes Forbidding More than One License Number.—Obviously, an ordinance requiring automobile owners to obtain a license from the municipality is invalid where the state statute expressly forbids more than one license number. Thus, an ordinance requiring the owner of a motor vehicle, other than a motor truck or motor-driven commercial vehicle, to display a number thereon, other than the number issued by the secretary of state, is invalid as in conflict with a state act providing that no owner of a motor vehicle, except motor trucks and motor-driven commercial vehicles, should be required to display upon his motor vehicle any other number than the number of the registration seal issued by the secretary of state.[2] Similarly, an ordinance requiring that on every automobile operated in the city there should be displayed the number of its city license, is in conflict with a state law which prescribes the manner in which the registration number of all motor vehicles registered at the office of the secretary of state should be displayed, and con-license throughout the state elsewhere than within the corporate limits of cities having ordinances requiring the procurement of a license to operate such vehicles within the corporate limits of such cities; but the court stated that it believed that it would be within the province of the city to require any applicant who operates a motor vehicle within the city also to take out a chauffeur's license under the state law, as well as a license under the city ordinances, as such a requirement would be a reasonable requirement as a public safeguard. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1197, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

---

[19] See generally, annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1197, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

A statute providing that no ordinance which regulates the speed at which motor vehicles shall run, or which governs or restricts the use of such vehicles, shall thereafter have any force or effect, does not repeal a municipal ordinance requiring the licensing of vehicles, including taxicabs, carrying passengers within the limits of a city for hire. State v. Dunklee, 76 N. H. 439, 84 A. 40, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 754.

[20] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1197, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

[1] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1198, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

It has been held, however, that the provisions of a state motor vehicle act, that no owner of motor vehicles who has obtained a certificate from the secretary of state as provided for in the motor vehicle act should be required to obtain any other license or permit to use or operate his vehicles, and that such owner should not be required to display upon his vehicles any other number than that furnished by the secretary of state, was not violated by a city ordinance requiring owners of motor vehicles to pay an annual license to the city on their machines, since the word "license," as used, meant tax, and the issuing of the license was merely the giving of a receipt by the city for the payment of the tax. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1199, s. 64 A.L.R. 993.

[2] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1199, s. 64 A.L.R. 993.

cludes: "And provided that said owner shall not be required to place any other mark of identity upon his motor vehicle." [3]

Occasionally, a question of statutory construction arises in determining whether or not a statute actually does prohibit municipal licenses. Accordingly, an ordinance regulating the use of automobiles and requiring owners to obtain a license from a city department was held not rendered invalid by a subsequent act of the legislature providing that no motor vehicle should be operated on the highway until the operator should procure a license from the state, and providing that not more than one state license number should be carried upon front and back of the vehicle, and that a license number obtained in any other place or state should be removed while the vehicle is being used within the commonwealth.[4]

§ 77. Amount of Fee as Affecting Validity.—The amount of the fee exacted by a municipality may have considerable bearing in the determination of the validity of the ordinance establishing the fee. An ordinance requiring a license fee of $1 from motor vehicle drivers was held not a revenue measure, and not in conflict with the state law which prohibited an additional tax being imposed on private motor vehicles by a municipality, the court stating that the fee of $1 was merely incidental and bore a reasonable relation to the purpose of the ordinance and the expense of its enforcement.[5]

c. ON VEHICLES FOR HIRE

§ 78. Generally.—Obviously, the decisions in cases involving a conflict between statutory and local regulations relating to licenses or taxes on motor vehicles for hire depends to a large extent upon the wording of the statutes and ordinances considered. In some cases ordinances relating to the licensing of motor vehicles for hire have been upheld, notwithstanding the provisions of statute regulating such vehicles.[6] Accordingly, although an ordinance regulating the parking, lights, driving, etc., of taxicabs, and requiring chauffeurs driving them to procure a license from the city, was in conflict with the state law regulating such vehicles, the ordinance was held to prevail in view of the provision of the Constitution that "no person, firm, association, or corporation shall be authorized or permitted to use the streets, alleys, or public places of any city, town, or village for the constructing or operation of any public utility or private enterprise, without first obtaining the consent of the proper authorities of such city, town, or village." [7] In other cases, however, ordinances relating to the licensing of motor vehicles for hire have been deemed invalid. Thus, a municipality was held to have no authority to impose a privilege tax on the operation of automobiles for hire, where the statute provided that no municipality should impose a privilege tax or registration fee upon any motorcycle, electric motor vehicle, commercial motor vehicle, or motor vehicle, and should not require any registration of the same.[8]

---

[3] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1199, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

[4] Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

In this case the court said: "It has been argued that the Act of 1905 was intended to provide that only one license number or tag shall appear upon the front and back of the vehicle when operated on the highways, but we do not regard this to be the proper construction of the act. In its second section it is provided that only one 'state license' number shall be carried upon the vehicle. There is no prohibition against the carrying of a license which was not a state license, and the limitation of the prohibition to a single class of licenses implies that it was not intended to exclude a local municipal license from being carried upon the vehicle. And when in the same section it was enacted that a 'license number obtained in any other place or state shall be removed from said vehicle while the vehicle is being used within this commonwealth,' we understand that no reference was intended to be made to any such license as the city would issue under the ordinance in question. We do not think that the word 'place' can properly be regarded as applying to a municipality within the commonwealth. It seems to us very plain that what was intended to be enacted by the clause just cited was that a foreign license number should be removed from any vehicle which comes from another territorial division outside of the state into the limits of the state, and only in such a case. The language, 'while the vehicle is being used within this commonwealth,' seems to indicate clearly that the vehicle in mind was one which comes from outside the commonwealth."

[5] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1200, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

In a Pennsylvania case, the court upheld the validity of an ordinance passed by the City of Pittsburgh, under the power conferred by the special Act of April 1, 1868, P. L. 565, § 7, to regulate and license every description of carriages, which made it unlawful for any person to operate, or cause to be operated, upon the streets of the city, an automobile, motor vehicle, or other conveyance or wagon, the motor power of which shall be electricity, steam, gasoline, or any source of energy other than human and animal power, except upon the conditions, inter alia, of the payment by the owner of an annual license fee of $6 on vehicles intended to carry one or two persons, and a fee of $10 on those intended to carry more than two persons. The court said that the license imposed was not unreasonable, and was uniform upon different kinds of the several classes of vehicles named, and that that was all the law required in that respect. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1200, s. 64 A.L.R. 997.

A license granted by the state usually confers upon motor vehicles only the rights which are possessed by other vehicles in the use of the public streets and highways. The fact that a motor vehicle is thus licensed does not, in and of itself, exclude the power of a municipality to require an additional license, at least to impose a license under the police power.[9]

§ 79. Regulations as to Vehicles for Hire Other than Those Relating to Licenses.—The well-established rules stated above [10] apply to regulations as to vehicles for hire other than those relating to licenses.[11] Thus, an ordinance regulating the use of city streets by corporations or individuals with public service automobiles not operating under the jitney ordinance, which prescribed the streets on which they should operate, was held not in conflict with the state highway department act which provided that it should not interfere with "the powers now or hereafter vested in local authorities to license and regulate the operation of vehicles offered to the public for hire," and also provided that the license and registration prescribed by the act "should not affect the right of incorporated cities and towns to license and regulate the use of motor vehicles for hire in such corporation." [12] Likewise, an ordinance providing certain routes for jitneys, and changing former routes and restricting them to fewer streets, was held not in conflict with the general laws regulating vehicular traffic over the highways of the state.[13]

---

[6] Applewold v. Dosch, 239 Pa. 479, 86 A. 1070, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 481.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1200, s. 64 A.L.R. 993.

The Pennsylvania Act of April 27, 1909, P. L. 265, providing for the licensing of automobiles by the state, and providing that "no city, county, borough, or township shall have power to enforce or maintain any ordinance, rule, or regulation inconsistent with or fixing a rate of speed lower than that permitted by this act; or require of any person any license tax upon or permit to operate motor vehicles upon the public highways; or the registration of any motor vehicles; and all such local ordinances, rules, or regulations now in force shall expire and shall be null and void and of no further effect," does not prevent a borough from enacting a law requiring the owners of automobiles kept for hire to pay a license fee by virtue of the Act of April 22, 1889, P. L. 39, conferring power upon boroughs "to enact ordinances establishing reasonable rates of license tax on all hacks, carriages, omnibuses, and other vehicles used in carrying persons or property for pay, and limit the compensation for the same within the limits of said borough," since such ordinance provides for a tax for a special use of the highwavs, and is not in conflict with the Act of 1919. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1200, s. 64 A.L.R. 998.

[7] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1202, s. 64 A.L.R. 998.

[8] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1202, s. 64 A.L.R. 998.

[9] Applewold v. Dosch, 239 Pa. 479, 86 A. 1070, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 481.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1914D, 483.

[10] See § 68.

[11] For license regulations, see §§ 90 et seq.

[12] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1203, s. 64 A.L.R. 1000.

4. Miscellaneous Regulations

§ 80. Regulations as to Passing Street Cars.—The well-established rules stated above[14] apply to regulations as to passing street cars. To render the ordinance invalid it must be inconsistent with the state law. An ordinance requiring the operator of a motor vehicle to bring his car to a complete stop not less than a foot from the rear of any street car that is taking on or letting off passengers is not inconsistent with, or repugnant to, a provision of the state law that "in approaching or passing a car of a street railway which has been stopped to allow passengers to alight or embark, the operation of every motor vehicle shall slow down, and, if it is necessary for the safety of the public, he shall bring the said vehicle to a full stop."[15] Nor is an ordinance requiring vehicles to be stopped at a distance of 10 feet in the rear of stopping street cars inconsistent with the provision of a motor vehicle act requiring that a motor vehicle be operated with due care and caution when it overtakes a street car which is stopping to receive or discharge passengers, and that such vehicle shall be brought to a full stop if reasonably necessary for the safety of such passengers.[16]

§ 81. Requirements as to Driving or Stopping on Right Side.—The well-established rules stated above[17] apply to requirements as to traveling or stopping on the right-hand side of the street. Thus, an ordinance excluding vehicles from the left-hand side of the street when going in any given direction, and requiring one leaving a vehicle standing on any street to place it on the right-hand side thereof with reference to the direction in which it fronts, was held not repugnant to the motor vehicle act, which made no provision for changing the law of the road and included municipal highways primarily for the purpose of establishing certain speeds.[18] There was held to be no difference between a statute providing that drivers of vehicles, "wherever practicable, shall travel on the right-hand side of such highway," and an ordinance providing that "the driver of any vehicle at any place upon any street shall turn to the right, and, on all occasions, shall travel on the right-hand side of such street, and as near the right-hand curb thereof as possible," the court stating that it would be absurd to construe the ordinance as requiring such travel on the right-hand side of the street when the conditions are such that it is not practicable and that there was no difference between the ordinance and statute with regard to the rule.[19]

---

[13] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1203, s. 64 A.L.R. 1000.

[14] See § 68.

[15] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1204, s. 64 A.L.R. 1001.

[16] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1205, s. 64 A.L.R. 993.

It has been said that such an "ordinance certainly does not attempt to make lawful the performance of any act forbidden by the state law. It follows that a conflict, if any, can exist only upon the theory that the ordinance prohibits that which is affirmatively authorized by the motor vehicle act. In short, the appellants are placed under the necessity of contending that that act affirmatively authorizes motor vehicles to pass a stopping street car in a city whenever the apparent risk involved in so doing would not deter an ordinarily prudent and careful driver. We do not so construe the statute. Where the legislature has assumed to regulate a given course of conduct by prohibitory enactments, a municipality, with subordinate power to act in the matter, may make such new and additional regulations in aid and furtherance of the purpose of the general law as may seem fit and appropriate to the necessity of the particular locality, and which are not in themselves unreasonable."

However, an ordinance providing that a vehicle overtaking a street car stopped to take up or set down passengers shall come to a full stop at a distance of at least 10 feet from the point where passengers are being taken up or set down was held invalid as inconsistent with the motor vehicles act, which provided that in approaching or passing a street car which had been stopped to allow passengers to alight or embark, the operator of every motor vehicle shall slow down, and, if it be necessary for the safety of the public, shall bring the vehicle to a full stop; and which also provided that local authorities should have no power to pass any ordinance in any way respecting motor vehicles or their speed upon or use of the highway, and providing that no ordinances contrary thereto or in any wise inconsistent with the provisions of the article then in force or thereafter enacted should have any force, and also providing that all acts inconsistent with the article containing the regulation relating to passing street cars were expressly repealed. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1205, s. 64 A.L.R. 1001.

[17] See § 68.

[18] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1206, s. 64 A.L.R. 1002.

§ 82. Regulations Concerning Street Intersections.—The well-established rules stated above[20] apply to regulations at street intersections. An ordinance giving vehicles driven along a certain avenue the right of way at street intersections over those driven along the intersecting streets is not annulled by a state statute which annulled all ordinances regulating or limiting the use or speed of motor vehicles.[1] Moreover, an ordinance providing that vehicles traveling on thoroughfares known as "avenues" should have the right of way over vehicles traveling on thoroughfares known as streets, or other thoroughfares which intersect "avenues," is not invalid as conflicting with a provision of the motor vehicle act that in cities and towns, motor vehicles turning to the right from one street into another shall have the right of way over vehicles traveling on the street into which same are turning, since this provision did not cover a situation where the automobiles approach on different streets intersecting, as at right angles, without turning, but continuing in their course.[2] An ordinance requiring vehicles turning into another street at the right hand to keep "as near the right-hand curb as possible" is not invalid on the ground that it conflicts with a statute requiring travelers to keep to the right on meeting.[3]

§ 83. Regulations as to Parking.—The well-established rules stated above[4] apply to regulations as to parking. A municipality is not deprived of the power to prohibit the parking of automobiles on its congested streets by reason of provisions of the motor vehicle act making it unlawful to permit automobiles to stand near corners, hydrants, or the entrance to theaters, or with machinery running, and forbidding municipalities to exclude them from the free use of highways.[5]

§ 84. Regulations as to Lights.—The well-established rules stated above[6] apply to regulations as to lights. Where the state Constitution confers upon municipal corporations a reasonable control of their streets, the legislature cannot deprive the municipal authorities of the power to prescribe the lights on automobiles which shall be used upon such streets.[7] Where, however, the legislative power of a city was vested in the common council, and the commissioner of public safety was given supervision and control of the government, administration, and discipline of the police and fire departments, with power to adopt such reasonable rules, orders, and regulations not inconsistent with the law as might be reasonably necessary to effect a prompt and efficient exercise of all powers conferred, it was held that the commissioner could not prescribe regulations for automobile lights.[8]

---

[19] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1206, s. 64 A.L.R. 1002.

[20] See § 68.

[1] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1206, s. 64 A.L.R. 1002.

[2] Seager v. Foster, 185 Iowa, 32, 169 N. W. 681, 8 A.L.R. 690.

[3] Hiscock v. Phinney, 81 Wash. 117, 142 P. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1044.

[4] See § 68.

[5] Pugh v. Des Moines (Pugh v. Crawford) 176 Iowa, 593, 156 N. W. 892, L.R.A. 1917F, 345. In this case the court said: "It cannot be contended that by the enactment of this chapter the state, through its legislature, has taken away from the city all right to regulate the occupancy of the public streets under the power theretofore existing in the city; that it has taken away from it the power to keep it free from nuisance, and open and free to the general public as an avenue of travel."

[6] See § 68.

[7] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1211, s. 64 A.L.R. 1004.

§ 85. Regulations Prohibiting Noxious Gases, Smoke, Steam, etc.—The well-established rules stated above[9] apply to regulations prohibiting noxious gases, smoke, steam, etc. An ordinance making it unlawful for an owner of a motor vehicle to operate it, or permit it to be operated, on the streets so as to permit any noxious smoke, gas, steam, or other offensive odor to escape therefrom, or so as to discharge any embers, oil, or residue from the fuel used, is not invalid under a state act which provided that owners of motor vehicles should not be limited in the free use of such vehicles.[10]

§ 86. Regulations as to Nonresidents.—The well-established rules stated above[11] apply to provisions as to nonresidents. Thus, an ordinance requiring the payment of a license fee by automobile owners using the streets was held invalid in so far as it related to a nonresident owner who had complied with the laws of his own state, in view of the state act providing that no owner of motor vehicles is to be "required to comply with other provisions or conditions as to use of such motor vehicles, except as in this act provided," and a section of the state act which exempted nonresident owners of motor vehicles, who have complied with the laws of their own state with reference to such vehicles, from the payment of a license tax, and this conclusion was held to be true, whether the ordinance was enacted before or after the passage of the statute.[12]

§ 87. Regulations as to Weight.—The well-established rules stated above[13] apply to regulations as to weight.[14]

§ 88. Regulations as to Intoxication of Drivers.—The well-established rules stated above[15] apply to regulations as to intoxication of drivers. Accordingly, it was held that the offense of driving a motor vehicle in a city while under the influence of intoxicating liquor was not a "municipal affair," within the meaning of the constitutional provision granting to chartered cities the power to enact ordinances relating to "municipal affairs," and providing that such ordinances should prevail over legislative acts inconsistent therewith, and an ordinance making the driving of motor vehicles by one intoxicated merely a misdemeanor was held inconsistent with a statute making such offense a potential felony.[16]

[8] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1211, s. 64 A.L.R. 1004.

[9] See § 68.

[10] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1211, s. 64 A.L.R. 1004.

[11] See § 68.

[12] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1212, s. 64 A.L.R. 1004.

[13] See § 68.

[14] Thus, an ordinance providing that no motor or other vehicle which, with its load, weighs in excess of 15 tons, and that no vehicle bearing in excess of 600 pounds per inch width of tire, should be operated upon any streets, alleys, or avenues of the city, except by special permit of the city manager, and then only conditioned that the owner thereof should pay to the city any damages that might result from the operation of such vehicles, was held in conflict with the good roads law which provided that it was to be liberally construed, and, although it did not in express terms include the streets of cities, towns, and villages, comprehended them in the general term "public road," and which contained provisions as to the width and weight of vehicles which might be lawfully operated upon the highways of the state, and which required the state road commission to prepare a statement showing the amount of money collected for use in state aid of certain ways, including incorporated cities. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1212, s. 64 A.L.R. 1005.

[15] See § 68.

[16] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 1212, s. 64 A.L.R. 1005.

E. Special Privileges to Particular Vehicles or Individuals

§ 89. Generally.[17]—Certain motor vehicles engaged in public service, such as police cars, fire engines, ambulances, etc., are frequently exempt from automobile regulations. Thus, by some ordinances and statutes the fire and police apparatus is expressly given the right of way over other vehicles.[1] Such special privileges, where reasonable, are upheld as a valid exercise of the police power.[2] The power of the legislature to grant to a fire and protective association organized, owned, and controlled by fire insurance companies to attend and protect persons and property a right of way in a public street superior to that of citizens generally has been denied under a constitutional provision that no exclusive privileges shall be granted except in consideration of public service.[3]

III. LICENSING AND REGISTRATION OF PRIVATE MOTOR VEHICLES[4]

A. In General

§ 90. Generally.—In general, the principles of law controlling the licensing of occupations or privileges[5] govern in regard to the licensing and registration of motor vehicles. Obviously, the statutory enactments of the numerous jurisdictions vary in certain respects. These statutes must be individually studied. An attempt is herein made, however, to formulate general rules of law applicable to the various statutory regulations.

§ 91. Nature and Purpose.—The systems of licensing automobiles and the requirement that each machine must carry a registration number conspicuously displayed are precautions taken to furnish a means of identifying the owner. This becomes important in the case of violation of law or injury caused to pedestrians and others traveling upon the streets and highways.[6] Such statutes may also have a secondary purpose—namely, raising revenue.[7]

§ 92. Conflict between Statutes and Local Regulations.—The general rules stated above[8] obviously apply to licensing and registration regulations. Due to convenience in classification, the subject of conflicts in such regulations is treated elsewhere in this article.[9]

---

[17] As to exemption from speed laws, see supra, § 40.

[1] Balthaser v. Pacific Electric R. Co. 187 Cal. 302, 202 P. 37, 19 A.L.R. 452; Oklahoma R. Co. v. Thomas, 63 Okla. 219, 164 P. 120, L.R.A.1917E, 405.

Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 459, s. 23 A.L.R. 418.

An ordinance providing that police vehicles shall have the right of way in any street and requiring every vehicle upon the approach of a police patrol to draw up as near as practicable to the right-hand curb and remain at a standstill until the police vehicle has passed, but that street cars shall have the right of way between cross streets over other vehicles except as otherwise provided, does not impose an absolute and unconditional duty upon the motorman to stop his street car when meeting a police patrol, but if stopping is necessary to yield the right of way, then the street car must be stopped. Hogan v. Kansas City Public Service Co. — Mo. —, 19 S. W. (2d) 707, 65 A.L.R. 129.

[2] Kidd v. Chissel, 146 Md. 169, 126 A. 82, 38 A.L.R. 20 (valid as to fire apparatus, vehicles of the police department, and ambulances, but invalid as to physicians' cars, there being no provision made for identifying them); Knox v. North New Jersey Street R. Co. 70 N. J. L. 347, 57 A. 423, 1 Ann. Cas. 164.

Annotation: 38 A.L.R. 24; 65 A.L.R. 140.

[3] Louisville R. Co. v. Louisville F. & L. Protective Asso. 151 Ky. 644, 152 S. W. 799, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 600, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 89.

[4] As to license fees and taxes, see infra, §§ 113 et seq.

[5] See Licenses [Also 17 R. C. L. p. 470].

[6] State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790.

Annotation: 20 Ann. Cas. 516; 69 L.R.A. 345.

For discussion of licensing as regulatory measure, see Re Robinson, 73 Fla. 1068, 75 So. 604, L.R.A.1918B, 1148; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Weir, 63 Fla. 69, 58 So. 641, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 307, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 126.

[7] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[8] See supra, §§ 68 et seq.

B. WHO MAY LICENSE

§ 93. State.—Experience throughout the country has shown the necessity of a state-wide law as to registration by means of licenses and number plates issued by the state as the only means of controlling the immense volume of automobile traffic. It is a well-established principle of law that a state may enact reasonable licensing and registration regulations. The legislature of each state has the power to require the licensing of every motor vehicle within its boundaries and to establish detailed and reasonable regulations applicable to their use upon the public highways.[10]

§ 94. Municipal Corporations.—In considering the subject of municipal licensing and registration of motor vehicles, it is of importance to bear in mind that the statutes of the various jurisdictions now make elaborate provisions defining the scope of municipal regulations. It is well settled as a general rule that since municipalities have the power to regulate the use of their streets, they may enact valid rules and regulations for the government of motor vehicles within their precincts, so long as they are not in conflict with, or repugnant to, legislative enactments governing the use of such vehicles.[11] Thus, a city, in the absence of express or implied restrictions imposed by the legislature, may require the taking out of a municipal license before an automobile may be used regularly within its limits.[12]

C. VALIDITY

§ 95. Generally.—The general principles of constitutional law[13] and those governing the validity of statutes[14] and ordinances[15] obviously apply in determining the validity of enactments relating to the licensing and registration of motor vehicles. Such enactments, when reasonable, are sustained under the police power. Thus, it has been held that a statute requiring the owner of an automobile to file in the office of the secretary of state a duly verified declaration setting forth that he is competent to drive an automobile, together with a written statement containing his name, address, a description of the character of the automobile, the name of the maker, the manufacturer's number, and the horse power of the machine, and also requiring the payment to the secretary of state of a registry fee of one dollar, is not in violation of any provision of the Federal Constitution and is a valid exercise of the police power.[16] For the purpose of imposing a license tax, motor vehicles may properly be placed in a class by themselves, as distinguished from horse-drawn vehicles.[17]

---

[9] See supra, §§ 72 et seq.

[10] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; Com. v. Boyd, 188 Mass. 79, 74 N. E. 255, 108 Am. St. Rep. 464; Re Rogers, 7 East. L. R. (Pr. Edw. Is.) 212, 15 Ann. Cas. 1167.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502; 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440; 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950; 108 Am. St. Rep. 212; 3 Ann. Cas. 496; 15 Ann. Cas. 1169; 20 Ann. Cas. 516.

[11] See supra, §§ 68 et seq.

[12] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790; Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 64 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

Power to require the registering and numbering of automobiles is conferred upon the city council by charter authority to control, prescribe, and regulate the manner in which the streets shall be used and enjoyed. People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790.

[13] See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW [Also 6 R. C. L. p. 1].

[14] See STATUTES [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 750].

[15] See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS [Also 19 R. C. L. p. 678].

[16] Annotation: 129 Am. St. Rep. 286; 12 Ann. Cas. 291.

§ 96. Requirement of Payment of Property Taxes as Condition Precedent to Automobile License.—The validity of a statute requiring the payment of the property taxes on an automobile as a condition precedent to the issuing of a license for the operation thereof has been sustained [18] against various constitutional objections, among which are: That such a statute deprives the owner of his property without due process of law;[19] that it deprives him of the right to acquire, possess, and protect property;[20] that it denies to him the equal protection of the law;[21] that it violates the right of uniform taxation;[1] that it infringes fundamental principles of right and justice;[2] that it is a special law;[3] and that it is retrospective in effect.[4]

D. VEHICLES WITHIN SCOPE OF LICENSING OR REGISTRATION PROVISIONS

§ 97. Generally.[5]—Obviously, the vehicles within the scope of licensing or registration enactments are determined by the provisions of such enactments. Registration laws applying to motor vehicles generally include all kinds of vehicles propelled by mechanical power except traction engines and such motor vehicles as run only upon rails or tracks.[6] Motorcycles are usually included within such statutes.[7]

§ 98. Motor Vehicles "for Compensation" or "for Hire."—The problem occasionally arises as to when an automobile or truck is deemed to be operated "for compensation" or "for hire" within the contemplation of a license or tax statute or ordinance. Where a corporation transacts business in which trucks are used in delivering goods to customers without any direct charge for transportation the cost of which is added to the overhead cost of the business, such transactions are not contemplated by a statutory provision intended to apply only to those who transport "for compensation."[8] But transactions in which the owner, delivering goods to customers outside the city, makes a direct charge to them for the cost of transportation are within the contemplation of such a statute.[9] An ordinance imposing a license fee upon persons oper-

---

The legislature may require the owner of an automobile to file with the state treasurer an application for registration, containing the name of the maker, manufacturer's number, if any, and character and amount of motive power. Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706.

[17] Annotation: 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951.
See infra, §§ 115 et seq.

[18] State ex rel. Taylor v. Mirabal, 33 N. M. 553, 273 P. 928, 62 A.L.R. 296.

[19] Re Kalana, 22 Haw. 96, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1094.

[20] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 304.

[21] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 304.

[1] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 305.

[2] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 305.

[3] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 305.

[4] Re Kalana, 22 Haw. 96, Ann. Cas. 1916D. 1094.

[5] As to discrimination, see infra, §§ 115 et seq.

[6] People v. Smith, 156 Mich. 173, 120 N. W. 581, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 607.
Annotation: 16 Ann. Cas. 608.

[7] Annotation: 16 Ann. Cas. 608.
The legislature may provide, by statute, that motorcycles shall not be operated on the public highways of the state until they have been registered. Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228.
Annotation: L.R.A.1915D, 322.

[8] Collins-Dietz-Morris Co. v. State Corp. Commission, 154 Okla. 121, 7 P. (2d) 123, 80 A.L.R. 561.

[9] Ibid.
In holding that the first class of transactions above described is not contemplated by a statutory provision which was intended to apply only to those who transport for "compensation," the Oklahoma court overruled the contention based upon the accounting theory that the expense of transportation, which was first charged to overhead, was later "reflected" in the "delivery price," and declared that the transportation was only for convenience and the natural advantage incident to the delivery of the goods sold. But as to the second class of transactions, the court ruled that since the price of goods delivered outside the city was greater than the price of the ating motor trucks "for hire or compensation" on city streets has been held not to impose such a fee with respect to trucks operated by a chain grocery concern merely in delivering stock to local stores from its warehouse in another city, no freight being transported for others.[10] So, the use of a truck for the sole purpose of delivering the product of an owner's bakery to his customers has been held not to be within an ordinance requiring payment of a license fee for vehicles "for hire or reward."[11] And the operation of a "drive-it-yourself" business, whereby various makes and styles of cars are rented to persons without any drivers being furnished for them, has been held not contemplated by a statute imposing an additional registration fee upon motor vehicles "used for the transportation or delivery of persons for hire."[12] The operation of a seven-passenger car for funeral purposes, it having been hired by an undertaker and no fare being collected from the persons carried in it, has been held not for hire within an ordinance requiring vehicles carrying passengers for hire to be licensed.[13]

E. Persons Who May or Must Obtain Registration and Name in Which Registered

§ 99. Generally.—The motor vehicle laws usually provide for registration by the owner in his name. As construed by the courts, the registration statutes requiring all cars operating upon the highways of the state to be registered in the name of the owner are for the purpose of identification in order that travelers upon the highway may, in case of accident, be able to fix responsibility therefor, although there may also be a secondary purpose of raising revenue.[14] With this in view, it is not surprising that the courts have been strict in their requirement as to the form of the name used to identify the owner.[15] Registration in the name of the owner upon his application, but not completed until after his death, is illegal.[16] Obviously, a registration in the name of one other than the owner under the ordinary form of statute is illegal.[17]

§ 100. Married Women.—As indicated in the preceding section,[18] the courts are strict in their requirement as to the form of the name used to identify the owner. A registration in the maiden name of the married owner is held illegal under a statute requiring registration in the name of the owner.[19] same goods sold and not delivered, the seller received direct compensation for the delivery in its trucks, and so was within the statute. Ibid.

§ 101. Agents.—As shown above,[20] the courts are strict in their require-

---

[10] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 574.

[11] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 575.

[12] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 575.

[13] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 575.

An undertaker who used his own automobile in taking families of deceased persons and friends to cemeteries, in connection with funerals which he conducted, and collected compensation for this service in addition to his charges for other services as an undertaker was held to be engaged in the occupation of carrying passengers for hire, within the meaning of an ordinance imposing a license fee for so doing. Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 575.

[14] See § 134.

[15] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[16] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1104.

The issuance of the certificate in decedent's name by the registration commission, without notice of his death, will not amount to a legal registration of the car as against his widow, who was also one of the executors of his will. Ibid.

[17] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

An automobile registered in the name of another was held illegally registered as against the contention that the registration statute was for the purpose of revenue. The court answered this contention by saying: "It is notorious that one important object of this registration is to identify the owners of every car which uses the highways of the state." Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[18] See supra, § 99.

[19] Bacon v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 256 Mass. 30, 152 N. E. 35, 47 A.L.R. 1100.

[20] See supra, § 99.

ment as to the form of the name used to identify the owner. Thus, an automobile registered in the name of a son as a dealer who, as agent for his father, was conducting the business has been held illegally registered.[1]

§ 102. Corporations.—A corporation which owns or controls a motor vehicle should register it in the corporate name.[2]

§ 103. Unincorporated Associations.—A registration of a car owned by an unincorporated association must be made in the name of the members of the association; a registration in the name of the association is illegal.[3] Even assuming a registration embraces all the members at the time thereof, it is invalidated by changes in the membership, under a statute making the registration expire upon a transfer of ownership.[4] But a registration in a tradename has been sustained.[5]

§ 104. Partners.—A partnership which owns or controls a motor vehicle should register it in the partnership name.[6] Registration in the name of the partners where the automobile belongs to the partnership has been held illegal.[7] A truck registered in the firm name of a partnership which had previously been dissolved and a new partnership consisting of different partners formed is illegally registered.[8] So, where an automobile is registered in the name of two partners, and subsequently the interest of the partnership has been transferred to one of the partners, the fact that the partner to whom the car has been transferred was formerly registered as part owner does not make the registration after he acquired sole ownership valid.[9]

§ 105. Part Owners.—The fact that an automobile is registered in the name of a person who is only part owner does not invalidate the registration, so long as such part owner in whose name it is registered operates or is present in the car.[10] However, for such registration by a part owner to be lawful, it must be in the name of the part owner operating and having control of the car; otherwise, it would be unlawful.[11]

§ 106. Tradename.—It has been held that where an automobile is registered under a tradename under which business is transacted, it is legally registered.[12]

§ 107. Conditional Buyer and Seller.—As shown above,[13] the courts are strict in their requirement as to the form of the name used to identify the owner. Registration in the name of a conditional buyer, however, is a valid registration, notwithstanding the statute provides that registration must be in the name of the owner.[14] Also, it may properly be registered in the name of the conditional seller and operated by the buyer.[15]

---

[1] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[2] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[3] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[4] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[5] See infra, § 106.

[6] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[7] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[8] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[9] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

[10] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1104.

[11] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1104.

[12] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1104. The court said: "The plaintiff's application and the registration followed the name in which he did business. But if registration under a fictitious name adopted for the purpose of concealing identity would not be a compliance with the statute, because the record would not show, or the certificate contain, a descriptive statement by which the true owner could be ascertained, the jury could properly find that the plaintiff was well known in the community by his tradename. If this appeared, the requirements of the statute were satisfied."

[13] See supra, § 99.

[14] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1104.

[15] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1104.

F. Exemptions

§ 108. Generally.—Statutes governing the registration of motor vehicles in some instances contain exceptions in the case of certain vehicles, the most common of which are those used in, or in connection with, agriculture. The provisions of these exceptions are not uniform, and no general rules of construction can at present be laid down in regard to all of them. A tendency, however, seems manifest from the cases to apply the exemptions of motor vehicles used for farm purposes rather liberally to effectuate the apparent purpose of the legislature.[16] Statutes exist exempting implements of husbandry operated temporarily on the highways, but excepting vehicles for hire;[17] exempting motor vehicles used exclusively in transporting dairy or farm products between the point of production and the primary market;[18] and exempting "agricultural locomotives" and engines used for "agricultural purposes."[19]

§ 109. Governmental Vehicles.—As shown above, certain motor vehicles engaged in public service are frequently exempt from automobile regulations.[20] Statutes relating to licensing and registration frequently exempt public or governmental motor vehicles. There is no unjust and unfair discrimination in exempting from the provisions of an act requiring the licensing and registry of motor vehicles, fire engines, fire trucks, and police patrol wagons, these being governmental agencies maintained by general taxation; road rollers used largely by public authority for road purposes; street cars and vehicles operated upon fixed tracks and already otherwise taxed; motorcycles, and motor bicycles.[1] But a statute exempting municipal property from taxation does not relieve the municipality from the necessity of obtaining a license to operate motor vehicles on the public highways, although the fees are designed in part for raising revenue for governmental purposes, where the licensing statute expressly provides for the exemption of certain other vehicles from its operation.[2]

---

[16] Annotation: 91 A.L.R. 423.

It was held that the word "to," as used in a statute providing for a certain license fee "for motor vehicles of up to 20 horse power" and for a larger amount "for motor vehicles of 21 horse power and less than 40 horse power inclusive" was a word of inclusion, and not of "exclusion," and that the statute did not exempt from license fee those motor vehicles which were of 20 horse power or those of 40 horse power, the court stating that one of the purposes of the statute was to require the registration of "all" motor vehicles which should be operated or driven upon the streets or highways. Annotation: 91 A.L.R. 423.

[17] In Allred v. J. C. Engelman, 123 Tex. 205, 61 S. W. (2d) 75, 91 A.L.R. 417, where a statute providing that every owner of a motor vehicle, trailer, or semitrailer used upon the highways should apply for a registration of such vehicle contained a proviso that the owners of farm tractors, farm trailers, farm semitrailers, and implements of husbandry operated or moved temporarily upon the highway, should not be required to be registered, it was held that the exception of "implements of husbandry operated or moved temporarily upon the highway" clearly exempted from the requirements of registration vehicles, other than those expressly exempted, which were designed and used primarily as farm vehicles and which might be operated or moved temporarily upon the highway, and that trucks designed and used exclusively for the purpose of carting water for irrigation on the owner's land and land of others which the owner of the trucks had contracted to irrigate and tank trucks carrying oil and gasoline to tractors in the orchards and fields were "implements of husbandry" within the above exception, although in making their trips they passed along highways which intersected the lands served. The fact that such trucks were used by the owner in performing service agreements with other landowners was held not to render the exemption from registration inapplicable, where the statute provided that the exemption should not apply to any "farm trailer" or "farm semitrailer" when used for hire, since the express statement that the exemption should not apply to these vehicles when used for hire implied that the exemption should apply to all other exempted vehicles, whether used for hire or not. On an earlier appeal of this case in (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. (2d) 945, the exemption of the trucks in question from registration under the statute was sustained.

[18] It was held that "points of production," as used in a motor vehicle tax statute excepting motor vehicles used exclusively in transporting or delivering dairy or other farm products between the point of production and the primary market, meant the farm where the live stock was prepared for disposal and where milk was produced and agricultural products raised, or where dairy farm products were made, and therefore included cheese factories and creameries where cheese and butter were made by the producers of the milk and cream. Annotation: 91 A.L.R. 424.

The words "dairy or other farm products," as used in the exception meant cheese and butter produced at factories or creameries, but did not include malted, condensed, evaporated, or powdered milk or ice cream. Annotation: 91 A.L.R. 424.

[19] It was held that any locomotive which was actually used, or which was intended by the owner to be used, for a purpose excepted by a statute providing for the licensing of every locomotive, but further providing that the enactment should not apply to any "agricultural locomotive," and defining that expression to include "any locomotive used solely for threshing, plowing, or any other agricultural purpose," was not required to be licensed, that a locomotive which had previously been used for haulage purposes and which was purchased by one who intended to use it solely for agricultural purposes was not required to be licensed, and that the purchaser could not be convicted for driving it along the highway from the place of purchase to his premises without a license, notwithstanding the locomotive could not be used for agricultural purposes without alteration. Annotation: 91 A.L.R. 424.

A state law properly exempts from the requirements of registration vehicles owned and operated by the Federal government.[3] However, one contracting to transport United States mail is not absolved from the duty of obtaining state licenses for motor trucks used in the business.[4] Likewise, a taxicab owner using the streets of a city in conveying United States soldiers, for pay from them, to and from a military camp outside the city, under a contract with the commandant of the camp granting a monopoly of the soldier trade and requiring that the automobiles be run on schedules and that the fare be reasonable, was held not exempt from regulations imposing the payment of a license fee upon taxicab owners.[5]

G. Procedure Relating to Licensing and Registration

§ 110. Generally.—The procedure relating to licensing and registration is generally set out in detail in the statutes. The application for the registration must answer the questions propounded to the applicant. Licensing officials handle such applications. Provisions for renewal of registration also are made by such statutes.

H. Registration Cards and License Plates

§ 111. Generally.—In general, the statutes require an applicant for registration to procure a registration card and license plates, and to display the plates on the vehicle.[6] There can now be no doubt that the legislature may properly pass a law requiring every automobile to be registered and to display a registration number in such a manner that it may be plainly visible,[7] and may prohibit the operation of an automobile in a street or other public place unless it complies with such regulations.[8] Such a requirement does not violate the constitutional provision against unreasonable searches, or compel the owner to testify against himself or deprive him of property without due process of law.[9]

---

[20] See supra, § 89.

[1] Annotation: 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951.

[2] State v. Preston, 103 Or. 631, 206 P. 304, 23 A.L.R. 414.
Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 463, s. 23 A.L.R. 418.

[3] State v. Preston, 103 Or. 631, 206 P. 304, 23 A.L.R. 414.

[4] State v. Wiles, 116 Wash. 387, 199 P. 749, 18 A.L.R. 1163.

[5] Ex parte Marshall, 75 Fla. 97, 77 So. 869, L.R.A.1918C, 944.

[6] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706.

[7] Com. v. Boyd, 188 Mass. 79, 74 N. E. 255, 108 Am. St. Rep. 464; People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790.
Annotation: 69 L.R.A. 345; 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 216; 108 Am. St. Rep. 218.

[8] Annotation: 5 Ann. Cas. 793.

[9] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790.

Since the carrying at one time of registration tags of several states would make it difficult quickly to read and note the number belonging to a particular jurisdiction, laws regulating automobiles may provide that the license number obtained in any other state or jurisdiction must be removed while the machine is being used within the confines of the state.[10]

§ 112. Liability of One Lending License Plate to Another.—The view has been taken that a dealer who lends his automobile number plates to enable the borrower to move his car from one town to another for repairs is personally liable for injuries caused by the operation of the car on the highway.[11] This view, while good law in a jurisdiction where the courts hold that an automobile not properly licensed is an outlaw upon the highway, or, in other words, a nuisance, for all injurious consequences resulting from which to third persons, all persons who contribute thereto or participate in the creation thereof are liable, probably would not be generally followed in other jurisdictions which adhere to the general rule that the fact that an automobile which injures a traveler is not properly registered or licensed does not create a liability unless such fact proximately contributed to the accident.[12]

I. LICENSE FEES AND TAXES

1. INTRODUCTORY

§ 113. Generally.[13]—The fees which have been levied against automobiles have either been fees levied under the police power or have been an impost in the nature of a revenue measure. Revenue imposts may be by way of personal property taxes, which are discussed in another title,[14] or they may be excise or license taxes which are intended for revenue purposes and are ordinarily based upon the privilege of operating or using the highways, or as compensation for damage done thereto.[15]

§ 114. Nature of Fees and Taxes.—In general it may be said that if the fee exacted exceeds the amount necessary for the administration of the law, it is an exercise of the power of taxation, or, to express it in other words, a revenue measure. These two purposes may be combined.[16] While the intention of the legislature as to whether the impost is one levied under the police power or is an exercise of the power of taxation is not absolutely controlling, it is an important factor in determining the nature of the license fee.[17]

---

[10] Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa. 297, 67 A. 508, 7 Ann. Cas. 548. It was held in this case, however, that such a state law does not apply to license tags which may be required under an ordinance of one of the cities of the state, and that an ordinance requiring additional tags was not necessarily inconsistent with the state law, and was not repealed thereby.

[11] McDonald v. Dundon, 242 Mass. 229, 136 N. E. 264, 26 A.L.R. 1243.

[12] Worsham Buick Co. v. Isaacs, 121 Tex. 587, 51 S. W. (2d) 277, 86 A.L.R. 232.

Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 236.

In the absence of any statute inflicting a penalty for the loaning of license plates, the lender is not liable criminally for the criminal acts of the borrower, such as a violation of the speed limit. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 236.

See generally, § 164.

[13] For a general discussion of license fees and taxes on motor carriers, see MOTOR TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES.

As to license taxes on automobile dealers, see LICENSES [Also 17 R. C. L. p. 470].

[14] For a discussion of general rules regarding taxation, see TAXATION [Also 26 R. C. L. p. 1].

[15] As to regulation of motor carriers generally, see MOTOR TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES.

[16] State v. Preston, 103 Or. 631, 206 P. 304, 23 A.L.R. 414.

[17] Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157, 146 N. W. 338, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 128; Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

The court, in Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157, 146 N. W. 338, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 128, said: "There are cases holding that where the law expressly directs that the fund derived from the license fee shall be used for purposes other than Generally speaking, the modern statutes are revenue measures,[18] although they are not, strictly speaking, property taxes.[19] The term by which the act is designated is not determinative of its character.

These statutes have been variously designated as excise,[20] license,[1] privilege,[2] and wheel taxes,[3] etc.

Some of the courts view the statutes as tax statutes, without considering definitely the subject of the tax. Others view the license fees and taxes now under consideration as imposts on a privilege, as distinguished from taxes on property.[4] Some of the acts expressly levy the tax on the privilege of using the public roads.[5] These taxes are said to be in the nature of a toll for using the highways.[6] They are not, however, tolls in the commonly accepted sense of a toll levied by the proprietor of a highway or bridge for passage thereover.[7] A registration or license fee imposed by statute upon motor vehicles, and used for the maintenance of highways within the state, is not a "toll," within the meaning of an act of Congress forbidding tolls on Federal aid roads.[8]

2. Validity

a. In General

§ 115. Generally.—The power of the state to exact a fee under the police defraying the expenses of issuing the license and of regulation, it thereby makes of the fee a tax, and converts what was intended to be a police measure into a revenue law. Berry, Automobiles, § 87; Chicago v. Collins, 175 Ill. 445, 51 N. E. 907, 49 L.R.A. 408, 67 Am. St. Rep. 224; Livingston v. Paducah, 80 Ky. 656; Ellis v. Frazier, 38 Or. 462, 63 P. 642, 53 L.R.A. 454. But the better rule seems to be that the disposition of the fee will not alone determine whether it is a license or a tax. If, upon investigation, the fee is found to be only sufficient to pay the expense that may reasonably be presumed to arise in the supervision and regulation of the automobile licensed, its disposition should not have the effect of converting it into a tax. State ex rel. Troll v. Hudson, 78 Mo. 302. The act we are considering provides for no policing or police regulation. The expense of operating the department, including the furnishing of the lists of owners to the county clerks, will be so inconsiderable, compared with the amount collected, that we must take judicial notice that the great amount of surplus (probably more than half a million dollars) renders the imposition of the license fee or tax so wholly and palpably unreasonable as to invalidate the law as a license measure, and to stamp upon it the intention of imposing a tax instead of a license. The clear purpose of the legislature in exacting so large an amount from the owners of automobiles was to produce a fund for highway purposes under the guise of regulation, which makes it a tax measure, which clearly is not covered by the title of the act. The obvious purpose of the amendment in the Act of 1913, increasing the fees according to horse power, was to increase that fund. There can be no more labor or expense in registering a vehicle of high horse power than in registering one of low power, and the only reasonable purpose in the graduated fee is the increased revenue. This graduated fee according to horse power must be held to be a mere guise or subterfuge to obtain the increased revenue. . . . In our opinion the act is clearly a tax measure when stripped of its guise, and as a tax measure the object is not embraced in the title, and for that reason alone is unconstitutional."

---

[18] Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440.

[19] See infra, §§ 118 et seq.

[20] Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440.

[1] Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228.

Some cases designating the fee as a license fee mean an impost made under the police power, and not a tax. Com. v. Boyd, 188 Mass. 79, 74 N. E. 255, 108 Am. St. Rep. 464.

[2] State v. Lawrence, 108 Miss. 291, 66 So. 745, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 322; Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[3] Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440; Chicago v. Morell, 247 Ill. 383, 93 N. E. 295, 139 Am. St. Rep. 340; Harder's Fire Proof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536.

[4] Harder's Fire Proof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536; Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[5] See statute involved in State v. Lawrence, 108 Miss. 291, 66 So. 745, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 322; Re Hoffert, 34 S. D. 271, 148 N. W. 20, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949.

[6] State v. Lawrence, 108 Miss. 291, 66 So. 745, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 322.

[7] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194.

Annotation: 68 A.L.R. 200.

[8] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S.

power for the operation of motor vehicles on the streets and highways of the state is well established.[9] The state is not limited to the imposing of fees under the police power; it may levy a tax for revenue purposes,[10] not limited, as in the case of an impost under the police power, to the cost of administering the law.[11]

The state may even impose such a tax upon the motor vehicles of a municipality.[12]

The fact that the statute may be enforced by criminal proceedings,[13] at least by arrest and imprisonment,[14] does not invalidate it.

§ 116. Municipal Fees and Taxes.—The right of the state to delegate to its municipalities or local subdivisions the power to impose a license fee depends upon the form of constitutional provision applicable to the situation. In the absence of a constitutional prohibition, it has been held to have such power.[15] A provision conferring upon the legislature general powers of taxation does not deprive it of power to authorize a municipality to pass such an ordinance.[16] On the other hand, a constitutional provision giving the general assembly power to provide for the payment of license fees on trades, occupations, and professions was held not to confer power to impose a license fee upon motor vehicles not used or let for hire, as such a fee would not be an occupation tax.[17]

§ 117. Local Improvement District Fees and Taxes.—The legislature has no power to authorize a local road improvement district to levy on the use of automobiles in the district a privilege tax to be used for the construction or maintenance of roads.[18] Although a county or municipality may, under appropriate legislation, contribute from its funds to the construction of local

---

66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194.

[9] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; State v. Gish, 168 Iowa, 70, 150 N. W. 37, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 135.

One attacking fees required for use of the public highway by a motor vehicle cannot prevail while he admits that some amount is due for the use of the highways, but makes no tender of the amount. Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 500, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[10] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 440 (wheel tax); Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228; Chicago v. Morell, 247 Ill. 383, 93 N. E. 295, 139 Am. St. Rep. 340 (wheel tax); Harder's Fire Proof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536 (wheel tax); Kane v. State, 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, L.R.A.1917B, 553, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237, affirmed in 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30; Re Hoffert, 34 S. D. 271, 148 N. W. 20, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, and L.R.A.1915D, 322; 129 Am. St. Rep. 286.

That a statute combines a police regulation and an exercise of the taxing power does not render it invalid, if it operates uniformly throughout the state. State v. Preston, 103 Or. 631, 206 P. 304, 23 A.L.R. 414.

[11] Kane v. State, 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, L.R.A.1917B, 553, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237, affirmed in 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30.

[12] State v. Preston, 103 Or. 631, 206 P. 304, 23 A.L.R. 414.

[13] Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440.

Annotation: 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, s. 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.

[14] Chicago v. Morell, 247 Ill. 383, 93 N. E. 295, 139 Am. St. Rep. 340.

Annotation: 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, s. 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.

[15] Ft. Smith v. Scruggs, 70 Ark. 549, 69 S. W. 679, 58 L.R.A. 921, 91 Am. St. Rep. 100; Applewold v. Dosch, 239 Pa. 479, 86 A. 1070, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 481.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 942, s. 68 A.L.R. 200; 87 A.L.R. 549; 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 441, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.

And see infra, § 20.

[16] Harder's Fire Proof, Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536.

[17] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 764.

[18] Whaley v. Northern Road Improv. Dist. 152 Ark. 573, 240 S. W. 1, 24 A.L.R. 934.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 941, s. 68 A.L.R. 200.

The Arkansas court bases its decision on the ground that the only tax which may be specially imposed for a local improvement is one dependent on or determined by benefits accruing to real property from the improvement. Whaley v. Northern Road Improv. Dist. 152 Ark. 573, 240 S. W. 1, 24 A.L.R. 934.

improvements, it has been held that the funds raised under power of general taxation cannot be turned over to road improvement districts, to be under their exclusive management and control and expended solely for their benefit.[19]

b. As Affected by General Principles of Taxation

§ 118. Generally.—General principles of taxation and the limits existing with reference thereto have been invoked in many cases involving automobile license fees.[20] In the absence of constitutional prohibition, the legislature may exact a tax upon automobiles for the privilege of using the highways, and exempt them from payment of an ad valorem tax.[21]

In the enactment of such statutes the state is governed by the general rules governing the enactment of statutes generally. In many of the states there are constitutional provisions to the effect that no act shall contain more than one subject, which shall be expressed or described in the title.[1] A violation of this provision renders the act invalid.[2] If, according to the object so expressed, the enactment is a police measure and not a revenue measure, it will be held invalid if, in the act itself, the purpose is plainly apparent to enact a revenue measure.[3]

§ 119. Limitations on ad Valorem Taxes.—Provisions for the payment of a fee by those using motor vehicles on the highway are generally held not to be property taxes, but rather, to be in the nature of a license, and therefore to be unaffected by constitutional provisions governing ad valorem taxes,[4] which are taxes upon the true value[5] or "valuation" of property.[6] A statute fixing registration fees according to the horsepower of the automobile used does not impose a property tax.[7]

---

[19] Annotation: 68 A.L.R. 209.

[20] See infra, §§ 119 et seq.

[21] Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 500, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[1] See Statutes [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 834, § 82].

[2] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157, 146 N. W. 338, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 128.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 939, s. 68 A.L.R. 200.

It has been held that a statute requiring that auto transportation companies shall register with the department of law enforcement, and file liability and property damage insurance policies or surety bonds, that permits shall be issued to such companies, that they shall make a monthly report and pay a 5 per cent fee upon their gross earnings, and that such fees shall be paid into the highway fund, with other incidental provisions for the enforcement of the act, and making a violation of it a misdemeanor, did not embrace more than one subject and matters properly connected therewith, and that the subject was expressed in the title, "To Regulate Auto Transportation Companies." Annotation: 68 A.L.R. 208.

For illustration as to titles, see annotation: 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 956.

[3] Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157, 146 N. W. 338, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 128.

It has been held, however, that a statute entitled, "An Act to Regulate, License, and Govern the Use of Motor Vehicles," has been held not to be objectionable as relating to two subjects, only one of which was expressed in the title, where it appeared that the statute was not only a police measure, but designed to raise revenue by license fees for the purpose of maintaining public roads. Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 940, s. 68 A.L.R. 200.

The title of the Michigan statute was later amended so as to refer expressly to the levying of specific taxes on motor vehicles, the disposition of such funds, and the exemption of motor vehicles thus taxed from all other taxation. The amended title was held not to be objectionable. Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 941, s. 68 A.L.R. 200.

[4] Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 500, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 759.

[5] Kane v. State, 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, L.R.A.1917B, 553, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237, affirmed on other grounds in 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30; State ex rel. Fargo v. Wetz, 40 N. D. 299, 168 N. W. 835, 5 A.L.R. 731.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 759.

[6] Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 760.

The fact that a tax upon the right to use motor vehicles on the highway is in excess of the cost of policing the highway and is not graduated according to the value of the cars does not bring it into conflict with the constitutional provision that the legislature shall provide revenue by levying a tax by valuation. Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228.

§ 120. Provisions against Double Taxation.—Some of the statutes imposing a license fee or tax upon automobiles expressly declare that the license fee shall be in lieu of other taxation.[8] Others impose the license fee in addition to property taxation. Such a levy is permissible. To constitute double taxation within the prohibition of the Constitution, the same property must be taxed twice, and it is held that that prohibition is not violated by a statute imposing a license or excise tax on motor vehicles upon which an ad valorem tax is also levied.[9] In fact, a tax can be imposed upon automobiles for the privilege of using the streets and highways even though the owners have paid a personal property tax on such cars and also an occupation tax.[10] It is sometimes insisted that the tax must be reasonable,[11] but in other cases it is admitted that the power to tax may go to unreasonable limits.[12] A state is not limited in the imposition of taxes by the number of taxes, provided the total of the taxes levied, if imposed by a single taxing statute, would not transgress the due process clause.[13] A tax by the state for the use of the state highways is not objectionable because the licensee is already paying a municipal tax in the municipality in which it operates.[14]

§ 121. Provisions as to Uniformity and Discrimination.—Not all discrimination or classification is forbidden in taxation.[15] The imposition of a tax on automobiles as a class has uniformly been sustained, even though other kinds of vehicles are not taxed.[16] A classification need not be either logically appropriate or scientifically accurate.[17] It is enough if it is impartial within the class.[18] Equal protection is not denied by such statutes.[19] Moreover, it is

---

[7] Kane v. State, 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, L.R.A.1917B, 553, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237, affirmed in 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30.

[8] See statutes involved in Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157, 146 N. W. 338, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 128; State ex rel. Fargo v. Wetz, 40 N. D. 299, 168 N. W. 835, 5 A.L.R. 731; Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[9] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 440; Re Hoffert, 34 S. D. 271, 148 N. W. 20, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 760; 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 953, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.

[10] Harder's Fire Proof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536 (tax contested by a storage and van company).

[11] Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440.

[12] Harder's Fire Proof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536.

[13] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194.

[14] Ibid.

[15] See TAXATION [Also 26 R. C. L. p. 241, §§ 214 et seq.].

[16] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 440; State v. Lawrence, 108 Miss. 291, 66 So. 745, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 322; Re Hoffert, 34 S. D. 271, 148 N. W. 20, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 761; 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.

An ordinance imposing on owners and operators of motor cars or trucks a much greater license fee than upon the owners and operators of horse-drawn vehicles was held to make a reasonable classification and not to be unconstitutional. Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 761.

[17] Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440.

[18] Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440; Iowa Motor Vehicle Asso. v. Railroad Comrs. 207 Iowa, 461, 221 N. W. 364, 75 A.L.R. 1, affirmed without opinion in 280 U. S. 529, 74 L. ed. 595, 50 S. Ct. 151; State v. Lawrence, 108 Miss. 291, 66 So. 745, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 322.

It has been held that the imposition of a license tax upon one privilege, and not upon another, does not create any inequality of taxation when all of the persons engaged in exercising the taxed privilege bear the burden alike or when those following the same calling are divided into classes for the purpose of classification, provided the classification is reasonable and founded upon a real distinction, and not an arbitrary one; and a statute imposing a license tax upon all persons who use motor vehicles upon the public highways, basing the tax on the horse power generally held that a license fee on automobiles is not a tax within the meaning of constitutional provisions requiring uniformity and forbidding discrimination in levying taxes.[20]

Dealers may be placed in a class by themselves.[1] Private owners may be segregated from manufacturers.[2] Manufacturers and vendors may be exempt as to stock kept for sale.[3]

Vehicles for hire may be placed in a separate class.[4] There may be discrimination between common carriers transporting freight on the highway and private motor carriers.[5] The state may single out motor carriers and levy a tax on them not levied on other motor vehicles.[6] In fact, it may go further and impose a fee on carriers on fixed routes[7] or on jitney busses,[8] or it may except owners of trucks who make no direct charge for their services and carriers who operate exclusively within the corporate limits of an incorporated city or town, or within 3 miles thereof.[9] Discrimination may be based upon seating capacity.[10] A distinction may be made between pleasure and business cars.[11] Such statutes do not amount to class legislation.[12] It has been held that a statute imposing a license tax on motor vehicles used for the conveyance of persons on the highway outside the limits of municipalities and exempting vehicles which are used for trade and commercial purposes within said limits does not grant an unconstitutional immunity.[13]

§ 122. Provisions against Local and Special Legislation.—A license fee or tax which operates alike on all motor vehicles in the state is not a local or special law within the prohibitions against such laws contained in the Constitution. In fact, it may, without coming under such condemnation, single out motor carriers.[14]

§ 123. Prohibitions against Interference with Local Taxing Districts.—The state may, in levying license fees upon automobiles for highway purposes, exempt them from other taxation as against a municipality which might otherwise have levied a personal property tax thereon,[15] notwithstanding the of the vehicle, has been held valid. Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 762.

---

[19] Iowa Motor Vehicle Asso. v. Railroad Comrs. 207 Iowa, 461, 221 N. W. 364, 75 A.L.R. 1, affirmed without opinion in 280 U. S. 529, 74 L. ed. 595, 50 S. Ct. 151.

[20] Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228; State v. Lawrence, 108 Miss. 291, 66 So. 745, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 322.
Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 760; 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.

[1] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706.
Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.

[2] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 761.

[3] See infra, § 137.

[4] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.

[5] Bekins Van Lines v. Riley, 280 U. S. 80, 74 L. ed. 178, 50 S. Ct. 64.

[6] Iowa Motor Vehicle Asso. v. Railroad Comrs. 207 Iowa, 461, 221 N. W. 364, 75 A.L.R. 1, affirmed without opinion in 280 U. S. 529, 74 L. ed. 595, 50 S. Ct. 151.

[7] Ibid.

[8] Desser v. Wichita, 96 Kan. 820, 153 P. 1194, L.R.A.1916D, 246.

[9] Portland Van & Storage Co. v. Hoss, 139 Or. 434, 9 P. (2d) 122, 81 A.L.R. 1136.
Annotation: 81 A.L.R. 1145.

[10] An ordinance providing for the licensing of motor vehicles of two or more seats, which was valid when passed, was held not to be rendered unconstitutional on the ground of unjust discrimination by the subsequent introduction of motor vehicles of only one seat. Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 762.

[11] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 761.

[12] Iowa Motor Vehicle Asso. v. Railroad Comrs. 207 Iowa, 461, 221 N. W. 364, 75 A.L.R. 1, affirmed without opinion in 280 U. S. 529, 74 L. ed. 595, 50 S. Ct. 151.

[13] Re Hoffert, 34 S. D. 271, 148 N. W. 20, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949.

[14] Iowa Motor Vehicle Asso. v. Railroad Comrs. 207 Iowa, 461, 221 N. W. 364, 75 A.L.R. 1, affirmed in 280 U. S. 529, 74 L. ed. 595, 50 S. Ct. 151.

[15] State ex rel. Fargo v. Wetz, 40 N. D. 299, 168 N. W. 835, 5 A.L.R. 731.
It has been held that the provision of the Alabama Constitution that the legislature shall not enact any law which will permit any person, firm, corporation, or whole revenue realized by the license tax is not to be expended on highways in the municipality.[16] It has been held, however, that the state cannot distribute a part of the proceeds thereof to the road funds of the counties from which received, under a constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from imposing a tax upon the inhabitants and property of counties for county purposes.[17]

A state license fee does not offend a constitutional prohibition against an assessment of property for taxation elsewhere than in the county wherein it is situated, since such provision refers to ordinary ad valorem taxes, and does not include license taxes or fees.[18]

c. As Question Relates to Interstate Commerce

§ 124. Generally.—The state may impose fees upon nonresident motorists using its highways in interstate commerce.[19] It may impose such fees on interstate carriers.[20] This is sometimes made to depend upon failure of Congress to act.[1] The exact scope of the field in which congressional action is exclusive of state action and that which remains within the power of the states are discussed at another point.[2] If the fees assessed by the state are reasonable, no unlawful burden on interstate commerce results.[3] The reasonableness of the state's action is always subject to inquiry so far as it affects interstate commerce and, in that regard, is subordinate to the will of Congress.[4] It seems clear that a statute imposing fees for the use of the state highways, not upon all users, but only upon those users engaged in interstate commerce, must be held unconstitutional and invalid.[5]

§ 125. For Highway Purposes.—Where a state at its own expense furnishes special facilities in the way of roads for the use of those engaged in commerce, association to pay a privilege, license, or other tax to the state, and relieve him or it from the payment of all other privilege and license taxes in the state, was intended to prohibit the legislature from enacting a law which would require the payment of one privilege tax or license fee for the benefit of the state alone, to the exclusion of the counties and municipalities, and the section was held not violated by a motor vehicle act providing for the payment of a license or registration fee, although the act provided that these fees should be in lieu of all other privilege licenses which the state or any county or municipality might impose, where the act provided that the revenue derived from the license fees should be divided between the state, the town, and the county in which the licensee resides. Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 763.

---

[16] State ex rel. Fargo v. Wetz, 40 N. D. 299, 168 N. W. 835, 5 A.L.R. 731.

[17] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706.

A section of a motor vehicle act providing that one half of the net receipts under the act should be returned to the counties from which the money was received was held to violate a constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from imposing a tax upon the inhabitants and property of counties for county purposes.

[18] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 763.

[19] Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, 69 L. ed. 623, 45 S. Ct. 324, 38 A.L.R. 286; Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30; Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140; Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27. State ex rel. Cronkhite v. Belden, 193 Wis. 145, 211 N. W. 916, 57 A.L.R. 1218.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 939, s. 68 A.L.R 208; 82 A.L.R. 1091; Ann. Cas. 1917E, 324.

[20] Interstate Trucking Co. v. Dammann, 208 Wis. 116, 241 N. W. 625, 82 A.L.R. 1080.

Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1091. See MOTOR TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES.

[1] "In the absence of Federal legislation covering the subject, a state may rightfully prescribe uniform regulations necessary for public safety and order in respect to the operation upon its highways of all motor vehicles,—those moving in interstate commerce as well as others. And to this end it may require the registration of such vehicles and the licensing of their drivers, charging therefor reasonable fees graduated according to the horse power of the engines,—a practical measure of size, speed, and difficulty of control." Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140.

[2] See COMMERCE [Also 5 R. C. L. p. 702, § 15].

[3] Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30; Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140.

[4] Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140.

[5] Annotation: 68 A.L.R. 208.

interstate as well as intrastate, it may exact compensation therefor.[6] Common carriers for hire who make the highways their place of business may properly be charged a tax for such use not required of persons generally, and this rule applies to carriers engaged exclusively in interstate commerce,[7] at least in the absence of action by Congress inhibiting such fees.[8] The amount of the charges and the method of collection are primarily for determination by the state itself; and so long as they are reasonable and are fixed according to some uniform, fair, and practical standard, they constitute no burden on interstate commerce.[9] It is clearly within the discretion of the state to determine whether the compensation for the use of its highways by automobiles shall be determined by way of a fee, payable annually or semiannually, or by a toll based on mileage or otherwise.[10] Such fees must, however, be reasonable.[11] They will be presumed to be reasonable in the absence of a contrary showing.[12]

§ 126. Graduated Fees.—The fees which the state may charge may be graduated according to horse power,[13] since this is a practical measure of size and of the wear and tear of the vehicle on the highways and streets.[14]

3. Amount of Tax

a. In General

§ 127. Generally.—The amount of the license fee or tax depends upon its nature. A fee imposed as a police regulation [15] is different in this respect from one imposed under the power of taxation.[16]

§ 128. Under Police Power.—The amount of the fee which may be levied under the police power is limited to that necessary to the administration of the law;[17] or, as sometimes expressed, the amount must not be disproportionate to the cost of issuing the license and the regulation of the business to which it applies.[18] The amount of the fee rests to a certain extent in the sound discretion of the legislature, which takes into consideration all the circumstances and necessities of the case.[19] It will be presumed that the amount of the fee is reasonable unless the contrary appears upon the face of the law itself or is established by proper evidence.[20] The fact that revenue is incidentally derived does not invalidate the law as a police regulation if such revenue is not so disproportionate as to make the fee charged unreasonable.[1]

---

[6] Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, 69 L. ed. 623, 45 S. Ct. 324, 38 A.L.R. 286; Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30; Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140.

[7] Clark v. Poor, 274 U. S. 554, 71 L. ed. 1199, 47 S. Ct. 702; Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

The fact that all of the tax is not used for maintenance and repair of the highways, but that some of it is used for defraying the expenses of the commission in the administration or enforcement of the act and some for other purposes is immaterial so far as the rights of the carrier are concerned, for inasmuch as the tax is assessed for a proper purpose, and is not objectionable in amount, the use to which the proceeds are put is not a matter which concerns the carrier. Clark v. Poor, 274 U. S. 554, 71 L. ed. 1199, 47 S. Ct. 702.

See Motor Transportation Companies.

[8] Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[9] Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140; Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[10] Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30.

[11] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194; Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[12] Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[13] Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140.

A nonresident automobile owner cannot complain of a discrimination under the provisions of a state statute for licensing motor vehicles because the fees are graduated according to engine power where the power of the car owned by him does not appear. Ibid.

As to graduated fees generally, see infra, §§ 130 et seq.

[14] Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140.

[15] See infra, § 128.

[16] See infra, § 129.

[17] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228; Iowa Motor Vehicle Asso. v. Railroad Comrs. 207 Iowa, 461, 221 N. W. 364, 75 A.L.R. 1, affirmed in 280 U. S. 529, 74 L. ed. 595, 50 S. Ct. 151.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216. s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.

[18] Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157, 146 N. W. 338, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 128.

§ 129. Under Power of Taxation.[2]—The amount of the fee which may be levied for revenue purposes is largely within the control of the legislature. The legislature has plenary authority, subject to constitutional limitations, to determine the amount and the terms of the payment of taxes on motor vehicles.[3] It is not limited, as is the imposition of a fee under the police power, to the expense of administration.[4] In fact, the amount may be so great as to be prohibitive.[5] There is nothing which requires the state to make the amount of the fee dependent upon the extent of the use of the highway by the licensee.[6] The state may reasonably regulate the manner and extent of the use of its public highways by common carriers, and the quantum of the privilege tax for use of the highways need not necessarily be limited to the actual cost of such regulation, but may include compensation for the use of highways and provision for anticipated repairs and improvements thereon.[7] Fees established for the privilege of using motor vehicles on the highways will be presumed to be reasonable if nothing to the contrary appears on the face of the law itself or is established by evidence.[8]

b. Graduated Fees

§ 130. Generally.[9]—In the enactment of a police regulation, there can be no graduation of the fee, since there can be no more labor or expense in registering a vehicle of high horse power or greater weight than in registering one of low power or lesser weight.[10] But in the levying of a tax or license fee which is a revenue measure, the impost may be graduated.[11] The fees may be graduated according to the propensity of the vehicles to injure or destroy the public highways.[12] Those vehicles with respect to which such tendency is slight or nonexistent may be exempted.[13] Individual owners may be segregated from manufacturers and a different rate imposed on each class.[14]

---

[19] Ibid.
Annotation: 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 953, s. L.R.A.1915D, 322.

[20] Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157, 146 N. W. 338, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 128.

[1] Ibid.
The view has been taken that the imposition of such a fee is not necessarily a revenue measure although it is in excess of the necessary expense of regulation and control. Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 764.

[2] As this matter relates to interstate commerce, see supra, §§ 124 et seq.

[3] Kane v. State, 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, L.R.A.1917B, 553, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237, affirmed in 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30.
Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 954, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.
In Kane v. State, 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, L.R.A.1917B, 553, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237, affirmed in 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30, it was held that there was no unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce effected by a statute imposing upon automobiles passing through the state, together with those owned and used in the state, a license tax for revenue purposes, the proceeds of which were applied to the upkeep of the highway.

[4] Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228; Re Hoffert, 34 S. D. 271, 148 N. W. 20, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 949.

[5] Desser v. Wichita, 96 Kan. 820, 153 P. 1194, L.R.A.1916D, 246.

[6] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194.

[7] Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, 69 L. ed. 623, 45 S. Ct. 324, 38 A.L.R. 286; Iowa Motor Vehicle Asso. v. Railroad Comrs. 207 Iowa, 461, 221 N. W. 364, 75 A.L.R. 1, affirmed in 280 U. S. 529, 74 L. ed. 595, 50 S. Ct. 151.

[8] Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27.

[9] In interstate commerce, see supra, § 126.

[10] Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157, 146 N. W. 338, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 128.

[11] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, and L.R.A.1915D, 322.
As it relates to interstate commerce, see supra, § 126.

[12] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S.

§ 131. Based on Weight.—A fee which is a revenue measure may be graduated according to the weight of the vehicle.[15]

§ 132. Based on Horse Power.—A fee which is a revenue measure may be graduated according to the horse power of the vehicle,[16] irrespective of value.[17] To graduate it in this manner does not violate the guaranty of due process.[18] It is said, however, in some cases that the owner has a right to be heard on the determination of the horse power.[19]

§ 133. Based on Seating Capacity.—A fee which is a revenue measure may be varied according to the seating capacity of the vehicle.[20]

4. Purpose of Tax

§ 134. Generally.—The state may impose a tax upon motor vehicles using the highways of the state for general revenue purposes.[1] There is nothing in the Federal Constitution which requires a state to apply such fees for the benefit of those who pay them.[2]

§ 135. Highway Purposes.— The state may levy a tax for highway purposes on motor vehicles using such highways.[3] And it may likewise authorize

---

66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194; Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 147 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228.

[13] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194.

[14] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 761.

[15] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194.

[16] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 147 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228; Kane v. State, 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, L.R.A.1917B, 553, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237, affirmed in 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 761; 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, s. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, and L.R.A.1915D, 322, 59 L. ed. 385.

A statute prescribing that the amount of the fee or tax is dependent on the horse power of the motor, which is determined according to a rating established by the national association of licensed automobile manufacturers, is valid even though the rating is defective, in that it does not take into consideration the length of the stroke of the piston and the valve equipment, as this is a matter for the legislature to determine, and it is not for the courts to review the reasonableness of the method adopted in the absence of a showing that it is wholly arbitrary. State ex rel. Fargo v. Wetz, 40 N. D. 299, 168 N. W. 835, 5 A.L.R. 731.

[17] Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 147 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228; Kane v. State, 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, L.R.A.1917B, 553, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237, affirmed in 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30.

[18] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706.

[19] Ibid.

[20] Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440, 59 L. ed. 385.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 762.

See also Motor Transportation Companies.

[1] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194; Harder's Fire Proof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536.

Other acts that have been sustained have apparently been general revenue measures. See Mark v. District of Columbia, 37 App. D. C. 563, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 440; Chicago v. Morell, 247 Ill. 383, 93 N. E. 295, 139 Am. St. Rep. 340.

[2] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194.

[3] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194; Clark v. Poor, 274 U. S. 554, 71 L. ed. 1199, 47 S. Ct. 702; Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, 69 L. ed. 623, 45 S. Ct. 324, 38 A.L.R. 286; Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 147 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228; Iowa Motor Vehicle Asso. v. Railroad Comrs. 207 Iowa, 461, 221 N. W. 364, 75 A.L.R. 1, affirmed without opinion in 280 U. S. 529, 74 L. ed. 595, 50 S. Ct. 151; State v. Lawrence, 108 Miss. 291, 66 So. 745, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 322 (privilege tax for using the roads); State ex rel. Fargo v. Wetz, 40 N. D. 299, 168 N. W. 835, 5 A.L.R. 731; Re Hoffert, 34 S. D. 271, 148 N. W. 20, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 937, s. 68 A.L.R. 200.

In some jurisdictions an amendment to the state Constitution permits an ad valorem tax on automobiles for raising a fund to construct or maintain public highways. Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 942, s. 68 A.L.R. 200; Ann. Cas. 1917E, 324.

a municipality to levy such a tax.[4] The fact that the tax is devoted to a specific purpose does not invalidate it.[5] Thus, it may tax a carrier for hire even though such carrier pays a tax to the municipality in the state and operates principally there, though partly outside the municipal limits.[6] Taxation in such a case does not violate the due process clause of the Federal and state Constitutions.[7]

In the absence of constitutional limitations, the state legislature has the power, also, to authorize a city or county to impose automobile license fees to be used in the improvement or maintenance of their streets or roads.[8]

5. EXEMPTIONS

§ 136. Generally.—The power of exemption is very broadly stated. In graduating the amount of the fees,[9] the state may exempt vehicles weighing less than a certain number of pounds, although their loaded weight may be much more than that of vehicles not exempt.[10] Such an exemption does not infringe the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution and a similar provision of a state Constitution.[11]

§ 137. Of Persons.—The state may exempt any class of persons.[12] Manufacturers and vendors may be exempted as to stock kept for sale.[13] Nonresidents may be exempted,[14] at least for a limited period.[15] In the computation of the time during which a nonresident is permitted to operate his automobile without a license on the highways of the state after entering it, the days on which he runs the machine across the boundary into other states, returning the same day, and those in which the machine is in a repair shop should not be excluded.[16]

J. FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH LICENSING AND REGISTRATION PROVISION

1. IN GENERAL

§ 138. Generally.—The effect of one's failure to comply with licensing and

---

As to the relationship to interstate commerce, see supra, § 125.

[4] Chicago v. Morell, 247 Ill. 383, 93 N. E. 295, 139 Am. St. Rep. 340; Harder's Fire Proof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 938, s. 68 A.L.R. 200.

[5] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194.

[6] Ibid.

[7] Ibid.

[8] Harder's Fireproof Storage & Van Co. v. Chicago, 235 Ill. 58, 85 N. E. 245, 14 Ann. Cas. 536.

The legislature has plenary power as to the subjects and objects from which it will exact revenue, except as it is limited by the Constitution; and a constitutional provision giving the legislature power to provide such revenue as is necessary by levying a tax by valuation, and giving it power to tax peddlers, auctioneers, etc., by general law, uniform as to the class upon which it operates, and providing further that the specification of objects and subjects of taxation shall not deprive the legislature of the power to require other objects or subjects to be taxed in such manner as may be consistent with the principles of taxation of the Constitution, has been held not to deprive the legislature of power to authorize a municipality to pass an ordinance regulating the use of its streets by vehicles and imposing a license tax on such vehicles for revenue purposes. Ibid.

[9] See supra, §§ 130 et seq.

[10] Carley & Hamilton v. Snook, 281 U. S. 66, 74 L. ed. 704, 50 S. Ct. 204, 68 A.L.R. 194.

[11] Ibid.

[12] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706.

[13] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 761.

[14] Annotation: 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 441, s. 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951; Ann. Cas. 1917E, 324.

See also infra, § 137.

[15] Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; State v. Lawrence, 108 Miss. 291, 66 So. 745, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 322.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1917E, 324.

Nonresidents may be exempt from the duty of registering their automobiles and paying fees therefor for a period of three months. Re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706.

[16] Dudley v. Northampton Street R. Co. 202 Mass. 443, 89 N. E. 25, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561.

registration provisions depends to a large extent upon the terms of the particular statutes involved. A person guilty of a violation may be subjected to criminal liability[17] or such violation may affect merely his civil rights and liabilities.

2. EFFECT UPON CIVIL RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES

a. UPON RIGHT TO RECOVER FOR INJURIES

§ 139. Generally.—There is a difference of opinion as to the right of one who sustain injuries to his person or property by the negligence of another while using or riding in an unlicensed or unregistered automobile to recover for such injuries. According to the weight of authority, recovery in such a case is not precluded where the failure to register in compliance with the statute has no causal connection with the injury.[18] The fact that a bus, though properly licensed to operate upon city streets, had no authority to carry passengers for hire, which it was attempting to do when injured by another's negligence, does not deprive its owner of the right to recover the damages occasioned by the negligent injury.[19] One who does an unlawful act is not thereby placed outside the protection of the law; to have this effect, the unlawful act must have some causal connection with the injury complained of.[20]

§ 140. Massachusetts Rule.—A rule in conflict with the general rule above stated originated in Massachusetts, where a statute providing that automobiles should be registered, and that "except as otherwise provided, . . . no automobile or motorcycle shall . . . be operated upon any public highway unless registered as above provided," has been held to render unlicensed automobiles outlaws on the highway, so that their occupants are entitled to no other right than that of being exempt from reckless, wanton, or wilful injury. Such an occupant is not entitled to recover upon a showing of want of ordinary care.[1] This rule has been followed in a few other states.[2] The doctrine does not, however, preclude a recovery resulting from wilful, wanton, or reckless conduct of another.[3] The operation of an unregistered motor vehicle on a highway cannot be said as a matter of law to be wilful, wanton, or reckless conduct so as to render the operator liable to another within this rule.[4]

---

[17] For discussion of the liability of one lending license plates to another, see supra, § 112.

As to criminal liability, see infra, § 799.

[18] Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Weir, 63 Fla. 69, 58 So. 641, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 307, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 126 (railroad crossing accident); Lockridge v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 161 Iowa, 74, 140 N. W. 834, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 158 (railroad crossing accident); Armstead v. Lounsberry, 129 Minn. 34, 151 N. W. 542, L.R.A.1915D, 628; Standard Auto Ins. Asso. v. Neal, 199 Ky. 699, 251 S. W. 966, 35 A.L.R. 1468; Pratt v. Western Bridge & Constr. Co. 116 Neb. 553, 218 N. W. 397, 58 A.L.R. 527; Chambers v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 37 N. D. 377, 163 N. W. 824, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 954; Maryland Ref. Co. v. Duffy, 94 Okla. 16, 220 P. 846, 35 A.L.R. 52; Speight v. Simonsen, 115 Or. 618, 239 P. 542, 43 A.L.R. 1149 (motorcycle); Gilman v. Central Vermont R. Co. 93 Vt. 340, 107 A. 122, 16 A.L.R. 1102; Southern R. Co. v. Vaughan, 118 Va. 692, 88 S. E. 305, L.R.A.1916E, 1222, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 842; Switzer v. Sherwood, 80 Wash. 19, 141 P. 181, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 216 (motorcycle); Godfrey v. Cooper, 46 Ont. L. Rep. 565, 10 B. R. C. 134, 51 D. L. R. 455.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1108, s. 35 A.L.R. 62, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 374, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1028, and 87 A.L.R. 1469; L.R.A.1916E, 1225; 18 Ann. Cas. 240; Ann. Cas. 1914A, 128; Ann. Cas. 1917A, 225; Ann. Cas. 1918D, 847; 10 B. R. C. 151.

It is not a defense to an action for damages to another, growing out of the negligence of a contractor constructing highways and culverts under a contract with a county, that the injured person was, at the time of the accident, operating or driving an unlicensed automobile upon a highway in violation of the Nebraska statute. Pratt v. Western Bridge & Constr. Co. 116 Neb. 553, 218 N. W. 397, 58 A.L.R. 527.

In Gilman v. Central Vermont R. Co. 93 Vt. 340, 107 A. 122, 16 A.L.R. 1102, the court, though recognizing that the Vermont statute was copied from that of Massachusetts, refused to place on it the construction that the courts of that state had, or to hold the operator of an unregistered automobile a trespasser on the highway and not entitled to recover, or to deprive the violator of a right of action for a negligent injury to the machine by another.

[19] Klinkenstein v. Third Ave. R. Co. 246 N. Y. 327, 158 N. E. 886, 54 A.L.R. 369.

[20] Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Weir, 63 Fla. 69, 58 So. 641, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 307, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 126; Lockridge v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 161 Iowa, 74, 140 N. W. 834, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 158; Armstead v. Lounsberry, 129 Minn. 34, 151 N. W. 542, L.R.A. 1915D, 628; Maryland Ref. Co. v. Duffy, 94 Okla. 16, 220 P. 846, 35 A.L.R. 52.

§ 141. Right of Unlicensed Operator.—The fact that the operator of an automobile has no operator's license, as required by statute, does not, according to the majority view, bar recovery for an injury to him through the negligence of another where the lack of such license has no causal connection with the injury.[5] Mere violation of a statute forbidding the operation of a motorcycle on the highway without a license does not raise an inference of negligence which will prevent recovery for personal injuries negligently inflicted by another.[6]

An infant operating a motorcycle on a public highway in violation of a statute which imposes a penalty therefor, and which by its terms is conclusively controlling on the punishment for its violation, is not a trespasser in the sense that he is precluded from recovering damages for personal injuries negligently inflicted upon him by another to which his youth in no way contributed.[7]

Even in Massachusetts, where the owner or operator of the unlicensed automobile cannot recover, the operator who has no license is not precluded from recovery by that fact alone;[8] at least one who has employed an unlicensed person to operate the car is not precluded from recovery.[9]

On the contrary, the view has been taken that the driving of an automobile by an unlicensed person in violation of the statute expressly providing that no person shall operate a motor vehicle upon any highway in the state unless licensed is causal and precludes recovery for injuries sustained by such driver in a grade-crossing collision with a railroad train.[10] Driving an automobile without the license required by statute is conclusive proof, and not merely evidence, of legal fault; no question is raised for the jury.[11]

---

[1] Bacon v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 256 Mass. 30, 152 N. E. 35, 47 A.L.R. 1100; Conroy v. Mather, 217 Mass. 91, 104 N. E. 487, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 801; Dudley v. Northampton Street R. Co. 202 Mass. 443, 89 N. E. 25, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1103.

Where an automobile is not legally registered by a married woman, the owner, and the statute requiring registration provides that violation thereof shall not prevent recovery by a guest unless it is shown that he knew or had reasonable cause to know of such violation, her husband, who was riding with her at the time of the collision with an electric car, is not entitled to recover for personal injuries where it is shown that he knew or had reasonable cause to know that the car was not legally registered. Bacon v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 256 Mass. 30, 152 N. E. 35, 47 A.L.R. 1100.

[2] Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1108, s. 35 A.L.R. 62, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 374, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1028, and 87 A.L.R. 1469; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 734; L.R.A.1916E, 1225; Ann. Cas. 1914A, 128; Ann. Cas. 1918D, 851; 10 B. R. C. 153.

[3] Potter v. Gilmore, 282 Mass. 49, 184 N. E. 373, 87 A.L.R. 1462.

[4] Ibid.

[5] Lindsay v. Cecchi, 3 Boyce (Del.) 133, 80 A. 523, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699; Standard Auto Ins. Asso. v. Neal, 199 Ky. 699, 251 S. W. 966, 35 A.L.R. 1468; Armstead v. Lounsberry, 129 Minn. 34, 151 N. W. 542, L.R.A. 1915D, 628; Corbett v. Scott, 243 N. Y. 66, 152 N. E. 467, 46 A.L.R. 1064; Wilson v. Bittner, 129 Or. 122, 276 P. 268, 64 A.L.R. 132; Speight v. Simonsen, 115 Or. 618, 239 P. 542, 43 A.L.R. 1149 (motorcycle); Southern R. Co. v. Vaughan, 118 Va. 692, 88 S. E. 305, L.R.A.1916E, 1222, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 842.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1113, s. 35 A.L.R. 62, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 377, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1191, 78 A.L.R. 1029, and 87 A.L.R. 1471; 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561, s. 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 734, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 307, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 801, L.R.A.1915D, 628, L.R.A.1916E, 1225, and 10 B. R. C. 157.

In Wilson v. Bittner, 129 Or. 122, 276 P. 268, 64 A.L.R. 132, the Oregon court followed the general rule by holding that a one-eyed motorcyclist who drove without a required special permit and sustained injuries to his person by the negligence of another while so doing was not precluded from recovering where his noncompliance with the statutory requirement had no causal connection with the injury.

[6] Corbett v. Scott, 243 N. Y. 66, 152 N. E. 467, 46 A.L.R. 1064.

[7] Ibid.

Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 1067.

[8] Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1108, s. 35 A.L.R. 62, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 374, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1028, 87 A.L.R. 1469, and 10 B. R. C. 157.

[9] Conroy v. Mather, 217 Mass. 91, 104 N. E. 487, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 801.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1108, s. 35 A.L.R. 62, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 374, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1028, 87 A.L.R. 1469, and 10 B. R. C. 157.

§ 142. Right to Recover against Municipality.—The same difference of opinion that exists as to the right to recover against a tort-feasor generally exists as to the right to recover against a municipality. According to the weight of authority, the fact that an automobile is not registered as required by statute, or the fact that the operator is not licensed as so required, does not preclude a recovery for personal injuries or property damage caused by a defect or obstruction in the street, where such failure has no causal connection with the injury.[12] In other jurisdictions, however, the view is taken that the owner or operator of an unregistered machine has no right to operate the same upon the public streets and highways, and therefore the municipality owes him no duty to keep the ways safe for his travel. It is, therefore, not liable to him for injuries.[13] A guest in an unregistered automobile cannot, although he is ignorant of the fact that the car is unregistered, recover damages from the town for personal injuries due to defects in the highway.[14]

§ 143. Under Express Statutory Provision as to Liability.—In some states statutes expressly deny a right of recovery for personal injuries sustained while riding in an unregistered motor vehicle. Obviously, where the statutes of a jurisdiction contain express provisions as to civil liability, these provisions govern.[15]

---

[10] Johnson v. Boston & M. R. Co. 83 N. H. 350, 143 A. 516, 61 A.L.R. 1178.

Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1190, s. 78 A.L.R. 1028, and 87 A.L.R. 1469.

The New Hampshire court refused to extend the decision in Johnson v. Boston & M. R. Co. 83 N. H. 350, 143 A. 516, 61 A.L.R. 1178, so as to prevent recovery for the death of a passenger in a car driven by an unlicensed operator. The court, after refusing to consider the machine and its occupants under such circumstances as outlaws or trespassers, considered the doctrines of assumption of risk, joint enterprise, ratification, and joint wrongdoers, as possible theories barring recovery, finding each one of them to be insufficient for that purpose.

[11] Johnson v. Boston & M. R. Co. 83 N. H. 350, 143 A. 516, 61 A.L.R. 1178.

[12] Hemming v. New Haven, 82 Conn. 661, 74 A. 892, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 734, 18 Ann. Cas. 240; Clark v. Hampton, 83 N. H. 524, 145 A. 265, 61 A.L.R. 1171.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1108, s. 35 A.L.R. 62, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 374, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1028 and 87 A.L.R. 1469.

[13] McCarthy v. Leeds, 115 Me. 134, 98 A. 72, L.R.A.1916E, 1212; Feeley v. Melrose, 205 Mass. 329, 91 N. E. 306, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 445; Hanley v. Poultney, 100 Vt. 172, 135 A. 713, 54 A.L.R. 371.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1108, s. 35 A.L.R. 62, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 374, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1028 and 87 A.L.R. 1469.

In McCarthy v. Leeds, 115 Me. 134, 98 A. 72, L.R.A.1916E, 1212, where a statute provided that all motor vehicles should be registered by the owner or person in control thereof, and that no motor vehicle should be operated by a resident of the state upon any highway, town way, etc., unless registered, as required by the act, and imposed a penalty for a violation of the statute, it was held that the owner of an automobile which was registered under the number of the dealer from whom the owner had shortly before purchased it could not recover for injuries to himself and property, sustained by reason of defects in a bridge over which he was passing, it being held that the owner was prohibited by the statute from using the unregistered machine on the highway, and that the defendant town owed him no duty to keep the way safe for his travel, but that his rights were only those of a trespasser upon the land of another.

In another action growing out of the same accident that caused the injury in the McCarthy Case, supra, it was held that a town was not liable for the death, because of a defective bridge, of a child who was riding in an unregistered automobile, where the statutes required highways to be kept safe for travelers, and forbade the use of any motor vehicle on the highway unless it was registered, the court holding that a person in an unlicensed automobile is not a traveler within the meaning of the statute. 116 Me. 275, 101 A. 448, L.R.A.1918D, 671.

Travelers in an automobile cannot hold a municipal corporation liable for injuries due to a defect in the highway, if the automobile was not registered as required by statute, although they were ignorant of that fact. Feeley v. Melrose, 205 Mass. 329, 91 N. E. 306, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 445.

[14] Hanley v. Poultney, 100 Vt. 172, 135 A. 713, 54 A.L.R. 371.

b. Upon Liability for Negligence

§ 144. Generally.—By the weight of authority, the fact that a motor vehicle is not licensed or registered as required by statute will not charge the owner or operator with liability for injury or damage caused by its operation on the highway, where the failure to obtain a license has no causal connection with the injury or damage.[16]

§ 145. Massachusetts Rule.—A few cases hold the owner or operator of the unlicensed machine absolutely liable for injuries caused thereby.[17] Such cases take the view that the unlicensed machine is a nuisance.[18] A guest may, in such a case, recover of his host.[19] Though the operation of the unlicensed car is evidence of negligence, the liability under this view is independent of any negligence.[20] Contributory negligence of the plaintiff, however, is a defense.[1]

§ 146. Liability of Unlicensed Operator, or Owner of Car Operated by Unlicensed Driver.—The fact that the driver of the automobile did not have a license will not, per se, render the owner liable for damages inflicted by his car, in the absence of a causal connection between the lack of a license and the injury; the liability in such case depends upon whether or not there was actual negligence in the operation of the car.[2] This is true although the violation of the statute may be regarded as negligence per se.[3] The mere operation by a minor of a motor vehicle, contrary to statute, is not such negligence as will deprive him of the right to show contributory negligence on the part of one injured by his act.[4] His act is not negligence per se.[5] Even in jurisdictions which take the view that operation of an unlicensed car renders the owner liable irrespective of negligence, the operation by an unlicensed driver does not, per se, render the owner or operator liable for injuries.[6] The absence of a license is admissible as evidence of the operator's negligence, but it does not establish liability as a legal result.[7] This is true where a car, registered in the state where the accident occurred, was being operated by a driver unlicensed there, even though he was licensed in another state.[8] The operator is not a trespasser upon the highway.[9]

---

[15] Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1108, s. 35 A.L.R. 62, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 374, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1028 and 87 A.L.R. 1469.

[16] Black v. Moree, 135 Tenn. 73, 185 S. W. 682, L.R.A.1916E, 1216.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1117, s. 35 A.L.R. 68, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 382, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1031, and 87 A.L.R. 1473.

The mere fact that an automobile which is being driven along the highway is not registered under the provisions of a statute making such failure a misdemeanor punishable by fine does not render the owner liable for injury to the occupant of a vehicle overturned when the animal drawing it became frightened at the automobile, if the absence of registry had no connection with the accident, although the statute also provides that there shall be a lien upon the automobile for any damages for injury to person or property caused by running it in violation of the provisions of the act, there being provisions with respect to speed and conduct of the driver to which such provision could apply. Black v. Moree, 135 Tenn. 73, 185 S. W. 682, L.R.A.1916E, 1216.

[17] Balian v. Ogassin, 277 Mass. 525, 179 N. E. 232, 78 A.L.R. 1021; Brown v. Alter, 251 Mass. 223, 146 N. E. 691, 38 A.L.R. 1036; Koonovsky v. Quellette, 226 Mass. 474, 116 N. E. 243, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1146.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1117, s. 35 A.L.R. 68, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 382, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1031, and 87 A.L.R. 1473.

In McDonald v. Dundon, 242 Mass. 229, 136 N. E. 264, 26 A.L.R. 1243, it was held that an automobile carrying a dealer's license plate and operated by a purchaser in whose name the car was not registered was not legally registered, and therefore was a nuisance on the highway, constituting the one operating it a trespasser and also entailing liability on the dealer for injuries caused by its operation.

[18] Balian v. Ogassin, 277 Mass. 525, 179 N. E. 232, 78 A.L.R. 1021; Brown v. Alter, 251 Mass. 223, 146 N. E. 691, 38 A.L.R. 1036; Koonovsky v. Quellette, 226 Mass. 474, 116 N. E. 243, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1146.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1108, s. 35 A.L.R. 62, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 374, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1028, and 87 A.L.R. 1469.

The driver or assenting owner is liable for all the direct injury resulting from such use, although the injury was not the result of an act of negligence. Koonovsky v. Quellette, 226 Mass. 474, 116 N. E. 243, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1146.

[19] Balian v. Ogassin, 277 Mass. 525, 179 N. E. 232, 78 A.L.R. 1021.

An amendment of the Massachusetts statute, to the effect that its violation shall not constitute a defense unless the injured person was the owner or operator of the vehicle operated in violation thereof, or unless he or the owner knew or had cause to know of the violation, is largely relied on in holding that the defense that an injured infant participated in the illegal operation of the unregistered car, the car being in the name of a part owner, could not avail, even upon the assumption that the infant was a guest, inasmuch as the infant was an innocent participant and, accordingly, not a trespasser upon the highway. Balian v. Ogassin, 277 Mass. 525, 179 N. E. 232, 78 A.L.R. 1021.

[20] Balian v. Ogassin, 277 Mass. 525, 179 N. E. 232, 78 A.L.R. 1021.

[1] Brown v. Alter, 251 Mass. 223, 146 N. E. 691, 38 A.L.R. 1036.

[2] Lindsay v. Cecchi, 3 Boyce (Del.) 133, 80 A. 523, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699.

c. Car Equipped with Improper License Plates

§ 147. Generally.—The general rule is that the owner or operator of a motor vehicle is not charged with liability or precluded from recovering for injuries or damages sustained while operating it on the highway by the fact that such vehicle is equipped with improper license plates or is being used in pursuits or for purposes not authorized by the statute under which the license plates were issued.[10] The same principle governs here as governs in the case of absence of license plates. There being no causal connection with the injury or damage, there is no liability or preclusion from recovery. A dealer who permits his automobile bearing his license plates to be used for a purpose not authorized by the statute under which such plates were issued is not liable in damages for personal injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the car.[11] The act of the dealer is not, in such a case, the proximate cause of the injury.[12]

In jurisdictions adhering to the Massachusetts rule, however, there is a liability upon one who lends his plates to another, for injuries caused by the operation of the car carrying the plates.[13] Likewise, in jurisdictions adhering to this rule the owner or operator is precluded from recovering for injuries or damages sustained as the result of its operation on the highway.[14]

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1117, s. 35 A.L.R. 68, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 382, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1031, and 87 A.L.R. 1473.

[3] Lindsay v. Cecchi, 3 Boyce (Del.) 133, 80 A. 523, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699.

[4] Hopkins v. Droppers, 184 Wis. 400, 198 N. W. 738, 36 A.L.R. 1156.

[5] Ibid.

Violation of a statute subjecting a minor operating a motor vehicle when unaccompanied by parent or guardian to fine and imprisonment is negligence per se. Hopkins v. Droppers, 184 Wis. 400, 198 N. W. 738, 36 A.L.R. 1156. Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 1117, s. 35 A.L.R. 68, 38 A.L.R. 1038, 43 A.L.R. 1153, 54 A.L.R. 382, 58 A.L.R. 532, 61 A.L.R. 1190, 78 A.L.R. 1031, and 87 A.L.R. 1473.

[6] McMahon v. Pearlman, 242 Mass. 367, 136 N. E. 154, 23 A.L.R. 1467; Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 95 N. E. 404, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701.

Some language in Johnson v. Boston & M. R. Co. 83 N. H. 350, 143 A. 516, 61 A.L.R. 1178, indicates a stronger view to the effect that the unlicensed operator is liable. See this case in § 141, supra.

[7] McMahon v. Pearlman, 242 Mass. 367, 136 N. E. 154, 23 A.L.R. 1467.

[8] Kenyon v. Hathaway, 274 Mass. 47, 174 N. E. 463, 73 A.L.R. 156.

Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 162.

See § 617, infra, as to evidence of negligence.

[9] McMahon v. Pearlman, 242 Mass. 367, 136 N. E. 154, 23 A.L.R. 1467.

[10] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 236.

[11] Worsham Buick Co. v. Isaacs, 121 Tex. 587, 51 S. W. (2d) 277, 86 A.L.R. 232.

Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 236.

See supra, § 112.

[12] Worsham Buick Co. v. Isaacs, 121 Tex. 587, 51 S. W. (2d) 277, 86 A.L.R. 232.

[13] § 112, supra.

[14] Feeley v. Melrose, 205 Mass. 329, 91 N. E. 306, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 445.

Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 236.

K. NONRESIDENTS

§ 148. Generally.[15]—In the absence of prohibitory Federal legislation, the states may enact police regulations of a reasonable nature respecting the use of their highways by nonresident operators of motor vehicles, and such regulations may include prohibition of such use in the absence of a license from the state.[16] A law licensing automobiles does not necessarily violate the Federal Constitution in requiring the registration of machines of nonresidents, provided that it is not discriminatory in its operation.[17]

Not all discrimination is forbidden, however; a distinction may be made between commercial vehicles operated for hire and those transporting the property of their owners.[18]

§ 149. Exemptions.—It is now customary for a state to permit for limited periods the use within its boundaries of unregistered machines which have been properly registered in the home state.[19] Reciprocal provisions are contained in many state statutes basing the exemption of nonresidents upon the condition that the state of the nonresident make a similar provision as to residents of the former state. These provisions have been sustained.[20] No distinction as to the validity of such a statute can be based upon its application to nonresidents driving into the state and those driving through.[1]

A question of construction exists as to who is a resident within the meaning of these statutes. This question is largely one of fact in the individual case.[2]

§ 150. Nonresidents of Municipalities.—The local authorities frequently have power to lay a license tax upon automobiles of residents of the municipality, and upon persons residing outside of the corporate limits who employ their machines in furtherance of business or occupations carried on within the city limits, but they do not have the right to levy such tax on motor vehicles of nonresidents whose business or pleasure casually carries them into or through the city, since this would be in derogation of the public right of user of the highways of the state,[3] and might result in compelling an owner of an automobile to obtain a license not only from the authorities of the place where his business had its headquarters, but also from every neighboring town into which his casual engagements might call him. The legislature, however, has the power to provide by law for the imposition of such burdensome requirements whereby local licenses must everywhere be obtained.[4]

---

[15] As to licensing operators generally, see infra, §§ 151 et seq.

For a discussion of license tax as affected by interstate commerce clause, see §§ 124 et seq.

[16] Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140; Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 159, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30; Pawloski v. Hess, 250 Mass. 22, 144 N. E. 760, 35 A.L.R. 945; Camas Stage Co. v. Kozer, 104 Or. 600, 209 P. 95, 25 A.L.R. 27; Interstate Trucking Co. v. Dammann, 208 Wis. 116, 241 N. W. 625, 82 A.L.R. 1080.

Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1091.

[17] Kane v. State, 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW [Also 6 R. C. L. p. 1].

[18] Interstate Trucking Co. v. Dammann, 208 Wis. 116, 241 N. W. 625, 82 A.L.R. 1080.

Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1092.

[19] See supra, §§ 108, 109.

[20] Interstate Trucking Co. v. Dammann, 208 Wis. 116, 241 N. W. 625, 82 A.L.R. 1080.

Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1093.

[1] Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30, affirming 81 N. J. L. 594, 80 A. 453, L.R.A.1917B, 553, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 237.

[2] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1094.

A teacher who resides in the state during the school year, or about nine months, and who spends her summer vacation of the remaining part of the year at the home of her parents in another state is not a nonresident of the first state. Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1094.

A foreign corporation having a place of business in the state is not a nonresident. Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1097.

The tendency is to be less lenient in the case of commercial vehicles than in the case of privately owned vehicles. Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1097.

Some of the statutes expressly provide the number of days which the nonresident may operate his car on the highways of the state. Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1094.

[3] White Oak Coal Co. v. Manchester, 109 Va. 749, 64 S. E. 944, 132 Am. St. Rep. 943.

IV. LICENSING AND REGISTRATION OF OPERATORS

A. IN GENERAL

§ 151. Generally.—The right to operate motor vehicles in public places is not a natural and unrestrained right, but a privilege subject to reasonable regulations in the interest of the public under the police power of the state. The police power has been exercised in many states by requiring chauffeurs and other operators of motor vehicles to obtain a license as a condition precedent to such operation. In general, the rules of law governing public regulation and control of motor vehicles[5] and licensing and registration[6] apply to regulations relating to the licensing and regulation of operators of automobiles.

The various statutes set out certain qualifications which an individual must possess before he will be entitled to operate a motor vehicle. These qualifications may relate to skill, competency, age,[7] character, etc. Provision is also made for specified classes of operators such as chaffeurs and beginners. To entitle an unlicensed person driving an automobile to the protection of a statute permitting the operation of the machine by an unlicensed person if riding with or accompanied by a licensed chauffeur or operator, there must be knowledge on the part of both parties of the existence of a relation like that of operator without a license, and licensed chauffeur or operator accompanying him, but if such knowledge does exist, the operator will be protected, although it was not expected that one would exercise any supervision over the other if the operator was in fact competent.[8]

Some statutes prohibit certain driving by certain persons such as infants under a certain age, intoxicated persons, etc.[9]

The effect of failure to comply with licensing and registration provisions is discussed elsewhere in this article.[10]

§ 152. Validity of Regulations.—Obviously, the general principles of law governing the constitutionality of regulation[11] and the validity of statutes[12] and ordinances[13] apply to enactments relating to the licensing and regulation of operators of motor vehicles. The state has power to require licenses as a condition precedent to the operation of the automobile on the streets and highways of the state.[14] The issuance or revocation of automobile drivers' permits is an exercise of the police power to regulate the use of the public highways in the interest of the public safety and welfare.[15]

---

[4] White Oak Coal Co. v. Manchester, 109 Va. 749, 64 S. E. 944, 132 Am. St. Rep. 943.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 218, 108 Am. St. Rep. 219.

[5] See supra, §§ 15 et seq.

[6] See supra, §§ 90 et seq.

[7] Charter authority to license and regulate hackmen, draymen, drivers, and all others pursuing like occupations, does not empower a municipality to forbid children under a specified age to operate automobiles on its streets. Ex parte Epperson, 61 Tex. Crim. Rep. 237, 134 S. W. 685, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 303.

An ordinance which, while not purporting to fix an age limit for operators of automobiles, makes it unlawful for any owner or custodian of a motor vehicle to permit a minor under eighteen years of age to operate it upon the streets of the city, may properly be regarded as fixing an age limit. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Guenther, 281 U. S. 34, 74 L. ed. 683, 50 S. Ct. 165.

[8] Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 95 N. E. 404, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701.

[9] See statute involved in Hopkins v. Droppers, 184 Wis. 400, 198 N. W. 738, 36 A.L.R. 1156.

As to conflicts between state and local regulations, see §§ 68 et seq.

[10] See supra, §§ 138 et seq.

[11] See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW [Also 6 R. C. L. p. 1].

[12] See STATUTES [Also 25 R. C. L. p. 750].

[13] See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS [Also 19 R. C. L. p. 678].

[14] Re Cardinal, 170 Cal. 519, 150 P. 348, L.R.A.1915F, 850.

Annotation: 71 A.L.R. 616.

The granting or refusing of such licenses or permits may not be arbitrarily done. Nor may they be granted to some or refused to others of like qualifications under like circumstances and conditions.[16]

B. Regulations as to Nonresidents

§ 153. Generally.—It is well settled that the state, under the police power, has the right to require licenses from nonresidents for the operation of motor vehicles on its highways and to charge a reasonable fee therefor.[17] The absence of Federal legislation upon the subject leaves the states free to prescribe uniform regulations reasonably necessary for public safety and order with respect to the operation upon the highway of motor vehicles moving in interstate commerce, and to that end they may require the registration of such vehicles and the licensing of their drivers, charging therefor reasonable fees graduated according to the horse power of the engine.[18] The statutes usually exempt nonresident drivers from their operation for a limited time. Some such statutes exempt from their requirements only residents of a state which requires operators' licenses, who have complied with such requirement. Such a statute does not deprive of the equal protection of the laws residents of states where laws do not require operators' licenses.[19] The statutes of some states exempt only residents of a state, the laws of which grant like exemption to the residents of the former states.[20] The absence from a statute of any reciprocal provision by which nonresidents whose cars are duly registered in their home states are given, for a limited period, free use of the highways in return for similar privileges granted to residents of the enacting state, does not involve an unconstitutional discrimination against nonresidents, where the annual fees prescribed are not so large as to be unreasonable, and where any resident owner would be subjected to the full annual charge for the use of the highways for any period, however brief.[1]

The absence from an automobile operators' license law of a provision exempting nonresidents will not render the law discriminatory.[2]

§ 154. Construction.—The construction of licensing statutes is governed by the general rules governing the construction of statutes generally.[3]

---

[15] Thompson v. Smith, 155 Va. 367, 154 S. E. 579, 71 A.L.R. 604.

[16] Ibid.

[17] Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 159, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30; Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140; State v. Chandler, 131 Me. 262, 161 A. 148, 82 A.L.R. 1389, appeal dismissed in 287 U. S. 572, 77 L. ed. 502, 53 S. Ct. 116.
Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1392.

[18] Kane v. State, 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30; Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140.
Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1392.

[19] State v. Chandler, 131 Me. 262, 161 A. 148, 82 A.L.R. 1389, appeal dismissed in 287 U. S. 572, 77 L. ed. 502, 53 S. Ct. 116.
Annotation: 71 A.L.R. 616.

[20] Annotation: 71 A.L.R. 616.

[1] Kane v. State, 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30.

[2] State v. Chandler, 131 Me. 262, 161 A. 148, 82 A.L.R. 1389, appeal dismissed in 287 U. S. 572, 77 L. ed. 502, 53 S. Ct. 116.

[3] An act of Congress providing that motor vehicles owned or operated by persons not legal residents of the District of Columbia, but who have complied with the laws of the state of their legal residence requiring the registration of motor vehicles or licensing of operators thereof, should not be required to comply with such laws and regulations of the District, if the state in which the owner or operator of such motor vehicle has his legal residence extends the same privilege to a motor vehicle owned or operated by legal residents of the District, was held to relate to drivers' permits as well as the licensing of motor vehicles.
Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1392, 1393.

It has been held that a resident of the District of Columbia who failed to show that he had complied with the laws in force within the District with respect to registering motor vehicles and licensing operators, or that he had applied to the Mary-

§ 155. Effect of Driving after Exemption Expires.—The fact that a nonresident motorist who was licensed to drive in the state of his residence operates a car in another state for more than the period for which a nonresident is authorized to drive without obtaining a license is not a private wrong rendering him liable in a civil action.[4]

§ 156. Holder of Nonresident's License Driving Resident's Car.—The fact that an operator licensed under the provisions of another state is driving the car of a resident in the state where the accident occurs does not make the driving illegal,[5] at least it does not deprive him of the right to recover for injuries resulting from negligence.[6]

C. Revocation and Reinstatement of Licenses or Permits

§ 157. Generally.—The statutes regulating the granting of operators' licenses or drivers' permits usually provide for their revocation. It is competent for the legislature to prescribe the conditions under which the privilege of operating an automobile on the public highways may be exercised.[7] The fact that the license or permit was granted under a statute or ordinance which stated that it should be perpetual unless revoked as provided in such statute or ordinance, and which contained no provision for revocation, does not preclude revocation under a provision introduced by subsequent amendment.[8]

A license to operate an automobile is not property, but a mere privilege, the suspension of which does not deprive the licensee of his property without due process of law.[9] The licenses or permits may not be revoked arbitrarily.[10]

The authority to revoke cannot be delegated to an official without prescribing what shall constitute grounds for revocation.[11]

§ 158. Revocation for Nonpayment of Judgment.—The power of the state to deprive a person of a license to operate a motor vehicle until he has satisfied a prior judgment against him in an action for damages resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle is generally sustained.[12]

§ 159. Operating during Period of Revocation.—The statutes usually pro-land commissioner for a local identifying tag or marker, which were prerequisite under the Maryland law to a limited use of the highways without cost by residents of other states, could not complain that residents of the District of Columbia were not included among those to whom this privilege is granted. Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 S. Ct. 140.

---

[4] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1394.

The theory is that the person licensed to drive by another state is treated as one sufficiently certified to be competent and therefore may drive his duly registered car in the state for the time fixed by statute. The provisions plainly indicate that the legislature deemed the matter of public safety to be sufficiently provided for by a license to operate issued by any state. The other provisions requiring a local license for the nonresident operator under other circumstances are almost entirely concerned with the revenue features of the law. It is true that their observance may afford some aid in the matter of identification, but that alone is not sufficient to show that there was a legislative purpose to class violators with those deemed incompetent. The reasons which led to the conclusion that the legislature intended to make unlicensed driving a civil wrong do not apply here. The situation of the driver licensed in another state falls rather within the class of those whose violation of the statute is prohibited for other reasons than protection from careless or incompetent driving. Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1394.

[5] See Kenyon v. Hathaway, 274 Mass. 47, 174 N. E. 463, 73 A.L.R. 156. See supra, § 146.

[6] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1396.

[7] Annotation: 71 A.L.R. 616.

Depriving a minor of his license to drive an automobile is a sufficient penalty for his driving the car recklessly. State ex rel. Berry v. Superior Ct. 139 Wash. 1, 245 P. 409, 45 A.L.R. 1530.

[8] Thompson v. Smith, 155 Va. 367, 154 S. E. 579, 71 A.L.R. 604.

[9] Annotation: 71 A.L.R. 616.

[10] Thompson v. Smith, 155 Va. 367, 154 S. E. 579, 71 A.L.R. 604.

[11] Ibid.

[12] Annotation: 71 A.L.R. 617.

There is, however, some dispute as to this. Annotation: 71 A.L.R. 616.

vide that an operator whose license has been revoked cannot thereafter validly operate a car during the period of such suspension. One who operates a car in the state within the unexpired period of suspension of his operator's permit may be convicted of operating in violation of a statute which makes it an offense to operate a car within a specified time after the revocation of his permit, even though he has in the meantime moved to another state and has there procured a motor vehicle registration card and automobile license tags and, while temporarily in the state of his former residence, has driven his automobile on which were such tags.[13] And this is true notwithstanding the state of his former residence dispensed with the requirement of an operator's license in favor of nonresidents who had procured a permit or license from a state granting like exemption to residents of the former state.[14]

§ 160. Reinstatement.—The statutes usually provide for the reinstatement of licenses or permits that have been revoked. A judge of a municipal court, when acting upon an application for reinstatement of an automobile driver's permit which has been revoked, is acting in an administrative capacity, and not in a judicial one.[15]

V. INJURIES FROM OPERATION

A. INTRODUCTION

§ 161. Generally.—The field of injuries resulting from the operation of motor vehicles is one of the most important in the law of this subject. Primarily, the questions here arising are questions of negligence. It is the application of well-settled principles to the factual situations created by the use of motor vehicles. While the subject of negligence is thus treated in its application to motor vehicles, the reader will have frequent occasion to refer to the article on negligence for a broader and more comprehensive discussion of the rules applicable to that subject.[16]

B. NEGLIGENCE

§ 162. Generally.—"Negligence" is the word ordinarily used in common-law terminology to express the foundation of civil liability for injury to person or property where such injury is not the result of premeditation and formed intention.[17] A cause of action for a personal injury negligently inflicted consists of the duty of care owed to the plaintiff, its breach, and the consequent injury.[18] The well-established principles of the law of negligence obviously apply to the numerous factual situations created by the advent and development of motor vehicles. The effectiveness of these principles as applied to a new and unforeseen factual setting is a tribute to the adaptability and elasticity of the common law.

It is essential to the existence of negligence that there be some fault on the part of the person sought to be held liable; no liability exists for an unavoidable accident.[18a]

---

[13] District of Columbia v. Fred, 281 U. S. 49, 74 L. ed. 694, 50 S. Ct. 163.

[14] District of Columbia v. Fred, 281 U. S. 49, 74 L. ed. 694, 50 S. Ct. 163, holding that the accused in such case is not prosecuted for operating without a license.
Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1395.

[15] Thompson v. Smith, 155 Va. 367, 154 S. E. 579, 71 A.L.R. 604.

[16] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[17] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 6].

[18] Ford v. Maney, 251 Mich. 461, 232 N. W. 393, 70 A.L.R. 1315.

[18a] The issue of unavoidable accident is not raised when there is no evidence tending to prove that the injury resulted from some cause other than the negligence of one of the parties, as for example in an action in which plaintiff claims that defendant's truck struck an automobile driv-

§ 163. Violation of Statute or Ordinance.—The general rules relating to the violation of statutes and ordinances as to negligence [19] obviously apply to injuries arising from the operation of automobiles.

Where the statute itself provides as to the effect of its violation, the provision thereof governs. But where it does not so provide, differing views have been taken. In some jurisdictions the violation of a statute or ordinance is deemed negligence per se; [20] in other jurisdictions it depends upon the nature of the statute or ordinance. The violation of a statute which imposes a specific requirement to do or to omit to do a definite act is negligence per se,[21] while the violation of a statute which merely imposes a rule of conduct is not.[1]

In order that the violation constitute negligence, it must be shown that the obligation imposed was for the benefit of the person alleging injury.[2] Some statutes, especially those prescribing a penalty for their violation, are viewed as penal and as having no effect upon civil rights and liabilities. Hence, the violation of such a statute has no bearing upon the question of negligence.[3]

In many states a distinction is drawn between the violation of a statute and the violation of an ordinance.

The effect of the violation of statutes and ordinances pertaining to the operation of motor vehicles is discussed in detail herein under the subdivision devoted to a consideration of specific regulations.[4]

§ 164. Proximate Cause.—The well-established rule of law that in order to maintain an action for negligence, the injury of which the plaintiff complains must have been the natural and probable consequence of a wrongful act or omission [5] which is not too remote [6] obviously applies to automobile accidents.[7] en by the plaintiff and caused it to collide with another automobile parked at the curb, in which defendant merely presented evidence to show that the truck driver was not negligent and that plaintiff was negligent, and there was no evidence that the street was rough, or the pavement wet, and no suggestion of anything that might have caused the automobile to skid into the automobile parked at the curb, and no evidence of congestion of traffic or of the existence of any obstacle that might have obstructed plaintiff's view of the parked automobile. Magnolia Coca Cola Bottling Co. v. Jordan, 124 Tex. 347, 78 S. W. (2d) 944, 97 A.L.R. 1513.

---

[19] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 38 §§ 33 et seq.].

[20] The wilful violation by the owner of an automobile of a statute making it unlawful for any owner of a motor vehicle to permit a person under sixteen years of age to operate the same and prescribing a punishment therefor is negligence rendering the owner liable in damages for injuries resulting from such operation where the other elements of actionable negligence are present, even though such statute is penal in its nature and silent as to liability for damages resulting from its violation. Walker v. Klopp, 99 Neb. 794, 157 N. W. 962, L.R.A.1916E, 1292.

Violation of a municipal ordinance making it unlawful to drive an automobile past a standing car which is receiving or discharging passengers is negligence per se rendering the person guilty thereof liable for an injury to a person free from contributory negligence directly and proximately caused thereby. Schell v. Du Bois, 94 Ohio St. 93, 113 N. E. 664, L.R.A.1917A, 710. But see Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

[21] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

[1] Ibid.

The simple violation of a statute or ordinance does not of itself constitute wilful and wanton negligence. Higbee Co. v. Jackson, 101 O. S. 75, 128 N. E. 61, 14 A.L.R. 131.

[2] In an action by a passenger in a hired automobile to recover for injuries received when the driver turned the car to the left to pass another automobile going in the same direction near a bend in the road and failed to make the turn and went over a bank, it was held that a failure to obey a traffic statute or ordinance requiring vehicles, when turning at a street crossing, to keep to the right of the intersection of the center of the highway, is not negligence per se unless the complaining party is one for whose benefit the statute or ordinance was enacted, and that since the object of such a provision was to protect travelers and vehicles upon the highway and to avoid collisions, it was inapplicable under the facts of the case. Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 321.

[3] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 42, § 36].

[4] See §§ 224, 304 et seq.

[5] See NEGLIGENCE [Also PROXIMATE CAUSE, 22 R. C. L. p. 106].

[6] Eklof v. Waterston, 132 Or. 479, 285 P. 201, 68 A.L.R. 1002.

[7] O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

A negligent act cannot be said to be the proximate cause of an accident unless the accident could have been avoided in the absence thereof.[8] Speed, in order to be the basis of a recovery for negligent injuries, must be the proximate cause of the injuries.[9]

When the proximate cause of an injury is not the act of the operator of an automobile, but that of strangers meddling with his machine, which he has left standing in the highway, the owner of the machine is relieved of liability, since the intervention of the act of third parties exempts him from responsibility, although no one would have been injured if he had not left the car unattended in the street.[10]

The driver of an automobile is also relieved from liability when the proximate cause of an injury is the negligence of the person injured, although the exemption from responsibility in such cases is usually referred to as being due to the contributory negligence of the injured person.[11]

When once a chain of events has been started due to the negligence of the operator of an automobile, he may be held responsible for all mishaps which are properly the proximate result of his unlawful conduct.[12] The fact that other happenings causing or contributing toward an injury intervened between the violation of a statute or ordinance and the injury does not necessarily make the result so remote that no action can be maintained. The test is to be found not in the number of intervening events or agents, but in their character and in the natural and probable connection between the wrong done and the injurious consequence.[13]

In determining what constitutes proximate cause, the same principles apply where the alleged negligence consists of a violation of a statutory duty as where it consists of the violation of a nonstatutory duty.[14] It is well settled that the violation of a statute or ordinance, to result in liability for injury to person or property, must be a proximate cause of such injury.[15]

---

[8] Ibid.

[9] Larsen v. Webb, 332 Mo. 370, 58 S. W. (2d) 967, 90 A.L.R. 67; Bloom v. Bailey, 292 Pa. 348, 141 A. 150, 57 A.L.R. 585; Eichman v. Buchheit, 128 Wis. 385, 107 N. W. 325, 8 Ann. Cas. 435; O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 265.

[10] Annotation: 108 Am. St. Rep. 216.

As to parking generally, see infra, §§ 334, 338.

[11] Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Yeiser, 141 Ky. 15, 131 S. W. 1049, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1137.

Annotation: 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137.

[12] Upton v. Windham, 75 Conn. 288, 53 A. 660, 96 Am. St. Rep. 197.

The negligence of the driver of an automobile struck by another automobile at a street intersection and thrown out of its course so that it strikes a pedestrian near the curb is not the sole cause of the resulting injury, but such injury must be deemed to have been caused by the concurrent negligence of both drivers. McDonald v. Robinson, 207 Iowa, 1293, 224 N. W. 820, 62 A.L.R. 1419.

The driver of an automobile whose negligence caused or contributed to a passenger's injuries is responsible even though another also contributed thereto. Lange v. Affleck, 160 Md. 695, 155 A. 150, 79 A.L.R. 1274.

A driver of an automobile negligently colliding with another car is not exonerated from any part of the damage to such car by reason of the fact that, because of the excessive speed with which it was traveling, it could not be brought under control in time to prevent it from running off the road and overturning, where no negligence on the part of the driver of the second car is found. Mahoney v. Beatman, 110 Conn. 184, 147 A. 762, 66 A.L.R. 1121.

Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 1134.

[13] Linberg v. Stanto, 211 Cal. 771, 297 P. 9, 75 A.L.R. 555; Milbury v. Turner Centre System, 274 Mass. 358, 174 N. E. 471, 73 A.L.R. 1070.

[14] Larsen v. Webb, 332 Mo. 370, 58 S. W. (2d) 967, 90 A.L.R. 67.

[15] Meese v. Goodman, 167 Md. 658, 176 A. 621, 98 A.L.R. 480.

It was held. in Corbett v. Scott, 243 N. Y. 66, 152 N. E. 467, 46 A.L.R. 1064, that while one seeking to recover for injuries received on his motorcycle was prima facie guilty of negligence in operating the motorcycle while under the age of sixteen years, in violation of a state statute, the jury might find him free from contributory negligence if his immature age in no way contributed to the happening of the accident.

One who permits his car to be operated in violation of a city ordinance at a prohibited rate of speed and without sounding the horn by one who was not a lawful chauffeur is not, merely because of this

Specific holdings relative to proximate cause will be found scattered throughout this article under the various factual situations herein stated.[16]

C. Measure of Care Required

1. Fundamental Principles

§ 165. Generally.—Although automobiles are comparatively recent in use, there is nothing novel in the principles of law to be applied with respect to travel in them on the highways.[17] It is a well-established principle of law, even in the absence of statutory requirements, that the operator of a motor vehicle must exercise ordinary, reasonable, or due care—that is, that degree of care and caution which an ordinarily careful and prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances.[18] Negligence is failure to exercise reasonable care [19]—that is, the care which the ordinary, reasonable man would use under the circumstances.[20] Obviously, the care required of a motorist is controlled by, and depends upon, the place, circumstances, conditions, and surroundings. There is no arbitrary or fixed rule. A statute or ordinance which, without regard to care or negligence or the violation of specific regulations, undertakes to forbid the running of an automobile so as to inflict damage or injury, or, more specifically, so as to collide with other vehicles or with persons, is unconstitutional in that it is unreasonable and oppressive.[1] There are two divergent theories upon the question of defining the measure of care which is required to obviate the charge of negligence. According to one theory, care is divided into three degrees: (1) Slight care, (2) ordinary care, and (3) extraordinary care. According to the other theory, the care which must be exercised to avoid the charge of negligence is always ordinary care—that is, the care which ordinarily prudent persons exercise in the same or similar circumstances. The care which ordinarily prudent persons thus exercise obviously depends upon the circumstances. For example, an ordinarily prudent person driving through a street in which children are playing would drive slower and have his car under better control than he would when driving through a street which was to all appearances clear or in which violation of the ordinance, liable to one struck and injured by the car, unless there is a direct relation of cause and effect between the violation and the injury inflicted. Elmendorf v. Clark, 143 La. 971, 79 So. 557, L.R.A.1918F, 802.

---

If the violation by the defendant's automobile of an ordinance requiring vehicles turning at street intersections to keep to the right of the center of the intersection did not contribute directly to a collision with a motorcycle, or if the negligent operation of the motorcycle was the sole proximate cause of the death of one riding thereon, the defendant cannot be held liable. Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 321.

[16] As to the responsibility of a negligent driver for damages immediately inflicted by another car, see § 352.

[17] House v. Cramer, 134 Iowa, 374, 112 N. W. 3, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 655, 13 Ann. Cas. 461.
Annotation: 13 Ann. Cas. 461.

[18] White Swan Laundry Co. v. Wehrhan, 202 Ala. 87, 79 So. 479, citing R. C. L.; Carter v. Brown, 136 Ark. 23, 206 S. W. 71, citing R. C. L.; Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582; Giles v. Voiles, 144 Ga. 853, 88 S. E. 207, citing R. C. L.; Devine v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. 270 Ill. 504, 110 N. E. 780, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 887; Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; Fisher v. Fletcher, 191 Ind. 529, 133 N. E. 834, 22 A.L.R. 1392; Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656; Weil v. Kreutzer, 134 Ky. 563, 121 S. W. 471, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557; Tudor v. Bowen, 152 N. C. 441, 67 S. E. 1015, 136 Am. St. Rep. 836, 21 Ann. Cas. 646; Leach v. Asman, 130 Tenn. 510, 172 S. W. 303, citing R. C. L.; Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1178, s. 67 A.L.R. 313; 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, and 62 A.L.R. 970; 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 948; Ann. Cas. 1916E, 661.

[19] Crowley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 204 Iowa, 1385, 213 N. W. 403, 53 A.L.R. 964.

[20] Hewlett v. Schadel (C. C. A. 4th) 68 F. (2d) 502, 91 A.L.R. 743; Wittstruck v. Lee, 62 S. D. 290, 252 N. W. 874, 92 A.L.R. 1361.

[1] Ticknor v. Seattle-Renton Stage Line, 139 Wash. 354, 247 P. 1, 47 A.L.R. 252.

only adults were seen.[2] The one theory would characterize the care exercised in driving through a street in which children were playing as extraordinary care. The other would characterize such care as ordinary care under the circumstances. The latter theory has been adopted in the discussion herein.

§ 166. Duty to Keep Car under Control.—It is a general rule of law that part of the duty of an operator of a motor vehicle is to keep his machine always under control so as to avoid collision with vehicles, pedestrians, and other persons properly using the highway.[3] The mere fact, however, that one owns an automobile does not make such person responsible, much less solely responsible, for every injury caused by it.[4] Whether or not an automobile is to be adjudged under control depends on the test or standard used and the particular circumstances and conditions surrounding the case. The cases defining the expression have varied in their forms of definition. Some say that "having a car under control" is practically synonymous with "operating the car with due care."[5] A considerable number of cases hold that a car is under control if it can be stopped quickly.[6] In other cases a car is considered under control when the driver is attentive and anticipating the possible requirement of a sudden turn or stop to avoid a collision.[7] And it has been held that the test of "having a car under control" is the ability to avoid colliding with another who is using the highway and exercising proper care and caution on his own part.[8]

---

[2] Degrees of negligence do not exist. Wittstruck v. Lee, 62 S. D. 290, 252 N. W. 874, 92 A.L.R. 1361.

[3] Snyder v. Campbell, 145 Miss. 287, 110 So. 678, 49 A.L.R. 1402; Thrapp v. Meyers, 114 Neb. 689, 209 N. W. 238, 47 A.L.R. 585; Zandras v. Moffett, 286 Pa. 477, 133 A. 817, 47 A.L.R. 699; Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227, 108 Am. St. Rep. 214; 4 Ann. Cas. 398; 13 Ann. Cas. 464.

As to duty to anticipate the presence of others, see infra, § 168.

In an early case it was held that a chauffeur was negligent in taking his hands from the steering wheel to adjust his hat while the car was running 30 miles an hour, although the road was level, smooth, and straight. O'Bierne v. Stafford, 87 Conn. 354, 87 A. 743, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1183.

Negligence on the part of an automobile driver is shown where there is evidence that he was incompetent and was operating a car with four wheel brakes, with which he was not accustomed, for practice, and that, after having driven a short distance and while traveling about 40 miles an hour, he turned the wheels to avoid an object and jammed on the brakes, which resulted in the car overturning. Kerr v. Haug Motors, 39 Manitoba L. R. 238, 16 B. R. C. 838.

[4] Ouellette v. Superior Motor & Mach. Works, 157 Wis. 531, 147 N. W. 1014, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299.

[5] Molin v. Wark, 113 Minn. 190, 129 N. W. 383, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 346.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 952.

[6] Carruthers v. Campbell, 195 Iowa, 390, 192 N. W. 138, 28 A.L.R. 949; Raymond v. Sauk County, 167 Wis. 125, 166 N. W. 29, L.R.A.1918F, 425.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 953.

In Carruthers v. Campbell, 195 Iowa, 390, 192 N. W. 138, 28 A.L.R. 949, the record showed that the highway intersection was so screened that neither driver discovered the other until they were within a few feet of meeting, and it further appeared that the charge that the plaintiff did not have his car under control was unfounded. The court, in affirming the judgment for the plaintiff, defined the term "having his car under control" as driving at such a rate of speed and having the mechanism and power of the car so closely in hand that the car may be brought to a stop with a reasonable degree of celerity. This does not mean that the car can be stopped or turned aside instantly under any and all circumstances.

[7] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 957.

[8] Brown v. Des Moines Steam Bottling Works, 174 Iowa, 715, 156 N. W. 829, 1 A.L.R. 835; Savoy v. McLeod, 111 Me. 234, 88 A. 721, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 971.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 958.

In Savoy v. McLeod, 111 Me. 234, 88 A. 721, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 971, the record showed that there was ample room for the defendant to have guided his machine safely past the team which the plaintiff was driving if he had been paying proper attention to the rights of the plaintiff. Instead of waiting for the team to turn over to the right, the defendant, overtaking the team, attempted to pass and came into collision. The court held that if the car had been under control, the accident could have been avoided.

In Brown v. Des Moines Steam Bottling Works, 174 Iowa, 715, 156 N. W. 829, 1 A.L.R. 835, it appeared that the driver did not slacken his speed, was looking to one side, had but one hand on the steering wheel, and was suddenly diverted from his course by an obstacle in the highway so

§ 167. Duty to Maintain Lookout.—It is a well-established rule that the operator of a motor vehicle must keep a reasonably careful lookout so that he may be able to avoid collisions with persons or vehicles upon the highway.[9] He is liable for running down a boy standing in, or moving diagonally across, the street ahead of him and unaware of his peril if he fails to see the boy and avoid a collision because he permitted his attention to be diverted in another direction.[10]

§ 168. Duty to Anticipate Presence of Others.—It is a general rule of law that an operator of a motor vehicle has no right to assume that the road is clear, but that under virtually all circumstances and at all times, he must be reasonably vigilant and must anticipate and expect the presence of others.[11] One driving an automobile along a public highway at night is bound to anticipate the presence of pedestrians upon it.[12] Accordingly, the fact that he did not know that anyone was on the highway is no excuse for conduct which would have amounted to recklessness if he had known that another vehicle or person was approaching.[13] Drivers of motor vehicles must be specially watchful in anticipation of the presence of others at places where other vehicles are constantly passing, and where men, women, and children are liable to be crossing, such as corners at the intersection of streets, or near street cars from which passengers may have alighted or may be about to alight, or in other similar places or situations where people are likely to fail to observe an approaching automobile.[14] Accordingly, it may be the duty of the driver of an automobile, when he has occasion to turn the corner of a street, to slow down the machine in anticipation of the presence of persons in the highway at the street crossing.[15] If a person is standing in the highway, the driver of an automobile must notice him and take care not to injure him; a failure to see a

---

that his car ran up on the sidewalk and struck a pedestrian. The court held that the driver was under a duty to have the car under such control that it would not unreasonably or unnecessarily become a peril to people along the highway, saying: "The jury might well have found that if the defendant had his automobile under such perfect control as he should have had on a public street, and was giving reasonable attention to it, he might have avoided the collision with the flange at the switching point, or, having collided with it, might have stopped the same in time to have avoided the injury complained of."

[9] Johnson v. Coey, 237 Ill. 88, 86 N. E. 678, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81; Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967; Mosso v. E. H. Stanton Co. 75 Wash. 220, 134 P. 941, L.R.A.1916A, 943; Cunnien v. Superior Iron Works Co. 175 Wis. 172, 184 N. W. 767, 18 A.L.R. 667.

[10] Burvant v. Wolfe, 126 La. 787, 52 So. 1025, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 677.

[11] White Swan Laundry Co. v. Wehrhan, 202 Ala. 87, 79 So. 479, citing R. C. L.; Bona v. S. R. Thomas Auto Co. 137 Ark. 217, 208 S. W. 306, citing R. C. L.; Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co. 180 Cal. 32, 179 P. 203, 15 A.L.R. 401; Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194; Ulmer v. Pistole, 115 Miss. 485, 76 So. 522, citing R. C. L.; Lee v. Donnelly, 95 Vt. 121, 113 A. 542, citing R. C. L.; Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1177; 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 227; 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949; 108 Am. St. Rep. 214; 4 Ann. Cas. 398; 13 Ann. Cas. 464.

[12] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1177.

[13] State v. Campbell, 82 Conn. 671, 74 A. 927, 135 Am. St. Rep. 293, 18 Ann. Cas. 236; Weil v. Kreutzer, 134 Ky. 563, 121 S. W. 471, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557; Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194.

Annotation: 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557.

[14] White Swan Laundry Co. v. Wehrhan, 202 Ala. 87, 79 So. 479, citing R. C. L.; Minor v. Mapes, 102 Ark. 351, 144 S. W. 219, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214; Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co. 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125, citing R. C. L.; Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194; Flynt v. Fondren, 122 Miss. 248, 84 So. 188, citing R. C. L.; Ulmer v. Pistole, 115 Miss. 485, 76 So. 522, citing R. C. L.; Paulsen v. Klinge, 92 N. J. L. 99, 104 A. 95, citing R. C. L.; Minor v. Stevens, 65 Wash. 423, 118 P. 313, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1178.

Annotation: 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 558; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41; 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178; 4 Ann. Cas. 398.

[15] Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1228, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402.

Annotation: 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1131; 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 558; 13 Ann. Cas. 464.

pedestrian in the street may amount to negligence.[16] Obviously, when a car is traveling silently on the wrong side of the road close to the curb, the person in control of the car should be observant of pedestrians who are traveling on the sidewalk and who may step into the street in front of the car.[17] The duty to anticipate the presence of others applies to private lanes which are open to the public use, and reasonable care must be taken in operating an automobile in such a lane not to injure a person who, as a mere licensee, may be driving a horse and carriage through the lane as a short cut between two highways.[18] Where a wagon or other vehicle obscures or obstructs the view of a street crossing when the presence thereon of others may reasonably be anticipated, extra vigilance and caution are required of the driver of an automobile in order to prevent injury to persons on such crossing.[19]

§ 169. Presumption that Others Will Exercise Due Care.—The duty of care between persons using the highway is mutual, and each person may assume that others traveling on the highway will comply with this obligation.[20] He may assume that other persons will obey the law of the road.[1]

§ 170. Youth of Operator.—It is the general view that the youth of the person whose acts or omissions are being scrutinized is a fact to be taken into consideration in determining the reasonableness of his conduct.[2] The fact that a minor is licensed to operate an automobile under a statute prohibiting the operation of a motor vehicle without a license, providing for the issuance of a license upon application and proof to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the applicant is a proper person to receive it, and forbidding the issuance of a license to any person under sixteen years of age, does not conclusively establish that his capacity to exercise care is the same as that of an adult.[3] It has been held that an intelligent young person may be responsible for punitive damages the same as an adult person.[4]

2. EMERGENCY RULE

§ 171. Generally.—An automobile driver who, by the negligence of another and not by his own negligence, is suddenly placed in an emergency and compelled to act instantly to avoid a collision or injury is not guilty of negligence if he makes such a choice as a person of ordinary prudence placed in such a position might make, even though he did not make the wisest choice and one that would have been required in the exercise of ordinary care, but for the emergency.[5] Nor, if he so acts under these circumstances, is he guilty of contributory negligence,[6] at least, negligence or contributory negligence on his part cannot be found as a matter of law.[7] Where the situation of peril arises because of the driver's own negligence, the emergency rule cannot be invoked in his behalf.[8] Moreover, the emergency rule does not apply if the driver is not in a position of sudden peril, even though he mistakenly thinks he is because he does not use his sense of sight to see what is plainly observable.[9]

---

[16] Fitzgerald v. Norman (Mo.) 252 S. W. 43, citing R. C. L.; Deitchler v. Ball, 99 Wash. 483, 170 P. 123, citing R. C. L.; Stephenson v. Parton, 89 Wash. 653, 155 P. 147, citing R. C. L.

Negligence of one driving an automobile at night in not discovering a cow on the road until within 15 feet of it may be found from the fact that his headlights were in good condition and lighted the whole road for a distance of 18 or 20 rods. Bombard v. Newton, 94 Vt. 354, 111 A. 510, 11 A.L.R. 1402.

[17] Annotation: 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557.

[18] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 228.

[19] Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

[20] Annotation: 4 Ann. Cas. 398.

A person operating an automobile has the right to act upon the assumption that every person whom he meets will also exercise ordinary care and caution according to the circumstances, and will not negligently or recklessly expose himself to danger, but rather, will make an attempt to avoid it; but when an operator of a motor vehicle has had time to realize, or, by the exercise of proper care and watchfulness, should realize, that a person whom he meets is in a somewhat helpless condition or apparently unable to avoid the approaching machine, he must exert himself to avoid a collision. Weil v. Kreutzer, 134 Ky. 563, 121 S. W. 471, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 557.

[1] Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

[2] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1277.

[3] Charbonneau v. MacRury, 84 N. H. 501, 153 A. 457, 73 A.L.R. 1266.

[4] Levin v. Goodman, 107 N. J. Eq. 473, 153 A. 476, 73 A.L.R. 1278.

The sudden emergency doctrine is not an exception to the general rule; the question is whether the defendant acted as an ordinarily prudent and careful person would have done under the same circumstances, and the emergency is one of the circumstances contemplated by the rule. If the defendant's course was one that an ordinarily prudent and careful driver put in such a position might have taken, he is relieved from liability; otherwise he is not. The driver's own judgment or impulse is not in any situation, emergent or otherwise, the law's criterion. The driver is exonerated if the course which he takes in an emergency is one which might fairly be chosen by an intelligent and prudent person.[10] If the skidding of a car is the proximate cause of a collision, the owner or operator of the vehicle with which it came into collision is not liable even though he may have been negligent in some respects.

§ 172. Accidents Near Street Cars.—The emergency rule[11] applies to accidents occurring near street cars. An error of judgment on the part of the driver of an automobile, suddenly confronted with an emergency in that a street car was almost upon him as he entered a street intersection, in attempting to cross rather than to stop, does not necessarily constitute negligence.[12] However, where a person operating an automobile upon a street crossing a car track proceeded, on the assumption that an approaching car was not going to stop at a regular stopping place, until it was too late to stop his automobile and avoid a collision with one alighting from the car, it was held that the driver of the automobile was guilty of negligence and could not invoke the emergency rule to relieve him from liability.[13]

---

[5] Payne v. Shotwell (C. C. A. 3d) 273 F. 806, writ of certiorari denied in 257 U. S. 653, 66 L. ed. 418, 42 S. Ct. 94; Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669; Lange v. Affleck, 160 Md. 695, 155 A. 150, 79 A.L.R. 1274; Landry v. Hubert, 100 Vt. 268, 137 A. 97 (later appeal in 101 Vt. 111, 141 A. 593, 63 A.L.R. 396); Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676; Ritter v. Johnson, 163 Wash. 153, 300 P. 518, 79 A.L.R. 1270; Olson v. Hermansen, 196 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A.L.R. 1243; O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 680, s. 27 A.L.R. 1197, and 79 A.L.R. 1278.

[6] Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Kilmer (C. C. A. 2d) 231 F. 628, writ of certiorari denied in 242 U. S. 627, 61 L. ed. 535, 37 S. Ct. 13; Dickinson v. Erie R. Co. 81 N. J. L. 464, 81 A. 104, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 150.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 680, s. 27 A.L.R. 1197, 79 A.L.R. 1278.

[7] Payne v. Shotwell (C. C. A. 3d) 273 F. 806, writ of certiorari denied in 257 U. S. 653, 66 L. ed. 418, 42 S. Ct. 94.

Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1197, s. 79 A.L.R. 1278.

[8] Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194; Landry v. Hubert, 100 Vt. 268, 137 A. 97, later appeal in 101 Vt. 111, 141 A. 593, 63 A.L.R. 396; Ritter v. Johnson, 163 Wash. 153, 300 P. 518, 79 A.L.R. 1270; Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676; Chaney v. Moore, 101 W. Va. 621, 134 S. E. 204, 47 A.L.R. 800; Bentson v. Brown, 186 Wis. 629, 203 N. W. 380, 38 A.L.R. 1417.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 680, s. 27 A.L.R. 1197, and 79 A.L.R. 1278.

Where subsequent negligence upon the part of the defendant has been set up and has been answered by a plea of concurrent subsequent contributory negligence, it has been held that the fact that the plaintiff was in a place of danger by reason of his own original negligence does not bar the application of the emergency rule. Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1200.

One is liable for injuries inflicted upon another by extricating himself from a perilous situation in which he had placed himself by his own negligence. Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676.

An automobile driver cannot put himself in a position where, in order to save himself, he must injure someone else. Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194.

[9] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1282.

[10] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1283.

The emergency rule does not, as a matter of law, relieve the driver of an automobile, suddenly confronted with an emergency, from the charge of negligence; the question is for the jury to determine whether, under the evidence and the law with regard to sudden emergency, ordinary care was exercised; an instruction is properly refused which, after purporting to state the general rule of law applicable to a sudden emergency, in attempting to apply the rule to the facts of the case, informed the jury that the action of the driver of the car, as outlined in the instruction, "would not constitute negligence." Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1284.

[11] See supra, § 171.

§ 173. Accidents at Railroad Crossings.—The emergency rule[14] applies to accidents at railroad crossings, as, for example, where a car is shut on a railroad crossing by the closing of the gates,[15] and to other miscellaneous situations.[16]

It is not necessarily negligence for the driver in an emergency after seeing an approaching train, to attempt to cross ahead of it;[17] or, when he is partly over a track, to reverse;[18] or to stall his engine on the track;[19] or to fail to stop and jump from his car when in close proximity to an approaching train.[20]

§ 174. Accidents at Street or Highway Intersections.—The emergency rule[1] applies to accidents at street or highway intersections.[2] Turning to the left in an emergency, in an attempt to avoid a collision with the plaintiff's car, which turned a corner on the wrong side of the street,[3] or to avoid a collision with a boy on roller skates, who, without warning, suddenly turned in front of the automobile,[4] is not negligence,[5] even though turning to the left is a violation of a statute or ordinance.

Just when an emergency exists within the meaning of the rule presents a question dependent upon the facts of the individual case.[6]

---

[12] Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1201, s. 79 A.L.R. 1285.

[13] Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676.

[14] See supra, § 171.

[15] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 684, s. 27 A.L.R. 1203, and 79 A.L.R. 1288.

[16] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1289.

[17] In Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Kilmer (C. C. A. 2d) 231 F. 628, writ of certiorari denied in 242 U. S. 627, 61 L. ed. 535, 37 S. Ct. 13, where there was evidence that although the plaintiff stopped, looked, and listened, he did not see or hear the engine until his automobile was on the track, and he then opened up the throttle and attempted to cross, the court stated that what he did after he got upon the track was not a matter of controlling importance, and that in such a case, where one suddenly finds himself put in peril, he is excusable if he makes an unwise decision as to what he should do.

In Payne v. Shotwell (C. C. A. 3d) 273 F. 806, certiorari denied in (1921) 257 U. S. 653, 66 L. ed. 418, 42 S. Ct. 94, where the plaintiff stopped his automobile fifty yards from the railroad crossing where the view was unobstructed, and, seeing no approaching train, then permitted it to coast slowly and under full control toward the crossing, until a train which gave no signal was so close upon him that in attempting to cross ahead of it his car was struck, the court held that the question of his contributory negligence, in view of the sudden emergency with which he was confronted, was one for the jury.

[18] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 683.

[19] Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1203, s. 79 A.L.R. 1288.

[20] Dickinson v. Erie R. Co. 81 N. J. L. 464, 81 A. 104, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 150.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 683, s. 27 A.L.R. 1203, and 79 A.L.R. 1288.

[1] See supra, § 171.

[2] Lange v. Affleck, 160 Md. 695, 155 A. 150, 79 A.L.R. 1274.

[3] Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669.

[4] Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1204, s. 79 A.L.R. 1289.

[5] Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1204, s. 79 A.L.R. 1289.

[6] It has been held that there was not such an emergency as relieved the defendant of liability as matter of law for injury to one riding with him, as the result of a collision between automobiles at a street intersection, where there was evidence that the defendant might have avoided the accident by turning a little further to the right, instead of to the left toward the other car, that the view was unobstructed, and that the driver of the other car had slowed down to make a left-hand turn and might have been waiting for the defendant, who had the right of way, to pass before completing the turn. Lange v. Affleck, 160 Md. 695, 155 A. 150, 79 A.L.R. 1274.

The mere fact that as an automobile approaches a side street another car appears "of a sudden" at the intersection, on the right of the driver of the first car, does not create an emergency, within the emergency rule. Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1294.

§ 175. Accidents at Intersection of Highway and Private Way.—The emergency rule[7] applies to accidents at the intersection of a highway and private way. Thus, it has been held that the driver of an automobile was not guilty of negligence as a matter of law in swerving to the left side of the road instead of continuing on the right-hand side of the road, to avoid colliding with an automobile over which he had the right of way, which suddenly emerged from an obscured private driveway on his right, although, had he done so, the accident probably would not have occurred.[8]

§ 176. Meeting and Passing Other Vehicles.—The emergency rule[9] may justify a violation of traffic regulations in meeting and passing cars.[10] One who is driving an automobile along the right side of a street and sees another automobile approaching him on the same side of the street cannot be declared negligent as a matter of law in attempting to turn and pass to the left when he discovers that the other car, which is almost upon him, apparently does not intend to turn out.[11] One is not negligent as a matter of law in attempting to stop, instead of passing to the left, when he is suddenly confronted in the nighttime by a car parked on the wrong side of the road.[12] And it has been held that an automobile driver cannot be found negligent in applying his brakes when in imminent danger of collision with a car coming from the opposite direction on the wrong side of the road, which he is endeavoring to avoid by turning to the left, although if he had not checked his speed he might have escaped collision with the other car.[13]

Not all situations create an emergency within the meaning of the rule.[14]

The doctrine that in order to invoke the emergency rule, a party relying thereon must be without fault, was applied where an automobile driver proceeding at 30 miles an hour, two car lengths behind another car which made an emergency stop, turned to the left, thereby colliding with an on-coming car, it being held that the driver of an automobile is required to keep such distance from the car ahead of him and maintain such observation thereof that an emergency stop may safely be made. It was held, accordingly, that the driver could not avoid responsibility for his conduct in turning to the left merely on the ground that he exercised his best judgment when confronted with the sudden danger.[15]

---

[7] See supra, § 171.

[8] Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1205, s. 79 A.L.R. 1294.

[9] See supra, § 171.

[10] Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1206, s. 79 A.L.R. 1295, 1297.

The driver of an automobile, who attempted to pass to the left of a standing lumber wagon, and, when confronted with an on-coming car, turned back to the right, behind the wagon, with the result that a piece of lumber penetrated the windshield and struck a passenger in the automobile, may be excused in the emergency. Landry v. Hubert, 100 Vt. 268, 137 A. 97 (later appeal in 101 Vt. 111, 141 A. 593, 63 A.L.R. 396), holding that it was not erroneous to reject an instruction on the doctrine of imminent peril which omitted an essential element, that the emergency must not have been brought about, in whole or in part, by the driver's own fault.

[11] Wallace v. Bergius [1915] S. C. 205, 52 Scot. L. R. 130, 7 B. R. C. 692—Ct. of Sess.

Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1207, s. 79 A.L.R. 1295.

[12] Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 1206, s. 79 A.L.R. 1295.

[13] O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1297.

[14] It was held that there was no emergency or imminent danger shown, at least such as would relieve the defendant of negligence as matter of law, where, in traveling at night along a highway with which she was familiar, defendant failed to observe an approaching automobile until it was about 25 or 30 feet away, and then, although the roadway was sufficiently wide for the cars to pass and the other car was on its own side of the road and its lights were not blinding, the defendant suddenly turned to the right, precipitating the car into a gulch and injuring the plaintiff, who was a passenger therein. Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1300.

[15] Ritter v. Johnson, 163 Wash. 153, 300 P. 518, 79 A.L.R. 1270.

§ 177. Miscellaneous Applications.—The emergency rule[16] has been held to apply in various cases of a miscellaneous nature involving alleged negligence of automobile drivers.[17] For example, the rule may relieve of the charge of negligence a driver who has driven on the sidewalk to avoid another vehicle.[18]

The qualification of the general rule where the situation of peril arises because of the driver's own negligence, to the effect that the emergency rule cannot be invoked in his behalf, was applied where the defendant's truck collided with a horse which was being ridden along the highway by the plaintiff, on the latter's extreme right-hand side of the road, and the alleged emergency, consisting in the shying and turning of the animal as the truck approached, was due to the fact that the truck was proceeding on the wrong side of the highway, dangerously close to the horse, causing it to become frightened and fear for its own safety.[19] Also, in an action for death of a workman on a highway as the result of a collision with the defendant's automobile, it was held that in view of the dangerous rate of speed at which it was shown the defendant had operated the car, notwithstanding danger signs, he could not avoid responsibility on the ground that he was confronted by a sudden emergency, since he had created the emergency.[20]

3. Physical Disability of Operator

§ 178. Generally.—The fact that one has a physical defect will not, in itself, render him liable for an injury resulting from the operation of an automobile, or prevent his recovering for an injury, where the defect is not such as to render the operation of the car by him negligence.[1] The fact that he has lost the sight of one eye, if it does not greatly impair his vision,[2] or that he is crippled,[3] does not, as a matter of law, incapacitate him from driving. The question is usually one of fact in each case.[4]

---

[16] See supra, § 171.

[17] For example, it has been applied where a mechanic in a garage lost control of an automobile when the accelerator stuck (the mechanic not knowing of the defect of the accelerator, which had been installed by the owner and was not an equipment intended for the car), and his foot slipped from the brake pedal which had become wet, with the result that, in the sudden and unforeseeable emergency, he ran the car against the door frame of the garage, injuring the plaintiff (Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1301); where the driver of an automobile going at a rate of 35 or 40 miles an hour, at night, suddenly was confronted by an excavating machine left by a road contractor unlighted on the driver's right-hand side of the road, and attempted to go around it instead of applying his brakes, but struck the machine, which was about 40 feet away when he first discovered it (Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1301, 1302); and where the driver of a truck could have avoided an accident through the truck's striking a sled on which a boy was coasting, by driving a few feet further in a certain direction instead of attempting to stop his car, the court saying that the driver was not chargeable with negligence for failure to adopt the most judicious course as disclosed by subsequent events (Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1302).

[18] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 686, s. 27 A.L.R. 1205, 79 A.L.R. 1295.

[19] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1302, 1303.

[20] Chaney v. Moore, 101 W. Va. 621, 134 S. E. 204, 47 A.L.R. 800.

In Olson v. Hermansen, 196 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A.L.R. 1243, it appeared that an emergency was created by the sudden appearance of dogs in the highway in front of the automobile. The driver swerved to the right to avoid striking the dogs, which jumped from behind a car parked on the lefthand side of the road. It was held that the driver, in view of the emergency, could not be held liable for injury to, or death of, guests in the car, which tipped over.

[1] Wilson v. Bittner, 129 Or. 122, 276 P. 268, 64 A.L.R. 132.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 136.

[2] Wilson v. Bittner, 129 Or. 122, 276 P. 268, 64 A.L.R. 132.

[3] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 137.

[4] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 139.

A refusal to give an instruction to the effect that if the jury believed from the evidence that the plaintiff was injured by the unskilfulness of the defendant in the operation of his car, whether such unskilfulness was due to inexperience in driving or to his physical condition, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict, was held not prejudicial error, where there was evidence that the defendant had driven his car for four months, covering in that time about three thousand miles, and that while he could not operate the foot brake in the usual manner, he could and did operate it by hand, having provided a suitable attachment to the brak-

§ 179. Effect of Knowledge or Lack of Knowledge of Disability.—Whether or not an individual has knowledge of physical defects or infirmities rendering it dangerous for him to operate a motor vehicle is frequently of considerable importance in determining his liability. One who knows that he is physically unfit to operate an automobile on the highway, as, for example, that he is subject to attacks of such a character as will prevent his operating an automobile as a reasonably prudent man would do, and nevertheless undertakes to drive on the highway, should be held liable for an injury resulting when he sustains an attack while driving, by reason of which he loses control of the car and causes injury to another.[5] Certainly physical infirmities of which a driver of an automobile has knowledge will not relieve him from exercising the care required of an ordinarily prudent person.[6]

Where, however, the driver has no knowledge or intimation of any physical infirmity, and becomes incapacited without warning, he cannot be held liable for any injury resulting from the operation of his car while he is so incapacitated.[7] He must show that the accident was caused by reason of this sudden incapacity.[8]

§ 180. Falling Asleep.—In an ordinary case, one cannot go to sleep while driving an automobile without having relaxed the vigilance which the law requires, i. e., without having been negligent. The choice of keeping awake or ceasing from driving lies with him.[9] The mere fact that one driving an automobile permits himself to go to sleep justifies an inference of negligence sufficient to make a prima facie case in favor of one injured by the car while he is in that condition, if no circumstances tending to excuse or justify his conduct are proved.[10] It is recognized that there may be circumstances under which falling asleep is not negligence.[11]

Whether or not going to sleep is negligence rendering a person liable for injury caused by his car while he was running it in that condition is a question of fact upon consideration of all the circumstances, including the fact that sleep does not come upon one without warning of its approach.[12]

§ 181. Driving while Intoxicated.—The intoxication of one who voluntariing mechanism which permitted its effectual operation in that manner. Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 137.

---

[5] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 137; 11 B. R. C. 1045.

[6] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 138.

[7] Slattery v. Haley, 52 Ont. L. Rep. 95, 11 B. R. C. 1036, [1923] 3 D. L. R. 156.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 138; 11 B. R. C. 1045.

In Slattery v. Haley, 52 Ont. L. Rep. 95, 11 B. R. C. 1036, [1923] 3 D. L. R. 156, one who, unaccompanied, was driving his automobile on a city street, supposing himself in perfect health, but who, without any preliminary symptoms or warning, became unconscious and fell back in his car, was held not liable, under an act giving a right of action when death is caused by "wrong'ful act, neglect, or default," for the death of a child, killed by the automobile which, when left without any guidance, ran upon the sidewalk, since the use of the highway was lawful, and in order to create liability, negligence must be shown, and in order to create liability for an act which is not wilful and intentional, it must be shown to have been the conscious act of the defendant's volition,—he must have done that which he ought not to have done, or omitted that which he ought to have done, as a conscious being.

[8] Meyers v. Tri-State Auto. Co. 121 Minn. 68, 140 N. W. 184, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113.

[9] Bushnell v. Bushnell, 103 Conn. 583, 131 A. 432, 44 A.L.R. 785.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 136.

[10] Bushnell v. Bushnell, 103 Conn. 583, 131 A. 437, 44 A.L.R. 785.

[11] Ibid.

In Bushnell v. Bushnell, 103 Conn. 583, 131 A. 437, 44 A.L.R. 785, the court said: "Certainly, in all reason, he who, stricken by paralysis, or seized by an epileptic fit, still continues with his hands upon the wheel of the automobile he is driving, and unconscious, so directs it as to cause its collision with another, cannot be held negligent for the way in which he controls it; and no more can he who exercises a like direction after he has been overtaken by sleep. In such a case, the question must be, Was the defendant negligent in permitting himself to fall asleep?"

[12] Bushnell v. Bushnell, 103 Conn. 583, 131 A. 437, 44 A.L.R. 785.

ly drinks liquor furnishes no excuse for his negligent operation of an automobile so as to cause injury to another. He is held to the same degree of care as a sober man in the same circumstances.[13] It is within the police power of a state to create a conclusive presumption of negligence on the part of one driving an automobile while in a state of intoxication. Such a statute is considered to create a conclusive presumption of negligence, not as a principle of evidence, but for the purpose of creating, defining, and regulating rights on highways.[14] It is held to be negligence per se to violate a statute making it a misdemeanor to drive a motor vehicle while in an intoxicated condition. Civil liability for violating a statute of that kind does not exist unless the violation of the statute is the proximate cause of the injury for which suit is brought.[15]

D. Measure of Care Required re Persons

1. In General

§ 182. Generally.—The application of the general principles of negligence as they relate to persons in particular situations will now be considered. It is fundamental that toward persons in various situations the operator of a motor vehicle must exercise ordinary, reasonable, or due care. This depends upon the place, circumstances, conditions, and surroundings in which the person is situated. Statutory requirements may modify this rule.

§ 183. Motorist Engaged about Automobile on Highway.—The driver of a vehicle approaching a person engaged about an automobile in the highway owes such person the duty of exercising reasonable care to avoid injuring him.[16] A driver who, without observing whether the way is clear, attempts to pass a truck which the driver thereof has stopped at the extreme right of the traveled portion of the road for the purpose of examining a tire, and who, in order to avoid a collision with an on-coming car, deliberately drives his car into the truck, causing it to run against the driver thereof as he is cranking it and to injure him, is, as a matter of law, guilty of negligence.[17]

It is not the rule that a driver of an automobile must stop his automobile or check his speed every time he sees a red light on the highway, at risk of being chargeable with negligence; whether or not negligence can be predicated from such a failure must always depend on the circumstances. An approaching driver may rightfully assume that a red light at one side of the highway marks the limit of danger and that the other side of the highway is clear; it is only when the light blocks the highway, or is so placed as to indicate that the passage is so narrow as not to afford a safe passage within the speed limit, that he is chargeable with negligence if he does not approach with his vehicle under control.[18] The question whether such care has been used in any particular case depends upon the facts and circumstances which are made to appear, and is generally one of fact, for the determination of the jury.[19]

---

[13] Powell v. Berry, 145 Ga. 696, 89 S. E. 753, L.R.A.1917A, 306.
Annotation: L.R.A.1917A, 306.

[14] Packard v. O'Neil, 45 Idaho, 427, 262 P. 881, 56 A.L.R. 317.
Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 327.

[15] Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 327.

[16] Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507; Grain v. Gordon, 280 Pa. 576, 124 A. 737, 34 A.L.R. 1511.
Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 134, s. 34 A.L.R. 1513 and 61 A.L.R. 1159.

In Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507, in an action to recover for the death of an automobilist who had stopped his car on the right-hand side of the highway, obtained a pail of water for his radiator, and was about to recross the road and return the empty pail when he was struck by defendant's car, which was traveling in the same direction, it was held that the operator of a car approaching a stationary car or team should be charged with the duty of observing whether any person or persons are connected with the standing vehicle, and should have his car or team under such control as to avoid an accident with any person or persons who may be around about such car or team, or who attempt to cross the road in front of the on-coming car, provided such person or persons are themselves in the exercise of due care.

Where defendants at nighttime ran their car into a chain stretched from a wrecking car to a car which had run off the edge of the highway, causing injury to the operator of the wrecking car, it was held that it was the duty of the defendants to exercise ordinary care in driving their automobile on the highway, both in keeping a lookout for people who might be endangered by them, and in having the car under reasonable control. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1160.

Where plaintiff's intestate was killed by defendant's automobile as she stepped around the front of plaintiff's standing automobile to open a gate on the opposite side of the road, the court held that the fact that a car stops in plain view should put the driver of another car upon notice that he should proceed with caution. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1161.

[17] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1159.

§ 184. Reciprocal Duties of Automobile Drivers and Riders on Bicycles.—A person operating an automobile and one riding a bicycle owe to each other the duty to use reasonable care to avoid collision.[20] A bicycle rider must be vigilant under all circumstances and keep a proper lookout for automobiles, and he may be guilty of contributory negligence in approaching a much traveled intersecting city street, and looking only once for approaching vehicles, where, had he exercised more care, he might have avoided the automobile which struck him.[1] Riding a bicycle along a public highway within a few feet of a truck which obscures the view of the road ahead is not negligence per se.[2] A person so riding is bound to exercise the care of an ordinarily prudent person when the truck stops suddenly without warning; he cannot be charged with negligence as a matter of law in turning to the left, in order to pass the truck, directly into the path of an automobile coming from the opposite direction of the presence of which he is ignorant.[3]

It is not necessarily negligence for a person riding a bicycle along a street in front of an automobile to attempt to cross the road in front of the machine, if it is so far behind him that it may reasonably be expected that the driver will see him, and can and will, by the exercise of proper care, so manage the machine as to avoid a collision; the question of negligence is one for the jury under all the circumstances of the case.[4] The driver of an automobile has the right to turn it about, using any part of the street for this purpose, subject, however, to the right of others to use the street, and in the event of a collision with a bicycle while making such a turn, a statute declaring the law of the road and making it the duty of all vehicles to keep to the right does not apply so as to establish negligence on the part of the driver.[5]

The question of negligence in such cases is usually one for the jury.[6]

§ 185. Duty to Children.[7]—The driver of an automobile is not an insurer against injuries to children from the operation of the car.[8] He is bound to exercise ordinary, reasonable, or due care towards children as well as towards adults.[9] The age, maturity, and intelligence of the child is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether or not the driver has exercised such care. Actually, in certain instances, the driver may be required to exercise greater care towards children than towards adults, but this greater care is, in one sense, but "ordinary" care, namely, that degree of care which a man of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances.[10] He must exercise greater caution in order to avoid danger to children whom he may see, or, by the exercise of reasonable care, should see, on or near the highway.[11]

---

[18] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1162.

When a vehicle is stopped substantially in the middle of the highway, with sufficient space on either side for other vehicles to pass in safety, a driver approaching from the rear may make use of the unoccupied portion of the roadway on either side of the standing vehicle, exercising such care as the circumstances require. A driver exercising due care is not liable for the death of a person who suddenly stepped into his path from the protection of a standing car. Grein v. Gordon, 280 Pa. 576, 124 A. 737, 34 A.L.R. 1511.

[19] Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507.

Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 134, s. 34 A.L.R. 1513 and 61 A.L.R. 1159.

[20] Calahan v. Moll, 160 Wis. 523, 152 N. W. 179, L.R.A.1916A, 744.

[1] Annotation: 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 944; Ann. Cas. 1916E, 675.

[2] Simpson v. Snellenburg, 96 N. J. L. 518, 115 A. 403, 24 A.L.R. 503.

[3] Ibid.

[4] Rogers v. Phillips, 206 Mass. 308, 92 N. E. 327, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 944. And see BICYCLES [Also 3 R. C. L. p. 782].

[5] Annotation: 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 944.

[6] Simpson v. Snellenburg, 96 N. J. L. 518, 115 A. 403, 24 A.L.R. 503.

[7] Numerous sections of this article deal with the driver's duty towards children. For example, see infra, §§ 198 et seq., discussing a driver's duty to children suddenly darting into path of car. See also infra, § 213, as to a driver's duty to children between crossings.

See, for a discussion of children as trespassers, § 246, infra.

§ 186. —Children Playing in Street.—Ordinarily it is the duty of a person operating an automobile in a street in which there is a group of children playing, not only to bring his automobile under control, but to give warning of his approach and to manage his car, keeping in mind the risk that children may not exercise the care for their own protection that adults are expected to exercise.[12] The question of liability for injury to a child, for example, playing ball in the street, is not subject to any hard and fast rule. There is a reciprocal duty on the part of the driver and the child.[13] Upon the driver there rests the duty, after discovering the presence of the child, to proceed with that degree of care that a careful man would exercise when faced with such a situation.[14]

2. Pedestrians

a. In General

§ 187. Generally.—It is a well-established rule of law that even in the absence of statutory requirements, the operator of a motor vehicle must exercise ordinary, reasonable, or due care towards pedestrians.[15] The drivers of automobiles must share the streets with pedestrians,[16] and each person on the highway must so exercise his right to use it as not to injure others[17] and must exercise such caution as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances.[18] In other words, the rights of pedestrians and motor vehicles in a public street are equal, and each is obliged to act with due regard to the movements of the other.[19]

---

[8] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 197; L.R.A.1918A, 245.

[9] Annotation: L.R.A.1918A, 245.

[10] Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

It cannot be said as a matter of law that there was no negligence on the part of the operator of an automobile, who struck some small boys in a street, where he saw the boys about to cross the street where the accident happened before he turned into it from another street on which he was traveling, and, although a wagon obstructed his view to a certain extent, after his first sight he must have known that they would probably be at the crossing when he reached it, and where the evidence further shows that he was looking at some property owned by him instead of paying attention to the operation of his car. Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

A driver who, on approaching a crowded crossing in an automobile, observes the position of a child looking away from the car, is not justified in attempting to drive the car across, unless a prudent person would have done so under the same circumstances. Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221.

[11] Albert v. Munch, 141 La. 686, 75 So. 513, L.R.A.1918A, 240; Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

Annotation: L.R.A.1918A, 245; Ann. Cas. 1916E, 667.

[12] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1181, s. 67 A.L.R. 317.

See also, infra, § 194.

[13] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. p. 1304.

[14] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. p. 1304.

The fact that a sixteen-year-old boy is playing football in the street does not relieve the operator of an automobile from exercising due care, and after seeing the child, the operator is bound to proceed with that measure of caution that a careful man facing such a situation would exercise. Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1304.

[15] As to contributory negligence of pedestrians, see §§ 446 et seq.

[16] Minor v. Mapes, 102 Ark. 351, 144 S. W. 219, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214; Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1228, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402.

[17] Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396.

Annotation: 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345; 4 Ann. Cas. 398; 13 Ann. Cas. 464.

See also HIGHWAYS, STREETS AND SIDEWALKS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 1].

§ 188. Pedestrians under Disability.—The diligence and care required of the operators of automobiles vary in respect of persons of different ages or physical condition.[20] The driver of an automobile is bound to anticipate that he may meet infirm persons on a public street and to have his car under such control as will enable him to avoid injury by slowing up or, if necessary, stopping.[1] It is asserted that drivers owe a special care to aged, infirm, blind, and drunken pedestrians, particularly at intersections where pedestrians observing police regulations have the right of way.[2] This "special care" is ordinary care, under the circumstances, as the term "ordinary care" is used in this article.[3] A driver who observes or, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, ought to know, that a pedestrian is blind must use care commensurate with the danger involved,[4] and similarly, if he observes a drunken man in the street, he is bound to exercise the same degree of reasonable care that he would in the case of a child or helpless person.[5]

§ 189. Pedestrians on Sidewalk.—The general rule of law that even in the absence of statutory requirements, the operator of a motor vehicle must exercise ordinary, reasonable, or due care applies to situations where persons on the sidewalk are injured by motor vehicles.[6] Where the driver of an automobile, because of excessive speed, careless driving, or other negligent conduct, injures a pedestrian on the sidewalk, recovery may be had for the injuries resulting from such conduct.[7] Pedestrians are entitled to the right of way on the sidewalk of a city, and one backing an automobile over the sidewalk must do it in such a way that everybody may traverse the same in confidence and safety. He must take such precaution in driving that in no event or situation conceivable to an intelligent man, would he run over and injure a child using the sidewalk; anything short of this constitutes negligence on the part of the driver of the car.[8] Liability is based on negligence, however, and in the absence of a showing of negligence on the part of the driver of a motor vehicle, there can be no recovery by the person injured.[9] Since, however, the sidewalk is a safety zone from vehicles, an injury from a vehicle incurred there is deemed to be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the driver.[10] This rule applies to a diversity of factual situations.[11]

---

[18] Minor v. Stevens, 65 Wash. 423, 118 P. 313, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178.

Annotation: 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178.

[19] Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 97, s. 93 A.L.R. 551.

Both the person having the management of the automobile and the traveler on foot are required to use such reasonable care, circumspection, prudence, and discretion as the circumstances require, an increase of care being required where there is an increase of danger; "and both are bound to the reasonable use of all their senses for the prevention of accident, and the exercise of all such reasonable caution as ordinarily careful and prudent persons would exercise under like circumstances." Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 98.

[20] Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

[1] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 578.

The fact that the driver of an automobile, who struck a pedestrian while backing his automobile out across the sidewalk, did not know that the plaintiff was somewhat deaf and her sight impaired does not militate in his favor nor in any way minimize his responsibility for the accident and his liability therefor, and it is beside the question that he was sounding his horn since, aside from giving such a warning, it was incumbent upon him to proceed across the sidewalk cautiously so as to avoid running over pedestrians rightfully proceeding thereon. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 578, 579.

[2] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 578.

[3] See supra, § 165.

[4] Weinstein v. Wheeler, 127 Or. 406, 271 P. 733, 62 A.L.R. 574.

[5] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 578.

[6] Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 840, s. 75 A.L.R. 559.

[7] Linberg v. Stanto, 211 Cal. 771, 297 P. 9, 75 A.L.R. 555; Brown v. Des Moines Steam Bottling Works, 174 Iowa, 715, 156 N. W. 829, 1 A.L.R. 835.

[8] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 560.

§ 190. —Injury in Attempt to Avoid Collision.—If the operator of a motorcar is negligent in bringing about a collision or in his conduct thereafter, the collision is no defense to the claim of a third person, a pedestrian on the sidewalk, for injuries received as the result of the collision.[12] But where the evidence shows that the automobile was driven on the sidewalk by the impact of another car in such a way that the driver could not avoid the accident, and that at the time of the impact the car was not going at an excessive rate of speed and had the right of way, the view is taken that the operator is not liable for injuries sustained by a pedestrian who, while on the sidewalk, was struck by the car.[13]

§ 191. Pedestrians Colliding with Side of Car.—The few cases that have passed upon the question have generally held that the owner or driver of an automobile is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian received when such pedestrian collided with the side of the automobile, either upon the ground that the driver is not guilty of negligence,[14] or upon the ground that the injured pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence.[15] If, however, the driver of an automobile could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered the peril of a pedestrian, crossing the street in such manner as to be likely to come in contact with the vehicle, and oblivious of his danger, in time, by the exercise of ordinary diligence, to have avoided the collision, the driver or owner of the automobile may be held liable.[16]

---

[9] Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 840, s. 75 A.L.R. 565.

The driver of an automobile about to turn from the highway across a sidewalk into a private driveway after dark, when the machine is traveling at low speed and his headlights are burning, cannot be found to be negligent in failing to sound his horn to warn pedestrians of his approach, if, in his judgment, the course of his lights upon the ground is adequate for that purpose. Henderson v. O'Leary, 177 Wis. 130, 87 N. W. 994, 24 A.L.R. 942.

[10] Linberg v. Stanto, 211 Cal. 771, 297 P. 9, 75 A.L.R. 555.

Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 849, s. 75 A.L.R. 573.

[11] Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 844, s. 75 A.L.R. 565.

In Brown v. Des Moines Steam Bottling Works, 174 Iowa, 715, 156 N. W. 829, 1 A.L.R. 835, it appeared that the defendant's auto truck struck a frog or curve in a street railway track, which suddenly diverted it from its course, so that the steering wheel was thrown out of the driver's hands and the car ran on the sidewalk and struck a pedestrian thereon. It also appeared that the driver had frequently crossed the street railway tracks at this point, and with the same truck. The court held the owner of the machine liable for the injuries sustained by the pedestrian, on the ground that the driver permitted the truck to be diverted from its main course of travel on the street, to the sidewalk, without any warning of its approach to those rightfully congregated there, and further held that it becomes the duty of one operating a vehicle on a public highway, in a thickly populated part of a city, to exercise reasonable care to see that he has the vehicle under control, and so to manage it that it will not unreasonably or unnecessarily imperil the safety of others on the public highway.

The owner of an automobile, who negligently left it standing unoccupied and unattended on a street railway track while he went to a near-by store, where, during his absence it was struck by a street car and thrown against the curb and sidewalk, injuring a person cleaning the sidewalk, is liable for the personal injuries sustained. Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 840.

The driver of a car, who parks it on a street grade, is, as a reasonable person, bound to anticipate that if the car gets loose, it will coast down the hill, and that third parties will run out into the street and try to stop it, especially if the abandoned car is going slowly; and where the defendant's negligence is the proximate cause of an injury to one struck by the car while he was standing on the sidewalk, he cannot escape liability on the ground that a third person who attempted to stop the car changed its course. Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 561.

The owner of a motor vehicle is liable for injuries inflicted upon a person standing on the sidewalk, who was struck by overhanging tires carried on the running board of the car. Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 840.

The owner of an automobile was held liable for the death of a boy, where it appeared that the driver turned from the line on which he had crossed the street, with such speed, near the curb, that the rear part of the car slued and projected over the sidewalk, striking the boy who was standing thereon. Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 840.

[12] Linberg v. Stanto, 211 Cal. 771, 297 P. 9, 75 A.L.R. 555.

Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 566.

[13] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 566.

[14] Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 1513.

[15] Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 1513, 1514.

See generally, §§ 446 et seq.

§ 192. Pedestrian Falling and Being Struck by Automobiles.—In cases involving liability for injuries to pedestrians who, after falling in the street, are struck by motor vehicles, the fundamental principle that in order that liability be incurred the driver must have been negligent applies.[17]

§ 193. Traffic Officers.—Drivers of automobiles owe a traffic officer the same duty that they owe other pedestrians.[18] In an action to recover for an injury to a mounted traffic officer, a verdict for the plaintiff was sustained; evidence that the driver of a truck disregarded a traffic signal at a busy street intersection and drove the truck into a mounted traffic officer with such violence that the horse and rider were knocked down and injured is sufficient to sustain a verdict for such officer.[19]

§ 194. Persons Working on Streets or Highways.—The operator of an automobile on the streets and highways is bound to observe extraordinary conditions existing along the way, and when warned, by a sign or otherwise, that workmen are engaged ahead in repairing the road, he must give notice of his approach and attempt to pass the place where the workmen are so employed at such rate of speed, and at all times have his car under such control, as to avoid injuring workmen so engaged.[20] A street sweeper is lawfully upon the roadway, and when he is performing his duty, in plain view, the driver of any vehicle is bound to take notice of him and to exercise the care enjoined by law upon the drivers of such vehicles not to injure him.[1]

---

[16] Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508, holding the driver of an auto truck guilty of negligence in a case involving the injuring of a small boy who walked against the side of the truck while he was crossing the street upon the crosswalk. In this case the driver swung around the corner from an intersecting street and, as he was making the turn, looked backward and continued so to look until the collision; had he looked in the direction in which he was going, he could have seen the boy approaching the truck and that he was wholly oblivious of the approach of the machine. The driver approached the crosswalk without giving any warning and without changing the direction or speed of the truck.

[17] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1339.

This section is restricted to cases where the pedestrian has fallen in the street for some cause unconnected with the operation of the motor vehicle. Thus, it is held that the driver of an automobile, running it a short distance behind another car, just before dark, and with his view wholly obstructed by the automobile directly in front of him, is not negligent in striking a prostrate pedestrian who has fallen upon the street at a point other than a regular crossing and who cannot be seen by the driver of the second car in time to avoid the accident, though the driver of the preceding car, having an unobstructed view, is able to turn aside and avoid an accident at the signal of a third person. Varano v. Goodman, 294 Pa. 274, 144 A. 74, 62 A.L.R. 1337. The court adopted the view that the accident was unavoidable.

Where the plaintiff, in an intoxicated condition, wandered over a public highway at night in search of a tire, on the outskirts of a city where automobiles travel almost exclusively, and the preponderance of the evidence indicated that he was struck by defendant's automobile while lying in the roadway, the court said: "It is argued, and we are aware of some authorities in support of the contention, that an automobile or other motor-driven vehicle, if properly equipped with brakes and lights, and if carefully driven, should be stopped within the range of vision at which objects can be seen on the road ahead. We do not now, nor have we in previous decisions, approved of this doctrine. Defendant, in the instant case, was driving at a lawful and reasonable rate of speed; he appears to have made every possible effort to avoid the accident. It is not shown that his lights or brakes were defective, or that he failed to see the plaintiff when he should have seen him, that is, within sufficient time to avoid hitting him. Plaintiff was not dragged after being hit, and the fact that the car was stopped before it had passed over from plaintiff's body indicates that the car was well under brakes before reaching or striking plaintiff. . . . We are satisfied from the evidence that defendant in this case was free from negligence, and that such cannot be said of the plaintiff." Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1339, 1340.

However, a finding that the driver of an automobile was negligent in running over and killing the decedent who, in order to protect herself from injury that might result from a runaway team, a moment before had jumped from her buggy and was lying prostrate in the highway, was held to be sustained by the evidence, where it appeared that a person who was aware of the presence of decedent in the street made every effort to cause him to stop his car, and, though aware of such efforts, defendant failed to heed them. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1340.

[18] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1518.

[19] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1519.

b. PEDESTRIANS SUDDENLY DARTING OR STEPPING INTO PATH OF CAR

(1) ADULTS

§ 195. Driver's Duty Generally.—The law requires of the operator of an automobile the exercise of reasonable care toward pedestrians; he is not, however, an insurer, and where a pedestrian is standing in a place of safety and apparently sees an approaching automobile, the driver has the right to assume that the pedestrian will remain in the place of safety until the car has passed and will not suddenly step into a place of danger.[2] This assumes that the car is being lawfully operated. The fact that a pedestrian came into the path of the car suddenly and so close that the driver could not stop and avoid striking him will not excuse the driver, where the car was being driven at an unreasonable rate of speed under the circumstances.[3]

§ 196. Pedestrian Coming from behind or around Vehicle or Alighting Therefrom.—A driver of an automobile is not bound to anticipate that a pedestrian may suddenly run from behind a parked automobile into his car, or into the path of it, or do the same in alighting from a car, in the absence of anything to put him on notice that such an event is likely to occur.[4] If he is driving at a reasonable rate of speed, so that he is able to stop immediately or within a reasonable distance, no liability exists.[5] He must, however, observe whether any person is about a car standing by the roadside, and he must have his car under control.[6] A driver may be put on notice, so that ordinary care requires him to operate his car more slowly and have it under better control, by the fact that he is passing through a busy thoroughfare on which machines are parked and which people are crossing at any point.[7]

A driver operating at an excessive rate of speed under the circumstances may be guilty of negligence even in striking a pedestrian coming from behind or around a vehicle, or alighting therefrom.[8]

§ 197. Pedestrian Turning or Stepping Backwards.—The driver of an automobile has the right to assume that a pedestrian crossing a street, having reached a place of safety, and being out of the path of his approaching car, will either remain in such place of safety or continue his journey in crossing the street, and that he will not suddenly retrace his steps and come within the line of travel of the car.[9]

---

[20] Chaney v. Moore, 101 W. Va. 621, 134 S. E. 204, 47 A.L.R. 800.
Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 807.

[1] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 807.

[2] Klink v. Bany, 207 Iowa, 1241, 224 N. W. 540, 65 A.L.R. 187.
Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 193.

The driver of an automobile, who is free from negligence, has a right to presume that no person will suddenly run from the side of the road into his line of travel. Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 314.

It has been held that no negligence is shown rendering the defendant liable, where the testimony showed that a pedestrian attempted to cross in front of a coal truck, although the defendant's automobile, which was in plain sight, was approaching at such a distance and rate of speed as to render her attempt to cross palpably dangerous, even though the driver of the car failed to sound his horn or give notice to pedestrians generally. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 194.

[3] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 193.

[4] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 194.

[5] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 194.

[6] Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507.

[7] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 194.

[8] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 194.

(2) CHILDREN

§ 198. Driver's Duty Generally.—As shown at another point,[10] the driver of an automobile is bound to exercise ordinary care towards children. His liability for striking a child that has suddenly run in front of his car depends upon whether he was exercising such care at the time of the accident. A person operating a motor vehicle along the streets of a city is bound to recognize the fact that children will be found playing in the street, and that they may sometimes attempt to cross the street, unmindful of its dangers; a driver owes children the duty of reasonable and ordinary care under the circumstances,[11] and is required to keep his car under such control as the circumstances demand.[12]

While the driver is required to be vigilant, he is not bound to anticipate that a child will dart from the side of the street, or from a zone of safety, and suddenly run across the street in front of his car,[13] at least not when he is unaware of the presence of the child injured, and, acting under the circumstances as a reasonable person, was not bound to discover its presence.[14] If, however, at a designated place, there is anything to challenge the driver's attention and warn him that he should expect heedless acts, it becomes his duty to exercise greater care to avoid an accident.[15] The foregoing rules are based upon the condition that he is proceeding at a lawful speed, violating no law or regulation; if he is driving in excess of the statutory speed limit or at an unreasonable or dangerous speed, he cannot escape liability under such circumstances.[16]

§ 199. Application to Factual Situations.—The foregoing rules apply in the case of accidents to children alighting from or coming from behind or around a vehicle,[17] running from behind a building or other fixed object,[18] running

---

[9] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 196.

Evidence that the plaintiff had walked across the street until he had cleared the path of the defendant's automobile and was to the left of it and out of danger of being struck by it, when, on account of the sudden movement of a car going in the opposite direction, he became alarmed and suddenly jumped backward and was struck by the defendant's car, precludes the theory that the defendant failed to exercise diligence to avoid striking the plaintiff, after his peril was or should have been discovered. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 196.

[10] See supra, § 185.

[11] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1180, s. 67 A.L.R. 317; 65 A.L.R. 197; L.R.A.1918A, 245.

When an automobile driver sees a child in a place of danger, or has reason to apprehend that it may run into a place of danger, and has sufficient time to stop his car if under proper control, it is his duty to exercise such care as is reasonably necessary to avoid a collision. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 197.

When an automobile driver deflects his car to pass around a child, he must expect from it the most natural thing from one of its age, that is, some heedless, thoughtless, capricious act which comes from childish sportiveness, characteristic of an immature mind. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 197.

[12] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 198.

[13] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1180, s. 67 A.L.R. 317; 65 A.L.R. 197.

[14] Klink v. Bany, 207 Iowa, 1241, 224 N. W. 540, 65 A.L.R. 187.

[15] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1180, s. 67 A.L.R. 317; 65 A.L.R. 197.

[16] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 317.

[17] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 198.

It has been held that the defendant was not liable for an injury to a seven-year-old boy who almost instantly jumped from an automobile on its proper side of a country road, which had stopped opposite his home, and, without warning, ran in front of the defendant's car, which was being driven at about 20 miles an hour on its proper side of the road, in the opposite direction from that of the car from which the boy alighted. Klink v. Bany, 207 Iowa, 1241, 224 N. W. 540, 65 A.L.R. 187.

[18] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 201.

Thus, evidence was held insufficient to warrant a finding of negligence on the part of the driver, where there was testimony that defendant was following a no-stop train of street cars at a speed not exceeding the statutory limit, about 3 feet from the curb on one side and 3 or 4 feet from the train on the other, and that the child who was killed was standing behind a pole just before the accident, so that the driver of the automobile could not see him, and suddenly stepped out into the street, and, or walking along or standing in the street and turning in front of the car,[19] turning after crossing or starting to cross, stopping and starting,[20] passing through a procession of vehicles,[1] crossing a bridge,[2] crossing a private driveway,[3] and breaking away from custodian and darting in front of the car.[4]

§ 200. Children in Crowds, Groups, etc.—Where the circumstances are such after having gone 3 or 4 feet, was struck by the machine. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 201.

---

[19] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 202.

The driver of an automobile is liable where a boy ran along the sidewalk until about the middle of a block, when he stepped into the street and started to go diagonally across it, toward a commotion and crowd, and, when near the curb, was struck by the defendant's automobile, which was on the wrong side of the street, it appearing that the driver failed to see him and avoid a collision because his attention was diverted in another direction. Burvant v. Wolfe, 126 La. 787, 52 So. 1025, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 677.

A cause of action which should be submitted to the jury is made out by evidence that the deceased, a child a little over six years of age, on a bright day, was walking easterly on the southerly side of the highway, and that the defendant, when about two tenths of a mile distant, saw him, and about that time the deceased and his companion left the macadam part of the highway and continued to walk easterly, with their backs toward the on-coming car, the deceased walking just at the southerly edge of the macadam, which was 14 feet wide; that, although the defendant saw the deceased at the distance stated, he drove his car within a foot of the southerly side of the macadam, and did not sound his horn, or swing his car to the north as he approached, and that the deceased, who was walking on the dirt shoulder, stepped upon the macadam and was almost instantly struck by the car. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 202.

[20] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 203.

The question of negligence is properly for the jury where there is testimony that as the defendant drove his automobile toward a street intersection, the plaintiff, a five-year-old boy, and his sister were standing on the curb at the intersection, that the boy started to run across the street, and, when his sister screamed for him to come back, turned and started back and was struck by the defendant's car, which was going 14 or 15 miles an hour, and that the defendant did not sound his horn or give any warning, although he saw the children in the street when he was 60 or 70 feet from them. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 203.

[1] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 204.

It is held that there is nothing in the evidence to support a finding that any negligence of the defendant had causal relation to the plaintiff's injury, the mere happening of the accident not being evidence to that end, where the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff was that the plaintiff, a boy eleven years of age, late in an evening in August, desiring to cross a street, looked up and down for automobiles and saw quite a number coming from what would be his left in crossing; that these machines were "four or five steps away from each other," and the plaintiff did not see any automobile coming from the opposite direction; that the street was full of automobiles and that the plaintiff was walking fast, and, when about halfway across the street, was struck by the defendant's automobile, coming from the plaintiff's right; and that he heard no noise, or horn, or other warning. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 204.

[2] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 204.

The evidence was held insufficient to warrant the submission of the question of the defendant's negligence to the jury in an action to recover for the death of a boy who was struck by an automobile while on the central part of a bridge, which was set apart for the use of vehicles, where there was no evidence that the child appeared upon the roadway in front of the car at any appreciable distance ahead of it, and no circumstances were shown that would tend to suggest to the driver of the car, prior to the happening of the accident, the probability of the boy leaving the footway on the side of the bridge and getting into danger upon the driveway. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 204.

However, it has been held that the jury had a right to conclude from the evidence that the driver of the automobile which struck the plaintiff, an eight-year-old boy, was driving at an unreasonable and dangerous rate of speed, and that the injury was the direct result of such driving, where there was evidence that the car was being driven 45 miles an hour in a closely built-up section of the city, and that, as it was crossing a bridge, it struck the plaintiff, who ran off the sidewalk, but who testified that before he ran into the street, he looked in both directions and saw no vehicles approaching. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 204, 205.

[3] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205.

Evidence was held sufficient to support a finding of negligence on the part of defendant where there was testimony that the plaintiff, a six-year-old child, while walking with his uncle along a sidewalk, as he approached a private driveway which crossed the sidewalk, stepped off the sidewalk on to the driveway and was almost immediately struck by an automobile which had come down the street in the same direction as that in which the child was traveling, and turned to cross the driveway without sounding any warning, although the driver saw the child approaching the driveway. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205.

[4] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205.

The driver of an automobile is not liable for an injury to a four-year-old child who broke away from his custodian and ran into the street and collided at a crossing with the automobile which was proceeding on an intersecting street, it appearing that the horn on the machine was sounded, the brake applied, and the speed diminished, but that owing to the sudden appearance of the child, the driver had no time to stop the car. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205.

as to indicate that the driver is passing through a school zone or through some other place where groups of children are to be found, it is his duty to bring his car under such control that it can be stopped on the shortest possible notice. If a child deliberately steps in front of a car which is under control and is struck, no liability attaches, since it is a well-known fact that a car cannot be stopped instantly, and that traffic must move.[5]

c. PEDESTRIANS WALKING ALONG STREET OR HIGHWAY

§ 201. Generally.—As shown above,[6] drivers of automobiles must share the streets with pedestrians, and each person on the highway must so exercise his right to use it as not to injure others, and use such caution as an ordinarily prudent person would use under like circumstances. The rights and duties of a pedestrian walking along a street or highway and the driver of an automobile are reciprocal and must be so exercised by each as not to injure the other, and each may rely to some extent on the due care of the other.[7] The rule is generally recognized and applied that in the absence of a statute or ordinance changing the rule, the driver of an automobile owes to pedestrians walking along a street or highway the duty to exercise reasonable or ordinary care to avoid injuring them.[8] It has been asserted that while the driver of an automobile and a pedestrian are charged with the same degree of care, the amount of care exacted of the driver of a motor vehicle is far greater than the amount of care exacted of a pedestrian.[9]

§ 202. Duty to Anticipate Presence and Action of Pedestrian.—As shown above,[10] the operator of a motor vehicle has no right to assume that the road is clear; under virtually all circumstances and at all times, he must be reasonably vigilant and must anticipate and expect the presence of others. Thus, the operator of an automobile on a public street or highway must anticipate the presence of pedestrians lawfully using the highway,[11] and must, in order to avoid a charge of negligence, keep a proper lookout for them and keep his machine under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with another person using proper care and caution, and, if the situation requires it, must slow down and stop.[12] Even though he knows that there is a sidewalk in good condition paralleling the road on which he is driving, it is, nevertheless, his duty to anticipate the presence of pedestrians on the portion of the highway used by vehicular traffic.[13]

The driver, in the lawful use of a public highway, may assume, and prudently order the course and movement of his car in accordance with the assumption, until otherwise advised, that an adult pedestrian who has been warned of the approach of his car will not, without observing reasonable care, change his position so as to introduce danger where none existed before.[14] He may, however, be found guilty of actionable negligence in allowing too narrow a margin of safety in passing, so that when the pedestrian varied his course about 2 feet, he was struck by the automobile.[15]

---

[5] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 203.

[6] See supra, § 187.

[7] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 97, s. 93 A.L.R. 551.

[8] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 98, s. 93 A.L.R. 551.

Some statutes impose upon the driver a very high degree of care. See annotation in 67 A.L.R. 98.

An instruction that the driver owes a duty "to use all possible care not to collide with these people who are walking" is erroneous, since he is bound to use only such care as an ordinarily prudent man would use under all the circumstances. Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 98, s. 93 A.L.R. 551.

[9] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 98, s. 93 A.L.R. 551.

[10] See supra, § 168.

[11] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 99, s. 93 A.L.R. 553.

[12] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 99, s. 93 A.L.R. 551.

[13] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 553.

[14] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 99, s. 93 A.L.R. 553.

The rule governing the duty of the driver of an automobile to children traveling on the sidewalks is different from that applicable to children traveling on the roadside of rural highways. With respect to the former, the driver has the right, as a rule, to assume that children will remain on the sidewalk, which is exclusively dedicated to pedestrians, and not suddenly attempt to cross a street, or adopt it for the uses for which the sidewalk was intended, whereas all parts of a country highway are, to the knowledge of everyone, used by pedestrians as well as by vehicles.[16]

§ 203. Failure to Give Timely Warning.—The failure of the operator of a motor vehicle to give timely warning of his approach is a significant factor in the determination of his liability for injuries to a pedestrian walking along a street or highway. It is the duty of the driver to give reasonable warning upon approaching a pedestrian in the roadway and to use every reasonable precaution to avoid injuring him.[17] The question of negligence is usually one of fact in such cases.[18]

Frequently statutes expressly require motorists to sound warnings of their approach, and sometimes, in addition, to slow down. The construction of these statutes is determined by their language.[19] Failure to comply with the statute is negligence per se or evidence of negligence according to the rule prevailing in the jurisdiction.[20]

§ 204. Absence of Lights or Inability to See.—The absence of lights or the use of lights with insufficient power may amount to negligence, particularly if there is a violation of a statute.[1]

---

[15] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 100, s. 93 A.L.R. 553.

And see infra, § 206.

[16] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 553.

[17] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 101, s. 93 A.L.R. 556.

Where a pedestrian, walking on the right-hand side of an unpaved street, was injured by an automobile which overtook him, and the evidence was conflicting as to whether or not the plaintiff looked back and saw the automobile, the driver stating that he did not sound the horn because the plaintiff saw him, the finding by the court, sitting without a jury, that the operator of the automobile was negligent was affirmed. Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 103.

[18] Rooney v. Maczko, 315 Pa. 113, 172 A. 151.

Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 101, s. 93 A.L.R. 556.

[19] Under a statute providing that a driver, upon approaching a person walking in the highway, when operating a motor vehicle, should give or cause to be given reasonable warning of his approach and use every precaution to prevent injury to persons or animals, an instruction in an action to recover for an injury to a pedestrian by an automobile was held erroneous which told the jury that the defendant was under no duty to sound his horn to warn the deceased as he approached from the rear, if the defendant saw that the deceased was so close to the automobile that there was no time in which to do so. Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 556.

The operator of an automobile, required by statute to sound a warning "whenever necessary," cannot excuse his neglect in that respect, when sued for injuring a pedestrian walking toward her automobile on her right-hand side of a state highway, 3 feet off the pavement, because, as he approached her from the rear, she saw the glare of his lights, since such fact did not notify the pedestrian that the automobile was partly off the pavement. Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291.

[20] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 101, s. 93 A.L.R. 556.

As to the different rules, see supra, § 163.

[1] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 103, s. 93 A.L.R. 557.

The driver of a truck, who is blinded by the lights of approaching motor vehicles, has no right to assume a clear distance ahead, and is guilty of negligence in not lessening the speed of the truck and regaining control thereof so as to be in command of a sudden emergency which arises when he comes upon a pedestrian after coming over the crest of a hill. Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 557.

A verdict finding the operator of an automobile guilty of negligence where he ran into a pedestrian pushing a handcart in the street between the car tracks on a dark night was affirmed where there was evidence that the automobile had no lights and that no warning of its approach was given. Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 104.

The evidence was held to justify a finding against a man and his wife, where their automobile struck a pedestrian who was walking on the grass strip along the side

§ 205. Speed or Failure to Stop or Slow Up.—The speed of a car, or the inability of the driver to stop, or the driver's failure to slow up, is a significant factor in the determination of his liability for injuries to a pedestrian walking along a street or highway.[2] It has been said that an operator who discovers the presence of small children on the highway ahead of him should travel at such a rate of speed, and bring his vehicle under such control, that an accident will be averted regardless of the unexpected and unforeseen movement of any of the children.[3] He has not the right to assume that a child, especially one of tender years, will exercise the discretion needed to protect it from the dangers of rapid automobile traffic.[4]

Under a statute requiring persons driving automobiles on public highways to drive them in a careful and prudent manner, and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, a driver is, as a matter of law, negligent if, on a dark night, with a dark roadbed, he continues to travel at 20 to 25 miles an hour after his vision has been obscured by the glare of the lights on an approaching car, so that he cannot see objects in front of him.[5]

§ 206. Crowding Pedestrian.—Negligence may be found from the fact that the operator of the car drives too near to a pedestrian.[6] The driver of an automobile who negligently changes his course and drives his car in such close proximity to a pedestrian walking along the side of the highway that the pedestrian is struck by the door of the car, which is open, is liable for the injury whether or not he caused the door to be open.[7]

§ 207. Driving on Wrong Side.—It is the duty of the driver of an automobile traveling on the left-hand side of the road, when he should be on the right-hand side, to keep a strict watch for pedestrians and to give signals of his approach.[8]

§ 208. Swerving Car.—Whether or not a driver's car is swerving is frequently of importance in determining his liability for injuring a pedestrian traveling along a street or highway. Evidence tending to show that the plaintiff's deceased was walking along the right-hand side of the road to the

---

of a state road, early in the evening, there being evidence that before passing another car, the lights on the defendants' car were turned off. Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 104.

[2] Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.

In Keller v. Breneman, supra, the negligence of the operator of an automobile which injured a pedestrian was held to be a question for the jury, where, after dark, while a drizzling rain was falling, while driving on a curved road at an alleged speed of 40 miles an hour, the driver struck the pedestrian, who was walking in the center of the road, in front of his stalled truck, as the former turned to the left in an effort to pass to the left of the stalled truck, with which he collided.

[3] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 105, s. 93 A.L.R. 558.

[4] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 105, s. 93 A.L.R. 558.

In passing between children who are walking along the shoulders of the highway on both sides, with a space between them of 13 to 15 feet, the driver must bring his automobile under complete control and exercise the care which the danger of the situation demands, so that, if necessary, he can bring his car to a stop. Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 558.

[5] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

[6] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 108, s. 93 A.L.R. 559.

Evidence that a pedestrian who was walking along on her right-hand side of a dirt highway, on hearing a horn blow behind her, looked back, and, seeing two automobiles approaching, stepped off the traveled portion to her right, into the grass and weeds, and, after one of the automobiles had passed, continued to walk forward a foot outside the traveled portion, when she was struck by the second automobile, coming from the rear, was held sufficient to support an implied jury finding of negligence on the part of the operator of the automobile. Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 108, s. 93 A.L.R. 559.

[7] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 559.

[8] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 109, s. 93 A.L.R. 560.

right of the defendant's truck and a few steps in front of it when the truck swerved to the right and struck him while the driver was looking back was held sufficient to authorize the submission of the question of negligence to the jury and to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff.[9] Where there was evidence that the deceased was walking upon the shoulder of the road at a distance of 5 feet from the pavement, that the defendant swerved her car toward him, and that this caused the accident resulting in his death, it was held that there was a prima facie case and that a motion for nonsuit was properly denied.[10]

§ 209. Object Extending beyond Car.—The fact that an object extends beyond a car may be of significance in determining the liability of the operator of the car for injuring a pedestrian traveling upon a street or highway. Negligence in this regard is usually a question for the jury.[11]

§ 210. Pedestrian Walking on Left Side of Road.[12]—Statutes in some states require pedestrians walking along the traveled portion of a highway to walk on their left side, thus facing automobile traffic coming on that side. Even in the absence of a statute, the law of the road requiring traffic to move on its right-hand side of the road is generally held not to apply to pedestrians.[13] Obviously, where the statute requires the pedestrian to walk on his left hand side, he has the legal right to be at that point. An automobile driver going in the same direction as the pedestrian, who drives on his left-hand side when he should be on the right, must exercise a strict watch for pedestrians.[14] However, conditions may require automobile traffic to travel on the left side of the highway, as, for example, in the case of construction. In such event the care required of the automobilist would seem to be that required in driving along highways generally under similar conditions, at least the automobilist is not necessarily guilty of negligence in so driving.[15]

A person operating an automobile on the right-hand side of the road and meeting a pedestrian traveling on his left-hand side owes him the duty of ordinary care.

d. PEDESTRIANS CROSSING STREET AT UNUSUAL PLACE OR DIAGONALLY

§ 211. Generally.—At regular pedestrian crossings, the rights of automobilist and pedestrian are equal.[16] The only difference in relation to accidents occurring at, and those occurring between, regular crossings is that in the latter, the rule of ordinary care, applicable alike to the motorist and the pedestrian, requires less care of the former and more of the latter to avoid the injury than is required of them by the same rule at a regular crossing. And whether either has fulfilled his measure of care under this rule of ordinary care is a question for the jury.[17] Frequently statutes and ordinances relating to operation generally have a bearing upon the determination of the right of persons injured while crossing a street at an unusual place or diagonally to recover for such injuries.[18]

---

[9] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 560.

[10] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 561.

[11] The question of the defendant's negligence was for the jury where there was evidence that the plaintiff was traveling along the path customarily used by pedestrians, on the right side of the highway, and that he was struck by a spike pole extending over the side of a truck which approached from the rear. Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 561.

An instruction directing a verdict for the plaintiff if he was walking on the right-hand side of the highway, exercising ordinary care for his own safety, when he was struck by a spike pole projecting from the defendant's truck was held erroneous, since it authorized a verdict for the plaintiff, whether the truck was being operated on the highway with ordinary care, or at a point where it had a right to be, or in an ordinarily prudent manner. Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 561.

[12] As to contributory negligence of pedestrian in walking on the left-hand side, see § 449, infra.

[13] Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 71.

[14] See supra, § 203.

An instruction in an action for death of a pedestrian who was struck from the rear while walking on the left side of the street, that it was immaterial whether the defendant was on that side, was held erroneous in view of a provision of the statute that a person operating an automobile shall, at the intersection of public highways or streets of any municipality, keep to the right of the center of the highway. Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 560.

[15] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 109, s. 93 A.L.R. 561.

[16] See infra, § 293.

§ 212. Duty of Driver between Crossings.[19]—A pedestrian has the right, in the absence of prohibition by statute or ordinance, to cross a street at any point, either directly or diagonally, and is not restricted to the regular crossings; hence, the driver of an automobile owes him the duty of reasonable or ordinary care in the circumstances.[20] He must keep a lookout for pedestrians, not only at street crossings, but between street intersections.[1]

While the precise quantum of care and caution properly exercisable by the motorist toward pedestrians who cross the street at a point other than a regular crossing is largely dependent upon the facts and circumstances surrounding each case, it is uniformly held that the driver of a vehicle is not under the duty of using as much care toward one so crossing between street intersections as he would exercise toward one using a regular crossing.[2] A vehicle need not be under instant control between crossings, and what would be negligence in driving recklessly at a crossing may not constitute such negligence between crossings.[3] A driver must, however, in either case, exercise care commensurate with the situation, and it is his duty to look ahead and avoid collisions with pedestrians, and if he fails to do so, or if he carelessly runs a pedestrian down after seeing him, he will be held liable for the resulting injuries.[4] Thus, the rule requiring perfect control and ability to stop an automobile at the shortest possible notice at street intersections is not applicable in a case where a car struck a pedestrian crossing a street, at a street car stop which was not a street intersection, to catch a street car, where no street car was waiting.[5] Whether the driver of an automobile was negligent so as to render him, or one responsible for his conduct, liable to a person struck and injured by the car while walking across the street at a place other than the intersection is generally a question for the jury to decide.[6] In determining this question, the jury must consider all the facts of the case, the direction in which the car was traveling, the rate of speed, whether any signal or warning was given, the condition of the street, the situation and surroundings of the parties, the manner in which the injured person was crossing the street, and what observation, if any, the one in charge of the car made as he drove along.[7]

---

[17] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1198, s. 67 A.L.R. 335.

[18] Evidence that an automobile made a sharp left turn into a street and struck a pedestrian who was crossing the street diagonally presents a question for the jury, in view of an ordinance which provides that vehicles, in turning to the left into another street shall pass to the right of and beyond the center of the intersecting streets before turning. Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 333.

[19] As affected by statute or ordinance, see infra, § 214.

[20] Ivy v. Marx, 205 Ala. 60, 87 So. 813, 14 A.L.R. 1173; Stringer v. Frost, 116 Ind. 477, 19 N. E. 331, 2 L.R.A. 614, 9 Am. St. Rep. 875.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1176, s. 67 A.L.R. 313.

[1] Ivy v. Marx, 205 Ala. 60, 87 So. 813, 14 A.L.R. 1173.

[2] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1177, s. 67 A.L.R. 313.

[3] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1176, s. 67 A.L.R. 314.

[4] Ivy v. Marx, 205 Ala. 60, 87 So. 813, 14 A.L.R. 1173.

[5] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 314.

[6] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1178, s. 67 A.L.R. 315.

§ 213. Duty of Driver towards Children.[8] — The general principle previously set out,[9] that the amount of care to be exercised by the driver of an automobile toward one crossing a street at a place which is not a regular crossing is less than that required toward one crossing at a regular crossing, is equally applicable to children so crossing, as compared with children at a regular crossing.[10] The driver must exercise more care toward a child crossing the street between blocks than toward an adult in the same circumstances, the relative difference in care varying according to the age, physical condition, etc., of the child.[11] The tendency of small children to run across streets, especially at or near schools, must not be ignored by drivers of motor vehicles.[12]

§ 214. Duty as Affected by Statute or Ordinance.—It is provided by statute in some jurisdictions and by municipal ordinances in some municipalities that pedestrians must cross streets at regular crossings; crossing elsewhere is forbidden.[13] The enactment of such legislation by the state or by the municipality [14] is regarded as a reasonable exercise of the police power. The effect of such statutes or ordinances upon the duty of the automobile driver cannot be said to be entirely settled. The view is taken that such statutes or ordinances do not relieve the driver of a car of the duty of exercising reasonable care and diligence to avoid the injury.[15] Some such statutes or ordinances give the automobile the right of way between crossings,[16] and these would seem to modify the duty of the driver to a certain extent.

---

[7] Ivy v. Marx, 205 Ala. 60, 87 So. 813, 14 A.L.R. 1173; Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493; Baker v. Close, 204 N. Y. 92, 97 N. E. 501, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487; Peterson v. Ballantine & Sons, 205 N. Y. 29, 98 N. E. 202, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1147; Watts v. Plymouth, 255 Pa. 185, 99 A. 470, 3 A.L.R. 1110.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1177, s. 67 A.L.R. 313.

[8] See supra, § 185 and cross references therein contained as to driver's duty toward children.

[9] See supra, § 211.

[10] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1180, s. 67 A.L.R. 317.

[11] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1180, s. 67 A.L.R. 317.

Where there was evidence, in an action to recover for injuries to a seven-year-old child run into in front of a school as she was crossing the street, that the automobile which collided with her was moving from 15 to 20 miles an hour, that no horn was sounded, and that a warning had been given to the driver by a boy, who waved his hat, a finding of negligence was held justified. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1180, s. 67 A.L.R. 317.

A finding of negligence on the part of the defendant is justified where there is evidence that a little girl, six years of age, started to cross a street between street intersections, and the driver of an approaching automobile saw her and stopped his automobile to avoid a collision with her, that she stopped also, nearly ahead of his car, but a little on his left and about 12 feet from it, and that he, assuming that she would wait there until he drove by her, thereupon started his car, but she did not wait for him to pass her, but started running toward his moving car, and the collision occurred before he could again stop the car. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1180, s. 67 A.L.R. 317.

[12] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1180, s. 67 A.L.R. 317.

[13] As to the contributory negligence of the pedestrian in crossing in violation of such a statute or ordinance, see § 455, infra.

[14] Snyder v. Campbell, 145 Miss. 287, 110 So. 678, 49 A.L.R. 1402.

Annotation: 49 A.L.R. 1406.

[15] Snyder v. Campbell, 145 Miss. 287, 110 So. 678, 49 A.L.R. 1402.

Annotation: 49 A.L.R. 1406.

It has been said that an ordinance imposing a fine or fine and imprisonment for a violation thereof carries its own penalties and is not intended to relieve drivers of automobiles from any existing duties. Ivy v. Marx, 205 Ala. 60, 87 So. 813, 14 A.L.R. 1173.

In states where the comparative negligence doctrine prevails, recovery is reduced in the proportion that the pedestrian's negligence bears to the negligence of the driver of the automobile. Snyder v. Campbell, 145 Miss. 287, 110 So. 678, 49 A.L.R. 1402. Annotation: 49 A.L.R. 1406.

[16] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1197, s. 67 A.L.R. 333.

e. Pedestrians Alighting from, or Waiting for, Street Cars

(1) In General

§ 215. Generally.—The general rule that the operator of an automobile must exercise ordinary or reasonable care towards pedestrians applies to persons alighting from, or waiting for, street cars. Statutory regulations governing this situation have been enacted in certain jurisdictions, and it is therefore necessary to discuss the rules applying both under and in the absence of specific enactments.

(2) Absence of Specific Regulation

§ 216. Duty of Driver.—In the absence of a regulation specifically imposing a greater duty, the driver of a motor vehicle, when passing a street car which has stopped for the purpose of receiving or discharging passengers, is required to recognize that passengers will or may be moving to and from the car, and it is his duty to have his machine under proper control, and generally to exercise due care, under all the circumstances, to avoid injury to any such person.[17] He should not pass close to the car, and if he does so and strikes a person alighting or embarking, his negligence is a question for the determination of the jury.[18]

Although, in the absence of a statute or ordinance requiring a stop, it is ordinarily sufficient that a driver, in passing a street car, have his car under proper control, yet the circumstances may require that he bring his car to an absolute stop in order to avoid an injury to an alighting or entering passenger.[19]

A person operating an automobile on the wrong side of the road, who injures a person who is alighting from, or is waiting for, a street car, is ordinarily deemed to be negligent.[20] Driving at a rapid rate unnecessarily near

---

[17] Minor v. Mapes, 102 Ark. 351, 144 S. W. 219, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214; Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1228, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402; Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 724, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396; Marsh v. Boyden, 33 R. I. 519, 82 A. 393, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582; Ouellette v. Superior Motor & Mach. Works, 157 Wis. 531, 147 N. W. 1014, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1233.

[18] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1237.

[19] Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1228, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402.

[20] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1235.

In Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 P. 1155, L.R.A.1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560, it appeared that the plaintiff, after alighting from a street car, was walking across the street toward the curb, when she was knocked down by the defendant's automobile which had come from the rear of the car and on the left-hand side of it. The court held that the defendant was negligent in driving on the left-hand side of the street in violation of an ordinance of the city.

In Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676, the court said: "It is not contended that the driver of the automobile was not driving upon the left-hand side of the street when the accident occurred, nor is it contended that to so drive is not contrary to the city ordinance; but it is contended that negligence does not necessarily follow from these conditions; that a driver of an automobile may, under some circumstances, drive upon the left-hand side of the street without being guilty of negligence; and whether it is negligence so to do in any particular case must depend upon the facts of such case. It is contended, further, that in the present case the facts show an excuse for the driver's action; it is said that when the street car did not pass on as he anticipated, but stopped in such a position that he could neither go forward nor turn to the right, he was confronted with an emergency, and whether he acted with due prudence in his effort to escape therefrom was a question of fact for the jury, not one of law for the court. It is probably the general rule that one confronted with a sudden peril, not arising from any fault of his own, may, to avoid bodily harm to himself, act in the way the emergency seems to require, without being guilty of negligence, even though in so acting he injures another who in no way contributed to the condition creating the peril. . . . Here it is clear by the testimony of the driver of the automobile, that he does not come within the rule. He had abundant time, according to his own testimony, to have stopped the automobile before he reached the place of peril, had he not been mistaken in assuming the street car was not going to stop. But this was a usual stopping place for street cars, and it was negligence for him to assume that it the street car, especially on the wrong side of the street, constitutes negligence. An attempt to drive past the car before any passengers should alight may also constitute negligence.[1]

§ 217. Application of Rules.—The general rule, in the absence of specific regulations on the subject, relating to the duty of the driver of an automobile towards pedestrians alighting from, or waiting for, street cars, discussed in the preceding section, applies to a variety of factual situations such as cases where the alighting passenger crosses the street[2] or waits for this purpose,[3] or transfers to another street car,[4] or walks around the rear or front of the street car.[5] The rule also applies to a blind person alighting from a street car.[6]

§ 218. Passenger Alighting at Regular Stopping Place Other than Intersection or from Moving Car.—The general rule that the driver of a car must exercise due care, under all the circumstances, to avoid injury to pedestrians alighting from, or waiting for, street cars applies to a passenger alighting at a regular stopping place other than an intersection,[7] and also to a person alighting from a moving street car. Of course, an automobile driver passing was not going to stop in this instance. Again, after he had turned and avoided the peril, he had abundant time, at the speed he was traveling, to have stopped the automobile before striking the respondent, had the brakes on the automobile been in proper condition. One who operates on the streets of a city such a dangerous instrumentality as an automobile is bound to take notice that he may be called upon to make emergency stops, and it is negligence on his part not to keep the automobile in such condition that such stops are possible."

---

[1] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1238.

[2] Marsh v. Boyden, 33 R. I. 519, 82 A. 393, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1238, 1239.

In Minor v. Mapes, 102 Ark. 351, 144 S. W. 219, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214, an action for damages to a person who was struck by an automobile after alighting from a street car, and while walking toward the sidewalk, the court said: "The machine was being operated at a rapid rate of speed, unnecessarily near the street car, though there was abundant space further out in the street for the machine to pass along. It was customary for passengers to alight from the front end of street cars, and it was reasonably to be anticipated that they might pass in front of a car going to the other side of the street. The jury was warranted in finding that it constituted negligence for an automobile driver to run the machine at a rapid speed so near a street car which had stopped for passengers to alight. Automobilists and the drivers of other vehicles have the right to share the street with pedestrians, but they must anticipate the presence of the latter and exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring them. Care must be exercised commensurate with the danger reasonably to be anticipated."

[3] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1239, 1240.

Where it appeared that the plaintiff, having alighted from the street car, was waiting for an opportunity to cross the street when the defendant's automobile drove from behind two standing automobiles, intending to pass them, and struck the plaintiff, knocking her down and inflicting serious injuries. It was held that the plaintiff being unaware of the approach of the defendant's automobile until it was right on her and so close to her that she was unable to extricate herself from her dangerous position, it was the duty of the defendant to use all the means in his power to avoid striking the plaintiff, and that therefore, a case was made out sufficient to go to the jury under the humanitarian doctrine. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1239.

[4] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1239.

[5] Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 P. 1155, L.R.A.1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1240.

One passing in front of a standing street car has a right to assume that no automobile will come from the rear of the car on the left-hand side of it, in violation of ordinance. Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 P. 1155, L.R.A.1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560.

[6] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1241.

[7] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1240.

Where it appeared that a passenger alighted from a street car at a place where the car customarily stopped, although it was not a crossing, and proceeded to cross the street, when he was struck and killed by the defendant's automobile, it was held that the defendant was negligent in that he was presumed to know that passengers were likely to be discharged at that time and place, and he should have had his automobile under proper control to avoid such an unnecessary accident; that the stopping place was the equivalent of a street crossing, used and recognized as such by the public; and, although he would not be required to stop his automobile at such a place, he should have had it under proper control. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1240.

a moving street car is not ordinarily bound to anticipate that a passenger will jump from the moving car.[8]

§ 219. Prospective Passengers.—The general rule that the driver of a car must exercise due care, under all the circumstances, to avoid injury to pedestrians alighting from, or waiting for, street cars applies to a prospective passenger standing at a regular stopping place for street cars[9] and to one running after a street car.[10] An automobile driver failing to have his car under such control that he could avoid striking a prospective passenger passing from the curb to the center of the street to take a street car may be guilty of negligence.[11] This rule is applicable to backing an automobile against a prospective street car passenger.[12]

---

[8] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1240.

The defendant is entitled to an instruction as follows: "The defendant was not called upon to drive his car so as to protect passengers on the street car who might see fit to jump from the car while it was in motion, unless and until he had warning that the passengers did intend to jump from the street car while in motion." Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1240.

In another case, however, it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate jumped from a moving trolley car and ran across the street in front of an onrushing automobile less than two seconds away. He had reached a point outside of, and beyond the part of, the road devoted to travel by vehicles, and was on the grass ground at the side of the road, and undoubtedly for one fleeting instant supposed that he was safe from pursuit by motor cars, when the defendant's automobile knocked him down and killed him. The court, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, approved of the following instruction: "If you find that the defendant at the time of the accident was approaching a regular stopping place of an interurban electric railroad, with an approaching electric car in sight, which car was slowing down to make a stop at its stopping place, it was the duty of the defendant to so control its automobile that it could stop it, and to stop it, if necessary, to avoid injury to passengers alighting from the electric car." Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1241.

[9] Ouellette v. Superior Motor & Mach. Works, 157 Wis. 531, 147 N. W. 1014, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1242.

The driver of an automobile is negligent in propelling his machine against a pedestrian standing in plain sight near a street car track, waiting to board a car, although he does not respond to a signal announcing the approach of the automobile. Ouellette v. Superior Motor & Mach. Works, 157 Wis. 531, 147 N. W. 1014, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299.

Where it appeared that the plaintiff was in the street at the side of a standing electric car and was just getting ready to board it when she was struck by the automobile of the defendant, who, in avoiding the plaintiff's companion standing near the curb, turned his machine toward and against the plaintiff, the defendant was held to be liable. Annotation: 47 A.L.R 1242.

Where the plaintiff, while standing in the street close to the car line and waiting for the street car, was struck by the defendant's automobile, which came from the rear of the car, passing to its right at the rate of 25 miles an hour, it was held that the driver of the automobile could have seen the plaintiff and, by the use of proper caution, avoided her, and that whether this was negligence was a question for the jury. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1243.

[10] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1243.

Where it appeared that the plaintiff was running in the center of the street trying to catch a street car, and that the defendant was driving his automobile and, gradually coming up behind the plaintiff, struck him before he reached the street car, it was held that the plaintiff was within his rights to be in the street for the purpose of boarding a street car, and that the defendant, being aware of the presence of the plaintiff running ahead of his car, was bound to exercise ordinary care to avoid running into him. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1243.

[11] Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1241.

In Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1228, 124 Am. St. Rep. 402, it appeared that the plaintiff, in order to catch a street car, ran across the street and followed it with the view of boarding the car when it stopped. The defendant ran his automobile very close to the street car, but veered it around the rear of the car, when he found the plaintiff directly in his path and too late to avoid striking him. The court, in holding the defendant negligent, said: "He was on one of the principal thoroughfares of a great city, and approaching a crossing where it was at least reasonable to expect pedestrians to be. He could not see this crossing for the reason that the street car was between him and it, and thus obscured his vision. Instead of stopping his automobile until the car passed and he could see whether there were pedestrians on the crossing beyond, he simply changed his direction so as to go around the passing car, and by his own act was brought face to face with the appellee at a distance too short to prevent the collision at the rate he was moving. This was, in itself, gross negligence to the verge of recklessness."

Where it appeared that the plaintiff, after looking once and seeing a clear street, proceeded from a point within 12 feet of the street intersection toward the street car which he was intent upon boarding, without

(3) Specific Regulation

§ 220. Generally.—In various jurisdictions statutes or ordinances are in force governing the duty of the driver of a motor vehicle when passing a street car which has stopped for the purpose of receiving or discharging passengers. Such regulations are applicable for the benefit of persons who are in the street to board a street car or after alighting from a street car.[13]

§ 221. Regulation Prescribing Distance for Passing.—In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute or ordinance that drivers of motor vehicles, when passing street cars which have stopped for the purpose of receiving or discharging passengers, shall keep a specified distance from the street car. A failure to comply with such regulation has the same effect as negligence[14] as has the violation of a statute or ordinance generally.[15] A regulation of this kind is generally not applicable except where the street car and the automobile are running in the same direction.[16]

§ 222. Enactments Regulating Speed.—Sometimes, instead of regulating the distance which the driver of a motor vehicle shall take when passing a street car, it has been required by statute or ordinance that the driver, when passing a street car which has stopped to allow passengers to alight or embark, shall slow down and, if necessary for the safety of the public, shall bring his vehicle to a full stop. The violation of such a provision is negligence or evidence of negligence,[17] according to the view which obtains generally in the jurisdiction as to the effect of the violation of a statute or ordinance.[18] looking again in either direction, and, when he had taken only a few steps, he was knocked down by the defendant's automobile traveling at an excessive rate of speed, it was held that the defendant was guilty of negligence in running his automobile at about twice the maximum lawful rate of speed and in failing to sound his horn or other warning in approaching a pedestrian within 12 feet of an intersecting street, who, as must be manifest to any observer, was intending to board the street car at a usual place. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1241, 1242.

---

[12] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1243.

[13] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1238.

[14] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1254.

Where it appeared that the plaintiff was alighting from a street car which was standing while passengers were being discharged and taken on and she was struck by the defendant's automobile when about 1 foot distant from the car, it was held that the defendant was negligent in violating an ordinance making it unlawful for any person driving or having charge, possession, or control of any vehicle being driven or propelled or operated upon the streets of the city, upon overtaking any street car which was stopped for the purpose of discharging or taking on a passenger or passengers, to permit or cause said vehicle to pass or approach within 10 feet of said car as long as the said car was so stopped or remained standing for the purpose of discharging or taking on a passenger or passengers. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1254.

A judgment for the plaintiff was affirmed where it appeared that she alighted from a street car and was struck by the defendant's passing automobile, which failed to clear the street car by at least 6 feet, as was required by statute, that there was nothing to obstruct the defendant's view, that he could easily have stopped before striking the plaintiff, who had not moved from the street car after alighting therefrom, and that there was sufficient room in the street between the plaintiff and the curb for the defendant to have moved without striking her. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1254.

[15] See supra, § 163.

[16] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1254, 1255.

[17] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1196, s. 67 A.L.R. 333; 47 A.L.R. 1258.

The purpose of such a statute or ordinance is to create a zone of safety to protect those who use street cars against those who, in driving automobiles, may render ingress to, and egress from, the former dangerous. Such regulations modify the doctrine of reciprocal rights in the street in all cases falling within their terms and obviate the necessity, if any theretofore existed, on the part of those boarding or leaving standing cars of looking out for approaching automobiles; they have the right to presume that automobile drivers will perform their duty and obey the statute or ordinance; and, in the absence of any reasonable ground for thinking otherwise, they are not guilty of negligence in assuming freedom from a danger which comes only from such violation. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1258.

[18] See supra, § 163.

§ 223. Enactment Requiring Absolute Stop.—There is another class of regulations bearing on the operation of motor vehicles when passing street cars by which it is required that drivers shall bring their motor vehicles to an absolute stop when about to overtake a street car standing to take on or discharge passengers.[19] The purpose of requiring automobiles to stop when about to overtake a street car standing to take on or let off passengers is to safeguard human life; and the restraint is not lifted with the starting of the street car, but remains until travel can be resumed with safety to persons in the street needing to reach the street curb.[20] In view of the obvious danger of passing street cars when they do stop for the accommodation of passengers, it behooves motorists not to trail them so closely that they cannot comply with such regulations.[1]

§ 224. —Effect of Violation of Such Enactments.—There is some diversity of opinion as to the effect of the violation of a statute or ordinance requiring drivers to bring their cars to an absolute stop when about to overtake a street car standing to take on or to discharge passengers. Some courts hold that it is evidence of negligence.[2] In other jurisdictions it is held such violation is negligence per se.[3]

§ 225. —Applicability where Street Car and Automobile Approach from Opposite Directions.—Enactments requiring drivers to bring their motor vehicles to an absolute stop when about to overtake a street car standing to take on or to discharge passengers are generally held not to apply to situations where the street cars and automobiles approach from opposite directions.[4]

§ 226. —Applicability where Street Car Stops at Other than Regular Stopping Place.—Enactments requiring that drivers bring their automobiles to an absolute stop when about to overtake a street car standing to take on or discharge passengers are generally held not to apply to situations where the street car stops at other than a regular stopping place.[5] Obviously, the wording of the enactment involved is of considerable importance in determining this question.

---

[19] Day v. Cunningham, 125 Me. 328, 133 A. 855, 47 A.L.R. 1229; Schell v. Du Bois, 94 Ohio St. 93, 113 N. E. 664, L.R.A.1917A, 710; Frankel v. Norris, 252 Pa. 14, 97 A. 104, L.R.A.1917E, 272.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1258.

[20] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1260.

[1] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1259.

[2] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1261.

Where the plaintiff, after alighting from a street car, was proceeding to cross the street when he was struck by the defendant's automobile, the defendant was held guilty of negligence if he failed to bring his automobile to a stop less than 5 feet from the rear of the street car headed in the same direction as required by statute. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1260.

[3] Schell v. Du Bois, 94 Ohio St. 93, 113 N. E. 664, L.R.A.1917A, 710, wherein the court said: "One of the allegations of negligence in the petition, after stating the fact that the car had stopped to discharge passengers and that Gitchell was a passenger, is that the defendant carelessly and negligently drove his automobile past the standing car, in consequence of which the decedent was struck by the automobile. The plaintiff avers that there is an ordinance of the city of Bellaire which provides that it shall be unlawful to drive an automobile past a standing car which is receiving or discharging passengers, and that, in consequence of the violation of this ordinance and of defendant's carelessness in driving his automobile at the time, the decedent received his injuries. . . . While there is not entire harmony in the decisions as to the legal effect of a violation of a municipal ordinance, passed in the proper exercise of the police power for the protection of the public, we think it clear, from an examination of many cases, that the weight of authority and reason supports the proposition that a violation of an ordinance of the character referred to is negligence per se; and that, where the act of violation is the proximate cause of an injury to a plaintiff, who has not by his own negligence contributed to the injury, the defendant is liable. This is now the generally recognized rule."

See also supra, § 163.

[4] Day v. Cunningham, 125 Me. 328, 133 A. 855, 47 A.L.R. 1229.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1262.

[5] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1262.

§ 227. —Where Passenger Alights from Moving Street Car.—Enactments requiring that drivers bring their automobiles to an absolute stop when about to overtake a street car standing to take on or discharge passengers do not apply to situations where passengers alight from moving street cars.[6]

§ 228. Enactments Requiring Warning.—In some jurisdictions enactments exist providing that drivers of motor vehicles must sound a warning as they approach street cars which have stopped to take on or discharge passengers. Failure to comply with such a statute raises an issue of negligence for the jury.[7]

f. Guests

(1) In General

§ 229. Generally.—Guests occupy a peculiar position in the law of automobiles. There has been much litigation over the liability of the owner or operator to one occupying such a position. In some jurisdictions a distinction is made between invited guests and guests at sufferance. Then, too, it is important to determine whether the guest is injured because of the negligent operation of the car or the condition of the car. The question is further complicated by the numerous statutory regulations pertaining to this subject.

(2) Injuries Due to Negligent Operation

(a) Invited Guests

§ 230. General Rule.—The rule is established by the weight of authority that the owner or operator of an automobile owes the duty to an invited guest to exercise reasonable care in its operation, and not unreasonably to expose him to danger and injury by increasing the hazard of travel.[8] This rule, as

---

[6] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1263.

[7] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1265.

[8] Hewlett v. Schadel (C. C. A. 4th) 68 F. (2d) 502, 91 A.L.R. 743; Perkins v. Galloway, 194 Ala. 265, 69 So. 875, L.R.A.1916E, 1190, second appeal in 198 Ala. 658, 73 So. 956; Beard v. Klusmeier, 158 Ky. 153, 164 S. W. 319, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100, Ann. Cas. 1915D. 342; Raymond v. Portland R. Co. 100 Me. 529, 62 A. 602, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 94; Jessup v Davis, 115 Neb. 1, 211 N. W. 190, 56 A.L.R. 1403, writ of error dismissed in 276 U. S. 593, 72 L. ed. 722, 48 S. Ct. 300; Paiewonsky v. Joffe, 101 N. J. L. 521, 129 A. 142, 40 A.L.R. 1335; Stewart v. Houk, 127 Or. 589, 271 P. 998, 272 P. 893, 61 A.L.R. 1236; Marple v. Haddad, 103 W. Va. 508, 138 S. E. 113, 61 A.L.R. 1248; Olson v. Hermansen, 196 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A.L.R. 1243; Cleary v. Eckart, 191 Wis. 114, 210 N. W. 267, 51 A.L.R. 576.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1014, s. 26 A.L.R. 1425, 40 A.L.R. 1338, 47 A.L.R. 327, 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

The court, in Perkins v. Galloway, 194 Ala. 265, 69 So. 875, L.R.A.1916E, 1190, said: "The express or implied duty of the owner and driver to the occupant of the car is to exercise reasonable care in its operation not to unreasonably expose to danger and injury the occupant, by increasing the hazard of that method of travel. He must exercise the care and diligence which a man of reasonable prudence, engaged in like business, would exercise for his own protection and the protection of his family and property—a care which must be reasonably commensurate with the nature and hazards attending this particular mode of travel. Reaves v. Maybank, 193 Ala. 614, 69 So. 137. Failing in this duty, he will be liable to the occupant or guest in the car for injuries the result of such carelessness or lack of diligence."

In Garrow v. Seattle Taxicab Co. 135 Wash. 630, 238 P. 623, 45 A.L.R. 293, the court declared the rule to be that a higher degree of care is imposed upon a common carrier of passengers with respect to its passengers than is imposed upon an automobile owner who carries a person as his guest or as an accommodation; but that case, involving a suit against a taxicab company, gave no consideration to the specific duty imposed upon an owner who carries another as his guest.

A husband in driving an automobile jointly owned by himself and wife, while returning from a visit to their daughter, owes to the wife a duty to exercise due care equal in quality and extent to that frequently stated by the courts, is that an owner of an automobile owes a guest the duty to exercise ordinary[9] or reasonable[10] care to avoid injuring him. Since one riding in an automobile is no less a guest because he asked for the privilege of doing so, the same obligation of care is imposed upon the driver as in the case of one expressly invited to ride.[11]

§ 231. Minority Rule.—In some jurisdictions it is held, independent of statute, that gross negligence must be shown in order to hold the owner or operator of an automobile liable for an injury to an invited guest.[12] The principle of the minority rule is that there is no liability in the case of a gratuitous bailment in the absence of gross negligence.[13] Under this rule, one inviting another to ride gratuitously in his automobile is not, in the absence of gross negligence, liable for injury to him by the overturning of the car through the negligence of the chauffeur.[14] What constitutes gross negligence within this rule is a matter depending upon the facts of the individual case. Illustrations are given in the footnote.[15] sustained by a gratuitous agent. Archer v. Chicago, M. St. P. & P. R. Co. 215 Wis. 509, 255 N. W. 67, 95 A.L.R. 851.

---

[9] Paiewonsky v. Joffe, 101 N. J. L. 521, 129 A. 142, 40 A.L.R. 1335; Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S. W. 32, 47 A.L.R. 323.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1014, s. 26 A.L.R. 1425, 40 A.L.R. 1338, 47 A.L.R. 327, 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

[10] Avery v. Thompson, 117 Me. 120, 103 A. 4, L.R.A.1918D, 205.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1014, s. 26 A.L.R. 1425, 40 A.L.R. 1338, 47 A.L.R. 327, 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

[11] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1014, s. 26 A.L.R. 1425, 40 A.L.R. 1338, 47 A.L.R. 327, 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, 65 A.L.R. 952.

[12] Slaton v. Hall, 168 Ga. 710, 148 S. E. 741, 73 A.L.R. 891.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1018, s. 26 A.L.R. 1427, 40 A.L.R. 1339, 47 A.L.R. 328, 51 A.L.R. 582, 61 A.L.R. 1254, and 65 A.L.R. 954.

See, however, the remarks by the court in Avery v. Thompson, 117 Me. 120, 103 A. 4, L.R.A.1918D, 205, wherein an attempt was made, partially at least, to reconcile the decisions.

[13] In criticism of this rule, it has been stated that the analogy between the gratuitous bailment of personal property and the gratuitous transportation of human beings in an automobile does not hold, inasmuch as the degree of protection required to be given property rights is not necessarily the same as that which must be given to human life. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 328.

[14] Pepper v. Morrill (C. C. A. 1st) 24 F. (2d) 320, 57 A.L.R. 750; Massaletti v. Fitzroy, 228 Mass. 487, 118 N. E. 168, L.R.A. 1918C, 264, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1088, wherein the court went to great lengths to show that the different degrees of negligence still obtained in Massachusetts, and, after reviewing the decisions, said in conclusion: "Approaching the question apart from authority, we are led to the same conclusion. Justice requires that the one who undertakes to perform a duty gratuitously should not be under the same measure of obligation as one who enters upon the same undertaking for pay. There is an inherent difficulty in stating the difference between the measure of duty which is assumed in the two cases. But justice requires that, to make out liability in case of a gratuitous undertaking, the plaintiff ought to prove a materially greater degree of negligence than he has to prove where the defendant is to be paid for doing the same thing. It is a distinction which seventy-five years' practice in this Commonwealth has shown is not too indefinite a one to be drawn by the judge and acted upon by the jury."

However, the Massachusetts rule requiring a guest in an automobile to show that the driver was guilty of gross negligence has been held not to apply to an action brought in that state to recover for injuries received in an accident in another state by the law of which a guest need show only ordinary negligence on the part of the driver. Annotation: 51 A.L.R. 583.

[15] Evidence that an automobile was being operated at a speed of between 35 and 40 miles per hour over a rough country road, in an effort to render assistance at a fire in the country, and that the car "jumped out of the rut" and, in the attempt to get it back, skidded and struck a pole 8 or 10 feet from the nearest wheel rut "viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff" by the court, was not, in its opinion, sufficient to show that degree of negligence necessary to establish liability by an owner or operator of an automobile for injury to a guest. Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 1339.

It has been held that violation of a state law prohibiting the driving of automobiles at a greater speed than 10 miles an hour when approaching and traversing intersections of public highways would not constitute gross negligence as a matter of law. Annotation: 51 A.L.R. 582.

Driving a big, closed car around a corner on a wet street at a speed of 20 miles per hour was held not gross negligence. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1254.

A finding of "utter disregard of the dictates of prudence amounting to complete neglect of the safety of the guest, which would constitute gross negligence," was held warranted, however, where the defendant, upon meeting a car at a curve on a slippery road, put on additional speed and drove to the left to get into a driveway, instead of stopping or turning to the right across a graveled border and some car

§ 232. Respondeat Superior.—The general rule that the owner or operator of a motor vehicle owes the duty to an invited guest to exercise reasonable care in its operation, and not unreasonably to expose him to danger and injury by increasing the hazard of travel, has been held applicable where the employee of the owner was operating the car and the question of respondeat superior was expressly raised.[16] Thus, where the driver of a car was authorized by the defendant, his employer, to invite the plaintiff, a customer of the defendant, to ride in the car, the defendant was held liable for injuries resulting proximately from the driver's negligence.[17] The respondeat superior doctrine was held to apply where the owner constituted one guest his agent to operate the car and another guest was injured.[18] When the owner of an automobile directs another to assume, and intrusts him with, the control of her automobile as a driver, he becomes, for all purposes of a driver, the special representative or agent of the owner; and the latter is liable for any injury that may be inflicted upon one riding in the automobile by invitation of the owner because of the negligence of the driver.[19] A boy helper on a milk wagon was held to have been assisting the driver by delivering milk, with the implied consent of the driver's employer, so as to make him an invitee of such employer and to make the latter liable for the driver's negligence.[20] And a coal concern was held liable for the negligence of the driver of one of its trucks, which was used in bringing school children home from a picnic, toward one of the boys, who was sitting at the rear of it, with his legs hanging down, in suddenly stopping the truck without warning, whereby an automobile in back bumped into it.[21] Of course, to hold the master liable for the negligent act of his servant, the negligence of the servant must be proved.[1] In cases where the person injured was riding at the invitation of the driver the owner's liability depends upon whether the driver had authority in fact or ostensible or apparent authority to extend the invitation.[2]

§ 233. Applications of General Rule.—The general rule now under consideration has been applied to a variety of factual situations. The operator of an automobile has been held liable to his guest for injuries received by the guest as a result of the operator's violation of the speed laws[3] and as a result of the operator's falling asleep.[4] Applying brakes in such a way as to make them lock and bring the car to a sudden stop, thereby throwing off the guest,[5] and driving at about 35 miles per hour on a rough road in a tracks, which offered less danger. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1254, 1255.

---

For a case holding a verdict of gross negligence warranted where the driver tried to make a turn at an excessive speed, see Pepper v. Morrill (C. C. A. 1st) 24 F. (2d) 320, 57 A.L.R. 750.

[16] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1021, s. 26 A.L.R. 1427, 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 328, 51 A.L.R. 583, 61 A.L.R. 1257, and 65 A.L.R. 955.

As to respondeat superior generally, see infra, §§ 373 et seq.

[17] Paiewonsky v. Joffe, 101 N. J. L. 521, 129 A. 142, 40 A.L.R. 1335.

[18] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1021, s. 26 A.L.R. 1427, 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 328, 51 A.L.R. 583, 61 A.L.R. 1257, and 65 A.L.R. 955.

[19] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1021, s. 26 A.L.R. 1427, 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 328, 51 A.L.R. 583, 61 A.L.R. 1257, and 65 A.L.R. 955.

The doctrine was held inapplicable, however, where a mother, owning a car, consented to her daughter's taking the plaintiff in it to a skating party and the injury occurred in an attempt to put the car in the garage after returning. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1257.

[20] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 955.

[21] Annotation 65 A.L.R. 955.

[1] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1021, s. 26 A.L.R. 1427, 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 328, 51 A.L.R. 583, 61 A.L.R. 1257, and 65 A.L.R. 955.

[2] Infra, §§ 394, 395.

[3] Beard v. Klusmeier, 158 Ky. 153, 164 S. W. 319, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 342.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1022, s. 26 A.L.R. 1427, 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 329, 51 A.L.R. 583, 61 A.L.R. 1257, and 65 A.L.R. 955.

[4] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 956.

[5] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1258, and 65 A.L.R. 955.

storm[6] have been held to be acts of negligence warranting recovery. It has been held also that a finding was justified that the defendant did not use the reasonable care required toward his guest, where it appeared from the evidence that he was familiar with the premises and knew that he was approaching a grade crossing, and that although the whistle of an approaching train had been blown, an automatic bell was ringing, and he saw the train approaching a short distance away, he attempted to drive over the crossing and was hit by the train.[7] On the other hand, other alleged acts of negligence have been held not to be such.[8] For instance, a finding of negligence was held unwarranted, where the driver, proceeding at considerable speed, with the guest's acquiescence, was suddenly confronted with dogs jumping out from behind a parked car.[9] Similarly, merely turning his head to look at some horses, at the behest of his young son, while proceeding at ordinary speed behind other cars, was held, as a matter of law, not "heedlessness" or "reckless disregard of the rights of others," within the statute, so as to make the driver liable to his wife who was riding as a guest and was injured when the car bumped into the one in front.[10]

Voluntary drunkenness of the driver is no excuse for negligence and does not relieve him from exercising the degree of care required of a sober man under the same circumstances.[11]

Obviously, however, the negligence of the driver of the car and the freedom from contributory negligence of the guest must be established before the guest can recover.[12]

(b) GUESTS AT SUFFERANCE

§ 234. Generally.—The cases are not entirely in harmony regarding the liability of the owner or operator of a motor vehicle for injuries to permissive guests or guests at sufferance. There is a strong line of authority in favor of the view that the operator of an automobile owes to a guest at sufferance or licensee the same duty he owes to an invited guest. Accordingly, it is held that the owner or driver of an automobile owes a guest at sufferance the same duty he owes to an invited guest, namely, the duty of using reasonable care not to injure him.[13] It has been said that the only sensible and humane rule is that an owner and driver of an automobile owes a guest at sufferance the duty of using reasonable care so as not to injure him. The rule as to trespassers and licensees upon real estate, with all its niceties and distinctions, is not to be applied to one riding in an automobile at the invitation of, or with the knowledge and tacit consent of, the owner and operator of the automobile. The law exacts of one who puts a force in motion that he shall control it with skill and care in proportion to the danger created. This rule applies to a guest at sufferance as well as to a guest by invitation.[14]

---

[6] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1259, and 65 A.L.R. 955.

[7] Avery v. Thompson, 117 Me. 120, 103 A. 4, L.R.A.1918D, 205, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1122.

[8] Merely jouncing a car in going slowly over a bump on a rough road, so that a guest's head hit the top, was held not to be, of itself, negligence of any sort. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1259.

A finding that the driving of a car off a pavement and into a rut to avoid another car, and then immediately back to the pavement without stopping, as a result of which the car turned over, did not amount to negligence was held warranted. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 956.

[9] Olson v. Hermansen, 196 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A.L.R. 1243.

[10] Silver v. Silver, 108 Conn. 371, 143 A. 240, 65 A.L.R. 943, affirmed in 280 U. S. 117, 74 L. ed. 221, 50 S. Ct. 57.

[11] Powell v. Berry, 145 Ga. 696, 89 S. E. 753, L.R.A.1917A, 306.

[12] In Jacobs v. Jacobs, 141 La. 272, 74 So. 992, L.R.A.1917F, 253, where the provision of the Civil Code that any act of negligence or imprudence that causes injury to another obliges him who was at fault to pay for the injury was held applicable in the case of an invited guest, it was held that the driver of an automobile was not liable for injuries sustained by his guest, where it appeared that the driver had inquired about the condition of the thoroughfare before entering it and was informed that it was all right; that the car, while traveling at a moderate rate of speed on a prominent street in a city, ran into an open canal extending across the thoroughfare without any guard rail, barrier, red light, or other warning of danger; that the glare of an electric light between the driver and the canal prevented his seeing the danger until it was too late to stop while going at an ordinary speed; that the driver had never traveled over that route before and had no knowledge of the dangerous situation; and that the guest had traveled over the route several times, and was acquainted with the situation, but did not warn the driver or complain of the speed.

[13] Marple v. Haddad, 103 W. Va. 508, 138 S. E. 113, 61 A.L.R. 1248.

In some cases, however, involving an injury to a guest at sufferance riding in an automobile, a distinction has been made between the degree of care required in the operation of a car in which one is riding as an invited guest, and one in which the guest is merely a guest at sufferance.[15] In these cases it is generally held that the duty owed to the guest at sufferance is only to refrain from wantonly or wilfully injuring him.[16] Thus, where one was riding in a motor truck as an accommodation and without charge, it was held that he was a mere licensee and assumed all the risks of the carriage, except such as might result from wanton or intentional wrong or a failure to exercise due care to avert injury after the danger became apparent.[17] It is asserted that the fact that the licensee is an infant, even of tender years, will make no difference in the application of this rule.[18]

(3) Injuries Due to Condition of Car

§ 235. Generally.—The cases are not entirely in accord regarding the liability of the owner or operator of a motor vehicle for injuries to guests by the defective condition and equipment of the automobile.[19] It is held that a guest who comes upon the premises or enters a vehicle of another must take such premises or vehicle as he finds them and as it pleases the owner, in the exercise of his right of dominion over his own property, to maintain the same, provided, of course, such owner does not fail in the duty of informing or warning the guest of that which might be considered a trap or concealed defect, or does not, by any act of his, create a new danger.[20] Gross

---

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1025, s. 26 A.L.R. 1428, 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 329, 51 A.L.R. 584, 61 A.L.R. 1260, and 65 A.L.R. 956.

[14] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1025, s. 26 A.L.R. 1428, 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 329, 51 A.L.R. 584, 61 A.L.R. 1260, and 65 A.L.R. 956.

[15] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1025, s. 26 A.L.R. 1428, 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 329, 51 A.L.R. 584, 61 A.L.R. 1260, and 65 A.L.R. 956.

[16] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1025, s. 26 A.L.R. 1428, 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 329, 51 A.L.R. 584, 61 A.L.R. 1260, and 65 A.L.R. 956.

It has been said in such cases that the act of the defendant in acceding to a request to ride possessed none of the elements of a contract and involved no element of invitation bringing it within the rule of law applicable to a passenger upon a railway train or a hired bus, or to cases of express or implied invitation which involve, as a consequence of the legal relationship thus established, the application of the rule of due care. The legal status of the plaintiff is that of a licensee, on whom the only legal obligation imposed is that of refraining from the perpetration of acts wantonly or wilfully injurious. Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1025.

[17] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1025.

Evidence showing that the one riding on the motortruck for his accommodation was thrown therefrom when the car, which was traveling 20 or 25 miles an hour, in rounding a curve, turned 2 or 3 feet to the right to allow an automobile to pass, and hit a hole does not show that the driver was negligent in respect of the immediate and emergent duty presented by the actual conditions obtaining at the time of the accident. Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1025.

[18] Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 1341.

[19] Marple v. Haddad, 103 W. Va. 508, 138 S. E. 113, 61 A.L.R. 1248; Cleary v. Eckart, 191 Wis. 114, 210 N. W. 267, 51 A.L.R. 576; O'Shea v. Lavoy, 175 Wis. 456, 185 N. W. 525, 20 A.L.R. 1008.

[20] Gifford v. Dice, 269 Mich. 293, 257 N. W. 830, 96 A.L.R. 1477.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1029, s. 40 A.L.R. 1344, 47 A.L.R. 332, 51 A.L.R. 585, 61 A.L.R. 1264, and 65 A.L.R. 958.

An owner of an automobile is not liable to his father-in-law, riding with him as an invited guest, for an injury sustained when the machine turned over because of a defective spring breaking, although the car negligence, within the meaning of the guest statutes, cannot be predicated upon defects in the car.[1] It has been said that one who invites another to ride with him in his automobile does not guarantee to the guest a sound automobile; his duty extends only to refraining from increasing the danger which the guest assumes upon entering the automobile, or from adding a new danger.[2] Reasonable care for the safety of a guest commences only when he enters the automobile; the operator owes him no duty of prior inspection, the guest taking the automobile and driver as he finds them.[3] The mere fact that the car was equipped with defective brakes was held not to render the driver negligent toward a guest.[4] The facts that the windshield of the car in which defendant was taking plaintiff to the former's home was not equipped with a cleaner, and that it was dark and raining hard, were held not to indicate gross negligence.[5]

A line of authority, apparently at variance in spirit with the cases above discussed, exists.[6] According to this view, an invitation carries with it the assurance of some measure of security which the driver must make good by the exercise of active care; he owes the duty of exercising reasonable care in the operation and control of the car, in view of some known defective condition.[7] A charge of negligence predicated upon the car owner's knowledge that the car door was loose and not fastened, and upon his failure to advise the guest of such condition when inviting the latter to enter the car, was held properly alleged.[8] The negligence of the owner of an automobile in not having the accelerator thereon repaired, though he knew that the accelerator rod was out of alignment and would stick, and though he had been warned by different garage mechanics that it was dangerous to drive the car without having the accelerator repaired, was held to be the proximate cause of a collision occurring while a guest, whom the owner had invited to ride with him on a trip, was, at the instance of the owner, driving the car, when the accelerator stuck as the car reached the crest of a hill, causing it was a secondhand one and the spring had been repaired with old parts. O'Shea v. Lavoy, 175 Wis. 456, 185 N. W. 525, 20 A.L.R. 1008. The court held that the situation was analogous to a case of one invited to dine; that the legal relation was that of licensor and licensee; that in such cases the guest accepts the premises as he finds them, subject only to the limitation that the licensor must not set a trap or be guilty of active negligence; and that the broken spring in question did not constitute a trap. The court discussed cases dealing with the question of liability of an owner of an automobile for damages resulting to an invited guest by reason of the negligent management of the car and pointed out that the apparent conflict may be accounted for on the ground that in some states different degrees of care are recognized, while in others there is but one degree of care; the court refrained, however, from deciding the degree of negligence in the management of the car which would render the owner of an automobile liable for damages to an invited guest.

---

[1] Gifford v. Dice, 269 Mich. 293, 257 N. W. 830, 96 A.L.R. 1477.

Gross negligence or wilful and wanton misconduct on the part of the driver of an automobile, rendering him liable under a guest statute for injury to one riding with him as a guest, cannot be predicated upon the facts that he drove the car on a concrete pavement, knowing that one of the front tires was in a weakened condition by reason of being worn through the tread and part of the fabric lining, and that the injury was due to a "blow-out" of the tire, resulting in loss of control of the car and a collision. Ibid.

[2] Gifford v. Dice, 269 Mich. 293, 257 N. W. 830, 96 A.L.R. 1477; Cleary v. Eckart, 191 Wis. 114, 210 N. W. 267, 51 A.L.R. 576.

[3] Marple v. Haddad, 103 W. Va. 508, 138 S. E. 113, 61 A.L.R. 1248.

[4] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1029, s. 40 A.L.R. 1344, 47 A.L.R. 332, 51 A.L.R. 585, 61 A.L.R. 1264, and 65 A.L.R. 958.

Liability may not rest upon the driver of an automobile because of the failure of the brake to hold when going down a hill, where the failure to work was unexpected, where, upon the same trip, it had worked properly while descending a number of hills, and where the brake shoe had been adjusted two or three days before the accident. Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 1344.

[5] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1264.

[6] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1029, s. 40 A.L.R. 1344, 47 A.L.R. 332, 51 A.L.R. 585, 61 A.L.R. 1264, and 65 A.L.R. 958.

[7] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1029, s. 40 A.L.R. 1344, 47 A.L.R. 332, 51 A.L.R. 585, 61 A.L.R. 1264, and 65 A.L.R. 958.

[8] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1264.

to descend at a rapid rate of speed.[9] Evidence of driving with knowledge that the car's steering gear was worn and loose, together with speeding down a rough slope with a turn at the bottom, was held to justify submitting to the jury the question of the driver's negligence toward a guest.[10]

(4) Inexperience or Lack of Skill of Driver

§ 236. Generally.—While there is scant authority on the question of the liability of the owner or operator of a car for injuries to a guest by virtue of the inexperience or lack of skill of the driver, it seems clear, especially in view of statutory provisions which are in force in many jurisdictions, relieving a host from liability for injury to a guest in his automobile in the absence of gross negligence, that a host cannot be held liable for an injury to a guest resulting from the host's inexperience or lack of skill as a driver. In some of the cases reaching this conclusion the decision has been based on the ground that there was no breach of duty by the host, or that the guest accepted or assumed the risk; in others, recovery was denied on the ground of contributory negligence.[11] One accepting a gratuitous invitation to ride in an automobile "accepts" such skill as may be possessed by the driver in the handling of his car [12] and assumes whatever risks attend the degree of proficiency of such driver, and his usual and customary habit of driving, with which they are familiar.[13] Even though his want of skill was not known to the guest, and though the guest was a child of tender years, there is no liability where the driver exercised such skill as he possessed.[14]

The driver of an automobile owes a guest therein the same duty as he owes other users of the highway to keep a proper lookout, and failure to keep such lookout is not a risk assumed by the guest.[15]

(5) Effect of "Guest" Statutes

§ 237. Generally.[16]—Statutes which relieve the owner or operator of a motor vehicle of liability for injury to a guest unless he has been grossly negligent or guilty of wilful or intentional misconduct have been enacted in many states. These are commonly denominated "guest" statutes.[17] Many of the statutes except operation while intoxicated from the limitation.[18]

---

[9] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 332.

[10] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1264.

[11] Eisenhut v. Eisenhut, 212 Wis. 467, 248 N. W. 440, 250 N. W. 441, 91 A.L.R. 549.
Annotation: 91 A.L.R. 554.

A gratuitous guest in the automobile of a comparatively inexperienced driver could not hold him liable for injuries caused by his error of judgment in applying the brakes when driving over a light coating of gravel-covered hardpan in the road, so that the car skidded, when he felt a bump which he attributed to a deflated tire which he honestly believed required the stopping of the car as soon as possible. Cleary v. Eckart, 191 Wis. 114, 210 N. W. 267, 51 A.L.R. 576.

In Naudzius v. Lahr, 253 Mich. 216, 234 N. W. 581, 74 A.L.R. 1189, it was held that gross negligence in permitting an inexperienced person to drive an automobile would not render the owner liable under a statute exonerating him from liability for injury to a guest unless proximately caused by gross negligence or wilful and wanton misconduct, if the driver himself was guilty of no negligence or of only ordinary negligence.

[12] Cleary v. Eckart, 191 Wis. 114, 210 N. W. 267, 51 A.L.R. 576.

[13] Olson v. Hermansen, 196 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A.L.R. 1243.
Annotation: 91 A.L.R. 555.

It has been held that the driver of an automobile, who acted in good faith and in accordance with his highest degree of skill in the emergency created by the conduct of two dogs in jumping from behind a standing car in front of his car, could not be held liable for the death of one of his guests and injury to another occasioned by the resulting accident, on the theory that he failed to exercise ordinary care in his management of the car. Olson v. Hermansen, 196 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A.L.R. 1243.

[14] Eisenhut v. Eisenhut, 212 Wis. 467, 248 N. W. 440, 250 N. W. 441, 91 A.L.R. 549.

[15] Ibid.

[16] As to retrospective operation of statutes, see Statutes [Also 25 R. C. L. pp. 785 et seq.]

[17] See statute involved in Bookhart v. Greenlease-Lied Motor Co. 215 Iowa, 8, 242 N. W. 721, 82 A.L.R. 1359.

The so-called "guest" statutes are designed to relieve the owner of the consequences of ordinary negligence to his guest.[19] Where the guest, a minor child, is precluded from recovery, a parent cannot recover for loss of services and expenses occasioned by the injury.[20]

The variation in the terms of the statutes in the different states must be taken into consideration in determining upon the existence of the requisite degree of negligence.[1]

In some instances general statutes relating to negligence not expressly applying to guests have been involved in determining upon the liability to a guest. Speaking generally, statutes which prescribe rules of negligence are held to apply equally to guests as to other persons, and if the statute imposes a liability for the failure to exercise ordinary care, the owner or operator is liable to a guest where he fails to exercise such degree of care.[2]

Such statutes should not be extended by construction beyond the correction of the evils and attainment of the objects sought by them, but should not be so restricted as to defeat or impair those objects.[3]

§ 238. Validity of Statutes.—Statutes which merely limit liability of the owner or operator of the automobile by requiring a degree of negligence greater than ordinary negligence as a condition of the liability of the owner or operator are generally upheld.[4] At least, such a statute does not deprive persons injured subsequently to its enactment of property without due process.[5] Distinguishing between motor-propelled and other vehicles, and between gratuitous and paying passengers, does not make an arbitrary or unreasonable discrimination.[6]

The view has been taken, however, that the guest cannot, by statute, be deprived of all remedy against the owner or operator.[7] Such abolition violates a constitutional provision giving every man a remedy by due course of law for injury done him in his person or property.[8]

---

[18] See statute involved in Bookhart v. Greenlease-Lied Motor Co. 215 Iowa, 8, 244 N. W. 721, 82 A.L.R. 1359, and that involved in Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327.

[19] Gifford v. Dice, 269 Mich. 293, 257 N. W. 830, 96 A.L.R. 1477.

[20] Shiels v. Audette, 119 Conn. 75, 174 A. 323, 94 A.L.R. 1206.

[1] Gross negligence cannot be made an element of liability for the death of a guest by the overturning of an automobile, where the statute requires proof of ordinary negligence only, in actions to recover damages for death. Flynn v. Lewis, 231 Mass. 550, 121 N. E. 493, 2 A.L.R. 896.

[2] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1021, s. 51 A.L.R. 583, 61 A.L.R. 1255, and 65 A.L.R. 954.

The driver of an automobile, who has invited a guest to ride with him, is not absolved from responsibility for negligence or imprudence merely because he is performing a gratuitous service, and although an invited guest, being a mere licensee, is not entitled to the consideration due by a carrier to a passenger for hire, he is, nevertheless, entitled to the benefit of the provision of the statute that any act of negligence or imprudence that causes injury to another obliges him who was at fault to pay for the injury; and it was held that the responsibility of the driver of an automobile for the safety of his guest is not limited to his duty to abstain from acts of gross or wilful negligence, but demands that he avoid the ordinary negligence or imprudence referred to in the statute. Jacobs v. Jacobs, 141 La. 272, 74 So. 992, L.R.A.1917F, 253.

[3] Chaplowe v. Powsner, 119 Conn. 188, 175 A. 470, 95 A.L.R. 1177.

[4] Silver v. Silver, 280 U. S. 117, 74 L. ed. 221, 51 S. Ct. 57, 65 A.L.R. 939, affirming 108 Conn. 371, 143 A. 240, 65 A.L.R. 943 (it was here upheld against the contention that it may be an unreasonable classification and that it deprived the guest of the equal protection of the law); Naudzius v. Lahr, 253 Mich. 216, 234 N. W. 581, 74 A.L.R. 1189 (valid even as against an infant—does not deprive him of property without due process).

Such a statute, being intended to discourage collusion and fraud in litigation, is one pertinent to public safety within a constitutional provision permitting the legislature to give immediate effect to acts immediately necessary for the preservation of the public peace, health, or safety. Naudzius v. Lahr, 253 Mich. 216, 234 N. W. 581, 74 A.L.R. 1189.

[5] Naudzius v. Lahr, 253 Mich. 216, 234 N. W. 581, 74 A.L.R. 1189.

[6] Ibid.

[7] Stewart v. Houk, 127 Or. 589, 271 P. 998, 272 P. 893, 61 A.L.R. 1236.

§ 239. Who Is Guest.—The question who is a guest within the contemplation of a statute fixing liability of the owner or operator of a motor vehicle for injury to a guest is largely a question for determination in the individual case. The fact that the person pays no compensation but is riding for pleasure upon invitation of the owner or operator gives him the status of a guest.[9] The compensation, however, which will take him out of this class need not be a money compensation,[10] nor need it pass from the passenger to the driver.[11] A prospective buyer of an automobile, who, at the invitation of a dealer, is riding therein for the sole purpose of ascertaining whether it complies with his requirements,[12] or a prospective purchaser of real estate, who, at the invitation of a real estate company, is riding in an automobile hired by it and used to carry prospective purchasers to and from the tract,[13] is not a guest within the meaning of these statutes. A high school student rightfully riding in a school bus is not a guest within the meaning of a statute defining a "guest" as a person who accepts a ride in any vehicle without giving compensation therefor.[14] An expectation of compensation, however, has been held insufficient to prevent one from being a guest.[15] The question sometimes resolves itself into one of fact for the determination of the jury[16] or of the trial court,[17] with which determination the reviewing court will ordinarily not interfere.[18]

Such a statute should not be extended by construction beyond the correction of the evils and attainment of the objects sought by it, nor should it be so restricted as to defeat or impair those objects.[19]

When the guest relationship begins depends upon the facts of the individual case. One whose fingers were injured in the door before the car was started was held to be a guest within the meaning of the statute.[20] On the other hand, one invited to get into an automobile and wait there until the owner had finished his dinner, when he would take her to her home, is not a guest, where she was injured when the door of the car fell off as she tried to open it to enter.[1]

---

[8] Ibid.

[9] Shiels v. Audette, 119 Conn. 75, 174 A. 323, 94 A.L.R. 1206.

Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365, s. 95 A.L.R. 1180.

A child riding with his parent has been held to be a guest of such parent. Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1367.

A minor was held not to be a guest where the one with whom the mother had placed him to board compelled him to accompany her on a journey in an automobile against the minor's objection. Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365.

[10] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365.

The fact that the person was riding for no purpose of, or benefit to, the owner is noted in some of the cases in which the person was held to be a guest. Shiels v. Audette, 119 Conn. 75, 174 A. 323, 94 A.L.R. 1206.

[11] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1367, s. 95 A.L.R. 1180.

[12] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365.

[13] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365, s. 95 A.L.R. 1180.

[14] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365, s. 95 A.L.R. 1180.

[15] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365, s. 95 A.L.R. 1180.

A person transported in an ambulance without charge is a guest although it is expected that later he may, out of gratitude, make a donation to the organization which maintains the ambulance. Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365.

[16] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365, s. 95 A.L.R. 1180.

[17] Chaplowe v. Powsner, 119 Conn. 188, 175 A. 470, 95 A.L.R. 1177.

[18] Ibid.

One having a pass to a theater, who makes an arrangement with a friend to share the pass and to use the latter's automobile, may be found to be a guest and so precluded from recovery of damages on account of the owner's negligent operation of the automobile while they are proceeding to the theater, although the situation is thus one of reciprocal hospitality. Ibid.

[19] Chaplowe v. Powsner, 119 Conn. 188, 175 A. 470, 95 A.L.R. 1177.

[20] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1365, s. 95 A.L.R. 1180.

§ 240. What Constitutes Negligence within the Statutes.—The negligence which amounts to a violation of the so-called guest statutes cannot be stated in any general way. The first subject of inquiry is the terms of the statute. Speaking generally, these statutes require a higher degree of care to avoid the charge of negligence than is required generally. In fact, this is their purpose.[2]

In the application of these principles to factual situations, the courts very rarely characterize the acts of the defendant as negligence as a matter of law. Certain things may amount to gross negligence or wilful and wanton misconduct within the meaning of the guest statutes. Whether or not there is such negligence as the statute requires is ordinarily a question for the jury.[3] With its conclusions the courts do not ordinarily interfere.[4] In some instances the courts hold as a matter of law that certain acts do not amount to such negligence as comes within the condemnation of the statutes now under consideration.[5]

While the terms "gross negligence" or "wilful and wanton misconduct" are not susceptible of exact meaning, they are not so uncertain as to render invalid an act in which they are used to define the degree of negligence.[6]

§ 241. —Gross Negligence, Wilful Misconduct.—Gross negligence, within the meaning of these statutes, has been variously defined— as "the want of slight diligence," as "an entire failure to exercise care, or the exercise of so slight a degree of care as to justify the belief that there was an indifference to the things and welfare of others," and as "that want of care which would raise a presumption of the conscious indifference to consequences."[7] Again, it is stated to be the equivalent of "great negligence, aggravated negligence, or carelessness substantially greater than ordinary negligence," and so not necessarily to mean the total lack of any care.[8] Other authorities have taken it to mean such a degree of recklessness as approaches wanton and wilful misconduct[9] and seem to treat it as equivalent there-

---

[1] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 1367, s. 95 A.L.R. 1180.

[2] See supra, § 237.

[3] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1200, s. 86 A.L.R. 1147, and 96 A.L.R. 1481.

[4] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1200, s. 86 A.L.R. 1147, and 96 A.L.R. 1481.

[5] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1199, s. 86 A.L.R. 1146, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[6] Naudzius v. Lahr, 253 Mich. 216, 234 N. W. 581, 74 A.L.R. 1189.

[7] Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327, holding such a statute inapplicable as not being retroactive.

Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1198, s. 86 A.L.R. 1145, and 96 A.L.R. 1479.

The test of gross negligence is not met where the defendant gave strict attention to his driving, no objection was made to the car's moderate speed, and its lights were burning brightly,—he having rightly assumed that the injured guest, whom he had requested to ride inside of his car, but who persisted in standing on the running board, would not project part of her body outward so that it might possibly come in contact with something at or near the edge of the road. Shaw v. Moore, 104 Vt. 529, 162 A. 373, 86 A.L.R. 1139.

Upon the ground that there was no evidence of a heedless and reckless disregard of the (back seat) guest's rights, where the owner and operator, without looking in that direction, reached back and slammed the rear door to just after the guest had entered the car, thereby catching the guest's fingers between the door and the body frame, a finding for the guest was reversed. Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1201.

[8] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1199, s. 86 A.L.R. 1146, and 96 A.L.R. 1482.

Gross negligence is substantially and appreciably higher in magnitude and more culpable than ordinary negligence—an act or omission respecting legal duty of an aggravated character as distinguished from a mere failure to exercise ordinary care. Shaw v. Moore, 104 Vt. 529, 162 A. 373, 86 A.L.R. 1139.

[9] Naudzius v. Lahr, 253 Mich. 216, 234 N. W. 581, 74 A.L.R. 1189.

Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1198, s. 86 A.L.R. 1145, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

To constitute gross negligence, there must be either a wilful intent to injure, or to.[10] It is generally regarded as not amounting to such misconduct.[11]

Wantonness is by some courts regarded as something more than negligence and something less than wilful injury.[12]

The line of demarcation between gross negligence and "wilful negligence" is shadowy. Gross negligence "falls short of being such reckless disregard of probable consequences as is equivalent to a wilful and intentional wrong," while wilful negligence "involves the element of conduct equivalent to a so-called constructive intent." [13]

The following elements have been said to be necessary to characterize the injury, to a guest, as wanton or wilful: (1) Knowledge of a situation requiring the exercise of ordinary care and diligence to avoid injury to another; (2) ability to avoid the resulting harm by ordinary care and diligence in the use of the means at hand; and (3) the omission to use such care and diligence to avert the threatened danger when to the ordinary mind it must be apparent that the result is likely to prove disastrous to another.[14] Mere misjudgment or carelessly exercised judgment does not amount to such misconduct.[15]

§ 242. —Reckless Operation, etc.—Numerous statutes provide that a guest shall have no right of recovery against an owner or driver except for injuries resulting from reckless operation, etc.[16] The phrase "heedlessness or his reckless disregard" must be construed to mean the owner's or operator's "heedlessness and his reckless disregard of the rights of others." [17] A high degree of negligence is not enough to amount to such heedlessness or reckless disregard of the rights of others.[18] The words are not restricted to some wilful or intentional act, but include, also, conduct evincing an indifference to, or heedless disregard of, obvious duty and of probable consequences and dangers.[19] Such "reckless operation" has been said to mean "proceeding without heed of or concern for consequences," to imply "no care, coupled with disregard for consequences," and it has been said that it may or may not include wilfulness or wantonness.[20] Again, it is said that some act which would be pronounced by every person to be an utter indif-that reckless and wanton disregard of the rights and safety of another or of his property and that willingness to inflict injury which the law deems equivalent to an intent to injure. Bentson v. Brown, 186 Wis. 629, 203 N. W. 380, 38 A.L.R. 1417.

---

[10] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1198, s. 86 A.L.R. 1145, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[11] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1198, s. 86 A.L.R. 1145, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[12] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1198, s. 86 A.L.R. 1145, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[13] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1198, s. 86 A.L.R. 1145, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

Without attempting any general observation of what is meant by the words "gross negligence or wilful and wanton misconduct" of the owner or operator such as would render him liable to the guest other than stating that facts lifting the owner's faults above ordinary negligence must be set out, it has been held that the owner's act in intrusting the car's operation, while he was in it, to his seventeen-year-old son, who was alleged to be inexperienced, unskilful, and incompetent was not of itself gross negligence; and that even if gross negligence could be predicated upon so intrusting the car to his son, such gross negligence was not charged to be the proximate cause of the guest's injury, which was said to be caused by the boy's ordinary negligence in losing control of the car. Naudzius v. Lahr, 253 Mich. 216, 234 N. W. 581, 74 A.L.R. 1189.

[14] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1198, s. 86 A.L.R. 1145, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[15] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1198, s. 86 A.L.R. 1145, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[16] Under the Connecticut statute, the guest is not permitted to recover against the owner or operator "unless such accident shall have been intentional on the part of said owner or operator or caused by his heedlessness or his reckless disregard of the rights of others." Silver v. Silver, 108 Conn. 371, 143 A. 240, 65 A.L.R. 943 (affirmed in 280 U. S. 117, 74 L. ed. 221, 50 S. Ct. 57, 65 A.L.R. 939.

[17] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1199, s. 86 A.L.R. 1146, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[18] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1199, s. 86 A.L.R. 1146, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[19] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1199, s. 86 A.L.R. 1146, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[20] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1199, s. 86 A.L.R. 1146, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

ference to the guest's safety must be shown.[1] The words "reckless disregard of the rights of others" have been held not to relieve from liability for injury caused when the owner or operator voluntarily does an improper or wrongful act or, with knowledge of existing conditions, voluntarily refrains from doing a proper and prudent act, under circumstances such that his action, or his failure to act, evinces an entire abandonment of any care, and a heedless indifference to results which may follow and he recklessly takes the chance of an accident happening without intent that any shall occur.[2]

§ 243. Application to Facts.—The foregoing principles apply to excessive speed;[3] dozing while driving;[4] driving with the knowledge of mechanical defects;[5] lack of control;[6] failure to observe;[7] failure to stop or slow down;[8] operating without lights;[9] operating in wrong part of road or outside it,[10] especially on a curve or turn in the road;[11] acts and conduct at railroad crossings[12] and intersections;[13] passing other cars on the road;[14] driving in fog, ice, rain, or snow,[15] or when blinded by glare of lights or sun.[16]

---

[1] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1199, s. 86 A.L.R. 1146, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[2] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1199, s. 86 A.L.R. 1146, and 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[3] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1200, s. 86 A.L.R. 1147, and 96 A.L.R. 1481.

Gross negligence has been found as a matter of law by the court from driving at a prohibited rate of speed at an intersection and failing to turn. Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1200.

A speed of 50 miles an hour was regarded as not evidence of recklessness in and of itself; and it was said that the defendant, himself injured, had as much at stake as the guest where the car was traveling down a slight incline and went into a pile of snow at the side of the road. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1157, s. 96 A.L.R. 1491.

[4] It has been asserted that to constitute gross negligence in falling asleep while driving, there must be such a prior warning of the likelihood of sleep that continuing to drive would constitute reckless disregard of circumstances. It has been held as a matter of law in some cases that gross negligence is shown by a showing that the driver of the car was asleep, without any further explanation. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1147, s. 96 A.L.R. 1481.

Wilful and wanton misconduct was held to be shown where the guest had already aroused the defendant after he had fallen asleep at the wheel and almost run into a safety zone, and then, shortly afterwards, he again dozed off and ran into another one. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1147, s. 96 A.L.R. 1481.

But a person's act in operating his car while asleep was said to make him no more accountable than he would have been had he been suddenly seized with a fit of epilepsy, where the fact that he was tired and facing the east sun and went to sleep was held not to raise any negligence there may have been to the level of recklessness, the car having apparently got out of his control after hitting some small clods in the road. The court added, however, that it did not decide that there might not be facts and circumstances in some other case amounting to recklessness because the driver went to sleep at the wheel. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1147, s. 96 A.L.R. 1481.

A finding that one who had been driving alone most of the day and was pretty tired and yawned a good deal was guilty of reckless misconduct in dozing off shortly before midnight when his car swerved to the wrong side of a street was upheld. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1147, s. 96 A.L.R. 1480.

[5] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1148, s. 96 A.L.R. 1482.

Operating a car with knowledge that its brakes were so defective that they would not work and that the steering apparatus was so worn and loose as to be liable to cause loss of control, especially if the car should be driven at any considerable speed, was the ground upon which a finding in a guest's favor of heedless or reckless disregard of her rights was held sustained where the court regarded it as doubtful whether the evidence as to speed, lookout, control, and collision with a pole would warrant a recovery apart from the other consideration. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1148.

Some cases apply the rule that the guest accepts the car in its condition at the time, and cannot recover for injuries resulting from defects therein. Gifford v. Dice, 269 Mich. 293, 257 N. W. 830, 96 A.L.R. 1477, holding that gross negligence or wilful and wanton misconduct on the part of the driver of an automobile, so as to render him liable under a guest statute for injury to one riding with him as a guest, cannot be predicated upon the facts that he drove the car on a concrete pavement, knowing that one of the front tires was in a weakened condition by reason of being worn through the tread and part of the fabric lining, and that the injury was due to a "blow-out" of the tire, resulting in loss of control of the car and a collision.

[6] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1148, s. 96 A.L.R. 1483.

The act of a driver who was accustomed only to using a car of a different model in using the hand throttle in operating a car of standard control was held not wilful or wanton. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1148, 1149.

Gross negligence was held not shown, and accordingly a judgment against a host was reversed, where he drove partly off the right side of a road in rounding a curve at moderate speed, whereupon he turned the car sharply to the left and then again to the right, but it landed in the ditch at the left, the court observing that he was probably an inexperienced driver, that the car's quick movements apparently alarmed him, and that his excessive concern magnified the danger, so that he lost his head, but that the result was inadvertent. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1149.

[7] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1149, s. 96 A.L.R. 1484.

Recklessness of a driver who paid more attention to a young lady at his side than to traffic, as well as being otherwise careless, was held established. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1149.

Neither a speed of 45 miles an hour nor failure to see in the highway at night a trailer with which the defendant's car collided was regarded as gross negligence or wilfulness or wantonness. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1150.

Failure to look back before slamming a rear door and failure to observe a car in front, by reason of turning to look at some horses, were held respectively not to constitute reckless operation. Silver v. Silver, 108 Conn. 371, 65 A.L.R. 943, 143 A. 240 (affirmed in (1929) 280 U. S. 117, 74 L. ed. 221, 50 S. Ct. 57, 65 A.L.R. 939).

[8] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1150, s. 96 A.L.R. 1485.

Upon the ground that the test of gross negligence was not met, a verdict for a guest was reversed and judgment ordered for the defendant where he failed to stop his car, as did the driver of a truck coming from the opposite direction, but tried his best to get his left wheels out of a frozen rut on the left of the road and into one on the right. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1150.

[9] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1150.

Driving without headlights at over 40 miles an hour in city streets on a wet night against the repeated protests of guests, giving more attention to a young lady at his side than to traffic, and running the car 100 feet without control after slightly hitting a car at an intersection were held to constitute, on the driver's part, an indifference to consequences which might befall the guests. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1150.

[10] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1150, s. 96 A.L.R 1486.

[11] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1151, s. 96 A.L.R. 1487.

A guest's recovery was reversed, and judgment for the defendant ordered, where neither the defendant nor the guest saw a curve, the defendant having apparently become confused and misled, at dusk, by the lights of an oil station. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1152.

Recklessness, being an exceptional case under the statute, was held not shown where the car in question was driven up a long and steep hill at about midnight at a speed of 35 to 40 miles an hour, or possibly 45, to a point where there was a sharp curve, where it sideswiped a car coming down the hill. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1152.

[12] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1152, s. 96 A.L.R. 1488.

Making no effort to stop a car going 30 to 35 miles an hour when 50 or 60 feet from a railway crossing, with a train coming at a distance of only 100 to 150 feet to the left, to which the guest called the driver's attention, was held not statutory misconduct. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1152, s. 96 A.L.R. 1488.

The driver's noncompliance with the guest's request to slow down before making a turn to cross a railroad track, or else stop and let him out, was held not evidence of wilfulness or wantonness, and his driving faster than the rate permitted in the business and residential section of a hamlet was said not to constitute wilful and wanton misconduct where the car made the turn, but something, which appears to have been a flat tire, happened to make the driver lose control at the crossing. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1152, s. 96 A.L.R. 1488.

[13] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1153, s. 96 A.L.R. 1488.

Slowing up, without stopping in obedience to a stop sign, at a crossing where there was not much traffic was held not gross negligence. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1143, s. 96 A.L.R. 1488.

A driver who relied on his having the right of way at an intersection and who therefore made no effort to stop in obedience to a stop sign, but slowed down to nearly 45 miles an hour upon seeing a car on his left, which slowed down almost to a stop and then started again with change of gears, was held at most negligent, but not guilty of wilful or wanton misconduct. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1154, s. 96 A.L.R. 1488.

Mere failure to turn either way, upon reaching an intersecting highway, where the road on which the car had come went no farther, but the driver apparently did not know that until within a very short distance, was held not recklessness where the car had been driven at from 30 to 35 miles an hour at about midnight, and there was no evidence of any defect in the car, or that the lights and brakes were not working, or that the driver did not do all in his power to avoid running into the ditch. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1154, s. 96 A.L.R. 1488.

[14] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1154, s. 96 A.L.R. 1490.

Permitting a jury to find a driver reckless in passing other cars on a straight, smooth, graveled road at 40 to 45 miles an hour was held prejudicial. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1154, s. 96 A.L.R. 1490.

[15] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1156, s. 96 A.L.R. 1491.

A judgment for a guest was reversed, and judgment directed for the defendant, where the car's rear wheels skidded on the ice into a trailer attached to a poorly lighted truck, which the defendant was trying to pass at a cut under a railroad on a dark and stormy morning, snow and sleet having formed on his windshield, which was equipped only with a wiper that worked by hand. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1156, s. 96 A.L.R. 1491.

While there was considered to be a reasonable basis for the conclusion that the defendant knew the conditions which would probably confront him upon returning late at night over a road which took a sharp turn and upon which some patches of snow turned to ice in wet places, and where there was evidence that he drove at considerable

g. Passengers for Hire

§ 244. Generally.—A motor vehicle common carrier is liable to all the duties and obligations of any common carrier.[17] Thus, it is held that one who operates a sight-seeing automobile over regular routes in a city, which he invites the general public to patronize for hire, owes his patrons the duty of exercising, in the operation of the vehicle, the highest degree of care consistent with the proper transaction of the business.[18]

h. Trespassers

§ 245. Generally.—The doctrine that one owes a trespasser only the duty of refraining from inflicting wanton or wilful injury upon him[19] is applied to automobile cases. Liability does result where there is wilful or wanton conduct on the part of the operator.[20]

§ 246. Children.—The doctrine that one owes a trespasser only the duty of refraining from inflicting wanton or wilful injury upon him has been applied to automobile cases where children have been injured, as, for example, children playing about or upon automobiles.[1] The age of the minor is a factor to be considered. An intelligent boy about fifteen years of age who is accustomed to street traffic and who falls under a wheel and is injured while undertaking to board a passing motor truck moving at a speed of from 6 to 10 miles per hour is a conscious trespasser and responsible for his own negligence, unless the driver of the motorcar wilfully and wantonly failed to protect him after he had learned of his peril.[2] In the case of very young children the care required is increased.[3] speed over it without any chains, the trial court's finding in a guest's favor was held to reflect only a high degree of negligence, and not enough to warrant a recovery. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1156, s. 96 A.L.R. 1491.

[16] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1157, s. 96 A.L.R. 1491.

There was held to be no evidence of wilful and wanton misconduct or gross negligence where the defendant was apparently blinded by the glaring lights of another car in rounding a curve at between 20 and 25 miles an hour and could not make the turn. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1157, s. 96 A.L.R. 1491.

A ruling that a driver who was suddenly blinded by the sun when rounding a left curve on a slight upgrade at moderate speed and ran into an embankment at the left was not grossly negligent was upheld. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1157, s. 96 A.L.R. 1491.

[17] See generally Carriers [also 4 R. C. L. p. 521]; Motor Transportation Companies.

[18] Hinds v. Steere, 209 Mass. 442, 95 N. E. 844, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 658.

[19] See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[20] Iaconio v. D'Angelo, 104 N. J. L. 506, 142 A. 46, 58 A.L.R. 614.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 617.

To force anyone from a rapidly moving automobile is to subject him to hazards more or less serious; such an act, therefore, if the conditions are known, is malicious and wrongful. Iaconio v. D'Angelo, 104 N. J. L. 506, 142 A. 46, 58 A.L.R. 614.

[1] Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 1385.

A chauffeur who, on finding several children playing about and on his motor truck, ordered them to get off, looked around to see what they had done so, and, hearing the call that they were off, started up his car, whereupon a child who was on the left or far side of the car fell off and was injured, was held not wanting in reasonable care, unless he knew that the child was on the car, in which case he should have given her time to get off and should have waited until she did get off. Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 1386.

[2] Gamble v. Uncle Sam Oil Co. 100 Kan. 74, 163 P. 627, L.R.A.1917D, 875, wherein the evidence was held insufficient to sustain a finding that the driver of a motor truck who knew that a boy was clinging to the truck was chargeable with wilful and wanton neglect to protect him where the testimony failed to show that the driver knew that the boy had been unable to find support for his feet and was holding on entirely by his hands, and it did not appear that the driver knew that he was in danger or that, if he saw him, there were any signs of distress upon his face.

[3] Where the owner of an automobile, upon returning to his car, found an infant four and one-half years of age thereon, and twice drove the infant from the car, the owner was held not thereby absolved from further duty towards such infant. Under such circumstances, when the child still remained in close proximity to the car, the driver was required to exercise reasonable care to avoid injury to the child. Ziehm v. Vale, 98 Ohio St. 306, 120 N. E. 702, 1 A.L.R. 1381, wherein the operator of the car contended that he was not liable unless he actually knew that the child was on the run-

Here again, the fundamental rule that the negligence, to be actionable, must be the proximate cause of the injury applies.[4]

§ 247. —Attractive Nuisance Doctrine.—It is generally held that the attractive nuisance doctrine cannot be extended to include motor trucks passing through the streets, upon which children may be attracted to catch rides.[5] Thus, an electric delivery truck which the driver had left standing in the street with power off and brakes set while he carried some parcels to a house, and with which children had not previously been known to meddle, was held not to be an attractive nuisance so as to render the owner liable to a child who got into it and turned on the power, and was injured in getting off.[6] It has been held, however, that the principle of nonliability does not apply where the statical condition of the premises is made perilous by the active and negligent operation thereof by the owner.[7]

i. Persons on Running Board or Outside Body of Car

§ 248. Generally.—In determining the liability of the owner or operator of a car for injuries inflicted upon one riding on the running board or other place outside of the body of the car, it is of importance to determine whether the person injured was a trespasser or a guest, and to determine whether or not the driver of the motor vehicle had knowledge of the presence of such person. A person permitted to ride on the running board is not a mere trespasser;[8] the duty rests on the driver not to expose him to danger of injury.[9]

---

ning board of the car at the time he started it or while he was running it forward. He took the position that after driving the child away from the car, there devolved no further duty upon him, and that no obligation rested upon him to see that the child remained away. But both the trial court and the supreme court refused to apply the principle of nonliability as requested and imposed upon the operator of the car the obligation to use ordinary care if the circumstances would apprise him, as an ordinarily prudent man, that a child of four and a half years, under childish impulses, would renew his attempt to get upon the running board of the automobile.

[4] The proximate cause of injury to a child by the starting, by other children, of an electric delivery wagon left momentarily standing in the street by the driver when entering a house to deliver packages, without removing the switch, is the act of such children, and not the failure to remove the switch. Jackson v. Mills Baking Co. 221 Mich. 64, 190 N. W. 740, 26 A.L.R. 906.

[5] Gamble v. Uncle Sam Oil Co. 100 Kan. 74, 163 P. 627, L.R.A.1917D, 875.

In Gamble v. Uncle Sam Oil Co. 100 Kan. 74, 163 P. 627, L.R.A.1917D, 875, which was an action brought by a boy to recover for injuries sustained while trying to board a moving motor truck, the court refused to apply the attractive nuisance doctrine and held that an ordinary motor truck moving along a public street could not be regarded as an attractive or alluring vehicle to an intelligent boy about fifteen years of age who is accustomed to the traffic of the street.

It is not actionable negligence for the driver of an auto truck standing at the curb of a city street to call "Hey, there," as a warning to children congregated about such truck for the purpose of procuring pieces of ice which had dropped therefrom into the street, where, in addition to such act of claimed negligence, it is averred that as a result of such warning and similar warnings on previous occasions, the plaintiff, a child five years of age, and other children with her near the truck, were put in fear of the driver, and upon his approach would run away from the truck, although upon the occasion in question the plaintiff, in crossing the street toward her home, was struck by a passing automobile. The doctrine of attractive nuisance has no application under the facts here presented. Baker-Evans Ice Cream Co. v. Tedesco, 114 Ohio St. 170, 150 N. E. 745, 44 A.L.R. 430.

[6] Jackson v. Mills Baking Co. 221 Mich. 64, 190 N. W. 740, 26 A.L.R. 906.

The attractive nuisance doctrine is one upon which there has been a remarkable diversity of opinion, not only as to whether the doctrine should be recognized or not, but also, in jurisdictions where it has been accepted, as to the conditions under which it is applicable. See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 79, §§ 70 et seq.].

[7] Ziehm v. Vale, 98 Ohio St. 306, 120 N. E. 702, 1 A.L.R. 1381.

[8] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 554.

A traffic ordinance making it unlawful for any person to be upon the running board of a motor vehicle while such vehicle is in motion may be violated by riding on the running board of a truck while in a private driveway used by the public with the consent and invitation of the owner for the purpose of delivering goods on the premises. Crossler v. Safeway Stores, 51 Idaho, 413, 6 P. (2d) 151, 80 A.L.R. 463.

Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 469.

[9] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 554.

Where the car is driven by an employee of the owner, who, acting without the scope of his employment, permits another to ride on the car, the employee is not liable for an injury resulting to such person when he is dismounting.[10]

As is true of many questions of negligence, the existence of negligence in this situation is for the determination of the jury.[11]

j. Persons Coasting in Street

§ 249. Generally.—It is generally held that the fact that a person who was injured while coasting was pursuing this sport on a public street will not necessarily preclude a recovery if he was not guilty of contributory negligence, and if negligence by another, causing the injury, is shown.[12] It is held that where the driver of a motor vehicle is aware of the presence of children coasting on a hill, he is bound to exercise unusual care and watchfulness.[13] The questions of negligence and contributory negligence were held for the jury, where the plaintiff's sled was traveling slowly on the proper side of the street and was run into at night by the defendant's automobile, which he turned on the wrong side, as he testified, to avoid objects on the road which he took for pedestrians.[14]

E. Measure of Care Required as to Particular Matters

1. In General

§ 250. Generally.—The question of negligence is often dependent upon care with reference to particular matters such as the equipment of the automobile, the speed at which it was driven, etc. In the present subdivision such matters will be considered.

2. Equipment

§ 251. Generally.[15]—While the owner of a motor vehicle does not, at common law, owe an absolute duty to other users of the highway that his vehicle shall be in a safe and proper condition,[16] he is bound to use reasonable care to see that his vehicle is in such condition, and is generally held liable for an injury which is shown to have resulted from the failure to do so.[17]

Statutes frequently regulate the condition of the equipment of motor vehicles with a view to avoiding danger to persons in the car or on the highway; in other words, they require safe equipment.[18] The defective equipment, however, must be the proximate cause of the injury in order that liability shall arise.[19]

---

[10] Zampella v. Fitzhenry, 97 N. J. L. 517, 117 A. 711, 24 A.L.R. 666.
Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 554.

[11] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 557.

[12] Terrill v. Virginia Brewing Co. 130 Minn. 46, 153 N. W. 136, L.R.A.1915E, 1028, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 453; Lynch v. Public Serv. Corp. 82 N. J. L. 712, 83 A. 382, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 865.
Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1433.

[13] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1435.

[14] Idell v. Day, 273 Pa. 34, 116 A. 506, 20 A.L.R. 1429.

[15] The effect of defective equipment upon the liability to a guest is discussed in other sections. See supra, §§ 235, 243.

[16] Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co. [1923] 1 K. B. 539, 12 B. R. C. 418—Div. Ct. affirmed in [1923] 2 K. B. 832, 12 B. R. C. 437, note,—C. A.
Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1218.

In Halverson v. Blosser, 101 Kan. 683, 168 P. 863, L.R.A.1918B, 498, where the defendant loaned his automobile, which had a broken muffler, it was held that he was not liable for an injury sustained when a horse became frightened at the noise of the car while the borrower was using it and overturned the surrey in which the plaintiff's wife was riding.

[17] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1218.

[18] Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co. [1923] 1 K. B. 539, 12 B. R. C. 418—Div. Ct. affirmed in [1923] 2 K. B. 832, 12 B. R. C. 437.

[19] The absence of a reflective signal required by statute to be on the rear of a motor truck is not the proximate cause of a

§ 252. Defective Brakes.[20]—The fact that the brakes of an automobile are defective undoubtedly is a material element in the determination of the question of negligence in a case involving a collision with or by such machine, at least, where the driver knew, or should, by the exercise of proper care, have known, of the defect.[1]

Statutes in some states make provisions requiring good and sufficient brakes on automobiles. Failure to comply with such provisions generally renders the owners liable for injuries or damages resulting, where the inadequacy of the brakes is the proximate cause.[2] It is otherwise where the defective brakes are not the proximate cause of the injury.[3] There is little authority dealing with the sufficiency of compliance with provisions regulating brakes.[3a]

Liability, in cases where liability exists, is, of course, based upon the driver's negligence in operating a car with defective brakes.[4] The fact that the driver was acting in an emergency is no excuse for negligence where the injury could have been avoided had the brakes been in good condition.[5]

On the other hand, the mere failure of brakes to function properly is collision of an automobile with the truck on a dark and foggy evening while it was standing on the paved portion of the highway, where the distance at which such signal would have been visible was less than that required to bring the automobile to a stop. Walker v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. 214 Wis. 519, 252 N. W. 721, 92 A.L.R. 680.

---

[20] As to liability of manufacturer or seller, see infra, § 350.

[1] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1339, s. 63 A.L.R. 398.

The court observed in Davis v. Hareford 156 Ark. 67, 245 S. W. 833 (certiorari denied in 262 U. S. 745, 67 L. ed. 1211, 43 S. Ct. 521, writ of error dismissed in 265 U. S. 571, 68 L. ed. 1184, 44 S. Ct. 458), an action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from a collision between a train and the automobile in which plaintiff was riding, that evidence that the emergency brake on the automobile was defective would tend to show that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in using the car in that condition.

The proximate cause of an injury in a collision at a railroad crossing was held to be the striking of the automobile by the train, and not a defective emergency brake on the automobile, in Davis v. Hareford, 156 Ark. 67, 245 S. W. 833 (certiorari denied in 262 U. S. 745, 67 L. ed. 211, 43 S. Ct. 521, writ of error dismissed in 265 U. S. 571, 68 L. ed. 1184, 44 S. Ct. 458).

[2] Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194; Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676.

Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 399; 12 B. R. C. 442.

The driver of an automobile on which the brakes are defective is negligent in approaching a road intersection where a car is stalled in the middle of the street, with a blind corner at his right, without slackening his speed or having his car under control, so as to be liable for injury caused by collision with the stalled car, which becomes necessary by the emergence of another machine from the intersecting street. Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194.

[3] The manner of driving an automobile, and not the defective condition of its brakes, is, as a matter of law, the proximate cause of injury to a pedestrian, where the automobile was being driven at a speed of about 30 miles an hour, in violation of a city ordinance, and the driver, finding, on applying the brakes with a view to keeping out of the way of an approaching street car, that he could not stop before reaching the street car track, stepped on the gas, crossed the track ahead of the street car, and ran over the curb on to the parking against a fire hydrant, which broke off and was thrown against the pedestrian. Eklof v. Waterston, 132 Or. 479, 285 P. 201, 68 A.L.R. 1002.

[3a] Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 296.

A motor vehicle having two brakes, a handbrake and a footbrake operating on the same brake drum on the rear wheel, has been held to have two independent brakes within the meaning of a statute requiring two independent brakes in good working order and of such efficiency that the application of either to the motor car shall cause two of its wheels on the same axle to be so held that the wheels shall be effectually prevented from revolving. Bowen v. Wilson [1927] 1 K. B. 507, 16 B. R. C. 290.

[4] Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194, wherein it was held that the driver of an automobile on which the brakes were defective was negligent in approaching a road intersection where a car was stalled in the middle of the street, with a blind corner at his right, without slackening his speed or having his car under control, so as to be liable for an injury caused by a collision with the stalled car, which became necessary by the appearance of another machine from the intersecting street.

[5] Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676.

It has been said that one who operates on the streets of a city such a dangerous instrumentality as an automobile is bound to take notice that he may be called upon to make emergency stops, and that it is negligence on his part not to keep the automobile in such condition that such stops are possible. Ibid.

not conclusive of the driver's negligence. It seems that where the brakes on an automobile have previously functioned properly, but suddenly fail to respond, their failure does not render the owner guilty of negligence or contributory negligence, unless he had knowledge of the defective condition.[6] Nor is driving on a public highway an automobile with defective brakes, contrary to the provisions of the statute, negligence per se which will render the driver absolutely liable for resulting injuries, regardless of circumstances.[7]

§ 253. Defective Lights. — It is practically a universal requirement that automobiles traveling on the streets and highways at night shall be equipped with lights.[8] Failure to comply with the statute in this regard is negligence,[9] or evidence of negligence, according to the view which prevails in the jurisdiction generally.[10]

§ 254. Defective Wheels, Axles, or Tires.—Accidents are frequently caused by defects in wheels, axles, or tires.[11] General provisions against the operation of defective motor cars and all the appliances or fittings thereof would seem to apply to wheels, axles, and tires, thereby making the owner or driver of the motor vehicle liable for damages caused because of such a defect.[12] But, as in the case of brakes,[13] defects in such parts are not conclusive of the driver's negligence unless he knew of such defects or was negligent in that respect,[14]—that is, in order to hold the owner liable, there must be proof of negligence.[15] For instance, the owner of a motor vehicle is not, on this ground, liable for damages caused when the wheel of his motor vehicle, which had recently been overhauled by a competent firm, came off, owing to a latent defect in an axle of which the owner had no knowledge.[16] And the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is inapplicable in an action based on the reckless operation of an automobile which overturned, injuring its occupants, where, after the accident, a front tire was found to have blown out.[17]

---

[6] Puhr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 171 Wis. 154, 176 N. W. 767, 14 A.L.R. 1334.

Annotation: 12 B. R. C. 444.

For example, it was decided that if one, knowing of an approaching train drove his automobile toward a railroad crossing with the intention of stopping to let the train pass, he would not be guilty of any negligence if, upon making a reasonable effort to stop, he discovered too late that his brakes failed to work, so that the machine went upon the track in front of the train, but that if the driver had prior knowledge of the imperfect condition of the stopping mechanism of his car, it was his duty to approach the track cautiously, and at a rate of speed that would enable him to bring the car to a stop in its condition at that time, as known to him, before reaching the zone of danger, and that if, with knowledge of such defective condition, he failed to approach the track with that degree of caution, he was guilty of more than a slight want of ordinary care. Puhr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 171 Wis. 154, 176 N. W. 767, 14 A.L.R. 1334.

In Plasikowski v. Arbus, 92 Conn. 556, 103 A. 642, L.R.A.1918E, 415, it was held that the failure of an automobile owner to warn his experienced chauffeur that the brakes were in a defective condition did not render him liable for the expense to the chauffeur of defending himself against the charge of reckless driving and assault and battery in colliding with a pedestrian, after he had operated the machine through various parts of the state.

[7] Landry v. Hubert, 101 Vt. 111, 141 A. 593, 63 A.L.R. 396.

The jury must determine whether or not one discovering that the brakes of a borrowed automobile, which he had taken upon a public highway, were not working properly, was negligent in continuing to use the car, so as to be liable for a resulting accident, where the statute makes it negligence to have such a car upon the public highway, whether in motion or at rest. Ibid.

[8] See supra, §§ 25 et seq.

The operator must adopt proper lights. Gallagher v. Montpelier & Wells River R. Co. 100 Vt. 299, 137 A. 207, 52 A.L.R. 744.

[9] Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Dillon, 31 Del. 247, 114 A. 62, 15 A.L.R. 894.

[10] See supra, § 163.

[11] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1218; 12 B. R. C. 441.

[12] A carrier of passengers for hire may be held liable for an injury to a passenger which results from a failure to see to it that the tires on its vehicles are in proper condition.

Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1218.

[13] See supra, § 252.

[14] Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co. [1923] 1 K. B. 539, 12 B. R. C. 418—Div. Ct., affirmed in [1923] 2 K. B. 832, 12 B. R. C. 437, note—C. A.

[15] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1218.

An action for injury to a passenger in an automobile through the overturning of the car cannot be submitted to the jury where there is nothing to show whether the accident was caused by negligent driving or the blowing out of a tire. Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

§ 255. Defective Steering Gear.—It would seem that an automobile, the steering gear of which is in such an imperfect condition that the driver is likely to lose control of the steering, is a thing which, on a highway is necessarily dangerous to persons using the highway, and that to cause such a vehicle to be driven on a highway amounts to negligence.[18]

§ 256. Use of Trailers.—The increasing use of trailers has necessitated the enactment of legislation in many states regulating the use of such vehicles upon the streets and highways.[19] It must be equipped with the necessary brakes.[19a] Apart from such legislation, one using vehicle trailers on the public highways is required to exercise reasonable care, both as to their equipment and as to the operation of the vehicles to which they are attached.[20]

In the operation of cars with trailers the operator is required to observe all of the rules as to lights or warning signals,[21] as to keeping a lookout,[22] regulations as to speed,[23] and the rules of the road.[24]

§ 257. —Defective Trailer Fastenings.—Accidents may be caused by defective trailer fastenings. Where a car, having a trailer in the form of a wagon behind it, is operated with defective fastenings, the owner is liable for the loss and injury thereby inflicted.[1] Some statutes require certain safety devices in connection with the use of trailers, and such requirements must be complied with. For failure so to comply, a liability arises for resulting damages.[2]

---

[16] Phillips v. Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co. [1923] 1 K. B. 539, 12 B. R. C. 418—Div. Ct., affirmed in [1923] 2 K. B. 832, 12 B. R. C. 437, note—C. A.

[17] Giddings v. Honan, 114 Conn. 473, 159 A 271, 79 A.L.R. 1215.

The court will not take judicial notice of the fact that a blowout of the front tire of a Ford automobile running at 15 miles per hour cannot cause the car to leave a perfectly smooth highway and plunge into the ditch at the side of the road. Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

[18] Annotation: 12 B. R. C. 451.

[19] Annotation: 3 A.L.R. 618, s. 84 A.L.R. 281.

[19a] Annotation: 15 B. R. C. 528.

A requirement that a vehicle drawn by a motor car should have a brake attached thereto and carry thereon a person competent to apply it efficiently, but that it should not be necessary to comply with the above requirement if the brake of the vehicle drawn could be applied from the motor car by a person upon the latter independently of the brakes of the motor car, was held to be contravened where a motor vehicle had two brakes which could be operated simultaneously by the driver without losing control of the steering wheel and the trailer attached was fitted with a brake which could be operated by the driver of the motor vehicle independently of the brakes of the latter and he could, without leaving hold of the steering wheel, apply simultaneously the handbrake of the trailer and the footbrake of the motor vehicle, but could not simultaneously apply the handbrake of the latter vehicle and the handbrake of the trailer without losing control of the steering wheel. Robinsons v. Richards, [1928] 2 K. B. 234, 15 B. R. C. 519.

[20] Annotation: 3 A.L.R. 618, s. 84 A.L.R. 281.

As to defective trailer fastenings, see infra, § 257.

[21] Annotation: 84 A.L.R. 284.

It has been held that although a statute requiring a red flag or other signal to be displayed in case of vehicles being towed, did not specifically provide that a light or signal should be used where a pipe connected two vehicles, such light is demanded by the general rules of law, and where the trailer is attached to the car by several pipes, a light should have been placed on them or used in such a manner that they might have been visible to those traveling on the street. Annotation: 84 A.L.R. 285.

[22] Annotation: 84 A.L.R. 285.

In passing children it has been held that the jury is authorized to find that ordinary care requires the driver to keep his eyes on the children and not to rush by them with his truck and wabbling trailer without paying any attention to how near they might be to the roadway. Annotation: 84 A.L.R. 285.

[23] Annotation: 84 A.L.R. 286.

[24] Annotation: 84 A.L.R. 286.

[1] In Lambert v. American Box Co. 144 La. 604, 81 So. 95, 3 A.L.R. 612, it was held gross negligence for the chauffeur of a motor truck having a trailer in the form of a wagon behind it to drive the tandem through a much-frequented thoroughfare in a populous city for 250 or 300 feet at a fairly high speed, after one of the two attachments connecting the trailer at its front axle tree with the truck had parted,

In view of the fact that trailers are coming into common use, and that such use will undoubtedly give rise to considerable litigation, this point is of particular value. The question as to what constitutes negligence in using these vehicles is affected by considerations not incident to the use of ordinary vehicles, such, for example, as the additional allowance which must be made in turning the two vehicles, the duty to look behind as well as ahead, the duty to see that the couplings between the vehicles are sufficient and in good condition, and, possibly, under certain conditions, the duty to have a person on the trailer for the purpose of warning other travelers, watching the load, fastenings, lights, etc.[3]

§ 258. Size or Weight of Automobile.—It is the present tendency to increase the size and weight of motor vehicles used on the highways. The size and weight of such vehicles are important factors in determining questions of negligence and contributory negligence in cases arising from collisions. Drivers of these vehicles have knowledge of their width and length, and clearly owe other travelers on the highway the duty to take these elements into consideration in the operation of their vehicles. The fact that vehicles are of a greater size or weight than the average gives them no additional rights on the highways. Every traveler is required to exercise ordinary care in the operation of his vehicle, in view of all the circumstances.[4]

3. Speed

§ 259. Generally.[5]—The question whether speed constitutes negligence is one which arises frequently in the cases. Speed itself, however, is very rarely urged as negligence, apart from the circumstances of the particular case. The reader will, therefore, find speed discussed in connection with many situations.[6]

At common law there is no precise limit of speed. A driver must exercise ordinary care and drive his car at a reasonable rate of speed,[8] and what and the trailer, for several hundred feet, had zigzagged across the roadway, at times scraping the curb, until finally it mounted the banquette, and one after another, broke and knocked down three cast-iron posts, set near the curb, which supported a gallery that extended across the banquette from the house, and the owner of the truck and trailer was held liable for the loss and injury thereby inflicted upon the owner of the gallery. Annotation: 3 A.L.R. 618, s. 84 A.L.R. 281; 12 B. R. C. 453.

---

[2] Steele v. Commercial Mill. Co. (C. C. A. 6th) 50 F. (2d) 1037, 84 A.L.R. 278.

Annotation: 3 A.L.R. 618, s. 84 A.L.R. 283.

A penal statute fixing a stated minimum deflection of trailer wheels from the tracks of a truck, and providing for suitable safety chains or devices of sufficient strength to haul the trailer when loaded, was intended for the protection of travelers on the highway and constituted a basis for an action by one who was standing on a grass plat between the curb and the sidewalk, and who was injured as a result of a failure to comply with this statute. Steele v. Commercial Mill. Co. (C. C. A. 6th) 50 F. (2d) 1037, 84 A.L.R. 278.

[3] Annotation: 3 A.L.R. 618, s. 84 A.L.R. 281.

[4] Annotation: 85 A.L.R. 1173.

The driver of a truck having an overhanging rack about 7 feet wide owed a special duty, in approaching a narrow bridge, on a foggy night, to the driver of a car approaching the bridge from the opposite direction. Baldwin v. Bell [1933] (Can.) S. C. R. 1, 85 A.L.R. 1166, [1933] 1 D. L. R. 232.

[5] As to speed as preventing recovery under Workmen's Compensation Acts, see Workmen's Compensation [Also 28 R. C. L. p. 709].

As to violation of speed laws in criminal prosecutions, see § 806, infra.

As to exemption from speed regulations, see § 40, supra.

As to speed on curves and hills, see § 342, infra.

[6] See, for example, §§ 311 et seq.

[8] Annotation: 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1132; 5 L.R.A.(N.S) 254.

A traveler by automobile must adopt a is a reasonable rate of speed is dependent upon the circumstances of the case. An excessive speed may, under certain circumstances, constitute negligence at common law.[9] Some circumstances may require a very slow speed if the charge of negligence is to be avoided.[10] Another fundamental rule is that in order to impose liability, the speed must have been the proximate cause of the injury. Excessive speed cannot be said necessarily to have contributed to a collision between an automobile traveling at such speed on its proper side of the highway and a car proceeding in the opposite direction not on its proper side.[11] Similarly, even though the speeding car is on the wrong side of the road the speed is not necessarily the proximate cause of a collision with another car on its right side of the road.[12] In the latter situation, however, there are numerous cases in which driving at an unlawful or excessive speed on the wrong side of the street or road has been held to have proximately caused an accident or injury.[13]

Driving an automobile at a greatly excessive rate of speed in violation of the statutes may constitute an act so wanton and reckless as to evince an utter disregard for the safety of others, and necessarily to imply an intent to injure, so as to constitute gross negligence.[14]

§ 260. Statutory Regulation.—Regulation of speed is now quite generally effected by statute or ordinance. Some statutes and ordinances do not go beyond the common-law rule, but provide merely that the speed must not be one which endangers property or the life or limb of any person, and must not exceed such rate as may be reasonable and proper under the particular circumstances, having regard to the width of the road and the amount of traffic.[15] Some such statutes provide that a speed exceeding a certain limit shall be prima facie evidence of a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and prop-proper speed. Gallagher v. Montpelier & Wells River R. Co. 100 Vt. 299, 137 A. 207, 52 A.L.R. 744.

---

A chauffeur is negligent in taking his hands from the steering gear to adjust his hat while the car is running 30 miles an hour, although the road is level, smooth, and straight. O'Bierne v. Stafford, 87 Conn. 354, 87 A. 743, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1183.

In Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co. 180 Cal. 32, 179 P. 203, 15 A.L.R. 401, it was held that one driving a motorcycle at a speed of 15 miles an hour upon a wet and slippery pavement, at a point where the street was crowded with pedestrians and vehicles, may be found to have been negligent where, when he attempted to stop in order to avoid striking a pedestrian, the machine skidded and injured the pedestrian and threw the rider over the handle bars.

[9] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087; Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 77 S. W. 196, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249; Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507; Robertson v. Monongahela Power & R. Co. 99 W. Va. 356, 128 S. E. 829, citing R. C. L.

Annotation: 84 A.L.R. 286; 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41; 108 Am. St. Rep. 215.

The driver of an automobile approaching from the rear a car standing on the roadside may be found negligent upon evidence that he did not apply his brakes, traveled 68 feet after striking an occupant of the car, who was attempting to cross the road, turned a right angle, and tore up the turf of the adjoining yard over a space 2½ feet in circumference. Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507.

One may be found guilty of driving an automobile at a speed greater than is reasonable and prudent, who, on a much traveled highway, drives at 43 miles an hour around a curve and into a hollow, the condition of which cannot be seen until the edge of it is reached. Gallaher v. State, 193 Ind. 629, 141 N. E. 347, 29 A.L.R. 1059.

[10] Lambert v. Eastern Massachusetts Street R. Co. 240 Mass. 495, 134 N. E. 340, 22 A.L.R. 1291.

Twelve miles per hour may be found to be an unreasonable speed at which to drive an automobile on wet and slippery tarvia-surfaced highways. Ibid.

[11] O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 601.

[12] Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 599.

[13] Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 603.

As to whether death resulting from an injury, when there is an intervening cause, is the proximate result of the injury, see NEGLIGENCE [Also PROXIMATE CAUSE, 22 R. C. L. p. 106].

[14] Clemens v. State, 176 Wis. 289, 185 N. W. 209, 21 A.L.R. 1490.

[15] Annotation: 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41; 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488.

er. And it is sometimes required that the specified rate of speed, to have this effect, must be maintained for a certain distance. Other statutes fix a precise limit and prohibit driving above such limit.

§ 261. Driving within Speed Limits.—Driving within the limits fixed by a speed law is not conclusively the exercise of due care, especially under a statute which connects the rate with the requirement that the speed must be reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic and use of the highway.[16] The common-law duty to exercise ordinary care is still existent, and failure to comply therewith results in liability for injuries.[17]

§ 262. Driving in Excess of Speed Limits.—The effect of exceeding the speed limit fixed by statute or ordinance is different in different jurisdictions.[18] According to one line of authorities, the violation of a statute or ordinance is negligence as a matter of law or negligence per se.[19] In other jurisdictions the violation of the speed regulation is merely prima facie evidence of negligence,[20] or at least some evidence of negligence[1] and is sufficient to take the case to the jury.[2] Some statutes merely declare that a speed exceeding a certain fixed limit shall be prima facie evidence of a speed greater than is reasonable and proper, at least where it is maintained for a certain distance.

Excessive speed cannot be invoked by persons other than those for whose benefit the speed limit was fixed.[3]

§ 263. Ability to Stop within Range of Lights.—It is asserted as a general rule of law that it is negligence as a matter of law to drive an automobile at such a rate of speed that it cannot be stopped in time to avoid an obstruction discernible within the driver's length of vision ahead of him.[4] A statute re-

---

[16] Snyder v. Campbell, 145 Miss. 287, 110 So. 678, 49 A.L.R. 1402.

To drive a motor vehicle on the streets of a city at a rate of speed of 15 miles per hour may, under some conditions of weather and traffic, be negligent. Ibid.

[17] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487.

[18] As to violation of a statute or ordinance as negligence generally, see infra, § 163.

Violation of a statute fixing under penalty a speed limit for automobiles on a highway does not deprive one of the defense of contributory negligence on the part of one injured by collision with the automobile, unless his conduct is such under all the circumstances as to amount to gross negligence. Ludke v. Burck, L.R.A.1915D, 968, 160 Wis. 440, 152 N. W. 190.

[19] Hubbard v. Bartholomew, 163 Iowa, 58, 144 N. W. 13, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 443 (statute); Schell v. Du Bois, 94 Ohio St. 93, 113 N. E. 664, L.R.A.1917A, 710.

Annotation: 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40; 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, s. 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1180, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 993; L.R.A. 1915E, 540.

Driving an automobile at a greatly excessive rate of speed in violation of the statutes may constitute an act so wanton and reckless as to evince an utter disregard for the safety of others and necessarily to imply an intent to injure, so as to constitute gross negligence. Clemens v. State, 176 Wis. 289, 185 N. W. 209, 21 A.L.R. 1490.

Where the prohibited speed was combined with other violations of law, the owner of the car was held liable for injuries. Elmendorf v. Clark, 143 La. 971, 79 So. 557, L.R.A.1918F, 802.

[20] Annotation: 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40; 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, s. 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1180, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 993.

[1] Annotation: 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255.

[2] Loveless v. Red Top Cab Co. 158 Wash. 474, 291 P. 344, 79 A.L.R. 347.

[3] A person operating a motorcycle along a public highway at a rate of speed greatly in excess of the speed limit is not liable for injuries received by a person in a field adjacent to the highway whose team, attached to a binder, became frightened at the noise of the exhaust on the motorcycle and ran away. Walker v. Faelber, 102 Kan. 646, 171 P. 605, L.R.A.1918D, 569.

[4] Hart v. Stence, 219 Iowa, 55, 257 N. W. 434, 97 A.L.R. 535; Lindquist v. Thierman, 216 Iowa, 170, 248 N. W. 504, 87 A.L.R. 893; Fisher v. O'Brien, 99 Kan. 621, 162 P. 317, L.R.A.1917F, 610; Ruth v. Vroom, 245 Mich. 88, 222 N. W. 155, 62 A.L.R. 1528; Hanser v. Clyde, — Utah, —, 56 P. (2d) 1366, 104 A.L.R. 943; Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30.

Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1403, s. 58 A.L.R. 1493, 87 A.L.R. 900 and 97 A.L.R. 546.

This rule applies in a variety of situations.

One who drives his automobile on a dark, rainy night over a straight stretch of country road at such speed that he is unable to stop within a distance in which he may quiring an automobile to be so driven as to permit it to be brought to a stop "within the assured clear distance ahead" makes it incumbent, at night as well as in the daytime, to be able at all times to stop within the distance that discernible objects may be seen ahead, even though such objects are without lights.[5] The fact that an automobile driver had dimmed his lights, in accordance with a state statute, when he passed other cars coming from the opposite direction just before he collided with a herd of cattle does not relieve him of his duty to have his car under such control that he could stop or avoid an obstruction or any traffic on the highway with the range of the light produced by the lamps on his automobile.[6]

Without denying that in many situations and under many conditions a driver of an automobile is as a matter of law guilty of negligence in driving at such a rate of speed as prevents stopping within time to avoid an obstruction within the range of his vision, there is a strong tendency in the recent cases to refuse to adopt that as a universal formula or a hard and fast rule.[7] Thus, it has been held to have no application in case of emergencies creating unexpected hazards.[8] The rule does not apply to a case where an object or obstruction which the driver has no reason to expect appears suddenly immediately in front of his automobile and, where a canal suddenly appears at the end of a road, to pass over which it is necessary at that point to turn to the left and again to the right, since the driver is not liable for negligence to one riding clearly see an obstacle in the path is negligent. Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30.

---

Where an automobile driver whose lights had gone out hung a lantern from the radiator, it was held that independently of statute, he was guilty of negligence as a matter of law in driving along the highway on a dark night at such a speed that the car could not be stopped within the distance in which objects could be seen ahead of it. Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1404.

One who, while driving at late dusk upon a straight, level highway at a speed in excess of 40 miles per hour, collided with an unlighted truck parked partly on and partly off the pavement, which he failed to see until close to it in consequence of being momentarily blinded by the lights of a car coming from the other direction, must be regarded as guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where a statute provides that no person shall drive any vehicle upon a highway at a speed greater than will permit him to bring it to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead. Hart v. Stence, 219 Iowa, 55, 257 N. W. 434, 97 A.L.R. 535.

[5] Lindquist v. Thierman, 216 Iowa, 170, 248 N. W. 504, 87 A.L.R. 893.

Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1403, s. 58 A.L.R. 1493, 87 A.L.R. 900 and 97 A.L.R. 546.

[6] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1403, s. 58 A.L.R. 1493, 87 A.L.R. 900, and 97 A.L.R. 546.

[7] Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

In Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582, where one collided with a truck left standing in the roadway without a tail light, when he was driving his car at 12 miles per hour, with blinding rain rendering vision impossible at a distance of more than 20 feet, it was urged that the facts did not show that the plaintiff had used due care, in that he drove his car at such a rate of speed that he could not bring his car to a stop within the distance in which he could easily see objects or obstructions ahead of him; but the court held that the trial court properly rejected the defendant's standard and rightly applied the standard of care to be expected from a reasonably prudent person, which was a question of fact for the trial court.

In Tresise v. Ashdown, 118 Ohio St. 307, 160 N. E. 898, 58 A.L.R. 1476, it was held that an instruction that the operation of a motor vehicle at such a rate of speed that the driver could not stop within the distance in which an obstruction in the highway could be seen by his own headlights constituted negligence per se was erroneous, and that each case must be considered by the jury in the light of its facts and circumstances and the usual tests applied to determine whether there was a failure to exercise ordinary care in the operation of such motor vehicle.

In Morehouse v. Everett, 141 Wash. 399, 252 P. 157, 58 A.L.R. 1482, the court held that a rule requiring one driving an automobile at night, under all circumstances, to see any object in the road in front of him which came within the radius of his lights, and be able, under all circumstances, to stop his car before striking the object, was entirely too broad and, if put into effect, would have very serious and unjust results. The court said that it believed that generally speaking, where the statutes or decisions of the courts required red lights as a warning of danger on any object in the highway and such lights were not present, it was a question for the jury to determine whether the driver at night should have seen the obstruction notwithstanding the absence of red lights.

[8] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1403, s. 58 A.L.R. 1493, 87 A.L.R. 900, and 97 A.L.R. 546.

with him in not having his car under such control as to enable him to avoid going into the canal at the end of the road.[9]

F. MEASURE OF CARE REQUIRED IN PARTICULAR SITUATIONS

1. IN GENERAL

§ 264. Generally.—It is a well-established principle of law that in the absence of statutory requirements, the operator of a motor vehicle must exercise ordinary, reasonable, or due care—namely, that degree of care and caution which an ordinarily careful and prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Obviously, the care required of a motorist is controlled by, and depends upon, the place, circumstances, and surroundings. There is no arbitrary or fixed rule.

§ 265. Injuries to Animals on Highway.—A motorist is under a duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring animals on the highways.[10] If he is driving carefully and at a reasonable rate of speed, and the injury is caused solely by the animal suddenly and unexpectedly turning from its course and crossing the road in front of the car, and immediately as soon as the animal turns from its course, he uses all the means in his power to stop and keep from striking the animal, the driver is not liable.[11]

§ 266. Frightening Horses.[12]—The early cases dealing with the duty of the operators of automobiles toward horses on the highway required of the operator more care than is required in the modern cases. Due to the strangeness of motor vehicles upon the highway, it was the duty of the operator, apart from any provisions of statute, to take such steps as to horses on the highway as ordinary prudence might suggest, including slowing up, or even stopping, the automobile. This is also true under the more recent cases, although, due to the fact that horses are now accustomed to automobiles and are less frequently frightened by them, the operator is not required to take all the precautions that were required by the early cases.[13] That it is the duty to stop is especially true when the driver receives a signal[14] or when the horse shows signs of fright.[15] If the operator has no opportunity to stop his car before the horse is frightened or shows signs of fright, there is no liability.[16]

Various early statutes require stopping upon signal[17] and in some cases require the driver to go to the side of the road as far as practicable and remain stationary until the horse has passed.[18] Some of these statutes require this action irrespective of any signal by the person in charge of such horses.[19] Where a statute so provides, it is the duty of the driver of an automobile to stop it when a horse becomes frightened or shows that it is about to become frightened by the approach of the motor vehicle.[20] Failure to stop or otherwise comply with these statutes is regarded as negligence.[1] Where the statute requires the driver merely to stop the automobile, there is no statutory duty to stop the engine also.[2]

---

[9] Jacobs v. Jacobs, 141 La. 272, 74 So. 992, L.R.A.1917F, 253.

Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1403, s. 58 A.L.R. 1493, 87 A.L.R. 900, and 97 A.L.R. 546.

[10] Bombard v. Newton, 94 Vt. 354, 111 A. 510, 11 A.L.R. 1402.

Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1405.

The right to drive an automobile along a public highway is not superior to that to drive cows along the highway. Bombard v. Newton, 94 Vt. 354, 111 A. 510, 11 A.L.R. 1402.

[11] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1406.

[12] As to frightening by noise, see infra, § 267.

[13] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487; McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087; Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Yeiser, 141 Ky. 15, 131 S. E. 1049, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1137; Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 77 S. W. 196, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249; Navailles v. Dielmann, 124 La. 421, 50 So. 449, 134 Am. St. Rep. 508; State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 102 S. W. 483, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725; Tudor v. Bowen, 152 N. C. 441, 67 S. E. 1015, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 804, 136 Am. St. Rep. 836, 21 Ann. Cas. 646; Messer v. Bruening, 25 N. D. 599, 142 N. W. 158, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 945; Pease v. Cochran, 42 S. D. 130, 173 N. W. 158, 5 A.L.R. 936.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 226; 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130; 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 253; 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 946; 108 Am. St. Rep. 215; 11 Ann. Cas. 728; 21 Ann. Cas. 649.

[14] Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289.

Annotation: 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 946.

[15] Pease v. Cochran, 42 S. D. 130, 173 N. W. 158, 5 A.L.R. 936.

[16] Ibid.

[17] Under statutes requiring a signal, it

Where a statute authorizes the operator of an automobile, in the absence of any signal, to pass a vehicle drawn by a horse at the rate of 8 miles an hour without stopping, it is nevertheless the duty of the driver of the machine to use reasonable care to adopt some other and safer method of proceeding if it is apparent that literal compliance with the statute would precipitate a collision.[3] Apart from the provisions of any statute, it is not necessarily negligence for a steam automobile, differing in construction from ordinary motor vehicles in having a smokestack which emits a certain amount of smoke and steam, to approach a horse at a moderate pace, and the owner of the horse is not, in the absence of negligence, entitled to recover for damages occasioned by the horse running away in fright.[4]

The operation upon the highway of a motorcar loaded in such a manner that a horse drawing a buggy on the highway becomes frightened at it is not actionable negligence; there must be something about the appearance of the car or the manner in which it is loaded that would suggest to the ordinarily prudent man that it would terrify or frighten an ordinary horse.[5]

In general, it may be stated that the degree of care required at common law of an operator of an automobile in the vicinity of horses is affected by all the circumstances of the particular situation, including the presence or absence of other vehicles and travelers and the character of the horse, whether gentle or wild.[6]

The degree of care required in the use of motorcycles appears to be intermediate between that required in the use of automobiles and of bicycles. The operator of a motorcycle upon the streets of a city is not required to anticipate that a horse will be frightened at his cycle, although it is his duty to stop the machine when he discovers that the horse is frightened by it and likely to get beyond control.[7]

§ 267. Noise.—Noises which are incident to the normal operation of motor was necessary that the signal be given. Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289.

---

Annotation: 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251; 12 Ann. Cas. 292; 13 Ann. Cas. 465.

If the statute requires the driver to give the signal, a signal by an occupant is insufficient. Messer v. Bruening, 25 N. D. 599, 142 N. W. 158, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 945.

[18] Annotation: 12 Ann. Cas. 292.

[19] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487.

[20] Pease v. Cochran, 42 S. D. 130, 173 N. W. 158, 5 A.L.R. 936.

Annotation: 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1132; 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 946.

[1] Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289.

Annotation: 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 253; 12 Ann. Cas. 292.

[2] Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289.

Annotation: 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251; 13 Ann. Cas. 465.

[3] Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 224.

[4] Annotation: 108 Am. St. Rep. 214.

[5] Pease v. Cochran, 42 S. D. 130, 173 N. W. 158, 5 A.L.R. 936.

[6] Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656.

[7] Annotation: 13 Ann. Cas. 464.

vehicles are not of themselves evidence of negligence;[8] and if a horse is frightened by ordinary noises such as are usually made when an automobile is propelled at the legal speed, there ordinarily can be no recovery for injuries which may result.[9] The failure to stop the motor and machinery of an automobile, although it may be making a disturbing noise, is not necessarily negligence.[10] For example, it has been held that the driver of an automobile is not guilty of negligence in causing the running away of a team of horses by reason of the fact that he stops the machine near where the team is hitched, without stopping the engine, where it appears that the team escaped almost immediately upon the stopping of the automobile, and that the operator could not have seen the team in time to stop the explosions of the engine, thus avoiding the accident.[11] In order to negative liability for an accident caused by a horse running away due to the noise of an automobile, it may be shown that the animal is unsafe and would become unmanageable at the sight of an automobile, whether or not it is making a noise.[12] Apart from the provisions of any statute it formerly seemed to be the duty of the operator of an automobile, when he began to "crank up" a noisy machine, to keep a watchful eye on horses standing near by and, if they manifested symptoms of fright, to stop at once until they could be removed.[13]

§ 268. Racing.—Highways are constructed for public travel, and their exclusive use cannot be lawfully granted, even temporarily, by a municipality to any individual or association for the purpose of holding races and speed contests. Such a use of the roads and streets of a community amounts to a nuisance at common law, and the operation on them of motor vehicles traveling at dangerous speeds is illegal and constitutes gross negligence as to any person who may be injured, although there may be no other actual negligence in the manner in which the race is conducted.[14]

Such racing is an act of negligence which makes the parties thereto responsible for injuries resulting to others therefrom;[15] they may be jointly liable.[16] Such a use of the public highways cannot be justified by the passage of an ordinance by the local authorities; and where a state law has fixed a maximum rate of speed for motor vehicles which is necessarily exceeded in the races, the ordinance itself is wholly void and may operate to make the municipality a participator in the violation of the law, so that it may become liable in damages for injuries which persons may sustain during the races.[17]

There is some difference of opinion as to the persons to whom participants may thus be held liable. The persons responsible for the holding of speed contests upon public highways are liable, regardless of the skill and care exercised, in the event of injury to any person lawfully in the vicinity as a traveler, or as an occupant of adjacent lands, or otherwise. According to one view, this liability does not extend to a spectator who has come into the neighborhood for the express purpose of seeing the race and with knowledge of the fact that the automobiles are to be driven at the greatest speed of which they are capable. The contributory negligence of such injured person, due to his voluntary presence at the place of danger, relieves the municipality and the persons responsible for the speed contest from liability in such cases, provided they are not otherwise at fault.[18] The view has been taken, however, that the participants are not necessarily relieved from liability by the fact that the injured person was in one of the racing cars.[19]

---

[8] House v. Cramer, 134 Iowa, 374, 112 N. W. 3, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 655, 13 Ann. Cas. 461.
Annotation: 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950.

[9] Eichman v. Buchheit, 128 Wis. 385, 107 N. W. 325, 8 Ann. Cas. 435.

[10] Mahoney v. Maxfield, 102 Minn. 377, 113 N. W. 904, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 251, 12 Ann. Cas. 289.

[11] House v. Cramer, 134 Iowa, 374, 112 N. W. 3, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 655, 13 Ann. Cas. 461.
Annotation: 12 Ann. Cas. 292.

[12] Bliss v. Wolcott, 40 Mont. 491, 107 P. 423, 135 Am. St. Rep. 636.

[13] Tudor v. Bowen, 152 N. C. 441, 67 S. E. 1015, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 804, 136 Am. St. Rep. 836, 21 Ann. Cas. 646.

[14] Johnson v. New York, 186 N. Y. 139, 78 N. E. 715, 116 Am. St. Rep. 545, 9 Ann. Cas. 824; Bogart v. New York, 200 N. Y. 379, 93 N. E. 937, 21 Ann. Cas. 466.
Annotation: 9 Ann. Cas. 828; 21 Ann. Cas. 469.
See generally HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND SIDEWALKS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 1].

[15] Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463.

[16] Ibid.
Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 465.

[17] Johnson v. New York, 186 N. Y. 139, 78 N. E. 715, 116 Am. St. Rep. 545, 9 Ann. Cas. 824.
Annotation: 9 Ann. Cas. 828.

2. WHERE VISION IS OBSTRUCTED

§ 269. Generally.—Where the vision of the driver of an automobile is obstructed for any cause, ordinary care requires him to proceed with more caution than where he has an unobstructed vision. Obstruction of vision may arise from various causes.

§ 270. Where Blinded by Lights.—A person driving an automobile at night and finding himself blinded by a glare of light is bound to exercise care commensurate with the situation to avoid inflicting injury on any person who may be using the street while he is thus unable to see what is before him.[20] He should slow down or even stop, rather than negligently proceed, when he cannot see anyone walking ahead of him.[1] If the blinding results from glare on his windshield, he may be required to look around the end of the windshield if that is the only way in which he can proceed in safety.[2] A driver is not relieved from liability by the fault of the driver of the other car in using his bright lights instead of his dimmers while approaching and passing.[3]

---

[18] Johnson v. New York, 186 N. Y. 139, 78 N. E. 715, 116 Am. St. Rep. 545, 9 Ann. Cas. 824; Bogart v. New York, 200 N. Y. 379, 93 N. E. 937, 21 Ann. Cas. 466.

Annotation: 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40; 9 Ann. Cas. 828; 21 Ann. Cas. 469.

[19] Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463.

[20] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027; Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291; Mathers v. Botsford, 86 Fla. 40, 97 So. 282, 32 A.L.R. 881; Ruth v. Vroom, 245 Mich. 88, 222 N. W. 155, 62 A.L.R. 1528; Jaquith v. Worden, 73 Wash. 349, 132 P. 33, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.

Annotation: 10 A.L.R. 294, s. 32 A.L.R. 887, 41 A.L.R. 1040, and 62 A.L.R. 1531.

An automobile driver, blinded by the bright headlights of an automobile approaching from the opposite direction, thereafter permits his car to proceed at a speed of from 20 to 25 miles an hour for a distance of from 100 to 200 feet, until he strikes and kills a pedestrian walking along the highway is guilty of negligence. Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

In Jaquith v. Worden, 73 Wash. 349, 132 P. 33, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827, it appeared that the defendant, while driving an automobile, turned into a busy street. After entering that street, his car struck an unlighted machine standing in the street, knocking it against the plaintiff and injuring her. In an action to recover damages for the injuries, the defendant testified that he was so blinded by the headlight of an approaching street car that he could not see ahead, that he could not have seen a person, and that he did not see the machine until he struck it. It was held that under his own testimony, he was guilty of negligence. The court said: "He was proceeding in utter disregard of the presence of other travelers or objects ahead of him. Had he been without eyes, he would have been in no worse position. To proceed at all, in the face of those conditions, was at his peril."

In Ruth v. Vroom, 245 Mich. 88, 222 N. W. 155, 62 A.L.R. 1528, recovery was sought for injuries due to the alleged negligence of the defendant in leaving an unlighted trailer attached to a truck by the side of the road. It appeared that the driver of the plaintiff's car was blinded by lights of an approaching car about 400 or 500 feet before striking the trailer, but continued to drive until he was too close to the trailer to stop. The court held that it was negligence to continue to drive 400 or 500 feet after being so blinded that he could not see ahead, and that the driver's failure to stop after finding himself unable to see, and not the fact that the trailer had no lights, or that he was blinded, was the proximate cause of the accident.

[1] Mathers v. Botsford, 86 Fla. 40, 97 So. 282, 32 A.L.R. 881.

[2] Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291; Mathers v. Botsford, 86 Fla. 40, 97 So. 282, 32 A.L.R. 881.

Annotation: 10 A.L.R. 299.

§ 271. Where Windshield Obscured. — A driver whose view through the windshield is obscured by foreign material, such as rain, frost, or ice, is bound to exercise care commensurate with the situation.[4]

§ 272. View Obstructed by Dust, Smoke, and Atmospheric Conditions.— The driver of an automobile whose vision is obscured by dust, smoke, or atmospheric conditions, such as fog, snow, or heavy rain, must exercise care commensurate with the situation.[5] The degree of care varies with the conditions creating the obstructed vision, the roadway, and traffic conditions.[6]

[3] Mathers v. Botsford, 86 Fla. 40, 97 So. 282, 32 A.L.R. 881.

[4] Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291; Schwalen v. W. P. Fuller & Co. 107 Wash. 476, 182 P. 592, 10 A.L.R. 296.

Annotation: 10 A.L.R. 299.

As to glare on windshield, see Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291. See also supra, § 270.

The jury may find negligence in driving an automobile with the windshield so covered with rain water as to obstruct the driver's view of the road ahead. Schwalen v. W. P. Fuller & Co. 107 Wash. 476, 182 P. 592, 10 A.L.R. 296.

For the driver of an automobile to allow rain water to collect on the windshield is not a violation of a city ordinance which provides that "no person shall drive any vehicle that is so inclosed, constructed, or loaded as to prevent the driver thereof from having a clear and unobstructed view to the front, rear, and on both sides." Thus, such a situation does not constitute negligence as a matter of law. Ibid.

[5] Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582; Castille v. Richard, 157 La. 274, 102 So. 398, 37 A.L.R. 586; Peasley v. White, 129 Me. 450, 152 A. 530, 73 A.L.R. 1017.

Annotation: 37 A.L.R. 587, s. 73 A.L.R. 1020.

Thompson v. Bellingham, 112 Wash. 583, 192 P. 952, 19 A.L.R. 864, was an action for damages incurred when the plaintiff's car ran off a highway in a very thick fog which concealed the roadway. It was the court's opinion that the plaintiff was unduly imprudent in proceeding on a road known to him to be potentially dangerous when he might have taken another way. It was said: "If the danger was obvious, it was so only to the appellant, who persisted in proceeding in the face of an unusual natural condition rapidly occurring and completely baffling only within a limited area. Being perfectly familiar with the condition of the locality, now suddenly obscured by a bank of fog, appellant had no right to act on the ordinary presumption that this particular way or place was safe, or that it did not hold out the possibility of his straying through the gap on to the railway trestle."

In Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582, however, it appeared that the plaintiff, driving his motor car at a speed of 12 miles per hour in a thunderstorm, with blinding rain rendering vision impossible at a distance of more than 20 feet, collided with the defendant's motor truck which was standing in the roadway without a tail light. The defendant urged that the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence, insisting that he was bound to use due care. This, it was urged, is not shown where one drives his car at such a speed that he cannot stop it within the distance of visible obstructions, even though visibility is greatly reduced by a storm. It was held that the trial court properly rejected the defendant's standard, and rightly applied the standard of care to be expected from a reasonably prudent person. And after noting the absence of a red light on the truck, the appellate court said: "As bearing upon the claimed contributory negligence of plaintiff, we are to inquire whether, had the red light been properly lighted and displayed, the plaintiff, traveling at the rate at which he was going, in a severe thunderstorm with blinding rain, over a slippery road, ought to have seen the truck light in time to stop or safely pass. . . . The trial court was clearly right in overruling the defendant's claim as to the standard to be applied, and in holding that the proximate cause of the collision was the lack of the tail light and the position of the truck upon the road, and that plaintiff was not negligent."

In Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30, an action for injuries incurred by a passenger in a motorcar, due to a defect in the highway, on a dark, rainy night, it was held that the driver of the car was not exercising ordinary care if he was driving it at such a rate of speed that he could not stop it within the distance in which objects were visible.

[6] Peasley v. White, 129 Me. 450, 152 A. 530, 73 A.L.R. 1017.

Annotation: 37 A.L.R. 587, s. 73 A.L.R. 1020.

In an action for injuries to a pedestrian, it was held that one driving his motorcar in the highway, sounding no alarm and with side lights only, on a night when the visibility was reduced to 20 or 30 feet by falling snow, was bound to exercise the highest degree of care and, under such circumstances, could not proceed on the assumption that pedestrians would keep to the sidewalks except at crossings. And it was said to be the driver's duty not only to keep watch for the presence of pedestrians in front of his car, but to sound a warning where, on account of an obstruction to his view, he might come on them

The driver may be required to slow up.[7] It has been asserted that a driver of a motor truck on a public highway who voluntarily turns his vehicle from the right-hand side of the road to the left, where vehicles going in the opposite direction are expected to travel, at a time when he cannot see the road for dust, without giving a reasonable warning signal, is grossly negligent.[8]

3. SKIDDING

a. IN GENERAL

§ 273. Generally.[9]—Skidding, at least on a slippery pavement, is not necessarily due to negligence.[10] The mere fact, therefore, that an automobile skids does not, of itself, constitute evidence of negligence upon the driver's part so as to render the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applicable.[11] Such skidding is not an occurrence of such uncommon or unusual character that, unexplained, it furnishes evidence of the driver's negligence.[12]

The inquiry in cases of skidding is as to the driver's conduct previous to such skidding. The speed of the automobile prior to the skidding and the care in handling the automobile, particularly in the application of brakes, are factors to be considered in determining whether or not there was an exercise of due care.[13] This is particularly true where statutory provisions are involved.[14] Extremely slippery streets require correspondingly greater care in operation.[15] without seeing them. Annotation: 37 A.L.R. 587, s. 73 A.L.R. 1020.

---

[7] Castille v. Richard, 157 La. 274, 102 So. 398, 37 A.L.R. 586.

In Castille v. Richard, 157 La. 274, 102 So. 398, 37 A.L.R. 586, the cars of the plaintiff and the defendant, each of whom sought damages, collided and were wrecked on a comparatively narrow dirt road while proceeding in opposite directions through a cloud of dust raised by a third car. At the time this car passed between the two wrecked cars, the latter were on their proper sides of the road respectively. The court held, however, that it was inexcusable negligence for the drivers of the cars on the narrow road not to come to a stop until the impenetrable dust cloud which reduced visibility to about 10 feet had subsided.

[8] Annotation: 37 A.L.R. 587, s. 73 A.L.R. 1020.

[9] For discussion of proximate cause, see supra, § 164.

[10] Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582; Nordby v. Sorlie, 35 N. D. 395, 160 N. W. 70, L.R.A.1917B, 753; Richards v. Rifenbery, 108 Okla. 56, 233 P. 692; Osborne v. Charbneau, 148 Wash. 359, 268 P. 884, 64 A.L.R. 251; Cleary v. Eckart, 191 Wis. 114, 210 N. W. 267, 51 A.L.R. 576; Linden v. Miller, 172 Wis. 20, 177 N. W. 909, 12 A.L.R. 665.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 266.

[11] Barret v. Caddo Transfer & Warehouse Co. 165 La. 1075, 116 So. 563, 58 A.L.R. 261; Osborne v. Charbneau, 148 Wash. 359, 268 P. 884, 64 A.L.R. 251; Linden v. Miller, 172 Wis. 20, 177 N. W. 909, 12 A.L.R. 665.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 269.

Some authority exists apparently in conflict with this general rule. Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 271.

For a discussion of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, see §§ 607 et seq.

[12] Lambert v. Eastern Massachusetts Street R. Co. 240 Mass. 495, 134 N. E. 340, 22 A.L.R. 1291.

In one case holding the res ipsa loquitur doctrine inapplicable it was said: "In order to make the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur apply, it must be held that skidding itself implies negligence. This it does not do. It is a well-known physical fact that cars may skid on greasy or slippery roads without fault either on account of the manner of handling the car or on account of its being there." In another case the court said: "The mere skidding of an automobile is not necessarily negligent, nor will negligence be presumed from the mere skidding without some fact or circumstance connected therewith from which negligence may be inferred." Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 270.

The skidding of an automobile, while going down a recently sprinkled street, does not conclusively show negligence upon the driver's part. Osborne v. Charbneau, 148 Wash. 359, 268 P. 884, 64 A.L.R. 251.

The court of appeal, in Wing v. London General Omnibus Co. [1909] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 652, 3 B. R. C. 79, held that in the absence of any suggestion of failure to take any proper precaution to prevent skidding, no evidence of negligence or of nuisance was presented by the mere fact that the owner placed on the road a machine liable to become uncontrollable in slippery conditions, in view of the fact that motor omnibuses had been running for several years.

[13] Barret v. Caddo Transfer & Warehouse Co. 165 La. 1075, 116 So. 563, 58 A.L.R. 261; Jessup v. Davis, 115 Neb. 1, 211 N. W. 190, 56 A.L.R. 1403, writ of error dismissed in 276 U. S. 593, 72 L. ed. 722, 48 S. Ct. 300.

[14] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 268.

[15] See infra, §§ 274 et seq.

§ 274. Failure to Use Chains.—Failure to use chains has not been considered uniformly to charge the driver with negligence.[16] In some cases, however, the fact that no chains were used on the car has been stressed in holding that the motorist could not excuse his negligent conduct on the theory that the skidding of the car was unavoidable, or, at least, that the question of his negligence was for the jury.[17]

§ 275. Injury to Occupant of Skidding Car.—So far as an occupant of the skidding car is concerned, an apparent disinclination upon the part of some courts to hold the driver to a high degree of care to avoid skidding appears in certain cases,[18] and verdicts in favor of defendants are sustained.[19] At least, the courts will not ordinarily find gross negligence to exist in such cases so as to render the owner or operator liable under the guest statutes.[20]

b. In Particular Circumstances

§ 276. Generally.—The question whether skidding is the result of a failure to exercise due care is one dependent upon the circumstances. The question has been considered in many factual situations.

§ 277. Onto Sidewalk.—The driver of a motor vehicle is required to exercise special care or precaution to avoid skidding upon or onto a sidewalk.[1] Negligence of a motorist has been predicated upon speed and turning so far on the left side of a street, which was dry, to pass a street car, that he skidded or slued and the top of his car struck a boy on the sidewalk.[2] A finding that a driver who knew that his car, a new one, was not running right was negligent in continuing to operate it upon a wet street until it swerved to and upon a sidewalk and hit a pedestrian is warranted.[3]

§ 278. Hitting Pedestrian.—The driver of a motor vehicle must exercise special care or precaution to avoid skidding into a pedestrian who is rightfully in the street or is crossing it, and accordingly, liability for injuring a pedestrian in such a situation, at least where he himself was not negligent, may be predicated upon the driver's negligence.[4]

---

[16] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 268.

[17] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 268.

[18] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 283.

[19] A finding that the defendant, whose car, equipped with new chains, had skidded before reaching the steep hill in question, about a quarter of a mile long, was not negligent in driving down it at a speed of about 20 miles an hour at a time when rain and sleet were freezing as they fell, and crashing into a stone wall near the bottom of the hill by reason of being unable to follow a turn of the road to the left, was held to be warranted in a suit by a guest, and this notwithstanding the guest called to the defendant's attention, at the top of the hill, a sign cautioning drivers to go into second gear, and defendant continued in high gear. Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 284.

A comparatively inexperienced driver, who supposes that it is necessary to make a quick stop, is not liable to a guest for making a car skid, in erroneously applying brakes where a light coating of gravel covers hardpan in the road. Cleary v. Eckart, 191 Wis. 114, 210 N. W. 267, 51 A.L.R. 576.

[20] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 283.

[1] Barret v. Caddo Transfer & Warehouse Co. 165 La. 1075, 116 So. 563, 58 A.L.R. 261.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 272.

In Barret v. Caddo Transfer & Warehouse Co. 165 La. 1075, 116 So. 563, 58 A.L.R. 261, the negligence upon which liability for injuring a building was predicated consisted in the driving of a heavy truck down a slippery street and into an alley, in broad daylight, at a speed of 8 to 10 miles an hour, the court remarking that it was possible to operate a car with safety in spite of the downward grade and the slippery condition if a slow rate of speed was maintained and the car was handled properly.

[2] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 273.

[3] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 273.

[4] Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co. 180 Cal. 32, 177 P. 203, 15 A.L.R. 401.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 274.

Compare Osborne v. Charbneau, 148 Wash. 359, 268 P. 884, 64 A.L.R. 251.

In one case the court said: "The driver was certainly aware of the slippery condition of the streets and presumably of the tendency of his truck to skid upon sudden application of the brakes; hence, it was his duty to approach the crossing with due regard to the rights of pedestrians. Whether he did so or not, the distance his car slid

§ 279. Collision with Other Vehicles.—The driver of a car must exercise unusual care to keep it under control on a slippery street or road, so as not to cause injury to another vehicle or an occupant thereof by skidding into it, particularly where the car is being driven on a grade or curve, or at an intersection, or where it is proceeding at a considerable speed.[5] The question is one of the exercise of care; if the requisite degree of care is exercised, no liability results from the skidding.[6] Negligence cannot be imputed as a matter of law to the driver of defendant's truck, where, in going up a steep hill, its right rear wheel rolled into some oil or grease, and the truck slid backwards into another car, where the pavement, although discolored, was "no different in appearance from that of many other hilly streets in the city over which motor vehicles of all kinds passed daily."[7]

4. Vehicles Proceeding in Same Direction

§ 280. Generally.—The general rule that drivers of automobiles on public highways or the streets of municipalities must exercise reasonable care in the operation of their vehicles, that is, such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the same or similar circumstances, governs the reciprocal rights and duties of the drivers of cars proceeding in the same direction.[8] The driver must keep a safe distance behind a vehicle ahead[9] and must have his machine well in hand to avoid injury to the car ahead so long as the car ahead is being driven in accordance with the law of the road.

The driver of the front car owes no duty to the rear or trailing car except to use the road in the usual way, in keeping with the laws of the road, and until he has been made aware of it, by signal or otherwise, he has a right to assume either that there is no other automobile in close proximity to his rear or that, being there, it is under such control as not to interfere with his free and the violence of the movement were matters properly for consideration in determining if, under the circumstances, he performed his duty." Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 275.

---

In another case it was said: "If it be true, as argued by the respondents, that automobiles skid in ordinary operation, if the rear part of such a vehicle under normal conditions is apt to swing or skid from side to side, it would appear to call for care on the part of the driver of such a vehicle commensurate with the danger to be avoided, especially to pedestrians at street crossings." Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 275.

The driver of a motorcycle may be found negligent in going at such a speed, upon a wet and slippery street, that in applying the brake the machine skidded and hit a boy who had started to cross at an intersection. Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co. 180 Cal. 32, 179 P. 203, 15 A.L.R. 401.

[5] But see Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582; Gage v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 91 Kan. 253, 137 P. 938, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 410; Lambert v. Eastern Massachusetts Street R. Co. 240 Mass. 495, 134 N. E. 340, 22 A.L.R. 1291.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 278.

Compare Nordby v. Sorlie, 35 N. D. 395, 160 N. W. 70, L.R.A.1917B, 753; Linden v. Miller, 172 Wis. 20, 177 N. W. 909, 12 A.L.R. 665.

And see Lambert v. Eastern Massachusetts Street R. Co. 240 Mass. 495, 134 N. E. 340, 22 A.L.R. 1291, holding that contributory negligence can be predicated upon driving at the rate of 12 miles per hour upon a wet and slippery tarvia surface.

[6] A motorist is not negligent in driving in the ruts on the left side of a rough road, so that in turning the car to the right his rear wheels slide along therein, at any rate with respect to a motorcyclist who drives in the opposite direction at great speed. Nordby v. Sorlie, 35 N. D. 395, 160 N. W. 70, L.R.A.1917B, 753.

A finding that a heavy passenger car was not negligently driven, where it proceeded along a street at a speed of from 10 to 15 miles an hour and skidded diagonally across the street into another car upon reaching an icy spot was held to be warranted. Linden v. Miller, 172 Wis. 20, 177 N. W. 909, 12 A.L.R. 665, affirming a judgment in favor of defendant.

[7] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 281.

[8] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

[9] Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

Riding a bicycle within a few feet of a truck is not negligence per se. Simpson v. Snellenburg, 96 N. J. L. 518, 115 A. 403, 24 A.L.R. 503.

use of the road in front of and to the side of him in any lawful manner.[10] Of course, the rule would be different on the streets of a city, where the passage of automobiles along the streets is constant and frequent, requiring of all drivers of motor vehicles a high degree of care and watchfulness, this, of itself, being sufficient notice of the near approach of other cars, and under the same circumstances, known to the driver, the same rule applied to city streets would apply to county highways.[11]

All operators of motor vehicles, in addition to exercising reasonable care and caution for the safety of others who have the right to use the highways, must do whatever the statute law of the jurisdiction requires whenever the conditions therein referred to arise, and a noncompliance with regulations imposed by law or ordinance may, in itself, constitute negligence and render the operator liable for consequential damages in the event that any person thereby sustains personal injuries. Nevertheless, if the driver of an automobile complies with all the requirements of a statute regulating the operation of motor vehicles, he may yet be liable for the failure to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to another traveler on the highway.[12]

§ 281. Stopping.[13]—Ordinarily a signal, warning vehicles in the rear of an intention to stop, is required.[14] This is frequently required by statute. The absence of such a statute does not always relieve a driver, when he starts or stops or changes direction, of the obligation to use some care for traffic in the rear.[15] The sudden stopping of the vehicle in front without notice, if unexplained, is negligence.[16]

Notwithstanding this general rule, there is imposed upon the operators of vehicles following others the corresponding duty of having their vehicles under such control as to be able to stop in time to prevent running into the car ahead in case the latter vehicle comes to a sudden stop in case of an emergency.[17]

---

[10] Gosma v. Adams, 102 Fla. 305, 135 So. 806, 78 A.L.R. 1193.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

[11] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

[12] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

The precautions prescribed by statute with regard to the duty of the driver of an automobile in passing another car on the highway do not relieve him from his common-law duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury. Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

[13] As to stopping generally, see infra, § 333.

[14] Simpson v. Snellenburg, 96 N. J. L. 518, 115 A. 403, 24 A.L.R. 503.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

One operating a motor truck of such a size that it prevented persons riding behind it from observing conditions ahead which they should know for their safety is held bound to use reasonable care to give them timely warning of the approach of danger, and he is held guilty of negligence rendering him liable for an injury to a bicyclist who, with his knowledge, was riding close behind the truck, which stopped without warning when going rapidly down a hill, just as automobiles coming from the opposite direction were about to pass, thus forcing the bicyclist, in order to avoid collision with the truck, to go into the roadway directly in front of an approaching automobile. Simpson v. Snellenburg, 96 N. J. L. 518, 115 A. 403, 24 A.L.R. 503.

In Strever v. Woodward, 160 Iowa, 332, 141 N. W. 931, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 644, where a collision occurred between the plaintiff's buggy and the defendant's automobile traveling in the same direction, it was held that one driving along a highway is not bound to look or listen for vehicles which may be approaching from behind before stopping his vehicle, and that he is not bound to give warning of his intention to stop, and that his stopping constitutes negligence only when he is aware of the presence of another vehicle, with which his act may cause a collision.

[15] Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

In the Riccio Case, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967, the court held that under the circumstances, where the cars were moving slowly in a holiday line of traffic and approaching a street intersection, it was the duty of the operator in the rear to control the movement of his own automobile and to maintain a sufficient distance between his car and the car ahead to enable him to avoid a collision.

[16] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

In driving in districts governed by traffic signals, it is the duty of drivers proceeding in the same direction to have their cars under such control that they can stop at street intersections in obedience to traffic signals.[18] One who does not keep his car under such control is guilty of negligence in striking a car ahead which stops for a traffic light.[19]

§ 282. Passing.—The driver of an automobile is bound, in overtaking and attempting to pass another vehicle, to exercise ordinary care and skill in so doing.[20] He should attempt to pass a forward vehicle only when he can do so with safety to the travelers he is meeting, as well as to the vehicle he is passing.[1] He is, however, under no legal duty to anticipate that the driver of the car ahead, intending to turn in front of him, will fail in his duty to indicate by proper signal or warning, in ample time, that instead of proceeding, he intends to make such a turn.[2] It is the duty of the person operating the front car toward the one following at a more rapid pace, to yield room enough for the latter to pass when it is needful and practicable, and when requested by proper signal.[3]

The driver of the car ahead, even the driver of a slow-moving vehicle, is not bound to know at his peril that an automobile is desirous of passing.[4] Even a statute requiring one operating a vehicle on a highway to turn to the right to give an overtaking vehicle free passage on the left does not require him to keep a lookout for vehicles approaching from the rear, under penalty of being held liable for injuries resulting from failure to give them room for passage.[5] Knowledge of the desire to pass must be brought home to him,[6] and then he must turn to the right as soon as practicable.[7] He is not necessarily negligent if he does not so turn, where he does not hear the signal or know of the purpose to pass, or where it is not practicable and safe to turn aside when the signal is given.[8] He must be accorded a reasonable opportunity to heed the warning and to exercise due care and reasonable prudence, before he can be charged with negligence in the premises.[9] If he does not yield the road, the driver of the rear car must stop, if necessary, to prevent injury to the occupants of the first car.[10] Ordinarily the driver of the front car need not slacken his speed to permit the rear car to pass.[11] Under certain circumstances, however, the duty to exercise ordinary care may render it necessary for the driver of a motor vehicle to stop his car to allow another vehicle proceeding in the same direction to pass.[12] The jury may find that it is the duty of the driver of an automobile to stop in order to permit a faster car to pass, where for miles there would be no proper opportunity for it to pass while both cars were in motion, and stopping for a few seconds would permit it to do so, under a statute requiring an overtaking car to pass on the left, and the driver of the forward one, as soon as practicable, to "turn to the right, so as to allow free passage to the left."[13]

---

[17] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 507, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

[18] Zandras v. Moffett, 286 Pa. 477, 133 A. 817, 47 A.L.R. 699.
Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 228.

[19] Ibid.

[20] Criez v. Sunset Motor Co. 123 Wash. 604, 213 P. 7, 32 A.L.R. 627.

The driver of an automobile owes no duty to the driver of a car following him to give notice or warning of intention to pass a car ahead of him, where the statute provides that all vehicles shall keep to the right of the center of the highway except when overtaking and passing another vehicle, that any vehicle overtaking another going in the same direction shall pass to the left of the vehicle so overtaken, and that the operator shall signal the vehicle intended to be passed by the use of his horn or other signaling device, and that any vehicle so overtaken shall promptly, upon signal, turn as far as reasonably possible to the right in order to allow free passage to the left. Meese v. Goodman, 167 Md. 658, 176 A. 621, 98 A.L.R. 480.

[1] Dreher v. Divine, 192 N. C. 325, 135 S. E. 29, 47 A.L.R. 696.
Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 513, 515, s. 47 A.L.R. 712, 714, 62 A.L.R. 980, 982.

[2] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 513, s. 47 A.L.R. 712, 62 A.L.R. 980.

It is held that the act of a motorist in attempting to pass a car in front of him at a moment when another vehicle is approaching constitutes gross negligence and renders him liable. Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 517, s. 47 A.L.R. 718, 62 A.L.R. 984.

[3] Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463.
Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 515, s. 47 A.L.R. 714, 62 A.L.R. 982.

The driver of a buggy who refuses to yield the road when an automobile attempts to pass from behind cannot recover for injuries resulting from a collision between the vehicles. Ware v. Saufley, 194 Ky. 53, 237 S. W. 1060, 24 A.L.R. 500.

[4] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 515, s. 47 A.L.R. 714, 62 A.L.R. 982.

[5] Dreher v. Divine, 192 N. C. 325, 135 S. E. 29, 47 A.L.R. 696.

[6] Dreher v. Divine, 192 N. C. 325, 135 S. E. 29, 47 A.L.R. 696.
Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 515, s. 47 A.L.R. 714, 62 A.L.R. 982.

[7] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 515, s. 47 A.L.R. 714, 62 A.L.R. 982.

[8] Dreher v. Divine, 192 N. C. 325, 135 S. E. 29, 47 A.L.R. 696.
Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 514, s. 47 A.L.R. 713, 62 A.L.R. 982.

The view has been taken that the driver of the front car cannot increase his speed to prevent the passing.[14]

If there is convenient room for the rear car to pass, the driver of the car ahead is not required to turn his vehicle aside,[15] nor is the rear driver bound to bring home to the driver of the forward car actual knowledge of his presence and desire to pass, unless the statute so requires.[16] If the road is wide enough, and the way appears open, and it appears that passing may be accomplished without injury or accident, and the driver gives notice of his approach and desire to pass in the usual way, whether the driver of the forward car has actual knowledge of such warning or not, the driver of the rear car is not, on that account, guilty of negligence.[17]

To render the driver of an automobile colliding with a buggy which he attempts to pass from the rear on the public highway liable for the resulting injury, the jury must find from the evidence that failure of the driver of the automobile to exercise the duties imposed upon him by law was the direct and proximate cause of the injury.[18]

---

[9] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 515, s. 47 A.L.R. 714, 62 A.L.R. 982.

[10] Ware v. Saufley, 194 Ky. 53, 237 S. W. 1060, 24 A.L.R. 500; Dreher v. Divine, 192 N. C. 325, 135 S. E. 29, 47 A.L.R. 696.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 514, s. 47 A.L.R. 713, 62 A.L.R. 982.

[11] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 515, s. 47 A.L.R. 714. 62 A.L.R. 982.

[12] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 514, s. 47 A.L.R. 713, 62 A.L.R. 982.

[13] Mark v. Fritsch, 195 N. Y. 282, 88 N. E. 380, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 632, 133 Am. St. Rep. 800.

In the Mark Case, supra, the court said: "Under ordinary circumstances, the forward car would not be compelled to stop in order to let the rear one pass, but might wait until a space was reached where such passage might be accomplished in safety without any stop; but, on the other hand, a country highway might be such that for miles there would be no proper opportunity for one car to pass another while both were in motion, but plenty of opportunity for such passage if the forward car pulled aside and stopped for a few seconds. Under such circumstances, we think a jury might very well find that it was extremely unreasonable for a slow-moving car to hold up one in the rear desiring to pass it, by refusing, upon reasonable request, to give such an opportunity as has been suggested for passage. The statute upon this subject provides: 'Any such person so operating a motor vehicle shall, on overtaking any such . . . other vehicle, pass on the left side thereof, and the . . . driver of such . . . other vehicle shall, as soon as practicable, turn to the right, so as to allow free passage on the left.' [Laws 1904, chap. 538, p. 1315, § 4, subd. 1.] This statute is to be construed reasonably with reference to the rights of all parties. It certainly does not contemplate or permit reckless driving of a fast motor vehicle, whereby slower ones are wrongfully crowded or frightened out of the road. Neither should it be so construed as to encourage aggravating conduct upon the part of the slower going machine in front, whereby the faster one is unnecessarily and unreasonably held back and annoyed."

[14] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 517, s. 47 A.L.R. 718, 62 A.L.R. 984.

[15] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 515, s. 47 A.L.R. 714, 62 A.L.R. 982.

[16] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 514, s. 47 A.L.R. 713, 62 A.L.R. 982.

[17] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 508, s. 47 A.L.R. 703, 62 A.L.R. 970.

Statutes and ordinances sometimes prohibit passing at street intersections.[19] Such statutes and ordinances must be given a reasonable construction.[20] One who drives out of a single file of cars in motion just before entering a street intersection and proceeds abreast of it violates a traffic ordinance forbidding attempts to pass vehicles "at a street intersection."[1] The driver of the first car has the right to assume that the ordinance will be observed, and therefore there is no duty incumbent upon him to expect that the rear driver will attempt to pass, in violation of the ordinance, at the street intersection.[2]

§ 283. —Street Cars.—There is a difference of opinion upon the question whether the rule requiring a passing vehicle to pass to the left of a vehicle going in the same direction applies to the passing of street cars running on tracks in or near the center of the street. The view has been taken that an automobile overtaking a street car is within the terms of a statute providing that the driver of a carriage or other vehicle passing another carriage or other vehicle traveling in the same direction shall drive to the left.[3] On the other hand, a street car is held not to be a vehicle within the meaning of such a statute or ordinance.[4] Statutes and ordinances requiring the automobile driver to pass to the right of street cars occupying the center of the street are now quite common.[5] Circumstances to be considered on this question are the location of the tracks, whether in the center or on the side of the road, and the width and condition of the road.

§ 284. Duty Where Vehicle Attempts to Pass on Wrong Side.—Ordinarily, passing on the right side of the usual road vehicles is negligence or evidence of negligence. It has been held to be negligence per se to attempt to pass an overtaken car on the right-hand side, in violation of an ordinance requiring trucks and automobiles to pass each other on the left.[6] The driver of the car ahead has a right to assume that the ordinance will be observed, without being chargeable with negligence.[7] There may be circumstances in which passing on the right hand side is not negligence.[8] Some such cases present a question of fact as to the negligence.[9]

---

[18] Ware v. Saufley, 194 Ky. 53, 237 S. W. 1060, 24 A.L.R. 500.

[19] As to what is a street intersection within the meaning of such regulation, see infra, § 289.

[20] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 1206.

[1] Crosby v. Canino, 89 Colo. 434, 3 P. (2d) 792, 78 A.L.R. 1202.

[2] Gosma v. Adams, 102 Fla. 305, 135 So. 806, 78 A.L.R. 1193.
Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 1206.

[3] Foster v. Curtis, 213 Mass. 79, 99 N. E. 961, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1188, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1116.
Annotation: 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1188; Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1116; Ann. Cas. 1918E, 562.
The right of a street car passenger to rely upon the compliance by the driver of the automobile with his duty to pass to the left, so that his failure to do so is evidence of negligence, is answered differently in different cases. That he may rely upon compliance with this duty is held in Foster v. Curtis, 213 Mass. 79, 99 N. E. 961, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1188, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1116. On the other hand, in Marsh v. Boyden, 33 R. I. 519, 82 A. 393, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582, it was held that he may not so rely.

[4] Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 P. 1155, L.R.A.1917C, 477 Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560.
Annotation: 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1188; Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1116, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 562.

[5] The reader should consult his statutory provisions and the provisions of his municipal ordinance.

[6] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 516, s. 47 A.L.R. 717, 62 A.L.R. 984.

[7] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 516, s. 47 A.L.R. 717, 62 A.L.R. 984.

[8] Zandras v. Moffett, 286 Pa. 477, 133 A. 817, 47 A.L.R. 699.
Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 516, s. 47 A.L.R. 717, 62 A.L.R. 984; 24 A.L.R. 1304, s. 63 A.L.R. 277.

[9] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 516, s. 47 A.L.R. 717, 62 A.L.R. 984; 24 A.L.R. 1304, s. 63 A.L.R. 277.
Although, in view of a statute requiring the operator of a motor vehicle, when overtaking and passing another vehicle, to pass to the left "where the surface of the ground

§ 285. Driving Too Close in Passing.—It is a general rule of law that the driver of an automobile is bound, in overtaking and attempting to pass another vehicle, to exercise ordinary care and skill in so doing.[10] He is bound not to drive so close as to interfere with the operation of the front car.[11] It is asserted that to cut in ahead of another car in passing and crowd it off the road is sheer recklessness, and that one guilty of such conduct is not in a position to complain if a jury finds that he was wantonly indifferent to the safety of the occupants of the car he passed.[12]

5. Vehicles Meeting and Passing

§ 286. Generally.—It is generally held that a traveler upon the highway may occupy and use any part of the road he desires when it is not needed by another whose rights are superior to his own.[13] In fact, his right to travel on either side of the road is asserted to exist except as against one coming from the opposite direction.[14] When he meets another traveler, he must, if he is traveling on his right side, remain there, or if he is traveling upon his left side, he must turn to the right in order to give the other an opportunity to pass.[15] Failure to do so is negligence,[16] or at least prima facie evidence of negligence.[17] The rights of one on his left-hand side of the road are inferior to the rights of another coming from the opposite direction.[18] A driver on his right-hand side of the road has a right to assume that another driver coming from the opposite direction will obey the law of the road,[19] at least until such time as he sees or should see that he has no intention of so doing.[20]

There is some difference of opinion as to the right of an operator of an automobile to turn to the left in violation of the law of the road in attempting will permit," the violation of such statute is prima facie negligence, nevertheless, it has been held it might be a question of fact under all the circumstances as to whether or not it was negligence in a given case for the driver of the rear vehicle to attempt to pass the advance vehicle on the right, and whether he attempted to do so in a careful manner. Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 516, s. 47 A.L.R. 717, 62 A.L.R. 984.

---

[10] Criez v. Sunset Motor Co. 123 Wash. 604, 213 P. 7, 32 A.L.R. 627.

[11] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 517, s. 47 A.L.R. 718, 62 A.L.R. 984.

If he returns to the right side of the road, so close to the car as to disconcert its driver by striking the car and causing it to swerve over an embankment, he is liable for the injury inflicted upon the occupants of the car, although the blow was not sufficient to propel the car over the embankment. Granger v. Farrant, 179 Mich. 19, 146 N. W. 218, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 453.

[12] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 517, s. 47 A.L.R. 718, 62 A.L.R. 984.

[13] Cupples Mercantile Co. v. Bow, 32 Idaho, 774, 189 P. 48, 24 A.L.R. 1296; Sims v. Eleazer, 116 S. C. 41, 106 S. E. 854, 24 A.L.R. 1293.

As to meeting and passing on curves and hills, see § 341, infra.

[14] Sims v. Eleazer, 116 S. C. 41, 106 S. E. 854, 24 A.L.R. 1293.

[15] Cupples Mercantile Co. v. Bow, 32 Idaho, 774, 189 P. 48, 24 A.L.R. 1296; Sims v. Eleazer, 116 S. C. 41, 106 S. E. 854, 24 A.L.R. 1293.

One driving towards another on the left may be negligent, and his negligence may be the proximate cause of an accident, where, in trying to pass him, the latter turns off the road. Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

The driver of a motor truck with an overhanging rack which took more space than would an ordinary motor vehicle may properly be found guilty of negligence, on seeing a car approaching from the opposite direction, in proceeding, on a foggy night when the presence of vehicles was manifested only by their lights, to where the roadway was narrowed by a small bridge or culvert, upon or just beyond which the rack came into contact with the other car. Baldwin v. Bell [1923] (Can.) S. C. R. 1, 85 A.L.R. 1166.

[16] Hubbard v. Bartholomew, 163 Iowa, 58, 144 N. W. 13, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 443.

[17] Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669.

[18] Hiscock v. Phinney, 81 Wash. 117, 142 P. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1044.

One driving an automobile on the wrong side of the highway is not entitled to rely on a machine coming from the opposite direction not exceeding the legal rate of speed. Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669.

[19] Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

[20] O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 79 A.L.R. 597.

to avoid another vehicle approaching from the opposite direction, on the wrong side, when a collision is threatened.[1] The rule applicable to vehicles generally,[2] which has been applied in the case of automobiles, is that the operator is not necessarily guilty of negligence because he does turn to the left in such a situation.[3] Other cases, however, take the view that the operator is never justified in turning to the left.[4]

6. Street or Highway Intersections

a. In General

§ 287. Generally.—The general rule that the operator of a motor vehicle is obligated to exercise ordinary, due, or reasonable care applies to the care required at street crossings and intersecting highways. The circumstances, however, require more precaution than is necessary when driving in a street or highway at a place other than an intersection.[5] The driver must approach street crossings with his machine under control.[6]

In practically all jurisdictions, statutory enactments are adopted governing the conduct of motorists at street crossings and intersecting highways.

§ 288. What Constitutes Intersection.—The weight of authority is to the effect that an "intersection," within the meaning of traffic statutes or regulations, arises from the meeting of one street with another at an angle, although one of the streets stops at and does not cross the other.[7] Other cases require the streets to cross in order that they shall be considered intersecting streets.[8] It is not necessary that the roads or streets approach and intersect at right angles.[9]

The underlying reason for the majority rule has been expressed as follows: "While, therefore, the word 'intersect' literally means to cut into or between, or to cross, and does not ordinarily mean to begin at, or start from, a given line, yet, in view of the purpose of the act and the intention of the legislature, it would be an absurd refinement to give it so narrow and limited an interpretation as would result from holding that the phrase 'intersecting roads,' as used in the act, does not include all roads joining each other at an angle, whether they cross each other or not." [10] The "intersection" or "point of intersection" is the space common to both streets or highways formed by continuing the curb lines.[11]

---

[1] See infra, § 322.

[2] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1304, s. 63 A.L.R. 277.

[3] Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669; Sims v. Eleazer, 116 S. C. 41, 106 S. E. 854, 24 A.L.R. 1293; Lawson v. Dye, 106 W. Va. 494, 145 S. E. 817, 67 A.L.R. 271.

Wallace v. Bergius, 52 Scot. L. R. 130, [1915] S. C. 204, 7 B. R. C. 692.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1304, s. 63 A.L.R. 277.

[4] Cupples Mercantile Co. v. Bow, 32 Idaho, 774, 189 P. 48, 24 A.L.R. 1296.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1304, s. 63 A.L.R. 277.

[5] Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221; Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

If it is imprudent or dangerous to use the crossing at the time, ordinary care requires stopping the car or seeking another crossing. Crawford v. McElhinney, 117 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221.

Where anything obscures his view of a crossing, when the presence thereon of others may reasonably be anticipated, extra vigilance and caution are required of the auto operator in order to prevent injury to persons on such crossing. Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

[6] Baker v. Clore, 204 N. Y. 92, 97 N. E. 501, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487.

[7] Pangborn v. John Widdicomb Co. 223 Mich. 181, 193 N. W. 817, 31 A.L.R. 485; Holman v. Ivins, 150 Minn. 285, 184 N. W. 1026, 21 A.L.R. 964; Mapp v. Holland, 138 Va. 519, 122 S. E. 430, 37 A.L.R. 478.

Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 488, s. 78 A.L.R. 1198.

This is true at least where the streets meet at right angles. Gosma v. Adams, 102 Fla. 305, 135 So. 806, 78 A.L.R. 1193.

A beaten pathway across a highway and common is not an intersection of highways within the meaning of a statute requiring drivers of automobiles to give signals on approaching intersections of highways. Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 488, s. 78 A.L.R. 1198.

[8] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 488, s. 78 A.L.R. 1198.

[9] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 488, s. 78 A.L.R. 1198.

The intersection of public thoroughfares with private ways does not come within the terms of a statute which, by language or definition, relates to the intersection of "highways," or which defines the intersecting way as any "public highway, street, avenue, road, alley, park, or parkway." [12] Moreover, the definition of the term "way" as including a private way laid out under authority of statute does not include an intersection with a private way not laid out under statutory authority.[13]

b. Right of Way at Street or Highway Intersections

§ 289. Generally.—In the absence of a statute or ordinance regulating the matter, it is a general rule that the vehicle entering an intersection of streets first is entitled to the right of way, and it is the duty of the driver of another vehicle approaching the crossing to proceed with sufficient care to permit the exercise of such right without danger of collision.[14]

§ 290. Regulation by Statute or Ordinance.[15] — Under the more common form of statute and ordinance upon this subject, the vehicle approaching a street or highway intersection from the right is given the right of way.[16] A form of ordinance that is not uncommon makes the determination of the right of way depend upon the direction in which the vehicles are traveling. In some cities it is given to those proceeding in a northerly or southerly direction, while in others it is given to those proceeding in an easterly or westerly direction.[17] The effect, as negligence, of a violation of such a statute or ordinance depends upon the general view that obtains in the state as to violation of a statute or ordinance.[18] It has been regarded as negligence in some jurisdictions.[19]

§ 291. Extent of Right.[20]—The words, "grant the right of way," in such a statute mean that the driver of the vehicle not having the right of way has an affirmative duty to keep out of the other's way, which requires him to slow down, stop, and, if need be, reverse, if otherwise the crossing vehicles are likely to collide.[1] The driver having the right of way is not guilty of negligence in failing to stop at a street intersection upon seeing another automobile approaching at a high rate of speed and in assuming that the latter car will slow down on nearing the crossing.[1a]

---

[10] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 488, s. 78 A.L.R. 1198.

[11] Neumann v. Apter, 95 Conn. 695, 112 A. 350, 21 A.L.R. 970.

Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 488, s. 78 A.L.R. 1198.

In an action for injuries to a pedestrian who, while crossing the street, was struck by a car which failed to keep to the right of the center of the intersection, as required by statute, it was held, in Stewart v. Olson, 188 Wis. 487, 206 N. W. 909, 44 A.L.R. 1292, that the center of intersection of the street is the point where the center line of one street meets the center line of the other street, both lines being drawn parallel to and halfway between the curbs and projected to the point of meeting, and not a point on a line drawn from the end of the sidewalk or any part of the sidewalk.

[12] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 488, s. 78 A.L.R. 1198.

[13] Annotation: 31 A.L.R. 488, s. 78 A.L.R. 1198.

[14] Barrett v. Alamito Dairy Co. 105 Neb. 658, 181 N. W. 550, 21 A.L.R. 966.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 974, s. 37 A.L.R. 493, 47 A.L.R. 595.

[15] As to regulations relating to fire departments, etc., see infra, § 294.

As to regulations relating to a pedestrian's right of way, see infra, § 293.

[16] Primock v. Goldenberg, 161 Minn. 160, 200 N. W. 920, 37 A.L.R. 484; Mapp v. Holland, 138 Va. 519, 122 S. E. 430, 37 A.L.R. 478; Burdette v. Henson, 96 W. Va. 31, 122 S. E. 356, 37 A.L.R. 489.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 975, s. 37 A.L.R. 494, 47 A.L.R. 596.

[17] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 975, s. 37 A.L.R. 494, 47 A.L.R. 596.

[18] See supra, § 163.

[19] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 975, s. 37 A.L.R. 494, 47 A.L.R. 596.

[20] As to the extent of a pedestrian's right, see infra, § 293.

The cases have characterized the right of way of the driver approaching from the right as an absolute right,[2] especially under some statutes.[3] There are, however, limitations upon this right. The car approaching from the right must be proceeding lawfully.[4]

It is generally only when the cars reach the crossing at the same time that the driver approaching from the right has the right of way.[5]

The right is also further qualified by the limitation that if, just as the driver who has the right of way is approaching or entering the intersection, he discovers that the driver of another vehicle not having the right of way is not yielding the right and has placed himself in a perilous situation, it is his duty to use ordinary care not to injure the other, after becoming aware of his perilous situation.[6]

§ 292. As between Horse-drawn Vehicle and Automobile.—Right of way exists between an automobile and a horse-drawn vehicle. The law does not require the drivers of wagons or other horse-drawn vehicles, simply because they are slower, to stop at a crossing to let automobiles pass with undiminished speed.[7] The view is taken that a greater duty rests upon the driver of an automobile than upon the driver of a horse-drawn vehicle to avoid a collision.[8]

§ 293. As between Pedestrian and Automobile.—According to the general view, the rights of a pedestrian and of an automobile driver in the use of a street at a regular crossing are equal; the one which first reaches the crossing and occupies it has a superior right as against the other.[9] Each must exercise ordinary care to avoid a collision.[10] The pedestrian is under no legal duty to give way to automobiles.[11]

By the terms of some statutes and ordinances, pedestrians are given the right of way over vehicles at street intersections.[12] The pedestrian's right under such a statute or ordinance is not absolute, but relative; he must still exercise ordinary care and prudence under the circumstances,[13] and this is true even though he is proceeding according to traffic signals.[14]

---

[1] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 975, s. 37 A.L.R. 494, 47 A.L.R. 596.
And see infra, § 297, as to lawfulness of driving, speed, and distance.

[1a] Aikens v. City of Kingston, 53 Ont. L. Rep. 41 [1923] D. L. R. 869, 13 B. R. C. 469.

[2] Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 838.

[3] Morris v. Bloomgren, 127 Ohio St. 147, 187 N. E. 2, 89 A.L.R. 831.

[4] Ibid.

[5] See infra, § 297.

[6] Morris v. Bloomgren, 127 Ohio St. 147, 187 N. E. 2, 89 A.L.R. 831.
Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 838.
The fact that the driver of a vehicle approaching from the right, and having the right of way under the statute, would, in the exercise of such right, not only put himself in jeopardy, but would also endanger the safety of a person who unlawfully refused to recognize that right, does not operate to destroy the right, though to exercise it may be an act of gross negligence. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 975, s. 37 A.L.R. 494, 47 A.L.R. 596.

[7] Barrett v. Alamito Dairy Co. 105 Neb. 658, 181 N. W. 550, 21 A.L.R. 966.
Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[8] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[9] Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505.
Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[10] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[11] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[12] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[13] Horwitz v. Eurove, 129 Ohio St. 8, 193 N. E. 644, 96 A.L.R. 782.

In street intersections controlled by traffic lights or signals, the pedestrian must, of course, observe the lights. Starting to cross against traffic signals constitutes negligence.[15] Where a pedestrian starts across an intersecting street in obedience to the lights or traffic signal, he has the right of way over vehicles on the street until he reaches the other side, even though before he reaches such side, the light or traffic signal changes.[16]

The view has been taken that statutory rules governing the right of way of vehicles at street intersections do not apply to pedestrians and automobiles crossing each other's line of travel at a street intersection.[17]

§ 294. Right of Way of Police and Fire Apparatus, Ambulances, etc.[18]— By the terms of some statutes and ordinances, police, fire department, fire patrol, and United States mail vehicles, ambulances, and sometimes "emergency vehicles," have the right of way in any street.[19] Such statutes and ordinances are valid.[20] They do not, however, protect the driver of any such vehicle from consequences of his arbitrary exercise of the right, or from liability for injuries wilfully inflicted.[1]

To impose upon a traveler on a highway the duty of giving the right of way to fire apparatus going to a fire, notice to him of the approach of the apparatus is necessary, and he must also be given a reasonable opportunity to stop or otherwise yield the right of way.[2]

§ 295. Effect of Ignorance of Regulations.—The fact that an operator of a motor vehicle does not know of regulations governing the right of way at street or highway intersections constitutes no excuse for failing to observe them.[3]

§ 296. Streets or Roads Subject to Rule.—Statutes and ordinances such as those under consideration obviously apply where there are two intersecting streets. They are not, however, limited to the crossing of two streets, but relate to the intersection of three or more streets.[4] Such a statute is applicable where a driver attempts to cross the street along which he is driving in order to enter a cross street which does not continue on the other side of the first-mentioned street.[5]

---

[14] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[15] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[16] Riddel v. Lyon, 124 Wash. 146, 213 P. 487, 37 A.L.R. 486.
Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[17] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 976, s. 37 A.L.R. 497, 47 A.L.R. 599.

[18] See supra, § 89, as to general exemption.

[19] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 978, s. 37 A.L.R. 500, 47 A.L.R. 601.

Where a collision occurred at a street intersection between the fire insurance patrol and a truck of the fire department, the court construed statutes giving the fire department the right of way on the streets when going to a fire and a statute giving the apparatus of the fire patrol the same right of way while going to a fire as the fire department, but providing that nothing in the act should be so construed as to lessen in any way the authority of the fire department, to give the paramount right of way to the fire department, holding that the right of that department was wholly unaffected by the right granted to the patrol. Coleman v. Fire Ins. Patrol, 122 La. 626, 48 So. 130, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 810, 16 Ann. Cas. 1217.

[20] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 978, s. 37 A.L.R. 500, 47 A.L.R. 601.

[1] West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

[2] Balthasar v. Pacific Electric R. Co. 187 Cal. 302, 202 P. 37, 19 A.L.R. 452.
Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 978, s. 37 A.L.R. 500, 47 A.L.R. 601.

[3] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 979, s. 37 A.L.R. 500, and 47 A.L.R. 601.

[4] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 979, s. 37 A.L.R. 500, and 47 A.L.R. 601.

[5] Holman v. Ivins, 150 Minn. 285, 184 N. W. 1026, 21 A.L.R. 964.

Another statute requiring vehicles, in turning into an intersecting street or in making a turn at an intersection, to keep to the right of the center thereof was held

The general question as to what constitutes the intersection of a street within the meaning of traffic statutes or regulations is discussed elsewhere in this article.[6] Here we are concerned only with that question as it relates to the right of way at street intersections. By the "intersection" of public streets or highways, as that word is used in a statute giving the right of way to a vehicle approaching from the right at such place, is meant the space of the street or highway common to both streets or highways, and not merely the intersection of the centers of the streets.[7] A road which merely enters, but does not cross, another, is an intersecting road within the meaning of such regulations, especially where it enters at right angles.[8]

§ 297. Effect of Speed, Lawfulness of Driving, and Distance.—The right of way at a crossing is not an absolute right to be exercised in all cases, regardless of circumstances, but is subject to, and affected by, the relative speed of the cars and the distances thereof from the point of intersection. Such right, whether given by law or established by custom, has no proper application except where the vehicles on the intersecting streets approach the crossing so nearly at the same time and at such rate of speed that if both proceed without regard to each other, a collision or interference between them is reasonably to be apprehended.[9] Moreover, these regulations contemplate a situation where the vehicles are being driven on the prescribed side of the road and within the prescribed speed limit, and do not apply when one or both are being driven in violation of the statutory regulations in these respects.[10]

The person not having the right of way at a street intersection is not precluded from crossing the intersection by the fact that he sees other cars approaching on the street having the right of way if such cars are at such a distance as reasonably to indicate no danger of interference or collision.[11] The driver of the vehicle not having the right of way is not warranted in taking close chances; if there is reasonable danger of collision if both proceed, then it is his duty to yield the right of way.[12] The person who has the right of way must proceed in a lawful manner as to speed.[13] In fact, his speed must not be excessive under the circumstances.[14] He is not relieved of the duty of exercising ordinary care to avoid collision with vehicles approaching from his left.[15]

§ 298. Care Required by One Having Right of Way.—The mere fact that not to suspend the operation of the right-of-way statute while the turn was being made. Ibid.

---

[6] See § 288 supra.

[7] Neumann v. Apter, 95 Conn. 695, 112 A. 350, 21 A.L.R. 970.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 979, s. 37 A.L.R. 500, and 47 A.L.R. 601.

[8] Mapp v. Holland, 138 Va. 519, 122 S. W. 430, 37 A.L.R. 478.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 979, s. 37 A.L.R. 500, and 47 A.L.R. 601.

[9] Morris v. Bloomgren, 127 Ohio St. 147, 187 N. E. 2, 89 A.L.R. 831, disapproving of Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 975, 982, s. 37 A.L.R 494, 502, and 47 A.L.R. 596, 603.

[10] Garrett v. Byerly, 155 Wash. 351, 284 P. 343, 68 A.L.R. 254.

[11] Burdette v. Henson, 96 W. Va. 31, 122 S. E. 356, 37 A.L.R. 489.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 975, 982, s. 37 A.L.R. 494, 502, and 47 A.L.R. 596, 602.

[12] Gibbs v. Almstrom, 145 Minn. 35, 176 N. W. 173, 11 A.L.R. 227.

[13] Morris v. Bloomgren, 127 Ohio St. 147, 187 N. E. 2, 89 A.L.R. 831, disapproving of Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 838.

[14] Primock v. Goldenberg, 161 Minn. 160, 200 N. W. 920, 37 A.L.R. 484.

The fact that the person not having the right of way entered the intersection when he observed the person having the right of way approaching 125 feet away at 35 miles an hour—a speed at which, if both proceeded into the intersection, there would be a collision—does not require him to yield the right of way; he has a right to assume that since he is first on the intersection, the person having the right of way will reduce his speed so as to permit crossing in safety. Ibid.

[15] See infra, § 298.

one vehicle has the right of way over another at a street intersection does not relieve the driver of the vehicle thus favored from the duty of exercising due care not to injure others at the street intersection.[16] He must not approach the intersection at an unlawful rate of speed or at an excessive speed.[17] He is bound to look to the left as well as to the right for approaching vehicles.[18] If he has reason to think that because of the other driver's negligence he will not be accorded the right of way, it becomes his duty to do what he can to avoid collision, as by stopping or turning aside, failure to do which is contributory negligence.[19] This rule applies to the drivers of police patrols, fire apparatus, ambulances, etc., which may be given the right of way.[20]

§ 299. Right to Assume Care on Part of Other Traveler.—The driver having the right of way,[1] as well as the driver not having such right of way,[2] may assume, in the absence of something to put him on notice to the contrary, that the other traveler will exercise ordinary care.

c. INTERSECTION OF ARTERIAL OR OTHER FAVORED HIGHWAY BY UNFAVORED HIGHWAY

§ 300. Generally.—It has now become quite common to designate certain streets and highways as "stop streets" or "arterial highways." Traffic coming into such streets or highways from intersecting streets or highways is usually required to stop, or at least to take some precautions, before entering the same. These streets or highways are sometimes designated arbitrarily by name; in other instances streets or highways running in a certain direction—as, for example, north and south or east and west—and in still other instances those having street car tracks, are made preferential streets or highways.

In the case of streets which do not run exactly north and south or east and west, that which comes the nearest to the preferential direction has the preference.[3]

---

[16] Primock v. Goldenberg, 161 Minn. 160, 200 N. W. 920, 37 A.L.R. 484; Thrapp v. Meyers, 114 Neb. 689, 209 N. W. 238, 47 A.L.R. 585; Erwin v. Traud, 90 N. J. L. 289, 100 A. 184, L.R.A.1917D, 690; Webber v. Park Auto. Transp. Co. 138 Wash. 325, 244 P. 718, 47 A.L.R. 590; Burdette v. Henson, 96 W. Va. 31, 122 S. E. 356, 37 A.L.R. 489.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 988, s. 37 A.L.R. 509, and 47 A.L.R. 613.

The fact that a driver has the right of way under a statute, does not of itself justify him in holding to his course and in assuming up to the moment of collision that the driver of an automobile approaching from the left will yield to him the right of way which is properly his; his conduct in proceeding, having misjudged the situation, when he has ample time to avoid collision is such contributory negligence as to bar recovery, although the driver of the other vehicle was negligent in failing to observe him in time to permit him to take precedence. Carter v. Vadeboncoeur, 32 Manitoba L. R. 102, 11 B. R. C. 1113, wherein the court said: "The statutory rule of the road does not abrogate the principles of the common law which govern a person using a highway, and impose upon him the obligation 'sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas;' the rule does afford an evidential test as to the negligence of one or other driver, which may be decisive in many cases in fixing responsibility, but it does not justify a driver in taking the risk of a collision which he might easily avoid under circumstances which would indicate to a man of ordinary prudence that an accident was likely to occur."

[17] See supra, § 297.

[18] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 988, s. 37 A.L.R. 509, and 47 A.L.R. 613.

[19] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 988, s. 37 A.L.R. 509, and 47 A.L.R. 613.

[20] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 988, s. 37 A.L.R. 509, and 47 A.L.R. 613.

A statute providing that "patrol wagons, ambulances, [etc.], shall, in all cases, with due regard to the safety of the public, have right of way . . . but this act shall not protect the driver of any such vehicle from consequences resulting from the arbitrary exercise of this right or for injuries wilfully inflicted," does not restrict the civil liability of the driver of a private ambulance for injuries sustained at a street intersection to the causes enumerated by the statute, or relieve him from liability for mere common-law negligence, as in driving at an excessive rate of speed. West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

[1] Aikens v. City of Kingston, 53 Ont. L. Rep. 41 [1923] D. L. R. 869, 13 B. R. C. 469.
Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 992, s. 37 A.L.R. 517, and 47 A.L.R. 622.

[2] Primock v. Goldenberg, 161 Minn. 160, 200 N. W. 920, 37 A.L.R. 484; Burdette v. Henson, 96 W. Va. 31, 122 S. E. 356, 37 A.L.R. 489.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 988, s. 37 A.L.R. 509, and 47 A.L.R. 613.

A preference in certain streets or highways must be created by statute or ordinance. In the absence of such a statute or ordinance, there is no preference—as, for example, between hard surface roads and intersecting unpaved roads.[4]

The effect of conflicts between municipal ordinances and state statutes in regard to stop streets and arterial highways is governed by the general rules applicable in such situations.[5]

§ 301. When Statute or Ordinance Comes into Operation.—The preference in the case of arterial highways or stop streets and other highways or streets comes into operation only when cars approach such an intersection at approximately the same time and under such circumstances as to make it reasonably necessary that one yield the right of way to the other.[6] In some jurisdictions the driver on the unfavored highway who reaches the intersection in advance of the other is not required to yield, although the failure to yield may serve in some measure to interfere with the passage of a machine traveling the dominant highway.[7]

§ 302. Rights and Duties of Driver on Favored Highway.—The driver on the favored highway does not have the absolute right of way in the sense that he is not bound to exercise any care toward traffic on intersecting highways; he is bound to exercise ordinary care.[8] Some cases make the right of way a little more "absolute" and say that he is entitled to proceed uninterruptedly in a lawful manner[9] and is bound to exercise ordinary care only after discovery of the refusal of the other driver to yield the right of way.[10] He may assume that the driver of a car on the unfavored highway will observe the law. If that requires him to stop, the driver on the favored highway may assume that he will stop.[11]

The driver on the favored highway can be charged with negligence in his conduct only from the time that he has knowledge that the driver on the unfavored highway does not intend to obey the law; after such knowledge he is bound to use the care of an ordinarily prudent person.[12]

§ 303. Rights and Duties of Driver on Unfavored Highway.—The duty of the driver on the unfavored highway is usually prescribed by statute and ordinance. One common requirement is that the driver on such street or highway must bring his car to a stop before entering the arterial highway. And some of the requirements are that the vehicle must be brought to a full stop before entering.[13] A regulation merely requiring a "stop" has been interpreted to require the vehicle on the unfavored highway to be brought to a full stop.[14]

---

[3] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1198, s. 81 A.L.R. 185.

[4] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1198, s. 81 A.L.R. 185.

[5] See supra, §§ 68 et seq.

An ordinance prescribing that vehicles on avenues running in a certain direction shall have the right of way over vehicles crossing such avenues at intersections does not conflict with a statute fixing the right of way in case of vehicles turning into one street from another. Seager v. Foster, 185 Iowa, 32, 169 N. W. 681, 8 A.L.R. 690.

[6] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1199, s. 81 A.L.R. 185.

[7] Bradley v. Schmidt, 223 Ky. 784, 4 S. W. (2d) 703, 57 A.L.R. 1100.

[8] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1199, s. 81 A.L.R. 185.

[9] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186, as modified in Morris v. Bloomgren, 127 Ohio St. 147, 187 N. E. 2, 89 A.L.R. 831.

[10] Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 838.

In Morris v. Bloomgren, 127 Ohio St. 147, 187 N. E. 2, 89 A.L.R. 831, the Supreme Court of Ohio disapproved of some of the language in Heidle v. Baldwin which denied the vehicle approaching from the right his statutory privilege of proceeding uninterruptedly if it proceeded in a lawful manner and by placing the drivers of both vehicles upon an equal plane in approaching an intersection. The text, therefore, states the rule of Heidle v. Baldwin as modified by Morris v. Bloomgren.

[11] Keir v. Trager, 134 Kan. 505, 7 P. (2d) 49, 81 A.L.R. 181.

[12] Ibid

Whether, under the statute or ordinance, he is required to stop or whether he is merely required to give the right of way to the driver on the arterial highway, it is his duty to look both to right and left; and if a vehicle is approaching on the main or arterial highway, it is his duty to wait until such vehicle has passed,[15] unless a prudent person would have reasonable ground to believe that such other vehicle proceeding at a lawful speed is so far distant from the intersection that he could safely cross in advance thereof.[16] It is not the duty of such driver whose view is obstructed by a bluff to stop his car and get out and ascertain if there is any approaching traffic on the main highway.[17]

Generally speaking, it is the duty of one approaching an arterial highway to stop at a point somewhere between the stop sign and the highway where he may effectively observe traffic approaching on the arterial highway.[18] It has been held sufficient if the stop is made at the curb line, although the vehicle thereby crosses a line marked for the use of pedestrians, where the ordinance defines a street as that portion of a highway open to the use of vehicles.[19]

After the driver on the nonfavored highway has stopped, he may, in the exercise of due care, then proceed into the intersection; the right-of-way rule, at least that provided for by a statute giving a vehicle approaching another from the right, then comes into operation.[20]

§ 304. Effect of Failure to Comply with Statute or Ordinance.—The effect of the failure on the part of one or the other of the drivers to yield the right of way at the intersection of cross streets with arterial highways or stop streets depends upon the general view prevailing in the jurisdiction as to the effect of violation of a statute or ordinance as negligence.[1] The view has been taken in a jurisdiction which adheres to the rule that the violation of a statute imposing not a specific requirement to do or to omit to do a definite act, but rather a rule of conduct, applies to a statute giving the vehicle on the main thoroughfare a preference which amounts to a privilege not to be exercised in a total disregard of the rights of others.[2] But the violation of an ordinance which requires the vehicle on the intersecting highway to be brought to a full stop is negligence per se.[3] Frequently a jury question is presented in these cases.[4]

---

[13] Carrigan v. Ashwell, 147 Wash. 597, 266 P. 686, 58 A.L.R. 1194.

[14] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1201, s. 81 A.L.R. 186.

[15] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1199, s. 81 A.L.R. 185.

[16] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1199, s. 81 A.L.R. 185.

[17] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1204, s. 81 A.L.R. 192.

[18] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1201, s. 81 A.L.R. 186.

[19] Carrigan v. Ashwell, 147 Wash. 597, 266 P. 686, 58 A.L.R. 1194.

[20] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1204, s. 81 A.L.R. 192.

[1] See supra, § 163.

[2] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

[3] Ibid.

[4] Upon issues of negligence and contributory negligence, where the evidence is in conflict as to the speed of each of the vehicles and the evidence is likewise in conflict as to the distance of each of the vehicles from the intersection at the time when each driver first had reasonable opportunity to observe the approach of the other, elements are presented which the triers of the facts must consider in their estimate of conduct. Ibid.

d. Private Crossings or Driveways

§ 305. Turning into Driveway.[5]—A person must, in turning into a driveway, exercise care toward pedestrians who may be in the course of travel on the sidewalk crossing such driveway.[6] In fact, it has been said that a driver must have his car under control so as to avoid striking persons along the street or crossing his line of travel.[7] Such care may, and ordinarily does, require a warning to pedestrians.[8] At night such warning may be made by the lights or by the horn.[9] The driver cannot be found to be negligent in failing to sound his horn to warn pedestrians of his approach if, in the exercise of his reasonable judgment, the shining of his lights upon the ground is adequate for that purpose.[10]

As to vehicular traffic in the street, an automobile driver is likewise bound to exercise care.[11]

§ 306. Entering Street from Driveway.[12]—Toward vehicles using the streets the view has been taken that one coming from a private driveway must yield the right of way.[13] It is the duty of the driver who enters a street or highway from his private drive to look for approaching vehicles, and not to proceed into the street or highway if he sees one coming, unless as a reasonably prudent and cautious person he believes and has a right to believe that he can pass in front of the other in safety.[14] The statutory rule of the road giving vehicles approaching from the right at road intersections the right of way does not apply in favor of vehicles entering a public highway, or street from a private driveway.[15]

If, in entering the street from a driveway, he crosses a sidewalk, he is bound to exercise care toward pedestrians thereon.[16] The fact that he did not know that a pedestrian walking along the sidewalk was somewhat deaf and with impaired eyesight does not in any way minimize his responsibility.[17]

§ 307. Duty toward Others Using Driveway.—A person backing an automobile from a garage through a driveway into the street cannot be said, as a matter of law, to be negligent because he did not discover the presence of a delivery truck which had been driven into his driveway to make a delivery. The facts and circumstances of the case must be considered, including the fact that the driveway was a private one not frequented by the general public.[18]

e. Reliance upon, or Disregard of, Traffic Signals

§ 308. As between Vehicle and Pedestrian.—A pedestrian who enters a street intersection to cross a street under the direction of a traffic officer or in accord with a traffic signal has the right of way over vehicular traffic until he reaches the opposite curb, notwithstanding a change in the signal while he is in the act of crossing.[19] While crossing with the traffic signal in his favor he is not bound to continue to look for approaching vehicles as he crosses,[20] even though before he reaches the other side the traffic signal changes.[1] The drivers of automobiles approaching on intersecting streets in accord with the traffic signal are not relieved of the duty of exercising reasonable care for the safety of persons in the street,[1a] especially persons who have started to cross before the signal changed and have not yet completed the crossing.[2] It is substantive evidence of negligence for an automobile driver to start his car when the traffic signal is given while persons who have started across the street on a crossing with traffic signals in their favor are still in the act of crossing.[3]

---

[5] As to turning in traffic, see infra, §§ 323 et seq.

[6] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 946.

[7] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 946.

[8] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 946.

[9] Henderson v. O'Leary, 177 Wis. 130, 187 N. W. 994, 24 A.L.R. 942.

[10] Ibid.
Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 946.

[11] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 946.
As to duties where vehicles are proceeding in the same direction, see generally, supra, §§ 280 et seq.
As to duties where vehicles are coming from opposite directions, see supra, § 286.

[12] As to backing from driveway, see infra, §§ 328 et seq.

[13] Snibbe v. Robinson (Surratt v. Robinson) 151 Md. 658, 135 A. 838, 50 A.L.R. 280.
Annotation: 50 A.L.R. 283.

[14] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 948; 50 A.L.R. 283.

[15] Snibbe v. Robinson (Surratt v. Robinson) 151 Md. 658, 135 A. 838, 50 A.L.R. 280.
Annotation: 50 A.L.R. 283.

[16] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 948.

[17] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 948.

[18] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 948.

§ 309. As between Vehicles.—Similar rules apply as between vehicles at intersections governed by traffic signals as apply between a vehicle and an automobile. A car having started to cross in accord with the signal light is entitled to complete the crossing notwithstanding a change of lights.[4] A correlative duty rests upon the automobiles approaching on intersecting streets after the change of lights to exercise due care to avoid hitting such vehicles.[5]

§ 310. Disregard of Signal.—A motorist must have his car under control so that he can obey traffic signals.[6] He can be held guilty of negligence if he moves against the signal, even though he proceeds slowly.[7] These rules apply as between a vehicle and a pedestrian,[8] traffic officers or flagmen and vehicles,[9] and as between vehicles.[10] It has been held that although municipal authorities have no authority to set up stop signs which override the statutory right of way, yet so long as the stop signals are in position the public have a right to rely on them and those who decline to obey them are guilty of actionable negligence if injury is caused by their so doing.[10a]

f. CARE AS BETWEEN STREET CARS AND AUTOMOBILES AT STREET CROSSINGS

§ 311. Generally.—In the absence of special regulations by statute or ordinance, street cars and automobiles have equal rights at street intersections. The right of each must be exercised with due regard to the right of the other in a reasonable and careful manner.[11] There is, however, some authority to the effect that even in the absence of statute or ordinance, a street car has the right of way at the intersection.[12]

---

[19] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963; Riddel v. Lyon, 124 Wash. 146, 213 P. 487, 37 A.L.R. 486.
Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 982, s. 37 A.L.R. 502, and 47 A.L.R. 603; 75 A.L.R. 970.

[20] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.

[1] Riddel v. Lyon, 124 Wash. 146, 213 P. 487, 37 A.L.R. 486.
Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 982, s. 37 A.L.R. 502, and 47 A.L.R. 603; 75 A.L.R. 970.

[1a] Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 228.

[2] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963; Melville v. Rollwage, 171 Ky. 607, 188 S. W. 638, L.R.A.1917B, 133; Riddel v. Lyon, 124 Wash. 146, 213 P. 487, 37 A.L.R. 486.
Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 982, s. 37 A.L.R. 502, and 47 A.L.R. 603; 75 A.L.R. 970.

[3] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.

[4] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 970.

[5] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 970.
As to stopping in accord with traffic signal, see § 281, supra.

[6] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.

[7] Ibid.
Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 232.

[8] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 975.

[9] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 977.

[10] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 977.

[10a] Nelson v. Dennis, 37 Manitoba L. Rep. 553, 16 B. R. C. 214.

[11] Bradley v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 161 Minn. 322, 201 N. W. 606, 46 A.L.R. 993; Norman v. Charlotte Electric R. Co. 167 N. C. 533, 83 S. E. 835, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 508.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 217, s. 46 A.L.R. 1001.

The emergency rule[13] applies as between the automobilist and the street car.[14]

§ 312. As Affected by Statutes and Ordinances on Right of Way.—Statutes and ordinances frequently grant a right of way.[15] There is some difference of opinion as to whether statutes or ordinances regulating traffic generally and giving the right of way to vehicles approaching from the right or giving priority to traffic in a certain direction apply as between street cars and automobiles,[16] some authorities holding that these statutes and ordinances do apply,[17] and others holding that they do not.[18]

§ 313. Care of Automobilist.—The automobilist, in coming into an intersection through which street cars run, is bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence; it is sometimes said that it is his duty to take care commensurate with the circumstances.[19] Another statement of the rule is that he must act as a reasonably prudent man would under the circumstances, or, as expressed in other words, with the care and prudence which the majority of men would exercise under the same or similar circumstances.[20] He is not, however, held to that high degree of care which is required in crossing the right of way of an ordinary steam railroad running through the country.[1]

A driver has the right to assume that a street car will be lawfully operated, until he has notice to the contrary.[2] He is not required to apprehend the speed of a car exceeding the limit fixed by ordinance, or that the motorman has lost control of it and will fail to signal its approach.[3]

A motorist must recognize any right of way that is created by statute or ordinance.[4] Also, he must obey the directions of a traffic officer or traffic signals.[5]

The view is taken in some cases that it is the duty of the automobilist to give warning of his approach.[6]

In the ordinary case, the negligence of the automobilist is for the jury,[7] although in some cases negligence is found as a matter of law.[8]

---

[12] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 217, s. 46 A.L.R. 1002.

[13] As to which, see supra, §§ 171 et seq.

[14] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 251, s. 46 A.L.R. 1026.

[15] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 222, s. 46 A.L.R. 1003.

[16] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 222, s. 46 A.L.R. 1003.

[17] Bradley v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 161 Minn. 322, 201 N. W. 606, 46 A.L.R. 993.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 222, s. 46 A.L.R. 1004.

[18] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 222, s. 46 A.L.R. 1004.

[19] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 225, s. 46 A.L.R. 1005.

[20] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 225, s. 46 A.L.R. 1005.

[1] Union Traction Co. v. Moneyhun, 192 Ind. 288, 136 N. E. 18, 28 A.L.R. 211; Bradley v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 161 Minn. 322, 201 N. W. 606, 46 A.L.R. 993.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 225, s. 46 A.L.R. 1005.

[2] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 253, s. 46 A.L.R. 1026.

[3] Union Traction Co. v. Moneyhun, 192 Ind. 288, 136 N. E. 18, 28 A.L.R. 211.

[4] Bradley v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 161 Minn. 322, 201 N. W. 606, 46 A.L.R. 993.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 227, s. 46 A.L.R. 1008.

[5] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 227.

[6] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 228.

[7] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 257, s. 46 A.L.R. 1028.

[8] The cases in which negligence is found as a matter of law are usually those cases where the automobilist drives in front of a street car which is clearly visible to him, especially where the car is moving rapidly. In many of the cases the automobilist was the plaintiff, and his negligence was held contributory, so as to prevent recovery. Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 264, s. 46 A.L.R. 1032.

Failure to look before entering upon the tracks is also frequently held to constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law. Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 264, s. 46 A.L.R. 1032.

§ 314. —Stopping, Looking, and Listening.—It is the duty of the driver of an automobile approaching a street intersection over which street cars are operated to be on the lookout for an approaching car while he is still in a place of safety.[9] The principle of look and listen, of general application in cases of steam railroad crossings, however, is not applied in its strict sense to the crossing at a street intersection of street railway tracks.[10] The driver is not in every case required as a matter of law to stop in order to look and listen for an approaching car,[11] although there may be circumstances in which he must stop.[12] Where there are obstructions to his view, he may be required to listen and even to stop.[13] He is not, however, required to get out of his car, go forward, and look from a place where he can see along the tracks.[14]

The driver is not bound to look at any special place.[15] He must, however, look where his observations will be of some avail.[16] Where the view is obstructed, he must look from a position from which he can see.[17] In some jurisdictions it has been held to be his duty to look immediately before entering on the tracks.[18] These precautions must be continued as he crosses. An automobilist cannot approach a street railway crossing a place of known danger and, after looking once from a point of safety to ascertain if a car is coming, and seeing none, pay no further attention to his safety and proceed blindly across, trusting to the railway operatives to obey their orders and the rules of the road.[19] The fact that a street car has stopped at the customary place to discharge and take on passengers is no invitation to an automobilist to cross ahead of it so as to relieve him from continuing to look.[20] Where the motorist has the statutory right of way, he cannot be expected continuously to watch a street car which he sees approaching from the left in anticipation of negligence on the part of the motorman; he has a right to assume that the car will be properly operated and will yield to him the preference.[1]

The cases are not agreed as to whether failure to look and listen amounts to negligence as a matter of law or whether it is only evidence of negligence.[2]

§ 315. —Speed.—The speed must be no greater than is consistent with safety; the driver should have his automobile under control.[3] He is not, however, required to run at such a speed as will enable him to stop or slow down in time to avoid street cars running in excess of the limits fixed by ordinance.[4] The conflict of authority which exists generally as to the effect of the violation of a statute or ordinance[5] exists in the case of the violation of a statute or ordinance relating to speed, some authorities holding that such violation constitutes negligence per se,[6] and others holding that it is evidence of negligence merely.[7] A distinction is likewise made in some cases between the violation of a statute and the violation of an ordinance, while others deny such distinction.[8]

---

[9] Union Traction Co. v. Moneyhun, 192 Ind. 288, 136 N. E. 18, 28 A.L.R. 211.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 229, s. 46 A.L.R. 1008.

[10] Union Traction Co. v. Moneyhun, 192 Ind. 288, 136 N. E. 18, 28 A.L.R. 211.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 229, s. 46 A.L.R. 1008.

[11] Union Traction Co. v. Moneyhun, 192 Ind. 288, 136 N. E. 18, 28 A.L.R. 211.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 248, s. 46 A.L.R. 1021.

[12] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 248, s. 46 A.L.R. 1021.

[13] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 229, 248, s. 46 A.L.R. 1008, 1021.

[14] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 234, s. 46 A.L.R. 1011.

[15] Union Traction Co. v. Moneyhun, 192 Ind. 288, 136 N. E. 18, 28 A.L.R. 211.

[16] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 234, s. 46 A.L.R. 1011.

[17] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 235, s. 46 A.L.R. 1014.

[18] Frey v. Rhode Island Co. 37 R. I. 96, 91 A. 1, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 920.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 234, s. 46 A.L.R. 1011.

[19] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 235, s. 46 A.L.R. 1014.

[20] Dering v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 171 Wis. 8, 176 N. W. 343, 14 A.L.R. 809.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 811.

[1] Bradley v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 161 Minn. 322, 201 N. W. 606, 46 A.L.R. 993.

[2] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 229, s. 46 A.L.R. 1008.

[3] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 244, s. 46 A.L.R. 1020.

[4] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 244, s. 46 A.L.R. 1020.

[5] See supra, § 163.

§ 316. Care of Street Car Company.—Street car companies are held to a degree of care and caution commensurate with the situation in crossing streets in cities where a large number of automobilists are usually found crossing the tracks; this is sometimes said to be a greater degree of caution than is necessary at other places.[9] However, the mere fact that a collision takes place between a street car and an automobile at a street intersection does not establish the fact of negligence of the street car company. Negligence is not presumed; it must be proved.[10]

The operators of street cars are not bound to anticipate that the driver of an automobile will not take proper precautions for his own safety.[11]

Ordinarily the issue of negligence is for the jury.[12]

§ 317. —Notice of Approach.—As a general rule, it is the common-law duty of those in charge of a street car, when approaching a street intersection, to give notice of the approach by reasonable warnings.[13] However, where the driver of an automobile sees the street car coming, there is no need of warning.[14]

§ 318. —Lookout.—The operator of a street car must keep a lookout for automobile traffic and have his car under control.[15] Under so-called "vigilant watch" ordinances requiring a vigilant watch for all vehicles, etc., and, on the first appearance of danger to them, stopping the car in the shortest time and space possible, something more than ordinary care is required of motormen, although at certain points in a travel-congested street, the degree of care required by the ordinance is practically the same as that required at common law.[16]

The care required may necessitate stopping the car in certain situations.[17] However, it is not the duty of a street car operator to stop or slacken speed every time an automobile is seen approaching the crossing with apparent intent to cross; he may properly assume that the automobilist will exercise due care for his own safety.[18]

---

[6] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 244, s. 46 A.L.R. 1020.

[7] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 244, s. 46 A.L.R. 1020.

[8] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 244, s. 46 A.L.R. 1020.

[9] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 267, s. 46 A.L.R. 1034.

[10] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 267, s. 46 A.L.R. 1034.

[11] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 268, s. 46 A.L.R. 1034.

[12] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 271, s. 46 A.L.R. 1035.

[13] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 273, s. 46 A.L.R. 1038.

[14] Stoker v. Tri-City R. Co. 182 Iowa, 1090, 165 N. W. 30, L.R.A.1918F, 515.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 273, s. 46 A.L.R. 1039.

[15] Stoker v. Tri-City R. Co. 182 Iowa, 1090, 165 N. W. 30, L.R.A.1918F, 515; Gulesserian v. Madison R. Co. 172 Wis. 400, 179 N. W. 573, 15 A.L.R. 406.
Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 275, s. 46 A.L.R. 1040.

[16] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 275, s. 46 A.L.R. 1041.

[17] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 281, s. 46 A.L.R. 1045.

[18] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 282, s. 46 A.L.R. 1047.

Failure of a motorman to slacken the speed of his car in recognition of the automobilist's statutory right of way, he being on the right, is held sufficient to justify the jury in concluding that the company was negligent. Bradley v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 161 Minn. 322, 201 N. W. 606, 46 A.L.R. 993.

§ 319. —Speed.—Statutes and ordinances frequently fix the speed of street cars. However, a street car should maintain a reasonable speed and one which makes it possible for the operator to have his car under control, even in the absence of statutory or municipal regulation.[19] The mere fact that street car was not exceeding the speed limit fixed by statute or ordinance is not conclusive upon the question whether it was running at a negligently excessive rate of speed, since a speed less than a maximum allowed may at certain times and places be negligent.[20]

The general rules as to the effect of the violation of a statute or ordinance regulating the speed of a street car at street intersections as a ground of negligence is governed by the general rules on this subject.[1] Some cases take the view that such a violation constitutes negligence per se,[2] while others hold that it is only evidence of negligence.[3] The distinction between violation of a statutory regulation and violation of a municipal violation is also drawn in these cases.[4]

§ 320. —Doctrine of Last Clear Chance.—The doctrine of last clear chance operates in cases of collisions between automobiles and street cars. Thus, if the operator of the street car, knowing of the perilous position of the automobile, could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have prevented the collision, the street car company may be held liable, notwithstanding the negligence of the automobilist.[5] In some states, however, the doctrine does not prevail.[6]

7. Measure of Care at Railroad Crossings

§ 321. Generally.—An automobilist, in approaching a steam railroad crossing, must exercise such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the circumstances.[7] There are two rules as to what constitutes such care. According to one rule, commonly known as the Pennsylvania rule, it is the duty of the automobilist under all circumstances to stop, look, and listen for approaching trains, engines, or cars before crossing a railroad track.[8] In other jurisdictions the rule is not so stringent. Circumstances enter into the determination of the duty, and they may in some cases require the automobilist to stop, look, and listen.[9] In those jurisdictions which adhere to the hard and fast rule that it is the duty of the traveler to stop, look, and listen, failure to do so is negligence as a matter of law.[10] In some jurisdictions which adhere to a less stringent rule, it is, nevertheless, negligence as a matter of law, where the circumstances are such as to require the traveler to stop, look and listen.[11] It is the view of some cases that it is not negligence per se in all cases for travelers upon a public street or road, on approaching a railroad crossing, not to stop, as well as to look and listen, before attempting to cross the track. Whether one has been negligent in failing to stop is generally presented as a mixed question of law and fact to be submitted to the jury.[12] The foregoing general rules are subject to many modifications and limitations which are discussed at other points.[13] The question is primarily one of contributory negligence and is discussed under that heading.

---

[19] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 277, s. 46 A.L.R. 1042.

[20] Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 1044.

[1] As to which general rules, see supra, § 163.

[2] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 279, s. 46 A.L.R. 1044; Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1100 (general operation).

[3] Norma v. Charlotte Electric R. Co. 167 N. C. 533, 83 S. E. 835, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 508.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 279, s. 46 A.L.R. 1044; Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1100 (general operation).

[4] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 279, s. 48 A.L.R. 1044.

[5] Norman v. Charlotte Electric R. Co. 167 N. C. 533, 83 S. E. 835, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 508.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 283, s. 46 A.L.R. 1047.

[6] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 283, s. 46 A.L.R. 1049.

[7] Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 203, s. 2 A.L.R. 767, 41 A.L.R. 405.

[8] Benner v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 262 Pa. 307, 105 A. 283, 2 A.L.R. 759; Serfas v. Lehigh & N. E. R. Co. 270 Pa. 306, 113 A. 370, 14 A.L.R. 791.

Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 203, s. 2 A.L.R. 767, 41 A.L.R. 405.

[9] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Yingling, 148 Md. 169, 129 A. 36, 41 A.L.R. 398.

Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 204, s. 41 A.L.R. 405.

If a railroad track at a public highway crossing is not fully in view in both directions in the immediate approach to the crossing, due care requires a traveler to stop, look, and listen before attempting to cross. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Yingling, 148 Md. 169, 129 A. 36, 41 A.L.R. 398.

[10] Benner v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 262 Pa. 307, 105 A. 283, 2 A.L.R. 759.

Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 203, s. 2 A.L.R. 767, 41 A.L.R. 405.

8. Right and Duty to Violate Traffic Rules

§ 322. Generally.—There is a difference of opinion as to the right or duty of a driver to turn, in violation of the law of the road, where he is confronted with an obstruction, person, or other vehicle. The general rule is that the violation of the law of the road in such a situation does not necessarily render the automobilist guilty of negligence and if ordinary care so dictates, he may, in order to avoid such obstruction, person, or other vehicle, turn in violation of such rule.[14] On the other hand, there is authority to the effect that the driver of an automobile is never justified in violating the law of the road, at least that created by statute.[15]

Under the general rule the driver may, without being guilty of negligence as a matter of law in passing a vehicle going in the same direction, pass to the right, where the way on the right is clear, and especially if the way on the left is not.[16] In doing so, he must exercise care to give proper signals and he must not pass at a high rate of speed.

According to the general rule it is not necessarily negligence for the driver of an automobile to turn to the left in meeting and passing a car coming from the opposite direction, in an attempt to avoid such car, coming on the wrong side, with which a collision is threatened; the question whether negligence exists depends upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case.[17] The view has been taken, however, that a person in such a situation is never justified in turning to the left.[18] Where, under the law of the state, an automobile overtaking and passing a street car must pass to the right, the driver is not justified in passing to the left, although the space at the right of the car is temporarily blocked with traffic.[19]

---

[11] Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 203, s. 2 A.L.R. 767, 41 A.L.R. 405.

It is negligence per se to attempt to cross a railroad on a public highway without looking and listening for approaching trains. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Yingling, 148 Md. 169, 129 A. 36, 41 A.L.R. 398.

[12] Elkins v. Western Maryland R. Co. 76 W. Va. 733, 83 S. E. 762, 1 A.L.R. 198.

[13] See infra, §§ 416, 437.

See generally Railroads [Also 22 R. C. L. p. 1028, §§ 260 et seq.]

[14] Hubbard v. Bartholomew, 163 Iowa, 58, 144 N. W. 13, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 443; Sims v. Eleazar, 116 S. C. 41, 106 S. E. 854, 24 A.L.R. 1293.

Wallace v. Bergius [1915] S. C. 205, 52 Scot. L. R. 130, 7 B. R. C. 692.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1306, s. 63 A.L.R. 279, 7 B. R. C. 705.

One driving an automobile upon a public highway at night may be found to have been negligent in turning abruptly to the wrong side of the road in the path of a coasting sled, although he thought he saw pedestrians on the road in front of him. Idell v. Day, 273 Pa. 34, 116 A. 506, 20 A.L.R. 1429.

One approaching a blind corner in an automobile is not negligent if, when another car suddenly turns the corner on the wrong side of the street, he, in the emergency, turns his car to the left to avoid the collision, although the other car also turns to that side of the street, so that he is on the wrong side of the road when the accident occurs. Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669.

A bicyclist cannot be said, as a matter of law, to have been guilty of contributory negligence in swerving from his proper side of the highway in the endeavor to avoid an automobile which suddenly turned from an intersecting street on the wrong side of the road, at high speed, so as to place him in imminent danger of collision. Calahan v. Moll, 160 Wis. 523, L.R.A. 1916A, 744, 152 N. W. 179.

[15] Couples Mercantile Co. v. Bow, 32 Idaho, 774, 189 P. 48, 24 A.L.R. 1296.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1306, s. 63 A.L.R. 279.

[16] Grein v. Gorden, 280 Pa. 576, 124 A. 737, 34 A.L.R. 1511.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1306, s. 63 A.L.R. 278.

[17] Hubbard v. Bartholomew, 163 Iowa, 58, 144 N. W. 13, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 443; Sims v.

The automobilist may, in an emergency and to avoid colliding with a car suddenly turning a corner on the wrong side of the street, turn his car to the left.[20]

9. Turning

§ 323. Generally.—The general rule that the driver of an automobile must exercise ordinary care applies to his action in turning from his course.[1] It is the duty of the operator of a motor vehicle, prior to changing his course and turning,[2] to exercise such caution as traffic conditions demand, to give vehicles following him notice of his intention, or to bring his car to a standstill, if necessary, until he is afforded a free passage.[3] The driver of the car ahead has no right, merely because he is in the lead and traveling at the maximum statutory rate, to assume that no one will attempt to pass him.[4]

Where the traffic has not become heavy, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that a driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence if he fails to stop, look, and listen for cars approaching from the rear, before crossing to turn into a road on the left.[5]

In turning across traffic coming from the opposite direction, the driver of an automobile must exercise ordinary care to avoid colliding with machines passing at the time and place.[6] He is not, however, required to avoid all interference with the passing of other vehicles.[7]

Turning in the center of a block in front of an approaching automobile without giving any warning of an intention to make the turn, and without making the least observation to determine whether any car is approaching, is sufficient to establish negligence.[8]

Liability for negligence in turning depends upon the absence of contributory negligence on the part of the driver of the colliding car,[9] although it has been held that the driver of a truck which was struck by the plaintiff's car as the truck was making a left turn on a main city street, into an intersecting street, without any warning being given, was guilty of the grossest negligence, which was the main contributing cause of the collision, rendering him liable for the injury, even if the plaintiff's negligence contributed thereto.

§ 324. Into Intersecting Street.—In turning to the left into an intersecting

---

Eleazar, 116 S. C. 41, 106 S. E. 854, 24 A.L.R. 1293; Lawson v. Dye, 106 W. Va. 494, 145 S. E. 817, 63 A.L.R. 271.

Wallace v. Bergius [1915] S. C. 205, 52 Scot. L. R. 130, 7 B. R. C. 692.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1308, s. 63 A.L.R. 280.

[18] Couples Mercantile Co. v. Bow, 32 Idaho, 774, 189 P. 48, 24 A.L.R. 1296.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1308, s. 63 A.L.R. 280.

[19] Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 P. 1155, L.R.A.1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1315, s. 63 A.L.R. 284.

[20] Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1312, s. 63 A.L.R. 282.

[1] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 1106.

[2] Zandras v. Moffett, 286 Pa. 477, 133 A. 817, 47 A.L.R. 699.

[3] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 511, s. 47 A.L.R. 709, 62 A.L.R. 976.

[4] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 513, s. 47 A.L.R. 712, 62 A.L.R. 980.

[5] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 513, s. 47 A.L.R. 712, 62 A.L.R. 980.

[6] Bradley v. Schmidt, 223 Ky. 784, 4 S. W. (2d) 703, 57 A.L.R. 1100.

[7] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 1106.

[8] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 1106.

[9] See infra, §§ 432 et seq.

street, the driver is bound to give the right of way to cars coming from the opposite direction on the street from which he is turning, the path of which he would cross after the turn.[10] This is required by a statute providing that one of two automobiles approaching a highway intersection must give the right of way to the car on its right.[11] The relative position of the cars, however, is important. The right-of-way rule applies only when a man of ordinary prudence would believe that the approaching cars would arrive at the intersection of the streets at approximately the same instant that his turn is made.[12] Even though he turns into a street on which he would have had the right of way had he been traveling thereon, he is not ordinarily entitled to the full protection of the rule, but is bound to exercise care to avoid colliding with machines the path of which he would cross.[13]

As to traffic following him, he must exercise such care as the traffic conditions demand. This may, and usually does, require a signal.[14]

A person turning to the right into an intersecting street is not, after he has turned into the intersecting street, bound to give the right of way to approaching vehicles which would have had the right of way over him at the intersection.[15]

§ 325. —Regulations as to Line of Traffic.—Various regulations have been prescribed for the making of left-hand turns. Perhaps the most common of these regulations is that requiring traffic desiring to make left-hand turns, where there are several lines of traffic proceeding in each direction, to turn into the line of traffic nearest the center of the street and continue in such line until the turn is made.[16] Such a course is expressly provided for in some statutes and ordinances. It is not always negligence to fail to observe such a statutory requirement.[17] A truck driver conforming to police regulations requiring slowly moving vehicles to keep next to the curb is not negligent in making a left-hand turn from this position as against traffic coming from the opposite direction.[18] The provision requiring those desiring to make a left-hand turn to keep in the center line of traffic has been said to be for the safety and convenience of those behind the vehicle making the turn.[19]

In some cities where the intersections are controlled by traffic signals or officers, traffic desiring to make a left-hand turn is required to draw up to the right of the curb and wait until the traffic signal changes and then proceed into the intersecting street.

---

[10] Neumann v. Apter, 95 Conn. 695, 112 A. 350, 21 A.L.R. 970; Webber v. Park Auto Transp. Co. 138 Wash. 325, 244 P. 718, 47 A.L.R. 590.

Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 981, s. 37 A.L.R. 502, 47 A.L.R. 602.

[11] Webber v. Park Auto Transp. Co. 138 Wash. 325, 244 P. 718, 47 A.L.R. 590.

[12] Neumann v. Apter, 95 Conn. 695, 112 A. 350, 21 A.L.R. 970.

[13] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 981, s. 37 A.L.R. 502, 47 A.L.R. 602.

[14] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 513, s. 47 A.L.R. 712, 62 A.L.R. 980.

[15] Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 981, s. 37 A.L.R. 502, 47 A.L.R. 602.

A vehicle on the street which is on its left-hand side does not have the right of way over the car that has just turned into the street. Annotation: 21 A.L.R. 981, s. 37 A.L.R. 502, 47 A.L.R. 602.

A driver of a motor vehicle who negligently, because of excessive speed or not having his machine under control, fails to keep to the right of the intersection of a public street, when turning to the right, as required by statute, but crosses to the left instead, and collides with another vehicle lawfully upon that side of the street, whose driver is free from negligence, is responsible for the consequent damages. Molin v. Wark, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 346, 113 Minn. 190, 129 N. W. 383.

[16] Annotation: 87 A.L.R. 1165.

[17] Richards v. Warner Co. 311 Pa. 50, 166 A. 496, 87 A.L.R. 1159.

[18] Ibid., holding that at least he is not liable where the injury sued for was not the proximate result of the turning.

[19] Richards v. Warner Co. 311 Pa. 50, 166 A. 496, 87 A.L.R. 1159.

§ 326. —Cutting Corners.—The violation by the driver of an automobile of a statute or ordinance requiring one, in making a left-hand turn into an intersecting street, to keep to the right of the center of the intersection is negligence per se, or at least an element of negligence.[20] Negligence in cutting a corner and striking a traffic officer imposes liability therefor.[1] The fact that traffic at the time of the accident is congested is no reason for violating the rule.[2] Such a regulation applies even though the streets do not cross, one running into the other and stopping.[3]

The fact that the collision occurs after the turn is made is not conclusive against liability if, except for the short turn, the accident would not have happened.[4]

§ 327. Signals.—Signals of an intent to turn are frequently required by statute or ordinance. The driver should not only hold out his hand as required by ordinance, but should make sure that by suddenly turning, he does not drive across the path of another oncoming automobile.[5]

In the absence of a statute or ordinance requiring a signal, the duty to signal has been made to depend upon knowledge of the proximity of the car following.[6]

Such signal must be given a sufficient length of time before making the turn to warn the driver of the car following in the rear and enable him so to regulate the course and speed of his own car as not to be thrown into a position of peril.[7]

The effect of the violation of a statute or ordinance in this regard has the same general effect as the violation of statutes and ordinances relating to other matters.[8] The view is taken that it is negligence per se for a driver to make a left turn into a private driveway without signaling his intention to cars approaching from his rear, as required by statute [9] or ordinance.[10]

10. BACKING

§ 328. Generally.—The law does not forbid the backing of an automobile upon the streets or highways.[11] The mere backing of an automobile on a public street is not negligence,[12] at least not negligence per se.[13]

---

[20] Stubbs v. Molberget, 108 Wash. 89, 182 P. 936, 6 A.L.R. 318; Calahan v. Moll, 160 Wis. 523, 152 N. W. 179, L.R.A.1916A, 744. Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 321.

[1] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 325.

[2] Stubbs v. Molberget, 108 Wash. 89, 182 P. 936, 6 A.L.R. 318.

[3] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 325.

[4] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 325.

In one case, although the collision occurred 65 feet or more from the intersection, the failure to comply with the statute in making the turn was required to be taken into consideration in determining whose negligence caused the accident. The jury was authorized to find that if the driver of the car had gone to the right of the center of the intersection before turning, the collision would not have occurred. Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 325.

[5] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 513, s. 47 A.L.R. 712, 62 A.L.R. 980.

[6] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 512, s. 47 A.L.R. 712, 62 A.L.R. 978.

[7] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 513, s. 47 A.L.R. 712, 62 A.L.R. 980.

[8] See supra, § 163.

[9] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 512, s. 47 A.L.R. 712, 62 A.L.R. 978.

[10] Armstead v. Lounsberry, 129 Minn. 34, 151 N. W. 542, L.R.A.1915D, 628.

There is a compliance with an ordinance requiring every person using any vehicle to look to the rear before turning around and making a violation thereof gross negligence if one riding with the driver looks and directs him to go ahead. Armstead v. Lounsberry, 129 Minn. 34, 151 N. W. 542, L.R.A.1915D, 628, wherein the evidence was held to charge the defendant with negligence, where he saw the plaintiff's automobile in front of him headed in the same direction and saw that it had commenced to turn in the street, which required practically the whole width of the street, and, although the defendant could have stopped his car and avoided a collision, he increased his speed and attempted to pass ahead of the plaintiff's car and a collision resulted, and wherein the evidence was held sufficient to sustain a finding that the plaintiff was not negligent in making the turn, it appearing, among other things, that he had complied with a statute requiring one intending to turn to look to the rear.

The driver must exercise ordinary care in so backing.[14] Backing without taking the necessary precaution is negligence.[15] In this situation, as elsewhere, negligence is ordinarily a question of fact. The jury must consider all the facts in the case, including the direction in which the car was traveling, the rate of speed, whether any signal or warning was given, the condition of the street, the situation and surroundings of the parties, the manner in which the injured person was crossing the street, and what observations, if any, the one driving the car made while backing.[16]

The fundamental rule of negligence law that the negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury applies here. If the act of negligence relied upon, such as the failure to give signals and warnings, is not the proximate cause of the injury, no liability exists.[17]

§ 329. On Right-hand Side of Street.—Backing an automobile a short distance to occupy space for parking purposes on the right-hand side of the street does not, although it results, when viewed in the direction in which the machine is moving, in propelling it on the left side of the street, violate a municipal ordinance requiring vehicles to travel on the right-hand side and near the right-hand curb.[18]

§ 330. Looking.—One precaution that must be taken before starting to back is that of looking to see that the way is clear.[19] The driver must continue to look while he is in the act of backing.[20]

One is not negligent per se in backing an automobile, when he cannot see over the back of the car so as to know what might be in his way, if he takes reasonable precautions, before starting to back, to make proper observations by looking to the right and to the left of the car and by standing up and looking over the back.[1]

Looking is especially required in backing an automobile on the wrong side of a public street. So to back without looking in the direction in which the car is moving to ascertain if anyone is in danger of being hit is negligence.[2]

§ 331. Signaling.—Another precaution required is that of giving warning when persons or vehicles are in the way of the backing car. When a reasonable necessity for a signal exists, such signal must be given.[3] Approaching vehicles must be given timely warning of an intention to back.[4] Where the driver is backing in a narrow street where other automobiles are parked and children are playing, it is his duty to sound his horn repeatedly when backing.[5]

---

[11] Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 647.

[12] Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.

[13] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 647.

[14] Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 647.

[15] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 647.

[16] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.

[17] Ibid.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 647.

[18] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.

[19] Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 648.

[20] Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 648.

[1] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.

[2] Ibid.

[3] Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.

[4] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 648.

[5] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 648.

Failure to give a signal, as required by statute, constitutes negligence per se.[6]

§ 332. Application to Facts.—The fundamental rules stated in the preceding section govern the care of the driver or owner in backing in or out of the garage, driveway, or alley.[7] In fact, it has been said to be imprudent to back an automobile out of a garage across the sidewalk without taking extra precautions to avoid running down passers-by.[8] Especially where the view is obstructed is it necessary to take extra precautions.[9]

The general rules discussed in preceding sections apply also to backing into or out of a parking place,[10] to backing in order to turn around,[11] to backing of a car for the purpose of making delivery,[12] to backing a truck working on the road,[13] to backing away from a gasoline station,[14] and to backing at a cabstand.[15]

Where the car is backed at or near a street intersection[16] or near street cars,[17] the presence of traffic in one case and of the street cars in the other enters into the determination of whether proper care has been exercised.

11. Stopping

§ 333. Generally.—Negligence in stopping an automobile arises in many connections.[18]

The stalling of an automobile on the highway does not, in every instance, evidence negligence on the part of its operator.[19] The operator must exercise a reasonable degree of care to keep the car in proper condition so that it will not stall.[20] It is a want of such care to permit it to stall for want of a sufficient supply of gasoline.[1]

Negligence in stopping an automobile on a street car track for the purpose of taking on, or letting off, a person depends upon the circumstances.[2] There may be circumstances in which it is not negligence.[3]

---

[6] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 648.

[7] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 649.

[8] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 649.

[9] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 650.

[10] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 655.
A municipal ordinance making it unlawful to propel any vehicle in a backward direction if, in so doing, the free and uninterrupted passage of any vehicle or any street car or interurban car shall be impeded has no application in an action to recover damages for injury to a pedestrian by attempting to back an automobile into a parking space. Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.

[11] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 659.

[12] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 660.

[13] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 661.

[14] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 661.

[15] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 661.

[16] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 653.

[17] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 655.

[18] The fact that one turned out of the road to stop his automobile in order to assist persons supposed to be in need of assistance in a standing car does not excuse negligence in so doing which results in injury to one walking along the side of the road. Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291.
As to stopping in the way of traffic moving in the same direction, see supra, § 281.
As to parking, see infra, §§ 334 et seq.

[19] Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.
The driver of an automobile which stalls in a public highway is not negligent in alighting from the car and attempting to adjust the mechanism without moving the car. Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194.

[20] Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.

[1] Ibid.

[2] Fitch v. Bay State Street R. Co. 237 Mass. 65, 129 N. E. 423, 15 A.L.R. 234.
Annotation: 15 A.L.R. 236.

[3] Fitch v. Bay State Street R. Co. 237 Mass. 65, 129 N. E. 423, 15 A.L.R. 234.
It was held not negligence for the automobilist to stop in front of his home to discharge two invalid guests with a portion of the automobile on the street car track at a time when no car was in sight and when the traffic in the street made such position safer and more convenient for the discharge of the guests than a position outside the car tracks. Ibid.

12. Parking

§ 334. Generally.—The right to park an automobile in the street is generally recognized.

The term "parking," as applied to automobiles, includes not only the voluntary act of leaving a car on the street unattended, but also the stopping of a car on a highway, though occupied and attended, for a length of time inconsistent with a reasonable use of the street for the purpose of travel, but does not generally include stopping at the curb for the purpose of taking in, or letting out, persons, or for the purpose of loading or unloading goods.[4]

In parking, the operator must exercise ordinary care not to park in an improper place.[5] Here, as elsewhere, the fundamental rule of negligence law that to impose liability upon the negligent party, his negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury, applies.[6] To hold the owner of a runaway truck liable for injuries caused by it, the plaintiff must show that the owner was negligent and that his negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.[7]

§ 335. On Wrong Side of Street or Highway.—It is generally recognized as negligence to park on the wrong side of a much-traveled highway,[8] and in some cases this is held as a matter of law.[9] In other cases such parking is held merely to be evidence of negligence.[10]

The mere fact of stopping an automobile on the wrong side of a highway does not, under all conditions, constitute negligence.[11] Parking on the left side with headlights burning for the purpose of making a delivery [12] or making repairs to the engine—even if there was opportunity to turn off the road for that purpose[13]—is not negligence. In the ordinary case negligence in parking or stopping on the wrong side presents a jury question.[14]

The driver of an approaching car on his right-hand side of the road who sees in front of him the headlights of another car facing him has the right to assume that such car is in motion and will be operated in conformity with the law of the road.[15]

In order that liability may be based upon parking on the wrong side, the fundamental rule of negligence law—namely, that the negligence in so parking must be the proximate cause of the injury—applies.[16]

---

[4] Wonewoc v. Taubert, 203 Wis. 73, 233 N. W. 755, 72 A.L.R. 224.

A few cases of stopping for purposes of delivery have been included in this subdivision.

It is not negligence per se to leave a motor truck unattended in a public street, although it is the duty of the driver to exercise the care of a person of ordinary prudence under the circumstances. American Express Co. v. Terry, 126 Md. 254, 94 A. 1026, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 650.

[5] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1074.

When a vehicle is stopped substantially in the middle of the highway with sufficient space on either side for other vehicles to pass in safety, a driver approaching from the rear may make use of the unoccupied portion of the roadway on either side of the standing vehicle, exercising such care as the circumstances require. Grein v. Gordon, 280 Pa. 576, 124 A. 737, 34 A.L.R. 1511.

[6] Milbury v. Turner Centre System, 274 Mass. 358, 174 N. E. 471, 73 A.L.R. 1070.

[7] Jackson v. Mills Baking Co. 221 Mich. 64, 190 N. W. 740, 26 A.L.R. 906.

[8] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1021.

[9] Parking in such a position that, although the front of the car is off the highway and the front lights are directed obliquely away from the road, the rear end of the truck extends well out on the paved surface of the highway constitutes negligence. Waynick v. Walrond, 155 Va. 400, 154 S. E. 522, 70 A.L.R. 1014.

[10] Leaving a car parked in the center of a public highway in the nighttime in such a position that it is not visible from approaching cars is prima facie evidence of negligence. Whitworth v. Riley, 132 Okla. 72, 269 P. 350, 59 A.L.R. 584.

[11] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1023.

[12] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1023.

[13] Schacht v. Quick, 178 Wis. 330, 190 N. W. 87, 25 A.L.R. 130.

[14] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1024.

[15] Whitworth v. Riley, 132 Okla. 72, 279 P. 350, 59 A.L.R. 584.
Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1025.

[16] Waynick v. Walrond, 155 Va. 400, 154 S. E. 522, 70 A.L.R. 1014.
Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1027.

The doctrine of last clear chance has been held inapplicable in the situation presented by the class of cases under consideration.[17]

§ 336. —Wilful and Wanton Negligence.—Whether it is wilful and wanton negligence to park on the wrong side of the road on a dark night in such a way that the lights do not clearly show the position of the car is usually a question of fact. In some cases, however, it has been held as a matter of law that the conduct of the defendant was not wilful and wanton.[18]

§ 337. Stopping without Lights.[19]—It is generally held to be negligence or evidence of negligence to leave an automobile on the highway after dark without displaying lights or giving warning of its presence in some other way.[20] The failure to display lights as required by statute is negligence per se.[1] The courts, however, have pointed out that an accidental break in machinery or a defect in the mechanism or parts peculiar to the car often gives the person operating it no choice about leaving a car standing in the road until a remedy for the mishap is found; that the rights of persons operating cars upon the public highway are coequal; and that all parties operating cars, in the exercise of ordinary care, should be on the lookout for other cars either moving or standing in the highway.[2]

§ 338. Duty to Guard against Machine Moving.—A person who leaves an automobile on a public street unattended is under the duty to exercise such care in doing so as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances. If, by reason of the failure to exercise such care, the machine, without any interference of wilful act of another, gets under way and inflicts injury, such person is liable.[3] One precaution that is frequently mentioned in the cases is the duty to see that the brakes are properly set.[4] On wet and slippery pavements extra precautions are required in setting the brakes.[5]

The question that has most frequently arisen in cases of injuries resulting from the starting of a parked car is the proof of negligence. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has been applied to such a case,[6] especially where the car was parked on a grade and, shortly after it was left, started down the grade.[7] The question of negligence in such a case is ordinarily a question for the jury.[8]

---

[17] Whitworth v. Riley, 132 Okla. 72, 269 P. 350, 59 A.L.R. 584.
Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1028.

[18] Waynick v. Walrond, 155 Va. 400, 154 S. E. 522, 70 A.L.R. 1014.
Submission to the jury of the question whether the defendant's negligence was wilful and wanton is not warranted in a case where such negligence consisted of parking a truck on the wrong side of the road on a dark night at such an angle that the rear end extended halfway across the roadway. Ibid.

[19] As to the applicability of light regulations to cars not in motion, see § 35.

[20] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 510, s. 47 A.L.R. 706, 62 A.L.R. 972.
A father who is accustomed to leave his automobile standing at the curb unlighted in the night cannot escape liability for an injury caused by such act, by the fact that his son had last used the car on business of his own. Jaquith v. Worden, 73 Wash. 349, 132 P. 33, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.
The negligence of a truck driver in parking his truck on a drizzly, foggy night, without lights, on a highway wide enough to carry four trucks abreast, so that it extended diagonally to the center of the highway, and in placing himself at the rear of the truck while hanging an unlighted lantern thereon, and not the negligence of the driver of another truck in proceeding at a speed which did not permit him to stop within the distance covered by the range of his lights, was the proximate cause of the death of the driver of the first truck when the second truck collided with it. Singer v. Messina, 312 Pa. 129, 167 A. 583, 89 A.L.R. 1271.

[1] Murphy v. Hawthorne, 177 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.
Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 510, s. 47 A.L.R. 706, 62 A.L.R. 972.

[2] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 510, s. 47 A.L.R. 706, 62 A.L.R. 972.
The driver of an automobile who stopped his car, under an arc light and as far off the pavement on the right as he could go for the purpose of fixing his lights was held not guilty of actionable negligence for an injury caused by a collision between such standing car and another proceeding in the same direction. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 973.

[3] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 440.

[4] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 440.

[5] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 440.

[6] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 441.
Generally as to evidence, see infra, §§ 607 et seq.

The intervention of a third person in attempting to stop the car does not always relieve the owner from liability, even though such person, in his attempts to stop the car, changes its course.[9] In fact, such owner may even be liable to the third person who is injured in his attempts to stop the car.[10]

Where the car is started by a third person, any negligence there may be on the part of the owner in leaving it unattended is regarded as not the proximate cause of the injury, and therefore, there is held to be no liability.[11]

§ 339. In Municipalities.—Parking in city streets is generally regulated by ordinance.[12] There are questions of construction in determining whether the ordinance is violated.[13]

Parking in violation of such ordinance is not invariably actionable negligence.[14] An ordinance forbidding parking within a certain distance of a fire hydrant has been held not to be for the protection of the traveling public, and therefore, parking in violation thereof is held not to be negligence as against other travelers on the highway.[15] Parking in violation of an ordinance within the prohibited distance from a crossing is generally held, however, to be negligence,[16] or evidence of negligence which requires submission to the jury,[17] according to the view which prevails in the jurisdiction as to the effect of violation of a statute or ordinance as negligence.[18]

---

[7] Biller v. Meyer (C. C. A. 7th) 33 F. (2d) 440, 66 A.L.R. 436.

Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 441.

[8] Biller v. Meyer (C. C. A. 7th) 33 F. (2d) 440, 66 A.L.R. 436; American Exp. Co. v. Terry, 126 Md. 254, 94 A. 1026, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 650.

Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 443.

[9] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 447.

As to injury to person on sidewalk, see § 189.

[10] American Exp. Co. v. Terry, 126 Md. 254, 94 A. 1026, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 650.

Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 447.

[11] Jackson v. Mills Baking Co. 221 Mich. 64, 190 N. W. 740, 26 A.L.R. 906; Maloney v. Kaplan, 233 N. Y. 426, 135 N. E. 838, 26 A.L.R. 909; Rhad v. Duquesne Light Co. 255 Pa. 409, L.R.A.1917D, 864, 100 A. 262.

Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 912.

The driver of a motor vehicle who had set its brakes, turned off the engine, and turned the front wheels to the curb, or otherwise stopped it securely, in the circumstances, is not liable for an injury caused by the acts of others in wilfully starting the car; at least if the circumstances are not such as to suggest the necessity of unusual care to guard against probable interference with the car. Maloney v. Kaplan, 233 N. Y. 426, 135 N. E. 838, 26 A.L.R. 909.

Where defendant's chauffeur drove up to the curb, stopped his car headed down a grade, put on the brake, stopped his engine, and went into a restaurant, and a boy released the brake and caused the car to start and injure the plaintiff, it was held that the proximate cause of the injury was the act of the boy in releasing the brake, and that the defendant was not liable, although the chauffeur failed to take the additional precaution of turning the wheels toward the curb. Rhad v. Duquesne Light Co. 255 Pa. 409, L.R.A.1917D, 864, 100 A. 262.

The driver of an electric delivery wagon is held not negligent in failing to remove the switch when he stopped the car in the highway, put on the brakes, and started to deliver parcels to an adjoining house, where he intended to remain only a moment, so as to become liable for an injury to a child by the starting of the car by children at play in the vicinity, where the children had not been in the habit of meddling with the car, the court holding that the proximate cause of the inquiry was the starting of the car by the children, and not the driver's failure to remove the switch. Jackson v. Mills-Fox Baking Co. — Mich. —, 190 N. W. 780, 26 A.L.R. 906.

[12] Although no violation of any parking regulation was apparently involved, the owner's act in leaving an automobile unattended on car tracks near the middle of the street while he went across the street into a garage, which act he conceded to be negligence, was held to be the proximate cause of an injury to a person who was working at the curb who was hit by the automobile when a street car ran into it, the court overruling the contention that the intervening, independent negligence of the motorman in running into the automobile broke the causal relation. There being no pretense of any contributory negligence, there was held to be no opportunity for applying the last clear chance doctrine against the codefendant street railway company, a car belonging to which hit an automobile that was left unattended in the street. Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1076.

[13] Temporarily stopping a truck in an alley and placing a block behind a rear wheel while waiting for the opportunity to proceed a little farther in order to unload has been held not to violate an ordinance against standing or parking a vehicle in an alley except while actually loading or unloading, and accordingly, not to amount to contributory negligence so as to preclude recovery for negligence of another truck driver who tried to pass in the narrow space instead of stopping, the place of parking of the plaintiff's truck being not the proximate cause of the accident. Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1076.

[14] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1075.

Along with absence of lights, parking a car all night in a city street at a place where parking was forbidden by ordinance was held negligence so as to entitle one who drove into the parked car to recover for its owner's negligence. Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1076.

Parking at a prohibited place without lights has been held negligence.[19]

§ 340. In Highways outside Municipalities.—Parking on a highway or on the traveled portion thereof is or is not negligence, according to the facts. A finding of negligence is generally held warranted where the car is parked at night without lights and in such a position that other travelers regularly using the highway are likely to run into it.[20] In some cases parking so as to occupy more than half the highway when it would have been possible to move the greater part of the car off the highway is held negligence as a matter of law.[1] Parking on a curve is generally sufficient evidence of negligence to raise a question of fact.[2] On the other hand, an automobilist who places his car off the side of the road with ample passing space in the highway, with lights turned on, and a person on guard to signal approaching cars while he works in front of his car in repairing the tire is held free from negligence as a matter of law.[3]

Parking on highways outside of municipalities is generally regulated by statute. Usually, parking on the traveled or hard-surfaced part of the highway is forbidden. Some except from the prohibition against parking on the traveled portion cases in which the vehicle is disabled or cases in which it is necessary to make repairs.[4] Even in case the vehicle is disabled so that it can-

---

[15] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1076.

[16] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1075.

[17] Milbury v. Turner Central System, 274 Mass. 358, 174 N. E. 471, 73 A.L.R. 1070.

A finding that the negligence of a truck owner and operator in leaving it standing at a street intersection directly in the path taken by pedestrians in violation of an ordinance making that unlawful was the sole cause of the death of a small child who was obliged to go around it in trying to cross the street and was hit by an automobile in motion, the driver of which was not negligent, was held warranted. Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1076.

The refusal of the person in charge of an automobile which was parked across a sidewalk (such person at the time sitting in it) to move it in order to enable a pedestrian to pass has been held sufficient ground upon which negligence might be imputed to such person and, accordingly also, to the owner, as a predicate to liability for injury to the pedestrian who was injured by a fall after having been compelled to walk around the car toward the curb. Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1076.

[18] See supra, § 163.

[19] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1076.

[20] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1077.

It is recognized that the leaving of a car upon the highway for the making of absolutely necessary repairs may in certain instances be negligence, as, for example, where it is so left as unnecessarily to obstruct traffic and where no precautions are taken to signal approaching cars. Long v. Steffen, 194 Wis. 179, 215 N. W. 892, 61 A.L.R. 1155.

The parking of an unlighted truck for a few minutes at late dusk at the side of a country highway which was straight and level for at least half a mile in both directions, with its right wheels about 2 feet off the pavement, the softness of the shoulder and the weight of the load making it undesirable to drive it further to the side, while negligence, is not recklessness. Hart v. Stence, 219 Iowa, 55, 257 N. W. 434, 97 A.L.R. 535.

Leaving a truck standing on a public highway in the path of travel, after dark, in a rainstorm, is the proximate cause of injury through collision with it by one driving an automobile at 12 miles per hour, when he could see only 20 feet ahead, who was unable to stop or turn aside after he discovered the obstruction in time to avoid the collision. Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582.

[1] Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.

[2] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1079.

[3] Long v. Steffen, 194 Wis. 179, 215 N. W. 892, 61 A.L.R. 1155.

[4] An exception, under such a statute, of the case where repairs are absolutely necessary applies to the repairing of a punctured tire. Long v. Steffen, 194 Wis. 179, 215 N. W. 892, 61 A.L.R. 1155.

The question whether an emergency existed which justified leaving a truck on the traveled portion of the highway about a mile and a half from a village when its engine became hot in order to refill the radiator from a wayside ditch, or whether it could have safely been driven to the village, was held for the jury; and accordingly, the refusal to direct a verdict for a not move under its own power, if it can otherwise be removed from the traveled portion, it is the duty of the driver so to remove it.[5]

The effect of the violation of such a statute as negligence depends upon the doctrine which prevails in the particular state upon this question.[6] That it is negligence per se is the view of some jurisdictions.[7] In some instances the opportunity or lack of opportunity of parking off the traveled portion of the highway is given weight on the question of negligence.[8]

13. OPERATION ON CURVES AND HILLS

§ 341. Generally.—In rounding a curve[9] or approaching the summit of a hill,[10] where the view is shortened, it is the driver's duty to keep on the right-hand side of the road. The view is taken, however, that this duty is not an inflexible one in the absence of statute.[11]

The duty to keep to the right at curves and on hills has been imposed by statute; and frequently, the familiar lines marking the center of the road are placed there for the purpose of keeping traffic on its right-hand side. A violation of the statute in this regard has the same effect as the violation of a statute generally.[12] It has been held to be negligence to drive on the left-hand side in violation of statute.[13]

§ 342. Speed.—Generally speaking, the speed at which a car may be driven around a curve in the exercise of ordinary care is less than may be required in other places.[14] Some statutes limit the speed in going around a corner or a curve where the operator's view is obstructed and provide that a speed in excess of that fixed shall be prima facie evidence of negligence.[15] Other statutes require the driver to have his vehicle under control, without specifying the effect of violation of the statute.[16] Negligence in this regard, however, is usually held to be a question for the jury.[17]

14. TOWING CARS

§ 343. Generally.—The towing of an automobile through a street by means defendant who so left a truck was held proper in a case upholding a recovery by a driver who ran into the truck supposing it to be in motion. Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1079.

---

[5] Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.

In Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92, the truck was on a grade so that when it stalled, it could have drifted back downgrade upon the shoulder, which was wide enough to take it off the traveled portion for its greater part.

[6] See supra, § 163.

[7] Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.

[8] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1078.

[9] Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669; Bloom v. Bailey, 292 Pa. 348, 141 A. 150, 57 A.L.R. 585.

Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 589.

A clear case of negligence is held to be established where the driver did not keep on his side upon approaching a dangerous turn at a bridge, but cut across and, after passing the bridge, continued on his left-hand side for some distance until the collision occurred. Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 591.

Likewise, it is held sufficient evidence of negligence that the car was being driven on the left-hand side of the road at a "pretty lively" pace. Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 591.

Evidence that an automobile collision occurred at night at a curve because of the swerving of the car driven by the plaintiff's decedent to the wrong side of the road is insufficient to take to the jury the question of the negligence of the occupants of the other car in an action to hold them liable for damages for the death. Bloom v. Bailey, 292 Pa. 348, 141 A. 150, 57 A.L.R. 585.

[10] Bloom v. Bailey, 292 Pa. 348, 141 A. 150, 57 A.L.R. 585.

Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 595.

[11] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 589.

[12] See supra, § 163.

[13] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 592.

[14] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 592.

[15] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 593.

[16] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 594.

[17] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 595.

The fact that a car came around a curve without warning and at a greater rate of speed than permitted by the statute is a sufficient showing of negligence. Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 594.

of a rope does not constitute negligence per se.[18] Hence, the mere fact that a person is injured by being struck by the towed car does not make out a case of negligence.[19] The driver of the automobile which is doing the towing and the person in charge of the towed car owe a duty to pedestrians and other vehicles to exercise reasonable or ordinary care.[20] On the existence of negligence the sufficiency of warning is an important element.[1] A prima facie case of negligence is made by showing that the driver of the automobile doing the towing crosses a sidewalk in turning into a garage after dark without warning pedestrians of the fact that his car is towing another car.[2]

The question whether due care has been exercised in a particular case is generally a question for the jury.[3] Whether sufficient warning is given is likewise usually for the jury.[4]

The driver of a towing car owes to the persons who are riding in the towed car the duty of ordinary care in managing his car.[5] Excessive speed or an improper hitching of the tow rope may constitute negligence which will render him liable to such persons.[6]

VI. PERSONS LIABLE

A. In General

§ 344. Generally[7]—Where the owner of an automobile, by his negligence in its operation, causes injury to another, it is clear that he is liable therefor. Similarly, where the driver of an automobile, though not the owner, negligently causes injuries to another, he likewise is liable for such injuries.[8]

A person learning to drive a car under the tutelage of the dealer is liable for injuries due to his negligence.[9] He is not relieved from liability for such negligence because of reliance upon the promise of his instructor to render assistance in avoiding danger.[10] One who has purchased a car from the dealer with the usual guaranty has, however, been held not liable for the latter's negligence in driving it at the purchaser's request to test it.[11]

§ 345. Joint Liability of Tort-feasors.—The rule that where two or more tort-feasors by concurrent acts of negligence which, though disconnected, in combination inflict an injury, all are jointly liable,[12] is applied in cases involving the joint liability of owners or operators of two or more automobiles for injuries to a third person for damage to his property.[13] If the concurrent negligence of the drivers is the proximate cause of the damage immediately inflicted upon a third person by one of the automobiles, both drivers or their employers are liable jointly and severally.[14] It is, of course, essential to the joint liability that both operators are negligent.[15] But the parties may be sued jointly, although the degree of care which each owed the person injured was different.[16] They may be sued jointly, notwithstanding there may exist a difference in the degree of liability or the quantum of evidence necessary to establish such liability.[17] So too, the fact that one was wanton and reckless and the other simply manifested want of ordinary caution does not prevent joint liability.[18]

---

[18] Richter v. Dahlman & I. Co. 179 Wis. 7, 190 N. W. 841, 30 A.L.R. 747.
Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 750.

[19] Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 750.

[20] Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 750.

[1] Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 750.
The question as to whether warning is necessary, and as to the sufficiency thereof is based upon the further fact as to the condition of light, size, and color of the rope, etc. Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 750.

[2] Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 751.

[3] Richter v. Dahlman & I. Co. 179 Wis. 7, 190 N. W. 841.
Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 750.

[4] Richter v. Dahlman & I. Co. 179 Wis. 7, 190 N. W. 841.
Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 751.
The owner of a car is liable for negligence in towing a disabled car down a slippery grade backward when the brakes of the towed car are out of order, as a result of which it skids into a third car standing at a curb. Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 750.

[5] Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 754.

[6] Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 754.

[7] As to the liability of a husband or wife for injuries to the other, see HUSBAND AND WIFE [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 1445, §§ 495 et seq.].
As to the liability of a parent for injuries to a child, see PARENT AND CHILD [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 631, § 36].
As to damages for prenatal injuries, see TORTS.
As to liability for act of third person in starting parked car, see § 338, supra.
As to the liability of garage keepers and repairmen, see GARAGES, PARKING STATIONS, AND LIVERIES.

[8] The text statements are fundamental and are assumed in all the cases dealing in automobile negligence law.

[9] Goff v. Hubbard, 217 Ky. 729, 290 S. W. 696, 50 A.L.R. 1382.
Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 194, s. 50 A.L.R. 1391.

[10] Goff v. Hubbard, 217 Ky. 729, 290 S. W. 696, 50 A.L.R. 1382.

[11] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 194, s. 50 A.L.R. 1391.

§ 346. Liability of Common Owners or Operators.—Ownership of an interest in an automobile does not render one liable for injury caused by the negligence of the co-owner when using the car solely for a purpose of his own.[19] But if, at the time of the negligent act, the automobile was under the joint control of the owners—as, for example, where it is driven by a chauffeur employed by both—both owners are liable.[20] A partner who uses a truck belonging to the firm in transporting coal to his own home for his own use is engaged in the business of the partnership, which is liable for any injury or damage to others due to his negligence, or even recklessness, in operating the truck.[1]

A husband and wife owning an automobile as community property are liable for negligent injuries occasioned by the machine when operated by their daughter while the husband is riding therein.[2]

One engaged in a joint enterprise with the driver of an automobile is chargeable with the driver's negligence in operating the automobile and may be held liable to third persons injured by the driver's negligence, regardless of who owns the automobile.[3]

---

[12] See Proximate Cause [Also 22 R. C. L. p. 128].

[13] McDonald v. Robinson, 207 Iowa, 1293, 224 N. W. 820, 62 A.L.R. 1419; Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463; Carlton v. Boudar, 118 Va. 521, 88 S. E. 174, 4 A.L.R. 1480.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 465, s. 62 A.L.R. 1425.

Two or more persons who are unlawfully and negligently racing automobiles on a public highway and who thereby injure another are liable in damages for such injuries. Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463.

A sharp turn made by automobiles driving at a high rate of speed in order to avoid a collision is such a case of joint negligence as to render the drivers liable for injury to a third person who was struck and injured while crossing the street. Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 467, s. 62 A.L.R. 1427.

[14] Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463.

Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1191.

As to the liability of one whose negligence caused another automobile to strike or injure a third person, see infra, § 352.

[15] Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 465, s. 62 A.L.R. 1425.

[16] Carlton v. Boudar, 118 Va. 521, 88 S. E. 174, 4 A.L.R. 1480.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 465, s. 62 A.L.R. 1425.

[17] Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 465, s. 62 A.L.R. 1425.

[18] Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 465, s. 62 A.L.R. 1425.

[19] Hamilton v. Vioue, 90 Wash. 618, 156 P. 853, L.R.A.1916E, 1300.

[20] Goodman v. Wilson, 129 Tenn. 464, 166 S. W. 752, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116.

Annotation: 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116.

Where two joint owners of an automobile contribute equally to the expense of its upkeep and the wages of the chauffeur and have equal rights to the use of the car except when a preference is given to one owner as to its use in going to and from business, one such owner is liable for an injury caused to a traveler on the highway by the chauffeur's negligent operation of the car in obeying the orders of such other owner to take the car to his office to convey him home, although the former had given no orders in connection with the journey. Goodman v. Wilson, 129 Tenn. 464, 166 S. W. 752, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116.

[1] Dixon v. Haynes, 146 Wash. 163, 262 P. 119, 55 A.L.R. 1218.

[2] Switzer v. Sherwood, 80 Wash. 19, 141 P. 181, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 216.

§ 347. Liability of Dealer for Injuries from Operation.[4]—A dealer who employs one to instruct a purchaser or a prospective purchaser is liable for any negligence of the instructor in the control of the car.[5] Such negligence for which liability exists may consist of the failure of the instructor to take control of the car the operation of which he had intrusted to the purchaser; if, in the exercise of ordinary care he could have avoided the accident, his failure to do so is negligence.[6] Where the negligence of a purchaser whom an automobile dealer is teaching to drive a car as part of the service in effecting a sale injures a pedestrian on the highway, it is imputable to the dealer.[7] Whether or not a dealer has exercised ordinary care in the interference by him with the management of the car by the driver when the danger became apparent is ordinarily a question for the jury.[8] It is essential to the liability of the dealer that the driver is his agent, and not the agent of the purchaser. The line between the cases in which he is the agent of one and those in which he is the agent of the other is often very shadowy.[9] It is also essential to the liability of the dealer that the employee is acting within the scope of his employment and in furtherance thereof.[10] It is within the scope of his employment to accede to the suggestion of the customer to permit an inexperienced member of his family to drive the car so as to render the employer liable for injuries caused to a pedestrian by the driver losing control of the car and colliding with the pedestrian where the agent sat beside and directed the driver and had his hand on the steering wheel when the accident happened.[11]

---

[3] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 442, s. 85 A.L.R. 631.

While two traveling salesmen are engaged in the joint enterprise of transporting themselves by automobile over the territory canvassed by both for different merchants, one of the salesmen owning and operating the automobile and the other paying sums about equal to the cost of the gasoline and oil consumed, the latter, if possessing joint control over the automobile, may be liable for the negligence of the other in operating it, both being occupants at the time. Judge v. Wallen, 98 Neb. 154, 152 N. W. 318, L.R.A.1915E, 436.

All who join in an enterprise to take a pleasure ride in an automobile on a highway are liable in case the one having control of the machine is guilty of reckless driving. State v. Davis, 88 S. C. 229, 70 S. E. 811, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 295.

As to imputing negligence of a driver engaged in a joint enterprise with an occupant to such occupant so as to prevent recovery by the latter against third persons, see infra, § 494.

[4] As to the liability of a purchaser of a car operating it while learning under the tutelage of the dealer, see supra, § 344.

[5] Opecello v. Meads, 152 Md. 29, 135 A. 488, 50 A.L.R. 1385.

Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 849.

An automobile dealer is liable for the death of a passenger invited to ride in its car by its wholesale salesman, which results from the negligent operation of the car by a prospective customer of a local agent whom the salesman, although he knew him to be incompetent, permitted to drive for practice on a part of the salesman's trip. Kerr v. Haug Motors [1930] 39 Manitoba L. R. 238, 16 B. R. C. 838.

[6] Ibid.

[7] Ibid.

[8] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 194, s. 50 A.L.R. 1391.

[9] It has been held that a chauffeur sent by an automobile dealer with an inexperienced customer to take a car which the customer had purchased through the crowded part of the town, and turn it over to him when the business streets were passed might, while en route, be found to be acting for the dealer, so as to render him liable for injuries caused by negligent driving, even though by direction of the purchaser, they stopped at various places to do errands for the latter. Dalrymple v. Covey Motor Car Co. 66 Or. 533, 135 P. 91, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 424.

In Janik v. Ford Motor Co. 180 Mich. 557, 147 N. W. 510, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 294, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 669, however, it was held that an automobile manufacturer who, after selling a car, delegated one of his employees, at the purchaser's request, to drive the car to the city limits, from which place the purchaser, who was an experienced automobilist, was to drive it to the destination, was not answerable for an injury by the driver to a person on the street where the purchaser was in the car at the time of the accident, although he had given no directions except as to the route as to which he wished to travel.

In Hiroux v. Baum, 137 Wis. 197, 118 N. W. 533, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332, a finding was held justified that the son of the defendant was the latter's servant, and not the servant of the one who sold the car to the defendant, where there was evidence that the car was purchased with the understanding that the son should learn to operate it, that the seller had agreed to teach the defendant's son to operate the car, and that the son, for the purpose of learning to run it, was driving it, accompanied by the seller, at the time the plaintiff was injured.

[10] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 194, s. 50 A.L.R. 1391.

§ 348. Liability for Negligence during Demonstration of Car by One Who Has Undertaken to Sell It.[12]—The responsibility for negligence during the demonstration of a car by one who has undertaken to sell it for the owner depends upon the relation which exists between the owner and the person thus undertaking to sell the car. If that relation is not one of principal and agent, but one of independent contractor, the owner of the car is not liable for negligence when it is being thus demonstrated.[13] And it is generally held that where the car is left with one for sale, especially if it is left on commission, the person undertaking to sell it is an independent contractor.[14]

§ 349. Dealer's Liability for Injuries from Defects in Car Sold.—A dealer in automobiles of standard make is not required to dismantle the automobile to determine whether it is properly built in order to absolve himself from responsibility for damages resulting from defects therein not visible on the usual customary and careful inspection.[15] No liability rests upon a dealer in secondhand automobiles to a person who is injured by the operation of a car sold by him, in the hands of one to whom it is sold, from the mere fact that the car is defective.[16] There must be knowledge of the defect, either actual or constructive.[17]

The view is taken, however, that the law imputes to the seller of a secondhand automobile such knowledge with respect to its condition as he could have obtained in the exercise of ordinary care.[18] The duty of the seller of a secondhand automobile to exercise care with respect to its equipment so that it may be kept under control and not become a menace to life and limb is the same as that of the manufacturer of a new automobile, especially where the car is represented to be equipped with standard equipment.[19] If the automobile is capable of being made safe, it is, according to this theory, the seller's duty to make it safe.[20]

According to another view, it is the seller's duty to communicate information as to the defect to the purchaser. Failure to do so may impose liability.[1]

---

[11] Hoffman v. Roehl, 61 Mont. 290, 203 P. 349, 20 A.L.R. 189.

One conducting a school for instruction in automobile driving for pay has been held liable for injuries done to a traveler on a highway through the incompetence of a pupil whom one of his teachers intrusted with the management of a car. Easton v. United Trade School Contracting Co. 173 Cal. 199, 159 P. 597, L.R.A. 1917A, 394.

[12] As to the person liable where a garageman who has been employed to make repairs is testing a car, see GARAGES, PARKING STATIONS, AND LIVERIES.

[13] Bell v. State, 153 Md. 333, 138 A. 227, 58 A.L.R. 1051.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1057.

[14] Bell v. State, 153 Md. 333, 138 A. 227, 58 A.L.R. 1051.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 1057.

A garage keeper who undertakes to sell an automobile for its owner at a fixed price, the machine to be left with him during the day for that purpose and with the implied authority to demonstrate the machine in any manner he sees fit, is an independent contractor in taking the machine to make a demonstration, so that the owner is not liable for an injury caused by his negligent operation of the car. Bell v. State, 153 Md. 333, 138 A. 227, 58 A.L.R. 1051.

[15] Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 243.

[16] Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 240.

[17] Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 240.

[18] Flies v. Fox Bros. Buick Co. 196 Wis. 196, 218 N. W. 855, 60 A.L.R. 357.

Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 398.

[19] Flies v. Fox Bros. Buick Co. 196 Wis. 196, 218 N. W. 855, 60 A.L.R. 357.

[20] Ibid.

[1] Bergstresser v. Van Hoy, 142 Kan. 88, 45 P. (2d) 855, 99 A.L.R. 236.

A petition in an action seeking to recover damages from the dealer for selling the defective automobile which fails to allege that the dealer concealed the defective condition or failed to inform the purchaser thereof states no cause of action. Ibid.

Upon giving this information, his duty is discharged unless, from facts known or which he should know, there is a probability that the buyer will use the automobile without remedying the defects.[2] Turning a dangerously defective automobile over to a buyer under such circumstances is equivalent to turning it over to a driver known to be unfit to use it.[3]

Liability may also be based upon representations, contrary to the facts, that the car is equipped with standard equipment.[4] The failure of the purchaser to inspect it and discover the defective brakes is not an intervening cause of an injury due to such brakes so as to relieve the seller of liability because of such defect.[5]

§ 350. Manufacturer's Liability for Injuries from Defects in Car Sold.—A manufacturer of an automobile may be held liable to a purchaser for defects therein which result in injuries to such purchaser, notwithstanding there is no privity of contract.[6] The automobile is regarded as a thing of danger, or one which may become dangerous, within the meaning of the rule that there is no liability where there is no privity of contract unless the article is dangerous.[7] In such a case the manufacturer owes to the public a duty, irrespective of any contractual relationship, to use reasonable care in the manufacture of an automobile and in applying reasonable tests to detect defects and deficiencies therein.[8]

Representations by the manufacturer may be relied upon by the purchaser from a middleman where the representations relate to a part a defect in which is not readily discoverable.[9]

A failure to exercise care in inspecting parts bought for use in constructing the car renders the manufacturer liable for injury.[10] The failure to maintain a reasonable inspection by which defects in a part, such as a wheel, would have been discovered is negligence.[11]

It must be shown, however, that the defect was due to the failure of the manufacturer to exercise care; the mere fact that a defect developed which might have been due to other causes is not sufficient to impose liability on the manufacturer.[12]

---

[2] Ibid.
Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 240.

[3] Bergstresser v. Van Hoy, 142 Kan. 88, 45 P. (2d) 855, 99 A.L.R. 236.
Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 240.

[4] Flies v. Fox Bros. Buick Co. 196 Wis. 196, 218 N. W. 855, 60 A.L.R. 357.
A dealer in secondhand automobiles who reconditions and sells a wrecked car, representing that it has standard equipment, is liable for injuries caused to a pedestrian by its brakes being so defective that it could not be controlled on the public street. Ibid.

[5] Flies v. Fox Bros. Buick Co. 196 Wis. 196, 218 N. W. 855, 60 A.L.R. 357.
Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 240.

[6] Johnson v. Cadillac Motor Car Co. (C. C. A. 2d) 261 F. 878, 8 A.L.R. 1023, reversing same case (C. C. A. 2d) 221 F. 801, L.R.A.1915E, 287, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 581; Heckel v. Ford Motor Co. 101 N. J. L. 385, 128 A. 242, 39 A.L.R. 989; MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. 217 N. Y. 382, 111 N. E. 1050, L.R.A.1916F, 696, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 440; Baxter v. Ford Motor Co. 168 Wash. 456, 12 P. (2d) 409, 15 P. (2d) 1118, 88 A.L.R. 521.
Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 701, s. 39 A.L.R. 998, 63 A.L.R. 347, and 88 A.L.R. 533; 63 A.L.R. 398; Ann. Cas. 1913B, 689, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 584.

[7] Johnson v. Cadillac Motor Car Co. (C. C. A. 2d) 261 F. 878, 8 A.L.R. 1023, reversing (C. C. A. 2d) 221 F. 801, L.R.A.1915E, 287, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 581; Heckel v. Ford Motor Co. 101 N. J. L. 385, 128 A. 242, 39 A.L.R. 989; MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. 217 N. Y. 382, 111 N. E. 1050, L.R.A. 1916F, 696, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 440.
Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 701, s. 39 A.L.R. 998, 63 A.L.R. 347, and 88 A.L.R. 533.

[8] Heckel v. Ford Motor Co. 101 N. J. L. 385, 128 A. 242, 39 A.L.R. 989.

[9] Baxter v. Ford Motor Co. 168 Wash. 456, 12 P. (2d) 409, 15 P. (2d) 1118, 88 A.L.R. 522 (glass warranted shatterproof).

[10] Johnson v. Cadillac Motor Car Co. (C. C. A. 2d) 261 F. 878, 8 A.L.R. 1023, reversing (C. C. A. 2d) 221 F. 801, L.R.A.1915E, 287, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 581.
Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 701, s. 39 A.L.R. 998, 63 A.L.R. 347, and 88 A.L.R. 533.

[11] MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. 217 N. Y. 382, 111 N. E. 1050, L.R.A.1916F, 696, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 440.

[12] Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 701, s. 39 A.L.R. 998, 63 A.L.R. 347, and 88 A.L.R. 533.

Liability has also been imposed upon the manufacturer of automobiles which are unsafe and dangerous where he has concealed such condition from a purchaser or has represented the automobile to be safe.[13] In such a case the manufacturer may be liable to a third person injured by such defect.[14] Actual notice of such defect or faulty construction is not necessary.[15] Where the defect is so plain that notice could not have escaped the attention of the manufacturer, there is a sufficient showing.[16] If a purchaser to whom the representations are made or from whom the defects are concealed has knowledge of the defects before a third party is injured in using the car, the manufacturer is not thereafter liable.[17]

§ 350a. Liability of Manufacturer of Tractor.—A manufacturer of a tractor who gives the purchaser ample instructions as to the method of procedure if the machine becomes mired is not liable to the purchaser's employee, who is injured by failing to follow the directions, and employing a dangerous method of procedure to release the machine when it becomes mired, because it did not give the employee notice of the danger of such procedure.[17a] The manufacturer is not, as matter of law, required to anticipate that a person would attempt to operate it without previous knowledge, either from experience or from the instructions provided.[17b]

§ 351. Liability of Guest.—As a general rule, one riding in a vehicle as a guest, without any control over the driver, is not liable for injury to a third person due to the negligence of the driver.[18] The owner of the automobile may be a guest within the meaning of this rule.[19] The fact that the guest made a request that the driver should do a certain errand of the guest does not necessarily make the case one of joint enterprise or indicate that the guest had either management or control of the car so as to make him responsible for the negligence of the driver.[20] If, however, the guest undertakes to keep a lookout and fails or has even a slight share in the management of the car, he may be held liable for the negligence of the driver.[1] There is a difference of opinion as to whether the husband may be the guest of his wife within the meaning of this rule. According to one view, he may be.[2] On the other hand, it has been denied that the rule can be extended so as to afford an avenue for the husband's escape from liability on account of the negligent act of his wife or minor child with whom he is riding in an automobile. He is presumed to exercise some control over them under the circumstances and is therefore liable for their negligence.[3]

---

[13] Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 145 Ky. 616, 140 S. W. 1047, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 560, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 689.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1913B, 694.

[14] Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 145 Ky. 616, 140 S. W. 1047, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 560, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 689.
Where the manufacturer of a defective automobile represented to the purchaser that it was properly constructed, very slight evidence of care on the part of the purchaser will entitle a third person, injured by reason of the defect, to recover from the manufacturer. Ibid.

[15] Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 145 Ky. 616, 140 S. W. 1047, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 560, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 689.

[16] Ibid.

[17] Ibid.

[17a] Foster v. Ford Motor Co. 139 Wash. 341, 246 P. 945, 48 A.L.R. 934.
Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 939.

[17b] Foster v. Ford Motor Co. 139 Wash. 341, 246 P. 945, 48 A.L.R. 934.

[18] Minor v. Mapes, 102 Ark. 351, 144 S. W. 219, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214; Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221; Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 150 P. 524, L.R.A.1915F, 876, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 264; Wilkinson v. Myatt-Dicks Motor Co. 136 La. 977, 68 So. 96, L.R.A.1915E, 439; Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81; Reiter v. Grober, 173 Wis. 493, 181 N. W. 739, 18 A.L.R. 362.
Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 365.
To render one riding in an automobile liable for the negligence of the chauffeur, either the relation of master and servant or that of principal and agent must exist, or the parties must be engaged in a joint enterprise so that responsibility exists for the acts of each other. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bell, 58 Okla. 84, 159 P. 336, L.R.A. 1917A, 543.

[19] Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81.
Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 365.

[20] Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 150 P. 524, L.R.A.1915F, 876, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 264.
Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 365.

[1] Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 365.

[2] Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221.
Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 365.

§ 352. Responsibility of Owner or Driver of One Car for Injuries Immediately Inflicted by Another Car.—The driver or owner of an automobile so negligently operated as to place others in a position where they are struck and injured by an automobile operated by a third person may be held liable therefor where it can be said that such negligence was the proximate cause of the resulting injuries.[4] Nor is the responsibility of a negligent driver or owner of an automobile for damage immediately inflicted by another car avoided by proof that the driver of the other car also was negligent.[5] If both are negligent and their concurring negligense is the proximate cause, they are jointly and severally liable.[6] Thus, responsibility for injuries to the person or property of another may be imposed upon the owner or driver of an automobile which is operated in such a negligent manner as to cause the injured person or his property to come or be thrown into the path of another car,[7] or to cause a second car to swerve from its course,[8] leave the highway,[9] or come to a sudden stop,[10] thereby causing injury to others or their property. It applies where the defendant's car negligently pushes a second car against the person or property of another[11] or where his car, which he has

---

[3] Minor v. Mapes, 102 Ark. 351, 144 S. W. 219, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214.
Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 365.

[4] Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174; Holmberg v. Villaume, 158 Minn. 442, 197 N. W. 849; Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463; Jaquith v. Worden, 73 Wash. 349, 132 P. 33, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.
Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1181.

[5] Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174.
Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1182.

[6] See supra, § 345.

[7] Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174.
Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1182, 1183.

Where two automobiles were racing along a road at excessive speed, and, in order to get out of the way of the first automobile, which passed to the right of a horse-drawn vehicle which was proceeding in the same direction near the middle of the road, the injured persons, becoming confused at the proximity of their danger, sprang to the left, and were struck by the second car, which was attempting to pass the first car, it was held that the plaintiffs could recover damages from the driver of either car. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1183.

In Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174, it is held that if the driver of the first automobile was negligent, and thereby placed the plaintiff and his automobile in such a position that they were struck by a following automobile, as well as by the first one, then the driver of the first automobile is liable for the injuries inflicted by both collisions.

[8] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1185–1188.

Where two automobiles approached an intersection negligently and at a high speed, and, to avoid a collision, one driver diverged sharply from his course and struck a pedestrian, the drivers of both cars were held liable for the pedestrian's injury. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1187.

Where a truck backed up to the curb was driven crosswise of a narrow street without signal or warning, in violation of a city ordinance, and the driver of another automobile proceeding up the street swerved to one side to avoid the truck and negligently hit a third car parked at the curb, the owner of the truck was held equally liable with the second driver for the damage resulting to the parked car. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1188.

[9] In Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463, the court held both automobile drivers who were unlawfully and negligently racing their respective automobiles on a public highway in concert liable to a person riding in one of the cars who was injured by the overturning of the car in attempting to take a turn.

[10] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1190.

It is not material that the defendant's car never came into physical contact with the plaintiff or his car if it is once established that the defendant was negligent in such a manner that the driver of the other car was placed in a position of peril. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1190.

[11] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1188–1190.

Where a driver tried to cut in ahead of another automobile the driver of which could have avoided a collision by slightly turning his car and lessening its speed, and the resulting collision threw one of the cars against a bicyclist, who was killed, it was asserted that the driver of either car could have been held liable for the death, and a verdict of the jury against both of the defendants was declared to be one parked in a negligent manner, is struck and hurled against another.[12] There is no liability, however, on the part of the negligent owner or driver if the negligence complained of on his part is not a proximate cause of the damage immediately inflicted by a second car.[13]

B. Owner where Car Driven by Another

1. In General

§ 353. Generally.[14]—At common law, liability for the negligent use of an automobile by one other than the owner cannot be predicated against the owner merely because of such ownership.[15] The owner of a car, in the absence of a statute changing the common-law rule, is not liable for the negligence of one who stands in the relation of independent contractor in the operation of the car.[16] Whether the driver is an employee or an independent contractor is determined by the general principles applicable to that phase of the law.[17] Obviously the owner of a car, in general, is not responsible for its negligent operation by a trespasser. Even the statutes which make an owner liable for injury inflicted by other persons operating his car stipulate generally that to create such liability the car must be taken with the owner's express or implied consent. The automobile is not, according to the great weight of authority, an inherently dangerous agency[18] so as to make the owner liable.[19]

§ 354. Presence of Owner in Car.—The mere presence of the owner in an automobile while it is being driven in a negligent manner by another does not necessarily make him liable for an injury caused thereby if he would not otherwise have been liable.[1] Assuming that the owner does not interfere in any way with the management of the car,[2] this rule holds whether the car is being driven by a member of his family[3] or by a stranger to whom he has which could not be interfered with by an appellate court. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1190.

---

[12] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1190.

Where the owner of an automobile left it parked at night, without a light, on a highway, and the driver of a second car struck it while driving at a fast rate of speed and while blinded by a street car's headlight, in consequence of which collision he was caused to run upon the sidewalk and strike a pedestrian, the owners of both cars were held liable for the pedestrian's injuries. Jaquith v. Worden, 73 Wash. 349, 132 P. 33, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.

[13] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1181, 1184, 1188.

[14] As to car driven by dealers and demonstrators, see supra, §§ 347 et seq.

[15] Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127; Potts v. Pardee, 220 N. Y. 431, 116 N. E. 78, 8 A.L.R. 785; Reilly v. Connable, 214 N. Y. 586, 108 N. E. 853, L.R.A.1916A, 954, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 656; Ouellette v. Superior Motor & Mach. Works, 157 Wis. 531, 147 N. W. 1014, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1140, s. 68 A.L.R. 1009, and 100 A.L.R. 921.

[16] Segler v. Callister, 167 Cal. 377, 139 P. 819, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 772.

Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 845, § 1238.

[17] See INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 65].

[18] See supra, §§ 11, 12.

[19] Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93. But see Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 80 Fla. 441, 86 So. 629, 16 A.L.R. 255.

See infra, § 356.

[1] Zeeb v. Bahnmaier, 103 Kan. 599, 176 P. 326, 2 A.L.R. 883

Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 888, s. 80 A.L.R. 285.

[2] Reiter v. Grober, 173 Wis. 493, 181 N. W. 739, 18 A.L.R. 362.

A superintendent of a fire department who permits his car to be driven at excessive speed by a fireman assigned to duty as his driver, after reasonable opportunity to protest, may be found to have approved of the unlawful speed so as to be liable for injuries thereby inflicted upon a traveler on the highway. Dowler v. Johnson, 225 N. Y. 39, 121 N. E. 487, 3 A.L.R. 146.

[3] Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221 (wife driving car owned jointly); Zeeb v. Bahnmaier, 103 Kan. 599, 176 P. 326, 2 A.L.R. 883; Halverson v. Blosser, 101 Kan. 683, 168 P. 863, L.R.A.1918B, 498 (son driving parent's car); Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280 (husband driving wife's car); Reiter v. Grober, 173 Wis. 493, 181 N. W. 739, 18 A.L.R. 362 (son driving parent's car).

Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 888, s. 80 A.L.R. 286.

A wife's presence in an automobile owned by her and driven by her husband with her consent does not exclude the theory that the husband was her bailee and loaned or hired the car.[4] A husband driving his wife's automobile, even with the wife present, may be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be in control of the car and solely responsible for its operation.[5] Except as statutory liability may be imposed upon an owner for the negligence of those permitted to use his car[6] or the doctrine of dangerous instrumentality may be applied to automobiles,[7] an automobile owner is charged with the negligence of the driver only when he has the right to exercise control over and direct the driver to such an extent that the doctrine of respondeat superior may be invoked.[8] According to the great weight of authority, the owner, present in his own automobile while it is being driven by one other than his servant, cannot be held liable on the theory that the automobile is a dangerous machine.[9] The owner's presence in the car at the time of an accident is, however, an important element where recovery is sought on the theory that the operator was acting as his servant or agent or that the owner had control over the operation of the car;[10] an inference may readily be drawn, from the fact of the owner's presence, that the automobile was being driven by his agent or that he had some control over it.[11] The strength of the inference varies with the circumstances—probably the strongest is drawn against the owner in a case where his wife or child is driving with him when an injury occurs.[12] In a number of cases, under the facts proved, where the car in which the owner was riding was being driven by a member of his family, the owner was held liable for the negligent operation of the car.[13] Where the common-law rule making the husband liable for the torts committed by the wife is in force, a husband may be held liable for an injury inflicted while his wife was driving his automobile, in which he was riding.[14] Moreover, the owner may be held liable where there is evidence sufficient to warrant a finding of negligence on his part.[15]

In jurisdictions where the family purpose doctrine obtains, an owner may be held responsible for the negligence of a member of his family who is driving the car in which the owner is riding.[16] He may also be held liable for the

---

that she was riding as his guest. Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280.

[4] Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81.

Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 890, s. 80 A.L.R. 288.

[5] Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280.

[6] See infra, §§ 397 et seq.

[7] See § 12.

[8] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 888, s. 80 A.L.R. 286.

[9] Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81.

[10] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 888, s. 80 A.L.R. 286.

[11] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 888, s. 80 A.L.R. 286.

[12] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 888, s. 80 A.L.R. 286.

[13] Cowart v. Lewis, 151 Miss. 221, 117 So. 531, 61 A.L.R. 1229.

Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 888, s. 80 A.L.R. 286.

In Cowart v. Lewis, 151 Miss. 221, 117 So. 531, 61 A.L.R. 1229, a husband who, at the time of an injury to a passenger in an automobile owned jointly by himself and wife, was riding in the front seat beside his wife, who was driving in a negligent manner, and heard remonstrances of other occupants of the car, was held liable for injuries to the passenger occasioned by his wife's negligent operation of the automobile.

[14] Minor v. Mapes, 102 Ark. 351, 144 S. W. 219, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214.

[15] Ibid.

[16] See infra, §§ 365 et seq.

In Switzer v. Sherwood, 80 Wash. 19, 141 P. 181, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 216, where the automobile which caused the injury was occupied by a husband and wife, driven by the wife, owned by them as a community, and used for their pleasure and that of their family and also in connection with their business, a claim that the act causing the injury was the wife's individual tort, or, at most, the tort of the husband and wife, and that it was error to allow judgment against the community, was disallowed, the court relying upon the authorities holding an owner of an automobile, purchased for family use, liable for injuries sustained through its negligent operation by members of the family.

driver's negligence if he is engaged with the driver in the prosecution of a joint enterprise.[17]

2. Intrusting to Incompetent or Unlicensed Driver

§ 355. Generally.—An owner who lends his automobile to another, knowing that the latter is an incompetent, reckless, or careless driver, is liable for such person's negligence; the owner's liability in such cases is based upon his own negligence in intrusting the automobile to such a person.[18] Intrusting the car to a minor child known to be a reckless and incompetent driver,[19] or to one forbidden to operate a car,[20] or to an unlicensed driver,[1] constitutes an act of negligence for which the owner is liable.

---

[17] See supra, § 345.

As to joint adventures generally, see Joint Adventures [Also 15 R. C. L. pp. 500 et seq.].

[18] Gardiner v. Solomon, 200 Ala. 115, 75 So. 621, L.R.A.1917F, 380; Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87; Priestly v. Skourup, 142 Kan. 127, 45 P. (2d) 852, 100 A.L.R. 916; Elliott v. Harding, 107 Ohio St. 501, 140 N. E. 338, 36 A.L.R. 1128; Crowell v. Duncan, 145 Va. 489, 134 S. E. 576, 50 A.L.R. 1425 (loan to one addicted to use of intoxicants); Mitchell v. Churches, 119 Wash. 547, 206 P. 6, 36 A.L.R. 1132.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1148, s. 68 A.L.R. 1013, and 100 A.L.R. 923; L.R.A.1915D, 691, s. L.R.A.1916E, 1295, and L.R.A.1917F, 384.

While automobiles are not regarded as inherently dangerous instrumentalities and the owner of an automobile is not responsible for its negligent use except upon the theory of the doctrine of respondeat superior, yet there is an exception if he intrusts it to one, though not an agent or servant, who is so incompetent in handling an automobile as to convert it into a dangerous instrumentality, and the incompetency is known to the owner when permitting the use of the vehicle by such person. Gardiner v. Solomon, 200 Ala. 115, 75 So. 621, L.R.A.1917F, 380.

The automobile has become so perfected that it may not be classed as a "dangerous instrumentality," when intelligently managed. It will not shy, balk, back up, or run away when properly directed, but may do all of these when managed by an inexperienced, incompetent, or reckless driver. When in the control of such a one it becomes an exceedingly destructive agency, as the daily toll of lives and the many injuries to persons chronicled by the newspapers attest. If the owner of such agency consents to turn it over to the control of an incompetent or reckless chauffeur, he is not deprived of any legal right when he is held liable for its negligent operation while in such control, and a greater degree of safety to the general public is likely to follow. Stapleton v. Independent Brewing Co. 198 Mich. 170, 164 N. W. 520, L.R.A. 1918A, 916.

[19] Gardiner v. Solomon, 200 Ala. 115, 75 So. 621, L.R.A. 1917F, 380.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1150, s. 68 A.L.R. 1014, and 100 A.L.R. 926.

In the case of a mere permissive use, the liability of the owner would rest not alone upon the fact of ownership, but upon the combined negligence of the owner and the driver,—negligence of the one in intrusting the machine to an incompetent driver, and negligence of the other in its operation. Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87.

[20] Hopkins v. Droppers, 184 Wis. 400, 198 N. W. 738, 36 A.L.R. 1156.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1164, s. 49 A.L.R. 1523.

Upon subsequent appeal in the Hopkins Case, supra, however, it was held, that the father was not, in order to avoid liability for injuries caused by the son's negligent use of the machine, bound to do more than forbid him to use it in violation of the statute, where there was nothing to show that the son was unruly, wilful, or repeatedly disobedient. Hopkins v. Droppers, 191 Wis. 334, 210 N. W. 684, 49 L.R.A. 1519.

Negligence on the part of an automobile driver is shown where there is evidence that he was incompetent and was operating a car with four wheel brakes, to which he was not accustomed, for practice, and that after having driven a short distance and while traveling about 40 miles an hour, he turned the wheels to avoid an object, and jammed on the brakes, which resulted in the car overturning. Kerr v. Haug Motors [1930] 39 Manitoba L. R. 238, 16 B. R. C. 838. Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 849.

The owner of an automobile who permits it to be operated by one not possessing the age qualifications required by municipal ordinance is not liable for injuries inflicted by the car upon a boy who dashes in front of it from the sidewalk so suddenly that no one could have avoided striking him. Elmendorf v. Clark, 143 La. 971, 79 So. 557, L.R.A.1918F, 802.

[1] Walker v. Klopp, 99 Neb. 794, 157 N. W. 962, L.R.A.1916E, 1292.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1152, s. 68 A.L.R. 1015, and 100 A.L.R. 926.

In Walker v. Klopp, 99 Neb. 794, 157 N. W. 962, L.R.A.1916E, 1292, a statute providing that it shall be unlawful for any person under sixteen years of age, or for any intoxicated person, to operate a motor vehicle, and declaring that any owner, dealer, or manufacturer of motor vehicles who permitted a person under sixteen, or an intoxicated person, to operate a motor vehicle shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, was held to impose a public duty to refrain from permitting the persons designated from operating motor vehicles; and an owner who permitted his son, under sixteen years of age, to operate his automobile was held guilty of negligence and liable for an injury inflicted by his car, the other elements of negligence being present.

One permitting an unlicensed person to

3. Liability where Car Loaned

§ 356. Generally.—In the absence of a change of rule by statute, the owner of an automobile, who intrusts it to another who is competent to operate it, is not, according to the great weight of authority, responsible for the negligence of the borrower in the use thereof in his own business and affairs.[2] This is true where the car is let for hire.[3] These cases adhere to the general doctrine that the automobile is not a dangerous instrumentality.[4] It is not necessary for the owner to test the competency and skill of the customer before intrusting him with it.[5]

In at least one jurisdiction the view is taken that an automobile operated on the public highways is a dangerous instrumentality and that the owner thereof is responsible for the manner in which it is used by any person to whom it is intrusted.[6]

§ 357. Furnishing Driver of Leased Automobile.—The driver furnished with a leased automobile is generally held to be the servant of the owner of the machine, where the lessee has authority only to give directions as to where the car shall be driven.[7] The owner is therefore liable for injuries inflicted upon occupants of the car through the driver's negligence.[8] The owner is also liable to third persons injured through the driver's negligence.[9] Some such cases present a question for the jury as to whether the driver is the servant of the owner or of the lessee.[10]

While it has been held that the owner of an automobile who lends his car and driver to a friend is not liable for injury sustained through the driver's negligence, such decisions turn on the question of the measure of duty owed rather than on any question of imputed negligence.[10a] drive in a congested district a truck committed to his care is chargeable with the driver's negligence and cannot recover damages for injuries to which such negligence contributes. Zandras v. Moffett, 286 Pa. 477, 133 A. 817, 47 A.L.R. 699.

---

[2] Smith v. Callahan, 34 Del. 129, 144 A. 46, 64 A.L.R. 830; Neubrand v. Kraft, 169 Iowa, 444, 151 N. W. 455, L.R.A.1915D, 691; Halverson v. Blosser, 101 Kan. 683, 168 P. 863, L.R.A.1918B, 498; Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81; Blair v. Broadwater, 121 Va. 301, 93 S. E. 632, L.R.A.1918A, 1011.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1138, s. 68 A.L.R. 1009, and 100 A.L.R. 921; 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81; L.R.A.1915D, 691; Ann. Cas. 1916A, 668.

An automobile with a broken muffler or without a muffler is not such an inherently dangerous agency as to make the owner liable for injuries sustained through negligent driving while the automobile was being used by persons to whom the owner had loaned it for their own purposes. Halverson v. Blosser, 101 Kan. 683, 168 P. 863, L.R.A.1918B, 498.

[3] Fisher v. Fletcher, 191 Ind. 529, 133 N. E. 834, 22 A.L.R. 1392; Neubrand v. Kraft, 169 Iowa, 444, 151 N. W. 455, L.R.A.1915D, 691; Eklof v. Waterston, 132 Or. 479, 285 P. 201, 68 A.L.R. 1003.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1153, s. 68 A.L.R. 1016, and 100 A.L.R. 927.

[4] Gardiner v. Solomon, 200 Ala. 115, 75 So. 621, L.R.A.1917F, 380; Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 81; Elliott v. Harding, 107 Ohio St. 501, 140 N. E. 338, 36 A.L.R. 1128; Blair v. Broadwater, 121 Va. 301, 93 S. E. 632, L.R.A. 1918A, 1011.

See generally, supra, §§ 11, 12.

[5] Neubrand v. Kraft, 169 Iowa, 444, 151 N. W. 455, L.R.A.1915D, 691.

[6] Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 80 Fla. 441, 86 So. 629, 16 A.L.R. 255.

[7] Forbes v. Reinman, 112 Ark. 417, 166 S. W. 563, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164; Shepard v. Jacobs, 204 Mass. 110, 90 N. E. 392, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442, 134 Am. St. Rep. 648; Meyers v. Tri-State Auto. Co. 121 Minn. 68, 140 N. W. 184, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113; Gerretson v. Rambler Garage Co. 149 Wis. 528, 136 N. W. 186, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457.

Annotation: 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457, s. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164. See also §§ 384 et seq.

[8] Forbes v. Reinman, 112 Ark. 417, 166 S. W. 563, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164; Meyers v. Tri-State Auto. Co. 121 Minn. 68, 140 N. W. 184, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113; Gerretson v. Rambler Garage Co. 149 Wis. 528, 136 N. W. 186, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457.

Annotation: 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457, s. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

[9] Shepard v. Jacobs, 204 Mass. 110, 90 N. E. 392, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442, 134 Am. St. Rep. 648.

Annotation: 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457, s. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

[10] Minor v. Stevens, 65 Wash. 423, 118 P. 313, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178.

Annotation: 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457, s. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 115, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

[10a] Perkins v. Galloway, 194 Ala. 265, 69 So. 875, L.R.A.1916E, 1190; Beard v. Klus-

§ 358. Lending Defective Automobile.—In intrusting automobiles in the hands of third persons for operation, the owner must take certain precautions to see that the cars are not defective. The keeper of a public garage who lends automobiles for hire must use ordinary care to see that the car loaned is not in such a condition as to become dangerous.[11] In other words, there is a duty to inspect and make such simple and available tests as to its condition as the intended use would suggest to sensible and right-minded persons.[12] The garage keeper must exercise ordinary care to see that the steering gear is in reasonably safe condition. If he fails to exercise such care and loans an automobile with steering gear in a defective condition which would have been discovered in the exercise of ordinary care, he is liable for injuries proximately resulting to third parties from such defect.[13]

Toward the bailee a bailor for hire is generally held to a high degree of care to make an examination of the automobile before letting it.[14]

A gratuitous bailor of an automobile is generally held to a lesser degree of care in seeing that the car is in condition for operation; he is not liable for injuries due to defects of which he is not aware, and is bound to disclose only defects of which he is aware and which might make the loan perilous to the bailee.[15] He is not bound to warn the bailee of defects which are open and patent to such bailee or of which he has in fact adequate knowledge and information.[16]

One invited by a gratuitous bailee of an automobile to ride in it stands in no better position with respect to the owner's liability for defects in it than does the bailee.[17]

4. ACTS OF MEMBERS OF FAMILY

a. IN GENERAL

§ 359. Generally.—In the absence of a statute imposing liability upon an owner of an automobile for the negligence of members of his family in the operation of the automobile,[18] the mere fact of a family relationship between the owner of an automobile and the person driving it on the occasion in question does not impose a liability upon the owner for the negligence of the driver.[19] This is so whether the car was being operated by the owner's child[20] or wife,[1] or by some more remote member of his family whom he has permitted to use his car.[2] Some statutes make an owner liable for the permissive use of his car by another and create a conclusive presumption of consent or meier, 158 Ky. 153, 164 S. W. 319, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 342, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100.

---

[11] Collette v. Page, 44 R. I. 26, 114 A. 136, 18 A.L.R. 74.

[12] Saunders System Birmingham Co. v. Adams, 217 Ala. 621, 117 So. 72, 61 A.L.R 1333.

[13] Collette v. Page, 44 R. I. 26, 114 A. 136, 18 A.L.R. 74.

[14] Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 788, s. 61 A.L.R. 1337.

See BAILMENTS [Also 3 R. C. L. p. 69].

[15] Johnson v. H. M. Bullard Co. 95 Conn. 251, 111 A. 70, 12 A.L.R. 766.

Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 793, s. 61 A.L.R. 1338.

Knowledge by the owner of an auto truck that it was temporarily equipped by the vendor with a second-hand body is not sufficient to charge him with knowledge that the stringers by which it was attached to the chassis were so defective as to render it dangerous for use by a gratuitous baliee, and require notice to him of the defect. Johnson v. H. M. Bullard Co. 95 Conn. 251, 111 A. 70, 12 A.L.R. 766.

[16] Johnson v. H. M. Bullard Co. 95 Conn. 251, 111 A. 70, 12 A.L.R. 766.

[17] Ibid.

[18] See infra, §§ 397 et seq.

[19] Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

[20] See infra, § 360.

[1] See infra, § 362.

[2] Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 942, § 1341.

permission where the car is driven by a member of the owner's family.[3] Aside from such statutes, however, the owner's liability for the negligent operation of his automobile by a member of his family must depend either upon the theory that the one driving the car was acting as the owner's agent or servant[4] or was otherwise subject to his control, or upon the theory of personal negligence on the part of the owner in intrusting the operation of the car to one incompetent to drive.[5] The family purpose doctrine which renders the owner of a car, who keeps it for family use, liable for injuries due to the negligence of a member of the family while operating the car although unaccompanied by any other member of the family recognizes the necessity of the existence of a relationship of agency or of master and servant in order to hold the owner liable for the acts of members of his family.[6]

§ 360. Child of Owner.—Except as the common law has been changed by statute, a parent is not liable for the tort even of a minor child merely because of the relationship of parent and child.[7] Liability cannot, therefore, be imposed upon the owner of an automobile for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the automobile by the owner's child merely by reason of the defendant's ownership of the automobile and the relationship of parent and child between the owner and driver.[8] An automobile is not, according to the great weight of authority, a dangerous agency[9] so as to render a parent liable for intrusting it to his child, regardless of the agency of the child, if the child is a competent driver.[10] A parent's liability for the tort of a child in the negligent management of the parent's automobile, apart from any statutory modification,[11] depends upon whether at the time of the injury complained of the child was operating the automobile as the agent or servant of the parent and was then engaged upon the parent's business.[12] Liabil-

---

[3] See infra, §§ 397 et seq.

[4] Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

[5] See supra, § 355.

[6] See infra, §§ 365 et seq.

[7] See Parent and Child [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 627, § 33].

As to liability of infant for his own tort, see Infants [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 259, §§ 36–39].

[8] Gardiner v. Solomon, 200 Ala. 115, 75 So. 621, L.R.A.1917F, 380; Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87; Smith v. Callahan, 34 Del. 129, 144 A. 46, 64 A.L.R. 830; Gordon v. Rose, 54 Idaho, 502, 33 P. (2d) 351, 93 A.L.R. 984; Arkin v. Page, 287 Ill. 420, 123 N. E. 30, 5 A.L.R. 216; Sultzback v. Smith, 174 Iowa, 704, 156 N. W. 673, L.R.A.1916F, 228; Zeeb v. Bahnmaier, 103 Kan. 599, 176 P. 326, 2 A.L.R. 883; Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 71 A. 296, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677; Elliott v. Harding, 107 Ohio St. 501, 140 N. E. 338, 36 A.L.R. 1128; McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 126 P. 742, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775; King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 217, 204 S. W. 296, L.R.A.1918F, 293; McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, 155 P. 437, L.R.A.1916D, 618.

Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297, 7 B. R. C. 39.

[9] See supra, §§ 11, 12.

[10] Gardiner v. Solomon, 200 Ala. 115, 75 So. 621, L.R.A.1917F, 380; Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87; Smith v. Callahan, 34 Del. 129, 144 A. 46, 64 A.L.R. 830; Arkin v. Page, 287 Ill. 420, 123 N. E. 30, 5 A.L.R. 216; Bradley v. Schmidt, 223 Ky. 784, 4 S. W. 703, 57 A.L.R. 1100; King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 217, 204 S. W. 296, L.R.A.1918F, 293; Blair v. Broadwater, 121 Va. 301, 93 S. E. 632, L.R.A.1918A, 1011.

[11] As to statutes imposing liability upon owner for negligence in use of car by member of owner's family, see infra, §§ 397 et seq.

[12] Woods v. Clements, 113 Miss. 720, 74 So. 422, L.R.A.1917E, 357; Elliott v. Harding, 107 Ohio St. 501, 140 N. E. 338, 36 A.L.R. 1128; Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490; King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 217, 204 S. W. 296, L.R.A.1918F, 293; Blair v. Broadwater, 121 Va. 301, 93 S. E. 632, L.R.A.1918A, 1011.

Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

An adult daughter in taking a car in which her father has a partnership interest for business purposes, with his implied consent, for a pleasure trip on which her mother accompanies her, is not the servant of her father so as to render him liable for an injury inflicted by her negligence upon a traveler on the highway. Woods v. Clements, 113 Miss. 720, 74 So. 422, L.R.A. 1917E, 357.

Before the negligence of a child will be imputed to its father, it is necessary to ity of a parent for the acts of his child rests upon the same basic facts as the liability of a master for the acts of his servant in the operation of the master's automobile.[13] A child may, of course, occupy the position of agent or servant of his parent while driving the parent's automobile, so as to subject the parent to liability for his acts,[14] but the mere fact of relationship of parent and child does not make the child the servant of the parent in driving an automobile owned by the parent.[15] However, the seeming injustice of allowing one who has purchased an automobile for the use of his family to escape responsibility for injury or damage resulting from its operation by members of his family who, in most instances, were financially irresponsible has led many courts, at least in the early development of automobile law, to stretch the principles of the law of agency and of master and servant to include the so-called family purpose doctrine under which one who purchases and maintains an automobile for the use and pleasure of his family is chargeable with the negligence of members of the family while using the automobile for their own pleasure. All courts which have adopted this doctrine recognize that fundamentally there must exist, either in fact or by process of judicial reasoning, a relationship of principal and agent or master and servant before there can be any liability.[16] Where adopted, it extends the principle of respondeat superior to create liability upon an automobile owner in situations which, but for its adoption, would not have existed. The tendency of the more recent decisions is to reject the doctrine; it has been definitely rejected by the courts of many states.[17] In jurisdictions which reject the family purpose doctrine, the mere ownership of an automobile purchased by a parent for the use and pleasure of himself and family does not render the parent liable in damages to a third person who may be injured by reason of the negligence of a minor child while operating the automobile for his own purpose and pleasure, notwithstanding the car is being used with the permission of the parent.[18] Even in many cases which assert recognition of the family purpose doctrine, liability is not imposed upon the parent where the automobile is used by the child alone, for his own pleasure.[19] Clearly, a parent cannot, apart from statute, be held liable where a child takes the parent's car for a purpose prove that the father was the owner of the car and that the relation of master and servant existed between the child and the parent, which proof raises a presumption that at the time of the accident the driver was acting for the parent and within the scope of his authority. Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490.

---

[13] Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490.

As to master's liability for act of servant, see infra, §§ 373 et seq.

[14] See infra, § 361.

[15] Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 71 A. 296, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677; Boes v. Howell, 24 N. M. 142, 173 P. 966, L.R.A.1918F, 288.

The operation by an eighteen-year-old boy of his father's automobile for his own pleasure, without the father's knowledge but with his implied general permission, does not make him the father's agent so as to render the latter liable for the son's negligent operation of the car. Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 87.

[16] Trice v. Bridgewater, 125 Tex. 75, 81 S. W. (2d) 63, 100 A.L.R. 1014.

[17] See infra, § 365.

[18] Gardiner v. Solomon, 200 Ala. 115, 75 So. 621, L.R.A.1917F, 380; Spence v. Fisher, 184 Cal. 209, 193 P. 255, 14 A.L.R. 1083; Smith v. Callahan, 34 Del. 129, 144 A. 46, 64 A.L.R. 830; Pratt v. Clothier, 119 Me. 203, 110 A. 353, 10 A.L.R. 1434; Myers v. Shipley, 140 Md. 380, 116 A. 645, 20 A.L.R. 1460; McGowan v. Longwood, 242 Mass. 337, 136 N. E. 72, 23 A.L.R. 617; Woods v. Clements, 113 Miss. 720, 74 So. 422, L.R.A.1917E, 357; Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127; Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 71 A. 296, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677; Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, 220 N. Y. 111, 115 N. E. 443, L.R.A.1917F, 363; Trice v. Bridgewater, 125 Tex. 75, 81 S. W. (2d) 63, 100 A.L.R. 1014; Blair v. Broadwater, 121 Va. 301, 93 S. E. 632, L.R.A.1918A, 1011; Hopkins v. Droppers, 184 Wis. 400, 198 N. W. 738, 36 A.L.R. 1156.

Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

[19] See infra, § 368.

of his own, without the parent's knowledge or consent,[20] or against his command.[1] This is so even under the family purpose doctrine.[2] Nor is an owner of an automobile liable for an injury inflicted by his adult son, who is in business for himself, while operating the car for his own purpose with the owner's consent as implied from the relationship of the parties and previous permitted use.[3]

§ 361. —Child as Agent of Parent.—Although the relationship of parent and child does not suffice to make the child the servant of the parent within the meaning of the rule of respondeat superior, or to impose upon the parent liability for torts committed without his knowledge or authority,[4] as to third persons, a child whether a minor or an adult may become, by particular arrangement, the agent or servant of its parent, so as to charge the parent with liability for the child's negligent operation of the parent's automobile.[5] This relationship may arise from an implied agreement[6] or from previous conduct.[7] It is not necessary that there be an express contract of employment or an express agreement for compensation,[8] for instance, the child need not be a hired chauffeur.[9] In any case, if there are facts which reasonably justify an inference of a real agency or a master and servant relationship between parent and child in the use of the parent's automobile at the time in question, the parent may be held liable to the same extent that any other owner is liable for the tortious act of his agent or servant in the operation of an automobile.[10] In order, however, to hold the parent liable on the theory of responsibility under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the child must have been acting within the scope of his employment.[11] Even conceding the existence of an agency or master and servant relationship, the parent cannot be held responsible for an act of the child while engaged in some private matter of his own,[12] unless the parent, with full knowledge of the facts,[13] ratifies the act of the child.[14] The question of liability, if any, in cases where there may be an issue of fact as to the nature of the mission in which the child may be engaged (other than his or her personal ends and pleasure) is to be determined upon the facts of each particular case.[15]

---

[20] Sultzbach v. Smith, 174 Iowa, 704, 156 N. W. 673, L.R.A.1916F, 228; Myers v. Shipley, 140 Md. 380, 116 A. 645, 20 A.L.R. 1460.
Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 816.

[1] Sultzbach v. Smith, 174 Iowa, 704, 156 N. W. 673, L.R.A.1916F, 228; Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127.

[2] See infra, § 368.

[3] Gardiner v. Solomon, 200 Ala. 115, 75 So. 621, L.R.A.1917F, 380.

[4] See supra, § 360.

[5] Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87; Griffin v. Russell, 144 Ga. 275, 87 S. E. 10, L.R.A.1916F, 216, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 994.
Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297, 7 B. R. C. 39.

[6] Woods v. Clements, 113 Miss. 720, 74 So. 422, L.R.A.1917E, 357.

[7] Annotation: L.R.A.1916F, 223.

[8] Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87; Woods v. Clements, 113 Miss. 720, 74 So. 422, L.R.A.1917E, 357; Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 71 A. 296, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677.
Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

[9] Annotation: L.R.A.1916F, 223.

[10] Hiroux v. Baum, 137 Wis. 197, 118 N. W. 533, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332.

An automobile purchased with the understanding that the son of the purchaser should be taught to operate it may be found to be in possession of the son as agent of the purchaser while the instructions are being given. Ibid.

[11] Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

[12] Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 71 A. 296, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677.

[13] Myers v. Shipley, 140 Md. 380, 116 A. 645, 20 A.L.R. 1460.

[14] The mere fact, however, that a father renders aid to one injured by his son's operation of his automobile does not show ratification of the son's act so as to render the father liable for the injury. Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 60 So. 150, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 87.

In any case, of course, in an action against the owner of an automobile to recover damages for an injury inflicted in the operation of the automobile by the owner's child, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover unless the injuries were the proximate result of the negligence of the driver.[15a]

Where a member of the family is driving the car for the transportation of the owner or in direct furtherance of the owner's business, the owner may be charged with the negligence of the driver as his agent or servant. In such case the family purpose doctrine is inappropriately referred to.[16] In many cases a child, when acting as the chauffeur of an automobile purchased by its parent for the use of the family, has been considered to be acting as agent for the parent when operating the car for the convenience or pleasure of members of the family.[17] Many of the decisions to this effect may, however, be ascribed to an application of the so-called family purpose doctrine which is invoked by some courts to impose upon a parent who furnishes a car for the use of his family liability for negligence of members of his family when using it for their own purposes. Courts which adopt this doctrine read into the situation a relationship of master and servant or principal and agent, the master or principal being the head of the family, the servants or agents being the family members, and the business attended to by the servants or agents in behalf of the master or principal being the entertainment, pleasure, or convenience of themselves.[18]

§ 362. Wife or Husband of Owner.—At common law a husband is liable for the torts of his wife committed during coverture,[19] and where this common-law rule prevails, a husband can be held liable for the negligence of his wife in operating his automobile.[20] In practically all jurisdictions, however, this common-law rule holding the husband liable for his wife's torts is abrogated, either by force of the married women's property acts or by statutes expressly abrogating the tort liability of the husband,[1] and accordingly a husband is not, merely by virtue of the marital relationship, liable for injuries caused by his wife's negligent operation of an automobile.[2] In the absence of a statute imposing liability for the use of an automobile by members of the owner's family,[3] a husband can be held liable for the negligent operation of his automobile by his wife only upon the theory of personal negligence in intrusting the car to her, knowing that she is incompetent to drive,[4] or upon the theory that the wife, in driving his automobile, was at the time of the injury acting as her husband's agent[5] or that he otherwise exercised control over her operation of the car. The husband is not, according to the great weight of authority, liable on the theory of intrusting a dangerous instrumentality to another.[6]

---

[15] Trice v. Bridgewater, 125 Tex. 75, 81 S. W. (2d) 63, 100 A.L.R. 1014.

[15a] Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1440.

[16] Trice v. Bridgewater, 125 Tex. 75, 81 S. W. (2d) 63, 100 A.L.R. 1014.

[17] Annotation: 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A. 1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

If the owner of a car directly or indirectly causes his child to drive the car for the benefit of members of his family, such driver may become the agent of the owner. Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, 220 N. Y. 111, 115 N. E. 443, L.R.A.1917F, 363.

[18] See infra, §§ 365 et seq.

[19] See HUSBAND AND WIFE [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 1229, § 264].

[20] See Minor v. Mapes, 102 Ark. 351, 144 S. W. 219, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214, holding the husband liable for his wife's negligence in the operation of her own automobile. The common-law rule has since been abrogated by statute in Arkansas. Bourland v. Baker, 141 Ark. 280, 216 S. W. 707, 20 A.L.R. 525.

[1] See HUSBAND AND WIFE [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 1233, §§ 269–271].

[2] Bourland v. Baker, 141 Ark. 280, 216 S. W. 707, 20 A.L.R. 525; Landry v. Richmond, 45 R. I. 504, 124 A. 263, 32 A.L.R. 1500.

[3] See infra, §§ 397 et seq.

[4] See supra, § 355.

[5] Hutchins v. Haffner, 63 Colo. 365, 167 P. 966, L.R.A.1918A, 1008; Landry v. Rich-

In jurisdictions which have adopted the family purpose doctrine, the agency theory has been so extended as to hold an owner of an automobile purchased and maintained for the pleasure of his family liable for injuries inflicted by the machine while it was being used by his wife with his permission.[7] However, in jurisdictions which have rejected the family purpose doctrine, a man is not liable for an injury caused by the negligent operation by his wife of an automobile maintained for her use or for the general use of his family when she, a competent driver, is using it for her own purposes.[8] Conversely, the fact that a husband negligently operates a car owned by his wife does not, in the absence of a statutory change in the common-law rules,[9] impose a liability upon the wife,[10] unless she exercised some measure of control over his driving or it can be said that he was acting as her agent or servant in operating the car.[11] Nor does the mere fact of her presence in the car, or her failure to object to her husband's manner of driving, render her liable for his act.[12] Her presence does not preclude the theory that the husband was her bailee and she was riding as his guest.[13]

§ 363. Liability to Invited Guest of Member of Family.—It follows from the general rules which govern the liability of an owner for the negligence of a member of his family in operating his automobile[14] that a relationship of parent and child is not sufficient to render a parent liable for injury to a child's guest resulting from the child's negligent operation of the parent's automobile.[15] A parent may, however, be held liable for injury to a child's guest through the child's negligence in the operation of the parent's automobile on the ground that the parent was negligent in loaning the car to a person known to be incompetent.[16] In at least one jurisdiction the parent has been held liable on the theory of intrusting a dangerous instrumentality to the child,[17] although other courts have uniformly denied application of the dangerous instrumentality theory to the operation of automobiles.[18] Generally speaking, the liability of a parent for injury to a child's guest, resulting from the child's negligent operation of the car, is dependent on whether the child was acting as the parent's agent or servant in operating the parent's automobile and had authority to invite others to ride. Liability has been imposed in a number of cases,[19] especially in those jurisdictions which recog-mond, 45 R. I. 504, 124 A. 263, 32 A.L.R. 1500.

---

Annotation: L.R.A.1916F, 227, s. L.R.A. 1918F, 300.

[6] Landry v. Richmond, 45 R. I. 504, 124 A. 263, 32 A.L.R. 1500.

[7] See infra, §§ 365 et seq.

[8] Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221; Landry v. Richmond, 45 R. I. 504, 124 A. 263, 32 A.L.R. 1500.

Annotation: L.R.A.1916F, 226.

[9] Wolf v. Sulik, 93 Conn. 431, 106 A. 443, 4 A.L.R. 356.

Generally, as to statutory liability of owners, see infra, §§ 397 et seq.

[10] Potts v. Pardee, 220 N. Y. 431, 116 N. E. 78, 8 A.L.R. 785 (wife's car operated by husband's chauffeur).

Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 1466.

[11] Generally, as to liability of wife for tort of husband while acting as her agent, see HUSBAND AND WIFE [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 1227, § 262].

[12] Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 1463.

Generally, as to the effect of the owner's presence in the car on his liability for the acts of the driver, see supra, § 354.

[13] Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280.

[14] See supra, §§ 359–362.

[15] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 900, s. 88 A.L.R. 590.

[16] Annotation: 88 A.L.R. 592.

[17] Annotation: 88 A.L.R. 594.

[18] See § 11.

[19] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 900, s. 88 A.L.R. 590.

A father who knew of his son's custom to have his friends with him while operating the father's car is not relieved from liability for a violation of the law as to the permissible number,—four persons were riding in the front seat of the car operatnize the family purpose doctrine.[1] However, where a driver of an automobile is held liable only for gross negligence to invitees,[2] a parent is liable to one riding at the invitation of his child only if the child was guilty of gross negligence.[3] If, under the facts of the case, it cannot be said that there is either an actual agency relationship or, in jurisdictions which recognize the family purpose doctrine, an agency relationship within the meaning of that doctrine, there is no liability,[4] assuming the absence of personal negligence on the part of the parent and of a statute imposing liability for the use of a car by a member of the owner's family.

§ 364. Acts of Third Person Whom Member of Family Permits to Drive.—In order to charge the owner of an automobile with liability for the act of a third person whom a member of his family permits to operate the car, it is necessary to establish that the owner would have been liable for the personal negligence of the member of the family; in other words, there must be an agency relation with reference to the latter's operation of the automobile, within the rules above stated. If such a relationship exists, the owner's liability is then determined by the principles which, in the ordinary master and servant cases, determine the liability of the master for the acts of a third person whom the servant has permitted to drive.[5] Thus, the constructive identity doctrine which holds a master who has intrusted the operation of his automobile to a servant liable for the act of a third person whom the servant permits to operate the car[6] has been applied where an owner of a car is sought to be charged with the negligence of a third person operating the owner's car with the permission of the owner's child. In other words, the owner of an automobile, who permits his son to take it, is liable for injuries caused by the negligent driving of a third person whom the son permits to operate the car, while remaining in it himself, if the owner would have been liable had the son himself been driving at the time of the accident.[7] Similarly, the owner of an automobile has been held liable for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the car by a third person whom the owner's wife had directed or permitted to drive in her presence.[8]

b. "Family Purpose" Doctrine

§ 365. Generally.[9]—The so-called "family purpose doctrine" is one of comparatively recent origin and rapid growth.[10] This doctrine holds the owner

---

ed by the son,—because the father had warned the son against violating the law in that regard. McDowell v. Hurner, 142 Or. 617, 20 P. (2d) 395, 88 A.L.R. 578.

[1] Johnson v. Evans, 141 Minn. 356, 170 N. W. 220, 2 A.L.R. 891.

[2] See supra, § 231.

[3] Flynn v. Lewis, 231 Mass. 550, 121 N. E. 493, 2 A.L.R. 896.

[4] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 900, s. 88 A.L.R. 590.

[5] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 851, s. 98 A.L.R. 1043.

See infra, §§ 382, 383.

Where an incompetent person is permitted to drive the owner may be held liable for that person's negligence. Annotation: 98 A.L.R. 1051.

[6] See infra, § 383.

[7] Thixton v. Palmer, 210 Ky. 838, 276 S. W. 971, 44 A.L.R. 1379.

Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1389.

In Kayser v. Van Nest, 125 Minn. 277, 146 N. W. 1091, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 971, where the defendant's daughter permitted another to drive the parent's car, and through such person's negligence the accident occurred, it was held that the mere fact that the car was driven at the time of the accident by one not authorized by the owner to do so, but who was permitted to do so by the one who had charge of the car, did not necessarily absolve the owner from liability for the injury caused.

[8] Ulman v. Lindeman, 44 N. D. 36, 176 N. W. 25, 10 A.L.R. 1440.

[9] This subdivision does not include the question of an owner's liability, so far as it involves the application of the generally accepted principles for the determination of the relationship of master and servant or principal and agent, but covers merely the question of liability under the so-called "family purpose" doctrine.

[10] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 845, s. 88 A.L.R.

of an automobile which was purchased and maintained for the pleasure of his or her family liable for injuries inflicted by the machine while it was being used by members of the family for their own pleasure, on the theory that the car was being used for the purpose or business for which it was kept, and that the person operating it was, therefore, acting as the owner's agent or servant in using it.[11] It is said to be one of the indispensable requisites of the family purpose doctrine that the person on whom it is sought to fasten liability under that principle owns, maintains, or provides an automobile for the general use, pleasure, and convenience of the family.[12] A direct conflict exists among the courts concerning the doctrine under consideration. It is, however, usually connected with the factual setting of the cases, so that it has seemed better to show the holdings of the various courts under the subdivisions as herein subsequently appears.

Some courts have squarely rejected it, while others have as unqualifiedly approved and adopted it. The doctrine undoubtedly involves a novel application of the rule of respondeat superior and may, perhaps, be regarded as straining that rule unduly. There are, however, undoubted practical considerations in favor of the doctrine, since it puts the financial responsibility of the owner behind the car while it is being used by a member of the family, who is likely to be financially irresponsible, in the pursuit and furtherance of the purpose for which the car is kept, and since it relieves the injured person from the difficult task of meeting the owner's claim that upon the occasion in question, the car was not being used for his pleasure or business. The doctrine extends, of course, its protection not only to pedestrians, but to other automobilists who may be injured in person or property by the negligence of a member of the family of the owner of the car in question.[13]

§ 366. Effect of Statute.—It may be observed that the practical results accomplished by the family purpose doctrine, without the aid of a statute, are secured in some states by statutes which in effect hold the owner responsible for all injuries negligently inflicted while the car is being used by another

---

602, and 100 A.L.R. 1021; 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A.1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

[11] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 845, s. 88 A.L.R. 602, and 100 A.L.R. 1021; 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, s. 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, L.R.A.1916F, 223, L.R.A.1917F, 365, and L.R.A.1918F, 297.

In McDowell v. Hurner, 142 Or. 617, 13 P. (2d) 600, 20 P. (2d) 395, 88 A.L.R. 578, the family purpose doctrine, which renders the owner of a car who keeps it for family use liable for injuries due to the negligence of a member of the family while operating the car, though unaccompanied by any other member of the family, was reaffirmed.

The family purpose doctrine originated in the desire of the courts, as a matter of justice or supposed necessity, to charge one who had purchased a car for the use of his family with responsibility for injury or damage resulting from its negligent operation by a member of his family. It was quite generally recognized that liability could not be based on the doctrine of master and servant or principal and agent as it had previously been applied. Owing, however, to the multitude of cases and the seeming injustice in allowing one so to purchase a car, turn it over to a member of his family, and thus make possible injury or damage to an innocent person, the principles of the law of master and servant and principal and agent were stretched by the courts in some jurisdictions, beyond their former limits, to include the so-called "family purpose doctrine," whereunder liability is imposed where none before existed. Annotation: 88 A.L.R. 602.

The family purpose doctrine is inappropriately referred to where a real relationship of agency is discernible, as where a member of the family is driving the car for the transportation of the owner or in direct furtherance of the owner's business, and is properly applicable only where a member of the owner's household is using it for his own purposes. Trice v. Bridgewater, 125 Tex. 75, 81 S. W. (2d) 63, 100 A.L.R. 1014.

[12] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 845, s. 88 A.L.R. 602, and 100 A.L.R. 1021.

The mere fact that a car is purchased for business purposes does not prevent its coming within the "family purpose" doctrine where it is used for family pleasure. Watson v. Burley, 105 W. Va. 416, 143 S. E. 95, 64 A.L.R. 839.

[13] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 846, s. 88 A.L.R. 602, and 100 A.L.R. 1021.

with the owner's consent, express or implied.[14] Such statutes, however, go further than the doctrine and cover cases beyond their reach—as, for example, where the car is not kept for family use, but is loaned upon a particular occasion.[15]

§ 367. Child Driving with Other Members of Family.—In a large number of cases in which it appears that an automobile is kept for the pleasure and convenience of the owner's family, it has been held that he is liable, under the family purpose doctrine, for an injury caused by it while it is being occupied and used with his express or implied permission by members of his family, who are being driven by one of his children; at least, these cases emphasize the point that the car is kept for, and habitually used by, the members of the family.[16]

§ 368. Car Used by Child Alone.—The family purpose doctrine is most clearly presented in cases where it is sought to hold the owner of a car kept for family use liable for an injury caused by it while one of his children was using it for his own purpose, and there is a decided conflict among the cases involving this question, the jurisdictions being practically evenly divided, though to a slight extent numerically favoring the nonliability view.[17]

One line of authority supports the view that where a car kept for family purposes causes an injury while being used by a child of the owner alone for his own pleasure, the owner is not liable under the so-called "family purpose" doctrine.[18]

[14] Stapleton v. Independent Brewing Co. 198 Mich. 170, 164 N. W. 520, L.R.A.1918A, 916.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 847, s. 88 A.L.R. 602, and 100 A.L.R. 1022.

In Gordon v. Rose, 54 Idaho, 502, 33 P. (2d) 351, 93 A.L.R. 984, it was held that a statute providing that every owner of a motor vehicle who caused, or knowingly permitted, a minor under the age of sixteen years to drive it upon a highway, should be jointly and severally liable with such minor for its negligent operation was indicative of the legislative intention that the owner of a motor vehicle should be liable for its negligent operation by a member of his family over sixteen only if the latter was his agent in fact.

[15] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 847, s. 88 A.L.R. 602, and 100 A.L.R. 1022.

[16] Griffin v. Russell, 144 Ga. 275, 87 S. E. 10, L.R.A.1916F, 216, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 994; Stowe v. Morris, 147 Ky. 386, 144 S. W. 52, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 224; Boes v. Howell, 24 N. M. 142, 173 P. 966, L.R.A.1918F, 288; McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 126 P. 742, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 848, s. 88 A.L.R. 602, and 100 A.L.R. 1023.

[17] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 851, s. 88 A.L.R. 603, and 100 A.L.R. 1023.

In Felcyn v. Gamble, 185 Minn. 357, 241 N. W. 37, 79 A.L.R. 1159, though declining to hold the "family purpose" doctrine applicable to a son's operation of a motor boat, the court recognized the doctrine, formerly announced in that jurisdiction, that where the head of the family makes it his business to provide recreation and pleasure for the family and its several members and to that end furnishes an automobile, he is responsible for its negligent use by any one of the family having his permission to drive it, stating that public policy requires that the doctrine be applied to automobiles in the interest of justice.

[18] Norton v. Hall, 149 Ark. 428, 232 S. W. 934, 19 A.L.R. 384; Spence v. Fisher, 184 Cal. 209, 193 P. 255, 14 A.L.R. 1083; Smith v. Callahan, 34 Del. 129, 144 A. 46, 64 A.L.R. 830; Pratt v. Cloutier, 119 Me. 203, 110 A. 353, 10 A.L.R. 1434; Myers v. Shipley, 140 Md. 380, 116 A. 645, 20 A.L.R. 1460; McGowan v. Longwood, 242 Mass. 337, 136 N. E. 72, 23 A.L.R. 617; Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A. 1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127; Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 71 A. 296, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677; Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, 220 N. Y. 111, 115 N. E. 443, L.R.A.1917F, 363; Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490; Behseleck v. Andrus, 60 S. D. 204, 244 N. W. 268, 88 A.L.R. 596; Blair v. Broadwater, 121 Va. 301, 93 S. E. 632, L.R.A.1918A, 1011.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 851, s. 88 A.L.R. 604, and 100 A.L.R. 1024.

In Trice v. Bridgewater, 125 Tex. 75, 81 S. W. (2d) 63, 100 A.L.R. 1014, it was held that the mere ownership of an automobile purchased by a father for the use and pleasure of himself and family did not render him liable in damages to a third person who was injured by reason of the negligence of the defendant's minor son while operating the car on the highway in pursuit of the son's own purpose and pleasure, notwithstanding he was using the car with the permission of his father. The court definitely rejected the family purpose doctrine, in so far at least as it applies in a case where a minor son is using the family car for his own purposes, holding the doctrine unsound under such circumstances.

The other line of authorities holds that where the owner's car is being used by one of his children alone at the time an injury is caused by it, the owner is liable, since the child is using the machine for the purpose for which the owner kept it.[19]

On the other hand, the doctrine has no application where the car is taken surreptitiously or in violation of orders. Thus, although a father may purchase an automobile for the general use of his family, he nevertheless retains the right to deny its use to any member when he sees fit; and when he does so, he cannot be held liable where the member surreptitiously takes the car after permission to use it has been refused and negligently operates it to the injury of another.[20]

Frequently, situations arise involving the application of the family purpose doctrine to cases where a child is driving to or from school. In such case the doctrine has generally been applied in those jurisdictions in which it is recognized, and to the extent recognized.[1] The owner of an automobile is not relieved from liability under the family purpose doctrine by the mere fact that the negligent use of the car was made by an adult child.[2] An adult child who resides at the parental home and is employed by, and partly dependent on, his father may properly be classed as a member of his father's family.[3] It will be noted in this connection that several of the jurisdictions which support the family purpose doctrine either do not recognize it in cases where the car is being driven by a child for his or her own purpose, or are very strict in limiting its application in such instances.[4]

§ 369. Car Used by Spouse of Owner.—The family purpose doctrine has in some cases been applied where a car kept for family purposes was being used by the owner's spouse at the time an injury resulted from its operation. In this situation, however, as in the others, the courts are also divided on the question of the liability of the owner.[5] In many cases the owner of an auto-

---

In Gordon v. Rose, 54 Idaho, 502, 33 P. (2d) 351, 93 A.L.R. 984, it was held that the owner of an automobile kept for family use could not be held liable for an injury caused by the negligence of a member of the family while using it for his own purposes.

[19] Griffin v. Russell, 144 Ga. 275, 87 S. E. 10, L.R.A.1916F, 216, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 994; Johnson v. Evans, 141 Minn. 356, 170 N. W. 220, 2 A.L.R. 891; Kayser v. Van Nest, 125 Minn. 277, 146 N. W. 1091, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 970; Harmon v. Haas, 61 N. D. 772, 241 N. W. 70, 80 A.L.R. 1131; King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 217, 204 S. W. 296, L.R.A. 1918F, 293; Switzer v. Sherwood, 80 Wash. 19, 141 P. 181, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 216; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 P. 1020, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59; Watson v. Burley, 105 W. Va. 416, 143 S. E. 95, 64 A.L.R. 839.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 861, s. 88 A.L.R. 608, and 100 A.L.R. 1025.

In Arkin v. Page, 287 Ill. 420, 123 N. E. 30, 5 A.L.R. 216, where the defendant's car, kept for family purposes, was being used by his son for his own pleasure when an injury was caused by it, the court rejected the family purpose doctrine.

In Bradley v. Schmidt, 223 Ky. 784, 4 S. W. (2d) 703, 57 A.L.R. 1100, it was sought unsuccessfully to impose liability on a father under the family purpose doctrine for an injury caused by his car while being driven under the direction of his son while in the exclusive pursuit of his own purposes, it appearing that the son was twenty-four years of age and, although he resided with his father, paid his board and was self-supporting.

In Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505, the court refused to hold the owner of a car liable under the family purpose doctrine for an injury resulting from its negligent operation by his son, who was employed by his father to sell cars, where the son was using the car for his own pleasure after business hours with his father's tacit consent, it not being shown that the son was a member of the family or that the car was provided by the father for family use.

[20] Dow v. Legg, 120 Neb. 271, 231 N. W. 747, 74 A.L.R. 5.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 870, s. 88 A.L.R. 612, and 100 A.L.R. 1026.

[1] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 871, s. 88 A.L.R. 612, and 100 A.L.R. 1026.

[2] Harmon v. Haas, 61 N. D. 772, 241 N. W. 70, 80 A.L.R. 1131; Watson v. Burley, 105 W. Va. 416, 143 S. E. 95, 64 A.L.R. 839 (son).

[3] Watson v. Burley, 105 W. Va. 416, 143 S. E. 95, 64 A.L.R. 839.

[4] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 851, s. 88 A.L.R. 603, and 100 A.L.R. 1023.

[5] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 873, s. 88 A.L.R. 613, and 100 A.L.R. 1027.

mobile, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, is not regarded as liable for the negligent operation of such automobile by his or her spouse.[6] The cases are, however, just as numerous, if not more so, which hold the owner liable for the negligent operation of an automobile by his or her spouse.[7] Thus, a husband has been held liable for an injury caused by the negligence of his wife in operating an automobile kept by him for the comfort and pleasure of the family, and which he permits her to use for that purpose.[8] And the owner of an automobile kept for family use has been held liable for its negligent operation by one whom his wife authorized to run it while she was riding in it.[9]

§ 370. Car Used by Owner's Relative.—As a general rule, the family purpose doctrine does not apply to situations where relatives of the owner of a car other than his or her immediate family, such as spouse or children, are using the car.[10] Thus, liability has been denied where the car was being used by a brother,[11] sister,[12] nephew,[13] cousin,[14] stepdaughter,[15] son-in-law,[16] or brother-in-law.[17] Circumstances may arise, however, where any one of such relatives may be considered a member of the family and render the owner liable where the family purpose doctrine is recognized.

§ 371. Car Owned by Other than Head of Family.—In most of the states where the family purpose doctrine is recognized and the question has arisen, the doctrine has been held applicable to situations where an automobile is owned by one other than the head of the family, as where it is owned by a daughter, son, or mother.[18]

---

[6] Landry v. Richmond, 45 R. I. 504, 124 A. 263, 32 A.L.R. 1500.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 873, s. 88 A.L.R. 613, and 100 A.L.R. 1027.

In Landry v. Richmond, 45 R. I. 504, 124 A. 263, 32 A.L.R. 1500, the court stated that it felt compelled to follow the rule that a husband who furnishes an automobile for the pleasure of his family and permits his wife to drive whenever she desires is not responsible for her negligent use of the car when driving exclusively for her own purposes, and held that where the defendant kept an automobile for the exclusive use of his wife, who had permission to use it at all times and who was a competent driver, he was not liable for injuries resulting from its negligent operation by her where she was using it for her own purposes, it being provided by statute that the husband should not be liable, by reason of the marital relation, for torts committed by his wife unless he participated therein or coerced her thereto.

[7] Hutchins v. Haffner, 63 Colo. 365, 167 P. 966, L.R.A.1918A, 1008; Wolf v. Sulik, 93 Conn. 431, 106 A. 443, 4 A.L.R. 356; Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221; Plasch v. Fass, 144 Minn. 44, 174 N. W. 438, 10 A.L.R. 1446; Ulman v. Lindeman, 44 N. D. 36, 176 N. W. 25, 10 A.L.R. 1440.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 876, s. 88 A.L.R. 614, and 100 A.L.R. 1027.

In Hutchins v. Haffner, 63 Colo. 365, 167 P. 966, L.R.A.1918A, 1008, the court said: "The decisions bearing upon the liability of an owner of an automobile kept for family use, for the negligence of a member of his family in driving the machine with his consent, cannot be reconciled. A majority of this court have chosen to adopt the doctrine that a husband is liable for an injury inflicted by his automobile, which he purchased for family use, while it was being operated by his wife solely for her own pleasure, under his general permission to use the machine whenever and wherever she pleased, upon the theory that the wife was the husband's agent in carrying out one of the purposes for which the car was purchased and owned."

In Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221, where an injury resulted while the defendant's wife was operating his machine, which was occupied by the defendant and his guests, the fact that the car was purchased for his pleasure and that of his wife was one element entering into the decision that the question of her agency was for the jury. In this case a judgment against both the husband and wife was affirmed.

[8] Plasch v. Fass, 144 Minn. 44, 174 N. W. 438, 10 A.L.R. 1446.

[9] Ulman v. Lindeman, 44 N. D. 36, 176 N. W. 25, 10 A.L.R. 1440.

[10] Schneider v. Schneider, 160 Md. 18, 152 A. 498, 72 A.L.R. 449; Smith v. Burns, 71 Or. 133, 135 P. 200, 142 P. 352, L.R.A. 1915A, 1130, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 666.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 877, s. 88 A.L.R. 615, and 100 A.L.R. 1028.

[11] Schneider v. Schneider, 160 Md. 18, 152 A. 498, 72 A.L.R. 449.

Annotation: 88 A.L.R. 616.

[12] Annotation: 88 A.L.R. 615.

[13] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 878, s. 88 A.L.R. 615, and 100 A.L.R. 1029.

[14] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 878.

[15] Annotation: 100 A.L.R. 1028.

[16] Annotation: 88 A.L.R. 615.

[17] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 877.

[18] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 878, s. 88 A.L.R. 615, and 100 A.L.R. 1029.

§ 372. Car Driven by Servant or Employee.—As a general rule, the family purpose doctrine does not apply where a servant or employee of the owner of an automobile drives the automobile.[19] It is, however, possible to extend the doctrine to an employer with whom an employee makes his home, there being no ties of blood between them. But, in order to do so, it is essential to show that the employer was under obligation to support the employee; that the car causing the injury was maintained by the employer; that the employee had general authority to use it for his own convenience; and that he used it for the purpose for which it was maintained at the time his actionable negligence arose.[20]

Most of the cases involving liability for injuries inflicted by an owner's car while members of his family are being driven by his chauffeur are based on the doctrine of master and servant, apart from the family purpose doctrine. A few cases, however, mention the family use of the car as one element, at least, leading up to the decision.[1]

5. Master's Liability for Act of Servant

§ 373. Generally.—Aside from a statutory liability imposed upon the owner of an automobile who permits another to operate it [2] or from recognition of an automobile as a dangerous instrumentality rendering the owner who intrusts it to another liable for negligent operation by the latter,[3] the question whether the owner of an automobile is liable for the acts or omissions of his servant or agent while operating the automobile depends entirely upon whether, at the time of the act or omission complained of, the servant or agent was acting within the scope of his employment.[4] The relationship between an owner and chauffeur or driver of an automobile is not different from that existing between master and servant generally,[5] and it is to be determined by applying the general rules of law governing the relation of master and servant [6] to the particular facts of the case.[7] In the absence of a statutory change in the common-law rule,[8] it generally is essential to a recovery against the owner of an automobile for injuries caused by it while being driven by an employee that at the time the accident occurred the person in charge of the automobile was using it in the

---

In Schneider v. Schneider, 160 Md. 18, 152 A. 498, 72 A.L.R. 449, it was held that the owner of a car generally used by his family was not liable for the negligent operation of such car by his brother while driving the car at the owner's request for the purpose of taking the brothers' parents on a visit to friends, the court declaring that the mere fact that it may afford an owner pleasure and satisfaction to have members of his family transported in his car entirely on their own affairs does not render their expedition his business, so that he will be liable for the results of negligence in its operation.

[19] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 878, s. 88 A.L.R. 616, and 100 A.L.R. 1030.

[20] Annotation: 100 A.L.R. 1030.

[1] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 880, s. 88 A.L.R. 616, and 100 A.L.R. 1030.

[2] See infra, §§ 397 et seq.

[3] Anderson v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 73 Fla. 432, 74 So. 975, L.R.A.1917E, 715; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 80 Fla. 441, 86 So. 629, 16 A.L.R. 255.

For a general discussion of the doctrine of dangerous instrumentality as applied to automobiles, see supra, §§ 11, 12.

[4] Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670; White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 66 A. 525, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 10 Ann. Cas. 731.

Halparin v. Bulling, 50 Can. S. C. 471, 20 D. L. R. 598, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 474.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1397, s. 45 A.L.R. 478, 68 A.L.R. 1052, and 80 A.L.R. 726, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 235; 10 Ann. Cas. 732; 12 Ann. 972; Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1087; Ann. Cas. 1915D, 476; Ann. Cas. 1916A, 659; Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1001, 1008; Ann. Cas. 1918D, 241, 1134.

As to the liability of joint owners of an automobile for the torts of a common servant, see supra, § 346.

[5] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1916A, 659.

[6] See Agency, Vol. 2, p. 1; Master and Servant [Also 18 R. C. L. p. 480].

[7] Elliott v. Harding, 107 Ohio St. 501, 140 N. E. 338, 36 A.L.R. 1128; Ulman v. Lindeman, 44 N. D. 36, 176 N. W. 25, 10 A.L.R. 1440; Mitchell v. Churches, 119 Wash. 547, 206 P. 6, 36 A.L.R. 1132.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1137.

[8] See infra, §§ 397 et seq.

course of his employment and on his employer's business.[9] The general test of the master's liability is whether there was authority expressed or implied for doing the act in question. If it is done within the course of and scope of his employment, the master will be liable for the act, although a master is not liable for every wrong which the servant may commit during the continuance of the employment; liability can occur only when that which is done is within the real or apparent scope of the master's business,[10] or where the master subsequently ratifies the servant's unauthorized act.[11] If, however, it appears that the plaintiff or his decedent was injured by reason of the negligent operation of the defendant's automobile by an employee of the defendant acting within the scope of his authority or employment, the defendant is liable if the employee was negligent.[12] His acts in operating an automobile within the lines of his employment are the acts of a servant, for which his employer is responsible.[13] The mere fact that an employee, during the period of his employment, negligently injures another while operating the employer's automobile does not make the latter liable,[14] unless it further appears that the employee was acting at the time on the master's business.[15] An owner is not liable for an injury caused by the negligence of a servant or agent while operating the employer's automobile for his own pleasure or business.[16] According to the great weight of authority, the owner cannot be held liable for the employee's negligence on the theory that the automobile is a dangerous instrumentality within the rule making the owner of such an instrumentality liable for the consequences of its use by any person.[17] However, the view is taken in at least one jurisdiction that the possibility of injuries from the operation of an automobile are so great that an owner who allows his servant to use the machine on his personal business is liable for negligence of the servant while so engaged.[18] Moreover, proof that the car which caused an injury belonged to the defendant may raise a presumption that the driver was his servant and that he was at the time of the accident acting within the scope of his authority.[19]

---

[9] Forbes v. Reinman, 112 Ark. 417, 166 S. W. 563, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164; Halverson v. Blosser, 101 Kan. 683, 168 P. 863, L.R.A. 1918B, 498; Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291; Kayser v. Van Nest, 125 Minn. 277, 146 N. W. 1091, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 970; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670; White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 66 A. 525, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 10 Ann. Cas. 731.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1001.

Under the English common law, the master is not liable for the negligence of his servant while the latter is engaged in some act beyond the scope of his employment for his own purpose, although he may be using the instrumentalities furnished by the master to perform his duties as servant. Halparin v. Bulling, 50 Can. S. C. 471, 20 D. L. R. 598, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 474.

Where the owner of an automobile directs his chauffeur to put the machine in dead storage, with instructions not to use it without permission, the chauffeur has no implied authority to violate orders and, without the owner's knowledge or consent, take the car out for the purpose of testing it. Therefore, such use being unauthorized, the owner is not liable for an accident resulting therefrom. Rose v. Balfe, 223 N. Y. 481, 119 N. E. 842, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 238.

[10] Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221; Halverson v. Blosser, 101 Kan. 683, 168 P. 863, L.R.A.1918B, 498; Wyatt v. Hodson, 210 Ky. 47, 275 S. W. 15, citing R. C. L.; Marullo v. St. Pasteur, 144 La. 926, 81 So. 403, citing R. C. L.; Janik v. Ford Motor Co. 180 Mich. 557, 147 N. W. 510, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 294, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 669; Provo v. Conrad, 130 Minn. 412, 153 N. W. 753, citing R. C. L.; Kayser v. Van Nest, 125 Minn. 277, 146 N. W. 1091, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 970; Geiss v. Twin City Taxicab Co. 120 Minn. 368, 139 N. W. 611, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 107 N. W. 133, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598; Paiewonsky v. Joffe, 101 N. J. L. 521, 129 A. 142, 40 A.L.R. 1335; Rose v. Balfe, 223 N. Y. 481, 119 N. E. 842, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 238; Potts v. Pardee, 220 N. Y. 431, 116 N. E. 78, 8 A.L.R. 785; Ulman v. Lindeman, 44 N. D. 36, 176 N. W. 25, 10 A.L.R. 1440; Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490; Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 76 A. 219, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 66 A. 525, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 10 Ann. Cas. 731; Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 92 P. 433, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915; Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 124 N. W. 1016, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227.

Ricketts v. Tilling [1915] 1 K. B. 644, 6 B. R. C. 683; Halparin v. Bulling, 50 Can. S. C. 471, 20 D. L. R. 598, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 474.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1089; 45 A.L.R. 479; 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382; Ann. Cas. 1916A, 659; Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1001; Ann. Cas. 1917E, 228; Ann. Cas. 1918D, 241.

[11] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 825, § 1204.

Ratification of an act of a servant may be equivalent to command by the master, and co-operation of the master may be inferred from acquiescence, where there was power to restrain. Dowler v. Johnson, 225 N. Y. 39, 121 N. E. 487, 3 A.L.R. 146.

See generally Master and Servant [Also 18 R. C. L. p. 793, §§ 253 et seq.]. See also Agency, Vol. 2, p. 165, §§ 208 et seq.

[12] Albert v. Munch, 141 La. 686, 75 So. 513, L.R.A.1918A, 240.

Mattei v. Gilles, 16 Ont. L. Rep. 558, 12 Ann. Cas. 970.

Annotation: 10 Ann. Cas. 732; 12 Ann. Cas. 972; Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1087; Ann. Cas. 1915D, 476; Ann. Cas. 1916A, 659; Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1001, 1008; Ann. Cas. 1918D, 241, 1134.

The master is liable for the act of a servant in charge of his vehicle when the latter is acting in the main with the master's express or implied authority, upon his business, and in the course of the employment, for the purpose of doing the work for which he is engaged. Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291.

[13] Johnson v. Coey, 237 Ill. 88, 86 N. E. 678, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81; Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291; Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 81; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa.

The owner's liability for his servant's operation of an unregistered car depends upon the law of the jurisdiction regarding the operation of unregistered motor vehicles.[20]

§ 374. When Relationship Exists Generally.—The general rules which govern the relationship of master and servant and which determined when one may be charged under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the negligence of another [1] are to be applied in determining whether the person driving the automobile causing the injury complained of was the agent or servant of the person sought to be charged for the injury, and was acting within the scope of his authority at the time of the injury. As in other cases, the doctrine of respondeat superior, as applied to the operation of automobiles, rests upon the power and control which the person sought to be charged as master has over the alleged employee.[2] The master is the one who can order not only that the work be done, but how it shall be done,—in other words, the one who has con-

---

339, 66 A. 525, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 10 Ann. Cas. 731.

Annotation: 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 235; 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1131; 10 Ann. Cas. 732.

The act of the driver may be within the course of his employment, though forbidden by the master or outside his line of duty. Luckett v. Reighard, 248 Pa. 24, 93 A. 773, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 662.

[14] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1916A, 657.

[15] Healey v. Cockrill, 133 Ark. 327, 202 S. W. 229, L.R.A.1918D, 115; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 107 N. W. 133, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Marlin, 135 Tenn. 435, 186 S. W. 595, L.R.A.1917A, 417.

[16] See infra, §§ 375 et seq.

[17] Symington v. Sipes, 121 Md. 313, 88 A. 134, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 662; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 107 N. W. 133, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670; King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 217, 204 S. W. 296, L.R.A.1918F, 293; Goodman v. Wilson, 129 Tenn. 464, 166 S. W. 752, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1116; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 P. 1020, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59; Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 92 P. 433, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915; Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 124 N. E. 1016, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227.

Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 273; Ann. Cas. 1916A, 659.

The owner of an automobile who keeps it at a public garage is not, upon the ground that it is a dangerous agency, liable for personal injuries sustained by a person run over by it in consequence of the negligence of the chauffeur, who had taken the machine without the knowledge or permission of the owner and was using the same on an errand personal to himself, even though he was not a competent and careful operator. Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 92 P. 433, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915.

[18] Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 80 Fla. 441, 86 So. 629, 16 A.L.R. 255.

[19] See infra, § 612.

[20] See generally supra, §§ 138 et seq.

[1] See MASTER AND SERVANT [Also 18 R. C. L. p. 480].

[2] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1417.

The superintendent of a fire department is not liable, on the theory of respondeat superior, for the negligence of a fireman driving his automobile under his assignment of duty. Dowler v. Johnson, 225 N. Y. 39, 121 N. E. 487, 3 A.L.R. 146.

trol of the work.[3] The manner, method, and means by which compensation is paid may constitute a material factor in determining whether the relation exists.[4] Neither the fact that the driver of an automobile, at the time of negligently injuring another, has a fixed weekly wage, nor the fact that he is an employee and has no other employment, is decisive of the relationship of master and servant whereby his negligent act is legally imputable to his master, since a person may be an agent or servant as to one part of an undertaking and an independent contractor as to other parts.[5] Assuming that a relationship of employer and employee exists between the driver of the automobile causing the injury and the person sought to be held responsible, the question whether the driver, at the time of an accident, was acting within the scope of his employment generally involves an inquiry into the contract of employment and the relation of his acts at the time of the accident to the service he actually performed pursuant to his employment.[6] The expression, "in the course of employment," means, in contemplation of law, "while engaged in the service of the master;" it is not synonymous with the phrase, "during the period covered by his employment."[7] The mere fact that the employee at the time of inflicting the injury may have taken the car out for the purpose of testing it does not necessarily show that he was acting in the course of his employment, so as to render the employer liable, although the facts of the particular case may be such as to render him so liable.[8] However any use of a car which is reasonably incidental to the performance of the duties with which the employee is charged is deemed to be within the scope of his employment.[9] The mere fact that the employee may have disobeyed certain of the master's commands does not necessarily show that he is acting outside the scope of his employment, so as to relieve the master from liability for injury done by the negligent handling of the car.[10]

§ 375. Employee Using Employer's Car for Own Pleasure or Benefit.—Apart from the liability created by statute,[11] it is a well-established general rule that the owner of an automobile is not liable for injury or damage resulting from the negligent operation of his car by his employee while the latter is using it for his own pleasure or business.[12] This rule applies not only to cases in which the agent or servant uses his employer's car for his own purposes without the owner's permission or consent,[13] but, according to the great weight of authority, to cases in which the employer has consented to or acquiesced in the employee's use of the car for his own pleasure or business.[14] In other words, an employer is not, by reason of his relation of master or principal, liable for injuries inflicted by his employee when operating the master's automobile for the personal pleasure of the servant when not on regular duty, whether he is using the car with or without the consent of the master.[15] An employer may, however, be held liable for permitting an employee, who is an incompetent driver, to use the car for his own purposes,[16] or for permitting an employee to use a defective and dangerous automobile for an errand of his own,[17] or he may be made liable by a statute which imposes liability upon the owner for the negligence of those whom he permits to use his automobile.[18] In one jurisdiction the view is taken that an owner who allows his servant to use his machine on personal business is liable for the negligence of the servant so engaged.[19] Generally, in order to hold the principal or master liable for the act of his agent or servant, the relation of master and servant or principal and agent must exist at the time, and the act must be within the scope of the servant's authority.[20] Under the general rule governing the owner's liability for an injury inflicted by his automobile while it is being used by a servant for his own pleasure or business, an employer is not liable for the negligence of his employee in the operation of the employer's automobile while using the car to do a personal errand.[1] Nor is a corporation or a partnership owning a motor vehicle liable for injury or damage caused while the vehicle is being operated by an official of the company, or a member of the partnership, for his own purposes.[2]

---

[3] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 830, § 1212.

[4] Minor v. Stevens, 65 Wash. 423, 118 P. 313, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178.

Annotation: 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 115.

An employee who is entitled, as part of his compensation, to the use of his employer's automobile for his own pleasure is, while so using the car, a mere bailee, and his negligence is not imputable to the owner so as to prevent the latter's holding another liable for negligently injuring the machine. Lloyd v. Northern P. R. Co. 107 Wash. 57, 181 P. 29, 6 A.L.R. 307.

[5] Khoury v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 265 Mass. 236, 164 N. E. 77, 60 A.L.R. 1159.

[6] Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 124 N. W. 1016, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227.

Annotation: 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382; 19 Ann. Cas. 1229.

[7] Hickson v. W. W. Walker Co. 110 Conn. 604, 149 A. 400, 68 A.L.R. 1044; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 107 N. W. 133, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598.

[8] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1428, s. 45 A.L.R. 496, 80 A.L.R. 733.

In Rose v. Balfe, 223 N. Y. 481, 119 N. E. 842, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 238, there was held to be no evidence justifying a recovery against the defendant, where there was evidence that he kept two cars, and some time before, had ordered the car which caused the injury for which a recovery was sought to be placed in "dead storage" and not to be used; that his chauffeur, after having taken the defendant home at night, was given no further orders and was free until the next morning; that without the knowledge or consent of the defendant, and in direct violation of his orders, he took the car out, as he testified, to "adjust the car for his own benefit," although he had no orders to repair the cars, and when they were out of order he reported it to the defendant and took them to the shop for repairs; and that while he was using the car, an accident occurred.

[9] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1002.

[10] Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 76 A. 219, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 906.

An employer is liable for injuries due to negligent acts or omissions of his servant in the course of his employment, without regard to his motives, though such acts or omissions were unauthorized or even forbidden by him, and though they were outside the servant's line of duty. Luckett v. Reighard, 248 Pa. 24, 93 A. 773, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 662.

[11] See infra, §§ 397 et seq.

---

[12] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1397, s. 45 A.L.R. 478, 68 A.L.R. 1052, and 80 A.L.R. 726; 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 235; 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1033; 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216; 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93; 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 352; 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79; 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834; 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 662, s. L.R.A.1916A, 957; 10 Ann. Cas. 732; 12 Ann. Cas. 972; Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1087; Ann. Cas. 1915D, 476; Ann. Cas. 1916A, 659; Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1001, 1008; Ann. Cas. 1918D, 241, 1134.

The owner is not liable, upon the ground that an automobile is a dangerous agency, for personal injuries sustained by a person run over by such owner's car in consequence of the negligence of the chauffeur who had taken the machine without the knowledge or permission of the owner and was using the same on an errand personal to himself, even though he was not a competent and careful operator. Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 92 P. 433, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915.

Mere employment of a chauffeur known to be a reckless driver does not render the owner of an automobile liable for injuries which he may cause to others while he is operating the machine for his own pleasure, contrary to the express orders of the owner. Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670.

[13] Healey v. Corkrill, 133 Ark. 327, 202 S. W. 229, L.R.A.1918D, 115; Hickson v. W. W. Walker Co. 110 Conn. 604, 149 A. 400, 68 A.L.R. 1044; Arkin v. Page, 287 Ill. 420, 123 N. E. 30, 5 A.L.R. 216; Fisher v. Fletcher, 191 Ind. 529, 133 N. E. 834, 22 A.L.R. 1392; Symington v. Sipes, 121 Md. 313, 88 A. 134, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 662; Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291; Riley v. Roach, 168 Mich. 294, 134 N. W. 14, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834; Kohlman v. Hyland, 54 N. D. 710, 210 N. W. 643, 50 A.L.R. 1437 (later appeal in 56 N. D. 772, 219 N. W. 228); White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082; Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 66 A. 525, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 10 Ann. Cas. 731; Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 92 P. 433, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915; Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505; Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 124 N. W. 1016, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227.

Battistoni v. Thomas [1932] (Can.) S. C. R. 144, [1932] 1 D. L. R. 577, 80 A.L.R. 722; Halparin v. Bulling, 50 Can. S. C. 471, 20 D. L. R. 598, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 474.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1397, s. 45 A.L.R. 477, 68 A.L.R. 1051, and 80 A.L.R. 725.

[14] Fisher v. Fletcher, 191 Ind. 529, 133 N. E. 834, 22 A.L.R. 1392; Fletcher v. Meredith, 148 Md. 580, 129 A. 795, 45 A.L.R. 474; Reilly v. Connable, 214 N. Y. 586, 108 N. E. 853, L.R.A.1916A, 954, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 656.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1400, s. 45 A.L.R. 480, 68 A.L.R. 1053, and 80 A.L.R. 727.

The owner of an automobile, who permitted his chauffeur, as a part of his wages, to use the car for his own purposes while he was off duty, is not liable for an injury resulting from its negligent operation while it was being so used; even though the owner knew that the chauffeur was in the habit of becoming intoxicated and had been guilty of negligently operating the car while in that condition, he was not liable for an injury resulting from the negligent operation of the car by the chauffeur for his own purposes when he was intoxicated. Fisher v. Fletcher, 191 Ind. 529, 133 N. E. 834, 22 A.L.R. 1392.

By the weight of authority, an automobile is not such a dangerous instrumentality that an owner who permits his servant to use it on the servant's personal business is liable for an accident caused by the servant's negligence. Symington v. Sipes, 121 Md. 313, 88 A. 134, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 662; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 107 N. W. 133, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598. Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 273, 274; Ann. Cas. 1916A, 659.

[15] Fisher v. Fletcher, 191 Ind. 529, 133 N. E. 834, 22 A.L.R. 1392.

A fortiori, the owner of a car cannot be held liable for injuries inflicted by it while it was being used by the wife of the employee. Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1437, s. 45 A.L.R. 498, and 68 A.L.R. 1061.

[16] See supra, § 355.

[17] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1402, s. 45 A.L.R. 481.

§ 376. —Departure or Deviation from Direct Line of Duties.—While, as stated in the preceding section, the owner of an automobile is not liable for injuries or damages caused by the negligent operation of his automobile while it is being used by an employee for his own business or pleasure,[3] the servant must have abandoned and turned aside completely from the master's business, to engage in some purpose wholly his own, before the master ceases to be liable for his act; it is not every deviation from the direct line of his duties on the part of an employee that constitutes a turning aside from, and an abandonment of, his master's business. A slight deviation by the servant in charge of a motor vehicle, for his own purposes, when he is on business for his master, does not affect the liability of the master for an injury resulting from the negligent operation of the automobile by the servant.[4] This rule that a slight deviation will not take the servant out of the master's business so as to relieve the latter from liability for injuries and damage caused during such deviation has been applied in a great variety of situations.[5] The fact that the employer may, to serve some purpose of his own, deviate a few blocks out of his way [6] or choose a different way back, even though it is not the most direct route, does not, as a matter of law, constitute an abandonment of the master's work.[7] But if the driver, without authority, makes a marked deviation or goes a considerable distance off from his customary route on an excursion of his own, for no purpose of his employer, the master may be absolved from liability for his negligence while on such excursion.[8] In other words, while a mere disregard of instructions or deviation from the line of his duty by a servant does not relieve his master of responsibility, if the servant, for purposes of his own, departs so far from the line of his duty that for the time being his acts constitute an abandonment of his service, the master is not liable.[9]

---

[18] See infra, §§ 397 et seq.

[19] Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 80 Fla. 441, 86 So. 629, 16 A.L.R. 255.

Where, with the acquiescence of his employer, an employee uses the employer's automobile for his own purposes, and while doing so injures one in the street, the jury should be permitted to determine, under appropriate instructions, whether the employer is liable. Anderson v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 73 Fla. 432, 74 So. 975, L.R.A. 1917E, 715.

[20] See supra, § 373.

[1] Gardner v. Farnum, 230 Mass. 193, 119 N. E. 666, L.R.A.1918E, 997 (chauffeur, in his master's absence, driving car to a near-by town to obtain liquor for himself); Reilly v. Connable, 214 N. Y. 586, 108 N. E. 853, L.R.A.1916A, 954, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 656 (chauffeur using car, with the master's acquiescence, to do marketing for himself).

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1423, s. 45 A.L.R. 493, 68 A.L.R. 1058, and 80 A.L.R. 732.

The master is not liable if the servant has abandoned his obligations, and is doing something not in compliance with the express or implied authority given, and is not acting in pursuance of the general purpose of his occupation, or in connection with the doing of the master's work. Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291.

[2] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1402, s. 45 A.L.R. 481, and 68 A.L.R. 1054.

In Ackerson v. Erwin M. Jennings Co. 107 Conn. 393, 140 A. 760, 56 A.L.R. 1127, it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate was killed on the return trip from a dinner given by the defendant's branch manager to his employees. At the time of the accident the car was being driven by a fellow employee at the direction and with the consent of the branch manager. It was held that if the jury concluded that the expedition was a personal entertainment by the branch manager of the employees of the company as his guests, in return for a present which had been made to him, and that such references as were made to the conduct of the business of the company were merely incidental and such as would naturally be discussed in a meeting of its employees, the occasion would not have been within the apparent scope of the branch manager's authority as representing the defendant, and the defendant would not be liable.

A company was held not liable for an injury inflicted by an automobile owned by it, while such automobile was being used by the company's manager, who had taken it at the close of business hours for the purpose of taking himself and his children home, and for a drive, since he was not engaged in the company's business. Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1402.

[3] See supra, § 375.

[4] Healey v. Corkrill, 133 Ark. 327, 202 S. W. 229, L.R.A.1918D, 115; Guthrie v. Holmes, 272 Mo. 215, 198 S. W. 854, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1123.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1404, s. 45 A.L.R. 482, 68 A.L.R. 1055, and 80 A.L.R. 727.

§ 377. —Commencement and Termination of Departure or Deviation; Resumption of Employer's Responsibility.—Little difficulty has been experienced in determining when the departure from the employer's business commences. The moment the employee starts on the trip designed to promote his own pleasure or benefit, or turns aside in an opposite direction and on an errand of his own, he is deemed to have left his employment, thereby relieving his employer from responsibility for negligence.[10] However, the question as to when the employee who has departed from the employer's service temporarily, for a purpose of his own, is deemed to have returned to the employer's service so as to restore the latter's liability presents considerable difficulty in varying

---

Under this rule the employer has been held responsible for wrongs done to third persons by his driver during incidental departures from the scope of the authority conferred by the employment, and upon comparatively insignificant deviations from direct routes of travel, but within the general penumbra of the duty for which he is engaged. Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291.

Thus, the fact that the driver deviated slightly from the direct route on account of heavy traffic on that route, or because the engine was not working well, will not relieve the employer from an injury resulting from the negligent operation of the machine. Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1405; Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1008.

[5] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 484, s. 68 A.L.R. 1055, and 80 A.L.R. 727.

[6] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 484, s. 68 A.L.R. 1055, and 80 A.L.R. 727.

The court, in Healey v. Corkrill, 133 Ark. 327, 202 S. W. 229, L.R.A.1918D, 115, said: "Much is said in the adjudged cases about the doctrine of slight deviations or 'detours' made by the servant in performing his master's business, and the rule seems to be settled by the weight of authority that, where the servant is pursuing the general course necessary to accomplish the purposes involved in his master's business, the responsibility of the master is not lessened by the fact that the servant, for purposes of his own, deviates from the route to be pursued or the particular method to be observed in performing the service. The fact that the servant acts also for himself while performing service for his employer, and in doing so diverts from the usual route or method of performing the service, will not exonerate the employer from responsibility for misconduct of the servant."

[7] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1405, s. 45 A.L.R. 483, 68 A.L.R. 1055, and 80 A.L.R. 727.

Where the driver of a delivery truck offered to give a woman who was waiting for a street car a lift to her home, in which direction he was proceeding, and ran down a pedestrian while taking the woman to her home, it was held that the deviation was not so great as to compel the determination that the servant was not on the master's business. Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 483.

[8] Healey v. Corkrill, 133 Ark. 327, 202 S. W. 229, L.R.A.1918D, 115; Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291.

Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 485, s. 68 A.L.R. 1055, and 80 A.L.R. 727.

The owner of an automobile, who has directed the chauffeur to bring his car from the garage in the rear of his lot to the front of his residence for his use, is not liable, where the chauffeur, in order to purchase cigarettes for himself, drives the car six and one-half blocks off the route which he should take to obey the orders, for injuries inflicted by him in the operation of the car between the place of purchase and the owner's residence. Healey v. Corkrill, 133 Ark. 327, 202 S. W. 229, L.R.A. 1918D, 115.

[9] Eakin v. Anderson, 169 Ky. 1, 183 S. W. 217, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1003.

[10] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1409, s. 45 A.L.R. 486, and 68 A.L.R. 1056.

situations,[11] although it may be stated generally that whether or not a driver of a motor vehicle who had departed from his master's business had returned and resumed his master's business at the time of the accident is primarily dependent upon whether the dominant purpose of the driver is to perform the master's business.[12] There is a difference of opinion on the question as to whether an employee who has turned aside from his master's business to accomplish some purpose of his own, and who, after accomplishing his purpose, is returning to resume his duties, is, while so returning, engaged in the business of his master and within the scope of his employment so as to render the master liable for an accident happening while he is so returning.[13] Some cases hold that when the employee in charge of his employer's car has completed the purpose for which he turned aside and is returning to resume his duties, he is, while so returning, engaged in the business of his master, and the master is liable for any injury caused by the servant's negligence while the latter is so returning.[14] Other cases hold that the mere fact that an employee using the car for his own business or pleasure is returning to the master's garage, or to his employment, when the injury occurs, does not alone constitute such a resumption of his master's business as will render the master liable for the injury.[15]

---

[11] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1408, s. 45 A.L.R. 486, 68 A.L.R. 1056.

[12] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 486.

[13] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 487, s. 68 A.L.R. 1056, and 80 A.L.R. 728.

[14] Fisher v. Fletcher, 191 Ind. 529, 133 N. E. 834, 22 A.L.R. 1392; Riley v. Standard Oil Co. 231 N. Y. 301, 132 N. E. 97, 22 A.L.R. 1382.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1409, s. 45 A.L.R. 487, 68 A.L.R. 1056, and 80 A.L.R. 728.

This rule has been held to be applicable only to cases where the original taking by the chauffeur is rightful and there is a deviation from the line of duty; where the original taking of the automobile by the servant is wrongful and without knowledge or consent of the owner, on a wholly unlawful excursion, no part of which in any way can be said to be in the business of the owner, no question arises as to whether the servant has resumed the business of his master and is acting within the scope of his employment, but the servant is without the scope of his employment, and the master is not liable for his negligence. Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 487.

In Riley v. Standard Oil Co. 231 N. Y. 301, 132 N. E. 97, 22 A.L.R. 1382, a chauffeur in charge of a truck sent to a freight yard for goods, who, after obtaining them, went four blocks in the opposite direction on an errand of his own, was held to have returned to the master's service so as to render him liable for an injury inflicted on a child by the negligent operation of the truck, when, having accomplished his errand, he drove towards his employer's plant, although he had not yet reached the point at the entrance of the freight yard at which he departed from such service.

[15] Fletcher v. Meredith, 148 Md. 580, 129 A. 795, 45 A.L.R. 474; Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291; Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1414, s. 45 A.L.R. 486, 68 A.L.R. 1056, and 80 A.L.R. 728.

Where the employee, after going on an errand of his own requiring a journey six or seven times as long as was required by his employment, into a crowded part of the city, inflicts an injury while returning toward his original destination, a repair shop to which he had been directed to take the car, the owner is not liable. Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291.

This view has been applied with the result of relieving the master from liability where the injury happened while the servant was on the way back from a funeral, to attend which the master had permitted him to use the truck on the condition that on his way out he would make a delivery of goods for the master, which the servant had done. Fletcher v. Meredith, 148 Md. 580, 129 A. 795, 45 A.L.R. 474.

Where a chauffeur was permitted to drive the car to another town to get something for his brother, the owner was held liable for an accident occurring on the return trip, on the theory that at the time, the chauffeur was carrying out the owner's implied instructions to return the car to the garage when he had completed that particular errand. Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 487.

An owner of an automobile, who employs a chauffeur to take the car from the garage to a repair shop, is not liable for an injury inflicted upon a stranger by the negligent operation of the car while the chauffeur was on an errand of his own, requiring a journey six or seven times as long as was required by his employment, into a crowded part of the city, although at the time of the injury he was returning toward his original destination. Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79, 20 Ann. Cas. 1291.

In Battistoni v. Thomas [1932] (Can.) S. C. R. 144, [1932] 1 D. L. R. 577, 80 A.L.R. 722, the defendant's son, who was employed by his father as a truck driver, was held

Some courts have drawn a distinction between cases in which a servant, while on a trip for the master, deviates from the prescribed route for a purpose of his own, and the cases in which the servant, without the knowledge or consent of the master, takes the latter's car for his own personal use; in the former case the servant may be deemed to have returned to the master's service as soon as he completed his private business and started back, but this does not apply where the trip undertaken was not in any sense in the master's business.[16]

Whether a servant who has departed from the line of his duty to perform an errand of his own, or for his own pleasure, has resumed his master's business presents, at any rate, a question for the jury.[17]

§ 378. —Car Furnished Employee for Business Uses.—An employer who furnishes an employee with an automobile for his use in expediting the employer's business is not liable for injuries resulting from the employee's negligence in the use of the machine for his own purposes, not connected with the master's business, as such use of the automobile is not within the scope of the agent's employment.[18] The mere fact that the employee fails to return by the shortest route is of no great importance; in the absence of specific directions from the employer, the choice of routes is open to the employee, and if he pursues an ordinary, customary, and usual route, that does not amount to a departure from his employment, even though it is not the shortest possible route.[19] The same general principles apply where one employs a driver and furnishes him with an automobile to carry passengers for hire; the owner may be held responsible for the negligence of the employee where he deviates slightly from the proper route or makes a short detour from the employer's business, not to have been acting in the course of his employment at the time of the accident, but to have been "on a frolic of his own," where his father had instructed him on Christmas Day to drive the truck to a certain place beyond the down-town section of the city, and to return home in time for dinner with the family, but, instead of returning home after making the delivery, the employee changed his clothes, drove the truck downtown, and, after eating dinner, picked up a friend at a hotel and drove to the home of another friend, and an accident occurred while he was driving back to the hotel with the intention of taking the friend home and then returning to his father's home.

---

[16] Eakin v. Anderson, 169 Ky. 1, 183 S. W. 217, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1003.

[17] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 489, s. 68 A.L.R. 1056, and 80 A.L.R. 728.

In Edwards v. Earnest, 206 Ala. 1, 89 So. 729, 22 A.L.R. 1387, it is held that the jury must determine whether or not one in charge of an automobile, who, after performing an errand upon which he was sent by his master, continued away from the latter's place of business on an errand of his own, and, after turning back, negligently injured a pedestrian before reaching the master's place of business, was within the scope of his employment so as to render the master liable for the injury.

[18] Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 107 N. W. 133, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1419, s. 45 A.L.R. 490, 68 A.L.R. 1056, and 80 A.L.R. 729, 730.

The test of the owner's liability for the negligence of his employee in driving an automobile furnished to the employee for business uses is the nature of its use at the time of the accident, that is, whether or not it is being used in the transaction of the business of the owner of the automobile; the driver of the car must be acting for the owner, and not for himself personally, at the time of the accident. Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 730, 731.

A construction company which furnished its superintendent with an automobile for use in the business, and instructed him to keep it in a garage at his residence when not so used, is not liable for damage caused by its negligent operation by the superintendent, where he took the car in the evening to go to the theater, and later drove to a country club, and, while returning home therefrom, ran into another car. Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1419.

An employer who permits one employed to make deliveries on a motorcycle and allows him to keep the motorcycle at his home and ride it to and from work is not liable where the employee, after he had finished his work for the day, drove home, and, after dinner, started to drive to a service station to have the tires changed, and on the way to such station, had an accident, where it appears without contradiction that he had been ordered by his employer to have repairs made at a place other than that for which he had started. Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 731.

[19] Annotation: 68 A.L.R. 1057.

but if he takes the car entirely for purposes of his own, removing the sign indicating that the car is for rent, the owner cannot be held liable.[20]

§ 379. —Use of Car to Go to Meals or to and from Home.—Whether the owner of a car is liable for injury or damage inflicted by reason of the negligence of a servant or employee in the operation thereof while using the same in going to and from his meals, is a question which does not permit of categorical answer; the answer is largely dependent on whether the servant or employee is, at the time of the injury, acting within the scope of his employment, and consequently, on the facts and circumstances of each particular case.[1] There are cases which hold that if an employee, even a chauffeur employed to care for an automobile and operate it at the request of his employer, without the knowledge or consent of his employer, uses the automobile to go to and from meals or to and from home, the employer is not liable for injuries caused by the negligent operation of the automobile by the chauffeur in making such unauthorized trips.[2] If, however, the servant, in order the better to execute and prosecute the master's business, uses the master's car to go to his meals, in order to shorten the time that it would otherwise take and correspondingly lengthen the time of service for the master, he may be deemed to be acting in furtherance of his master's business and within the scope of his employment, and the master may be held liable for injury or damage inflicted while the servant is so using the car.[3] Obviously, if an employer furnishes an employee with an automobile in which to go to and from his meals in order that he may go and come more quickly, the employer is liable for injuries resulting to third persons, caused by a collision while the employee is returning to his business.[4]

§ 380. —Effect of Fact that Employer Derives Incidental Benefit.—Incidental benefit which the employer may derive from the use of his car by an employee for purposes of his own by reason of the fact that the car bore the employer's name and would, in a measure, advertise his business;[5] the fact that the chauffeur may have incidentally been testing the car;[6] or the fact that the employee intended, during the excursion for himself, to procure accessories for use in the machine,[7] does not render the employer liable for the employee's negligence while so serving his own purposes, though where an employee using his employer's truck partly for his own pleasure and partly for his employer's benefit by soliciting business, he may be held to have been acting within the scope of his employment.[8]

---

[20] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1436, 45 A.L.R. 497, 68 A.L.R. 1060, and 80 A.L.R. 734.

[1] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 490, s. 68 A.L.R. 1058, and 80 A.L.R. 732.

[2] Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 124 N. W. 1016, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1420, s. 45 A.L.R. 490, 68 A.L.R. 1058, 80 A.L.R. 732.

A chauffeur employed to care for the employer's automobile and operate it at the request and direction of the owner, and who is to go to his home for his midday meal, is not, when using the automobile to go to such meal without the permission or knowledge of the owner, acting within the scope of his employment so as to render the owner liable for an injury to a pedestrian by the negligent operation of the car. Steffen v. McNaughton, 142 Wis. 49, 124 N. W. 1016, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, 19 Ann. Cas. 1227.

Where the driver of the automobile, after returning it to the master's garage after his day's delivery, took it and drove it to his home, where he had his dinner, and stayed there for about an hour, and then proceeded to return to the master's garage, on which return trip the accident occurred, the employer is not liable. Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 492.

[3] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 490, 491, s. 68 A.L.R. 1058, and 80 A.L.R. 732.

[4] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 491.

[5] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1437, 1438.

[6] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1428, s. 45 A.L.R. 496, 68 A.L.R. 1059.

[7] Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 66 A. 525, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 10 Ann. Cas. 751.

[8] Annotation: 68 A.L.R. 1061.

§ 381. —Particular Applications.—In the application of the general rule that an employer is not liable for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of an automobile by his employee when the latter is using the car for his own pleasure or business, when an employee, directed to take the employer's car to a particular garage where the car is kept,[9] directed to take the car to a garage for repairs,[10] directed to repair a disabled car or have it repaired and then proceed on the owner's business,[11] directed to deliver a car for shipment,[12] etc., deviates from the line of his employment and engages in an occupation on his own behalf or goes on an errand of his own, entirely disconnected from that of his employer, the employer is not liable for injuries caused by the employee's negligence.[13] A like rule applies where a chauffeur uses his employer's car for his own purposes during the time he has been directed to wait for his employer, or in the interim before he is to return for his employer.[14] Clearly, if an employee, without the consent or knowledge of his employer, takes the employer's car to earn money for himself, the employer cannot be held liable for the employee's negligence,[15] even though he had occasionally sent the employee out to drive cars for the transportation of passengers.[16] This applies to a taxi driver who, without authority, and after the time within which he was to do driving for his employer, takes his employer's taxicab to earn money for himself.[17] It has been held that an owner is not responsible for the negligence of an employee aiding other motorists on the road.[18] Nor is the owner of a car, generally speaking, liable for the negligent operation by one employee while using the car for the personal pleasure, convenience, or business of other employees.[19] This may be true though the employer's superintendent knew

---

[9] Symington v. Sipes, 121 Md. 313, 88 A. 134, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 662.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1424, 1425, s. 45 A.L.R. 493, 494, 68 A.L.R. 1059, and 80 A.L.R. 733.

A chauffeur instructed to return his employer's car to the garage is not acting within the scope of his employment when he proceeds to use the car for his own pleasure and that of his friends. Symington v. Sipes, 121 Md. 313, 88 A. 134, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 662.

[10] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 495.

[11] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1435.

[12] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1437.

[13] It is, however, a question of fact for the jury whether an employee, who was instructed to leave the car at either of two garages for repairs, and upon finding one garage closed, decided to take the machine home with him instead of going to the other garage; and, in returning to business the following morning, collided with another car, causing injury, was engaged in his employer's business and was within the scope of his employment. Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 495, 496.

[14] Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 71 A. 535, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670.

Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1430, 1431, s. 45 A.L.R. 497, 68 A.L.R. 1060.

In Eakin v. Anderson, 169 Ky. 1, 183 S. W. 217, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1003, where a chauffeur who had been given instructions to have his employer's car at a certain place about 9 o'clock in the evening took the car from the garage at 8 o'clock to go on an errand of his own, and while he was returning over a different route, and on his way to the place at which he had been instructed to report, an accident occurred at a point which was as far beyond the place where he was expected to report as it was from the garage where the car was kept, it was held that he was not acting within his master's service, and that the latter was not liable.

A verdict may be directed for the owner of the automobile which injured the plaintiff, where there is positive, unequivocal, and unimpeached testimony that the chauffeur was instructed to drive the defendant's wife and children to a certain place, and not to leave that place until they were ready to return home, that the chauffeur could not use the automobile for his own pleasure or purposes in any way or manner whatsoever, and that at the time of the accident, the chauffeur was using the car during the interval for a purpose of his own. Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1431.

The driver of a truck, who drove around at random while waiting for articles which he was sent to get and which were not ready, with no particular purpose except to use his time until such articles were ready for delivery, may be found to be within the line of his employment, and the owner of the truck may be held liable for an injury caused while the driver was thus driving at random. Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 496.

[15] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1437.

[16] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1437.

[17] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 498.

[18] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 498.

[19] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1433, s. 45 A.L.R. 497, 68 A.L.R. 1060, and 80 A.L.R. 733.

A truck driver who, during his lunch that liberties of this kind were taken by the driver for the employees, and did not object thereto.[20] It is obviously the rule where the driver, together with other employees, uses the employer's automobile for their pleasure, without the consent of the employer.[1] However, a mere slight deviation for the benefit of a fellow employee is not sufficient to excuse the employer from liability.[2] In all such cases, however, the employer may be held liable on the theory that at the time of the injury the employee had resumed or returned to his employment.[3] There would seem to be no question but that the owner can be held liable for his employee's negligence after the latter has returned the car.[4] According to the view of some courts, the employee, having departed from his employment, is deemed to have re-entered his employer's service when he starts upon the return trip.

§ 382. Person Whom Employee Permits to Drive.—There is some conflict of authority as to the liability of the owner of an automobile for damages for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of his automobile by one who was permitted by the owner's servant to drive it.[5] The mere fact that an employee permits another to operate the employer's car temporarily does not necessarily absolve the owner from liability for injuries due to the negligence of the temporary driver.[6] In many cases, however, the general principle of the law of agency[7] and of master and servant,[8] that an employer is not liable for the acts of one employed by his employee, without authority, express or implied, to discharge a duty intrusted to the employee, has been applied to hold the owner of an automobile not liable for injury or damage resulting from the negligent operation of the automobile by one who was permitted to operate the same by the one to whom it was intrusted by the owner, but who had no authority, express or implied, to permit another to drive, or to hire assistants,[9] at least if there is no emergency which requires that someone other than the driver operate the car.[10] If, on the other hand, one employed to drive an automobile has express or implied authority to employ or permit another to hour, without authority, turned off his route with the intention of carrying a fellow employee on personal business to a place 1½ miles farther away, may be found to have abandoned his employment temporarily and to have engaged in serving his own purposes, so as to excuse his employer from responsibility for injuries caused during the period of his temporary abandonment. Hickson v. W. W. Walker Co. 110 Conn. 604, 149 A. 400, 68 A.L.R. 1044.

---

[20] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1433.

[1] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 497, s. 68 A.L.R. 1060.

[2] Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 497, s. 68 A.L.R. 1060, and 80 A.L.R. 734.

[3] See supra, § 377.

[4] Annotation: 22 A.L.R. 1436, s. 68 A.L.R. 1060, and 80 A.L.R. 734.

[5] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1383, s. 54 A.L.R. 852, 98 A.L.R. 1043.

The discussions of the question by the highest courts of New York and Massachusetts seem to reflect different views, although the decisions are perhaps not irreconcilable upon the actual facts. Grant v. Knepfer, 245 N. Y. 158, 156 N. E. 650, 54 A.L.R. 845; Butler v. Mechanics' Iron Foundry Co. 259 Mass. 560, 156 N. E. 720, 54 A.L.R. 849.

[6] Kayser v. Van Nest, 125 Minn. 277, 146 N. W. 1091, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 970.

Where the servant permits an incompetent person to drive, the employer may be held liable. Annotation: 98 A.L.R. 1051. See also American Law Institute, Restatement, Agency, Vol. 1, § 241.

[7] See Agency, Vol. 2, p. 154, §§ 196 et seq.

[8] See Master and Servant [Also 18 R. C. L. p. 785].

[9] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1383, s. 54 A.L.R. 852, and 98 A.L.R. 1044.

Where an employee is sent to bring an automobile to the employer's garage for repairs, the employer is not liable for the negligence of a boy to whom the employee, without authority, intrusted the operation of the machine for the purpose of taking it to the master's place of business. Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1383, 1384.

[10] The owner of an omnibus is not responsible for the negligence of one to whom the duty of driving the omnibus home was delegated by the conductor after the regular driver was ordered by a policeman, about a quarter of a mile from the employer's yard, to discontinue driving, since, as the employer might have been communicated with, there was no necessity for employing another person to drive the omnibus home. Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1384.

assist him, the employer is liable for the negligence of the assistant.[11] Some courts have held an employer liable for the negligence of one whom his employee permits to drive, on the theory of a constructive identity.[12] One court has expressed the view that there are recognized to be three grounds upon which the owner may be held liable for the negligent operation of the car, viz.: (1) Where the employee, employed for the purpose of driving the employer's automobile, negligently chooses a stranger to operate the car in his place; (2) where the employee directs or permits a stranger to operate the car in the employer's business, and in the presence of the employee; (3) where the employee selects a stranger to drive the car in his place, upon the express or implied permission or direction of the owner thereof.[13] There is, however, some question as to whether other authorities support the first proposition.[14] It has been held also that where the driver permits his helper or assistant to operate the employer's truck contrary to the instructions of the owner, while there can be no recovery against the owner under the doctrine of respondeat superior, he is liable on the theory that the damage complained of was caused by an instrumentality used by the servant in the prosecution of the master's business, and this notwithstanding the driver was not with assistant or helper when the latter was operating the truck at the time of the accident.[15]

§ 383. —Theory of Constructive Service where Employee Is Present at Time of Accident.—The general rule that the employer is not liable for the act of one whom his employee, without authority, permits to drive is subject, according to some cases at least, to the qualification that when such acts are done in the presence of the employee, the actor is considered as the alter ego of the employee, and his acts are the acts of the employee, for which the employer is liable. In other words, where the employee, to whom is intrusted the operation of an automobile, permits, in his presence, another to operate the same, the employer is liable in case of accident while the automobile is being operated by the stranger, on the theory that a person who is permitted by the employee to operate the automobile is an instrument in the hands of the employee.[16] Thus, the owner of a truck may be held liable for a collision occurring while the truck was being driven by one who was permitted by the employee in charge of the truck to operate it, if the collision was attributable to the negligent failure of the employee, who sat on the seat with the driver, to keep a proper lookout and to see that the driver kept the truck on the proper side of the road, considering the rights of other vehicles.[17] It seems that the employer is not relieved from

---

[11] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1384, s. 54 A.L.R. 842, and 98 A.L.R. 1044.

[12] See infra, § 383.

[13] Ulman v. Lindeman, 44 N. D. 36, 176 N. W. 25, 10 A.L.R. 1440.

[14] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1383.

[15] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 854.

[16] Geiss v. Twin City Taxicab Co. 120 Minn. 368, 139 N. W. 611, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382; Ulman v. Lindeman, 44 N. D. 36, 176 N. W. 25, 10 A.L.R. 1440.

Gillespie Grain Co. v. Kuproski [1935] (Can.) S. C. R. 13, [1935] 4 D. L. R. 18, 98 A.L.R. 1035.

Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1385, s. 54 A.L.R. 852, and 98 A.L.R. 1046.

In Geiss v. Twin City Taxicab Co. 120 Minn. 368, 139 N. W. 611, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, the court, in approving the rule set out in the text, said: "We have no disposition to question the soundness of the rule that under the doctrine of respondeat superior a master is not, generally speaking, responsible for the negligence of another, not his servant, or the application of this doctrine to a case where the negligent act is done by one without authority, employed by the servant to assist him, and not done in the presence of the servant and with his consent. But where the servant is present, and consents to the performance of the act by the assistant in a negligent manner, we think the negligence is that of the servant, and that the master is responsible."

[17] Gillespie Grain Co. v. Kuproski [1935] (Can.) S. C. R. 13, [1935] 4 D. L. R. 18, 98 A.L.R. 1035.

In Grant v. Knepfer, 245 N. Y. 158, 156 N. E. 650, 54 A.L.R. 845, where defendant sent out a motor truck with a driver and a salesman to deliver merchandise, and, upon the request of the salesman, the drivthe operation of this rule by reason of the fact that he had instructed the employee not to permit others to drive the car.[18] The rule has, however, been criticized,[19] and some courts have refused to follow it,[20] especially in cases where the employee has been specifically instructed not to allow others to ride on the employer's automobile or truck.[1]

§ 384. Chauffeur Furnished with Hired Car.—The fact that an employee is the general servant of one employer does not, as a matter of law, prevent him from becoming the particular servant of another, who may become liable for his acts. Indeed, as a general proposition, when one person lends his servant to another for a particular employment, the servant, for anything done in that employment, must be dealt with as the servant of the one to whom he is loaned, although he remains the general servant of the one who loaned him.[2] The determination of liability for the acts of the servant depends, however, upon the determination of who has the power to control and direct the employee at the exact time of the act in question.[3] The same principle controls in the case of the hiring of an automobile with the chauffeur of the owner, so far as the test of the liability for the negligence of the chauffeur is concerned, as controls in the case of a borrowed servant.[4] The criterion by which the courts determine whether a chauffeur in the general employment of the owner of a car is to be deemed for the time being the servant of the hirer or borrower of the car, or is to remain the servant of the owner, is whether, in the particular service which he is engaged to perform, the servant continues liable to the direction and control of his general employer, or becomes subject to that of the party to whom he is let—whether the latter is in control as proprietor, so that he can at any time stop or continue the work and determine the way in which it is to be done, with reference not only to the result to be reached, but to the method of reaching it.[5] This ordinarily raises a question of fact for er permitted him to operate the truck, and as a result of negligent operation, damage was done to the automobile of another, the defendant was held liable on the theory that the negligence of the driver in permitting a substitute to take the wheel, and in failing to supervise or control the conduct of the substitute, who drove the car in an improper and negligent manner, all of which was done while the driver was still in charge of the truck and on his master's business, may properly have been found by the triers of the facts to have been the cause of the collision, even though the negligence of the driver combined with that of the substitute.

---

[18] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1389, s. 54 A.L.R. 855, and 98 A.L.R. 1047.

Where the driver of a motorbus who had given the conductor permission to turn the bus around sat beside the conductor as the latter drove around for this purpose, it was held to be a question for the jury whether an injury caused by the negligent operation of the bus resulted from a breach of the driver's duty, which was either to prevent another person from driving, or, if he allowed him to drive, to see that he drove properly. Ricketts v. Tilling [1915] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 644, 6 B. R. C. 683—C. A.

As to liability of employer to one invited to ride by employee, see infra, § 394.

[19] See 7 Labatt, Commentaries on Master and Servant, 739.

[20] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 852, s. 98 A.L.R. 1043.

[1] In Butler v. Mechanics Iron Co. 259 Mass. 560, 156 N. E. 720, 54 A.L.R. 849, while the fact that the driver had been expressly instructed to allow no one to ride on the truck does not appear to have been a controlling factor in the decision, it is obvious that the court regarded it as important in showing that the act of the driver in allowing a substitute to operate the truck was wholly unauthorized, upon which ground it based its decision holding the owner not liable for the negligence of the substitute. It will be observed, however, that no negligence on the part of the driver was shown to have contributed to the accident, and that it was wholly the fault of the substitute and could not have been prevented by the driver.

[2] See Master and Servant [Also 18 R. C. L. p. 784, § 244].

[3] Annotation: 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457, s. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

[4] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1420.

[5] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1416, 1446; 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457, s. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

If the driver is placed under the control of the hirer in the performance of the work, the driver becomes pro hac vice the servant of the hirer; on the other hand, if the agreement is that the owner of the truck shall do work for a consideration, with servants the jury to determine under proper instructions, unless the evidence is clear and uncontradicted.[6] The best guide, perhaps, is an individual case containing facts most nearly analogous to the facts the reader has in mind. In many instances, the owner of an automobile or truck, leased or rented to another, together with the services of a chauffeur in his general employment to run the machine, has been held liable for the negligence of such chauffeur.[7] The facts and circumstances may, however, justify the conclusion that the chauffeur was under the control and direction of the lessee, in which event the lessee, and not the owner, is liable for the chauffeur's negligence.[8]

§ 385. —Presumption of Owner's Control.—The responsibility of the owner for the chauffeur's negligence has been affirmed so often, many times as a matter of law, except in cases where it was clear that the hirer exercised a large degree of control over the chauffeur, that the suggestion of a prominent text-writer,[9] that a servant sent to take charge of an instrumentality placed by the owner at the disposal of a third party is presumed to remain the servant of the owner, fairly may be said to sum up the authorities as a whole, though very few courts have expressly assented to the view that a presumption arises that the chauffeur remains the servant of the owner during his special employment. Some courts have definitely announced their assent to this proposition.[10]

§ 386. —Particular Factors to Be Considered.—Many factors must be considered before any conclusion can be reached; every case presents facts peculiar to itself—facts which must be, and are, weighed in solving the question, "In whose business was the chauffeur engaged?"[11] The fact that the general employer pays the chauffeur's wages during the time he is let to the hirer of the automobile will not prevent the chauffeur from becoming the servant of the hirer,[12] nor is it necessary that the hirer be given express or written authority to control the driver furnished.[13] The essential thing is his right or assumption of control as proprietor over the chauffeur.[14] Even though the parties of his own selection, retaining the direction and control of such servants, he will be the master and will be liable for the negligence of such servants in doing the work, though the work being done will be ultimately for the benefit of the hirer. The determining factor is the power to control and direct the servants in the performance of the work, and the test is, not who actually controlled the actual movements of the servant, but who had the right to control. Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1420.

---

[6] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1418.

[7] Forbes v. Reinman, 112 Ark. 417, 166 S. W. 563, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164; Densby v. Bartlett, 318 Ill. 616, 149 N. E. 591, 42 A.L.R. 1406; Shepard v. Jacobs, 204 Mass. 110, 90 N. E. 392, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442, 134 Am. St. Rep. 648; McNamara v. Leipzig, 227 N. Y. 291, 125 N. E. 244, 8 A.L.R. 480. Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1418, 1419.

[8] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1419.

[9] 1 Labatt, Master & Servant, § 53.

[10] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1421, 1422.

If a master hires out the use of an instrumentality owned by him, under a rental agreement, together with the services of an employee for the operation of it, to go where, and perform such work as the hirer directs, but without relinquishing to the hirer the power to discharge such servant, the legal presumption is that although the hirer directs the servant where to go and what to do in the performance of the work, the servant nevertheless remains, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the servant of the general employer in so far as concerns the manner and method of operating the instrumentality, and the negligence of the servant will be that of the owner, and not of the hirer. Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1422.

Normally the driver of a hired conveyance, when furnished and paid by the owner thereof, is the servant of the owner and not of the hirer consequently, when it appears that a corporation which is regularly engaged in letting out automobiles driven by its regularly employed drivers is sued for injuries inflicted on one invited by the hirer to ride in the automobile, as a result of the negligence of the driver, the action of the trial court in submitting to the jury whether the chauffeur was the servant of the hirer or of the owner is as favorable to the owner as it can reasonably expect. Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1423.

[11] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1420.

[12] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1420, 1429.

[13] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1421.

[14] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1428, 1429.

One engaging trucks and drivers of a transfer company to convey its employees contract specifically that the driver shall remain the servant of the owner and shall not become the servant of the lessee, as to third persons, the driver furnished may nevertheless become the servant of the lessee during the period of the hiring, if the hirer actually exercises control over him.[15] The mere facts that the hirer has the power of directing the chauffeur when and where to go,[16] what to bring or carry,[17] or what route to take,[18] or that he rides with the chauffeur while the work is being done,[19] do not make the chauffeur furnished with the vehicle his agent, thus relieving the owner from responsibility for the driver's negligence.[20] Nor does the fact that other employees of the hirer of automobiles and drivers to transport customers to inspect property which he has for sale, refer to the machines as "our machines," and assume the attitude of ownership before customers, estop the hirer from denying liability for injuries caused by the negligence of a chauffeur in handling a car.[1] If there is no suggestion that the one hiring the services of the car and driver in any way assumed control of the car or interfered with the driver, who was selected by the owner and paid by him, the owner alone having the right to judge as to his fitness and to dismiss him, the hirer cannot be held liable on the theory of respondeat superior.[2] The right to discharge may be a controlling factor in determining who is the master of the chauffeur; however, the mere fact that the hirer can control the selection of the chauffeur by telling the owner of the truck not to send certain ones is not equivalent to authority to discharge, and not, therefore, a fact implying the relationship of master and servant between the chauffeur and the hirer.[3]

§ 387. —Where Car Is Hired for Extended Period.—The fact that an automobile and chauffeur are hired for an extended period does not necessarily mean that the chauffeur during that period is to be considered the servant of the hirer.[4] As in other cases involving the hiring of a chauffeur with a car, liability of the hirer on the theory of respondeat superior depends upon his right of control over the chauffeur.[5] If the hirer has the exclusive control of the chauffeur during the period of the hiring, he, and not the general employer, is liable for the acts of the chauffeur during that time.[6] If, on the other hand, the owner retains control over the chauffeur hired out with the car, he must respond for the negligence of the chauffeur while using the car for the benefit of the hirer.[7] to and from work during a street car strike, under an arrangement by which the truck drivers reported with their trucks to the corporation, which gave them instructions as to the loading and transportation of the employees, and placed the vehicles under the charge of a foreman, who marked them with the corporation's name and gave the drivers orders what to do and where to go, was to be considered the master of the drivers during that time, and liable for their negligence. Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1428.

---

[15] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1423, 1424.

[16] Forbes v. Reinman, 112 Ark. 417, 166 S. W. 563, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164; Shepard v. Jacobs, 204 Mass. 110, 190 N. E. 392, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442, 134 Am. St. Rep. 648.

Annotation: 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457, s. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

[17] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1421.

[18] Forbes v. Reinman, 112 Ark. 417, 166 S. W. 563, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164; Meyers v. Tri-State Auto. Co. 21 Minn. 68, 140 N. W. 184, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113; Gerretson v. Rambler Garage Co. 149 Wis. 528, 136 N. W. 186, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457.

[19] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1421, 1426.

[20] Annotation: 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 457, s. 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

[1] Densby v. Bartlett, 318 Ill. 616, 149 N. E. 591, 42 A.L.R. 1406.

[2] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1427.

[3] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1423.

[4] Annotation: 8 A.L.R. 484, s. 42 A.L.R. 1429.

[5] See supra, §§ 384–386.

[6] Annotation: 8 A.L.R. 484, s. 42 A.L.R. 1429.

[7] McNamara v. Leipzig, 227 N. Y. 291, 125 N. E. 244, 8 A.L.R. 480.

Annotation: 8 A.L.R. 484, s. 42 A.L.R. 1432.

In McNamara v. Leipzig, 227 N. Y. 291, 125 N. E. 244, 8 A.L.R. 480, it is held that the hirer of an automobile, with the service

§ 388. —Funeral Cars.—If an undertaker employed to conduct a funeral and to furnish automobiles in that service hires automobiles with chauffeurs from others, and has the exclusive right to direct the mode and manner in which the chauffeurs shall perform the special service in connection with the funeral, he becomes liable for a chauffeur's act of negligence during that period.[8] Some courts have held the undertaker liable to the persons to whom he furnishes transportation for the negligence of chauffeurs furnished with cars which he hired, regardless of whether he had control over such chauffeurs.[9] Other courts apply the test of control, and hold that if the lessee exercised no control or direction over the driver of the hired car other than to direct the driver where to go and whom to take, the relationship of master and servant did not exist as between them, but that the chauffeur remained exclusively the servant of the owner.[10] If it can be shown that an undertaker employed to conduct a funeral merely acted as agent for the family of the deceased in hiring automobiles for the funeral from one who furnished the drivers, and exercised no control over the drivers other than to direct them where and when to go, he will not be liable for injury caused by the negligence of one of the drivers.[11]

§ 389. —When Returning Car to Owner.—In general, when a chauffeur who has been working for the hirer of a motor vehicle is returning it to the owner, he is regarded as the servant of the owner, even though that relationship may have been superseded during the period of hiring.[12]

§ 390. Chauffeur Furnished with Borrowed Car.—Although some courts have made statements to the contrary,[13] it would seem that the principles laid down in the cases in which trucks or automobiles are hired with chauffeurs in the general employment of the owner[14] apply where an automobile and its driver are loaned without recompense to another. Who is the master of the chauffeur depends in either case upon the determination of who has control of the chauffeur during the time he is driving the automobile for another than of a chauffeur, for three months, to be used at any hour of the day or night he desires, the owner to pay all expenses for gasolene, repairs, and supplies, and to procure insurance covering the hirer from liability in case of accident, is not liable for the negligence of the chauffeur in running down plaintiff's intestate while driving the defendant.

---

[8] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1436.

Where it appeared that an undertaker, not having sufficient limousines of his own available to conduct the funeral, hired from other undertakers additional limousines with chauffeurs, and the testimony showed that the hirer was present at the house and at the cemetery during the funeral and burial services, directing and supervising affairs at both places, there was held to be ample evidence to show that he had full power and authority to control the operations of the chauffeurs of the hired cars during the conduct of the funeral so as to render him liable for injuries to one of the mourners, whose hand was mashed in a door of one of the cars, into which she had been directed to enter when the door was slammed shut by the driver of another of the hired cars. Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1435.

[9] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1436.

In Mahany v. Kansas City R. Co. (Mo.) 254 S. W. 16, 29 A.L.R. 817, an undertaker contracting to conduct a funeral and furnish transportation to and from the cemetery for the pallbearers and mourners is liable for the negligence of the chauffeur of an automobile used in the transportation, but owned by a third party, which the undertaker had leased, together with the services of the chauffeur who was in the employment of the owner, notwithstanding that it appears that the undertaker exercised no control over the chauffeur except directing him to what cemetery to go, upon the ground that the undertaker could not avoid its contractual obligations safely to carry the mourners to the funeral, by contracting with a third party to carry them. The case follows the analogy of the rule holding railroad companies which undertake, for hire, to transport passengers in sleeping cars owned by another corporation, which also furnishes the conductor and porter and other servants to operate the car, liable to a passenger for an injury to his person by the negligence of the employees of the sleeping car company.

[10] Annotation: 42 . .L.R. 1436, 1437.

[11] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1437.

[12] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1424.

[13] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1446.

[14] See supra, §§ 384–387.

the owner.[15] This is dependent largely upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case. However, in cases where the automobile is loaned, the tendency is to hold that the chauffeur becomes the servant of the borrower, thus bearing out the suggestion that decisions holding that the chauffeur remains the servant of the owner where the car is hired have no application to the case where it is loaned for a purpose not connected with the owner's business. But the mere fact that the car is loaned does not, as a matter of law, make the chauffeur furnished by the owner the servant of the borrower and relieve the owner of liability for his negligence.[16] Responsibility depends on the power of the borrower to control and direct the servant during the time he is loaned. The mere use of the word "loan" or "borrow" does not, of itself, necessarily carry the implication that the master has surrendered all control over the servant during the period for which he has been loaned; it must appear from direct testimony, or as a necessary inference from the circumstances of the transaction, that the servant was, during the period of the loan, under the control of the borrower, and not under the control of the general master, before the latter can escape liability for the servant's negligence during that period.[17] It is clear, however, that a chauffeur admittedly in the general employment of the owner of a borrowed automobile may be loaned in such a way as to become the servant of the borrower for the time being with all the legal consequences of the new relation.[18] Where the owner of an automobile has loaned it, with the services of the chauffeur, to another, and a third party is given charge by the borrower, the rule of respondeat superior does not apply as between the chauffeur and the owner.[19]

§ 391. Salesman or Collector.—An employer's liability for the negligent operation of an automobile by or on behalf of a salesman or collector is governed by the general rules which govern the liability of an employer for the negligence of employees in the operation of automobiles. In order to hold an employer liable for injuries inflicted by an automobile while being driven by or for a salesman or collector, the relation of master and servant must exist, and the salesman or collector must, at the time, have been acting within the scope of his employment in performing an act for the employer's benefit.[20] This depends largely upon the facts of the particular case.[1] There are numerous cases in which the facts have been held sufficient to establish, as a matter of law, or at least to justify a finding by the jury, that a salesman or collector was acting within the scope of his employment.[2] The fact that one employed to solicit business about a city was not directly authorized by his employer to use an automobile to see his prospective customers does not relieve the employer from liability for injury caused by the employee's negligent use of the car, if the employer knew of such use, and it resulted in direct benefit to him.[3] Nor does the mere fact that an injury through the negligent use of an automobile used in the work by the salesman happened after the close of business hours relieve the master from liability for the injury, if it occurred in connection with the business.[4]

---

[15] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1446; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 933.

[16] Hooper v. Brawner, 148 Md. 417, 129 A. 672, 42 A.L.R. 1437.
Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1446.

[17] Hooper v. Brawner, 148 Md. 417, 129 A. 672, 42 A.L.R. 1437.

[18] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1447, 1448.

If the owner instructs the chauffeur to take orders from the borrower, the owner is not liable for the negligence of the chauffeur while driving the car for the benefit of the borrower. Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1448.

Where the owner of a car agreed with a garage man that the latter should take charge of the car, store it, wash and polish it ready for running, and furnish a chauffeur whenever the owner should want to use the car, the chauffeur's wages to be included in the amount paid the garage man under the agreement, the court in Neff v. Brandeis, 91 Neb. 11, 35 N. W. 232. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 936, held that the relation of master and servant, or principal and agent, did not exist between the owner and a chauffeur furnished by the garage man to run the car at a time when the car had been loaned by the owner to his brother, and the garage keeper had sent it out for the brother's use in charge of a man who drove it to the place designated by the brother, and consequently the owner will not be liable for damage caused by the negligence of the chauffeur on this trip.

[19] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1448.

[20] Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 107 N. W. 133, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598; Auer v. Sinclair Ref. Co. 103 N. J. L. 372, 137 A. 555, 54 A.L.R. 623; White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082; Dishman v. Whitney, 121 Wash. 157, 209 P. 12, 29 A.L.R. 460.
Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 621, s. 29 A.L.R. 470, and 54 A.L.R. 627.

[1] Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 621, s. 29 A.L.R. 470, and 54 A.L.R. 630.

In other cases, the salesman or collector has been held or found not to be acting within the scope of his authority.[5] The owner of an automobile is not liable for an injury caused by his automobile while being driven by a third person, with the consent and in the presence of the owner's salesman, in the absence of any authority on the part of the salesman to employ or permit a substitute to drive the car, of any custom to that effect, or of any emergency.[6]

§ 392. —When Independent Contractor.—If the relation between an employer and a salesman or collector is that of independent contractor rather than that of master and servant, the employer cannot be held accountable for the negligence of the salesman or collector while using an automobile in furtherance of sales or collections.[7] It is essential, in order to hold an employer liable for injuries inflicted by an automobile while being driven by or for a salesman or collector, that the relation of master and servant exist,[8] it being well established that an employer is not as a general rule liable for the negligence of his independent contractor or of the latter's servants.[9] One of the tests to determine whether or not the salesman or collector is an independent contractor is whether the employer retained the right, or had the right under the contract, to control the mode or manner in which the work was to be done.[10] In other words, the degree of retention by the employer or principal of the right to control the manner in which the details of the work should be done must be considered.[11] A salesman, employed on a commission basis, who owned and operated an automobile to assist him in seeking his trade, and whose movements were in no way controlled by his employer, was held, with respect to the operation of the car, an independent contractor, so that his employer was not liable for injuries caused by the salesman's negligent operation of it.[12] However, unless it appears that the salesman or collector exercised control over the details of his work to the exclusion of the employer, the latter will generally be held responsible on the theory of respondeat superior, assuming, of course, that the injury complained of was inflicted by the salesman or employee while using the automobile in the furtherance of his employment.[13]

---

[2] Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 624, s. 29 A.L.R. 470, and 54 A.L.R. 630.

An automobile salesman demonstrating an automobile to a prospective buyer is acting within the scope of his employment, so as to charge his employer with liability for the death of a third person invited by the salesman to accompany them on the demonstration trip, where the death was due to the salesman's negligence. Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 632.

A finding that the person driving the defendant's automobile was acting as his servant when the plaintiff was injured by the car is warranted by testimony that the car was used for collections in the business of a company of which defendant was general manager and the driver of the car was assistant manager, and that the car was also used for the parties for their pleasure, although the defendant testified that the driver did not have any of the company's collections at the time of the accident, but that he was using the car at the time on defendant's account. Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 624.

[3] Dishman v. Whitney, 121 Wash. 157, 209 P. 12, 29 A.L.R. 460.

[4] Auer v. Sinclair Ref. Co. 103 N. J. L. 372, 137 A. 555, 54 A.L.R. 623; Dishman v. Whitney, 121 Wash. 157, 209 P. 12, 29 A.L.R. 460.

A salesman driving on a public highway within his territory, a few minutes after 6 P. M., at the end of his day's work, driving from the point of his last call to the garage at his home where he kept his car, was acting within the scope of his employment, so as to render his employer liable for the death of a pedestrian hit while crossing the highway. Auer v. Sinclair Ref. Co. 103 N. J. L. 372, 137 A. 555, 54 A.L.R. 623.

[5] Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 624, s. 29 A.L.R. 470, and 54 A.L.R. 630.

[6] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 634.

[7] Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 621, s. 29 A.L.R. 470, and 54 A.L.R. 627.

[8] See supra, § 391.

[9] See INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 79, § 17].

[10] Dishman v. Whitney, 121 Wash. 157, 209 P. 12, 29 A.L.R. 460.

[11] James v. Tobin-Sutton Co. 182 Wis. 36, 195 N. W. 848, 29 A.L.R. 457.

§ 393. Employee Driving Own Car.—The mere fact that an employee uses his own automobile in the business of the employer does not make the latter liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for injuries inflicted by such employee in the operation of the automobile.[14] If, however, the other circumstances involved in the case are consistent with, or require, the inference that the activity in which the servant was engaged at the time of the tort complained of, and in which he was using his own car or one which he had hired, was within the scope of his employment, the person injured may recover from the employer, if the servant's use of the automobile or other vehicle was authorized, either expressly or impliedly.[15] Thus, if an employee, with the

---

[12] Aldrich v. Tyler Grocery Co. 206 Ala. 138, 89 So. 289, 17 A.L.R. 617.

Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 621, s. 29 A.L.R. 470, and 54 A.L.R. 627.

One employed by a retail automobile dealer, who sold automobiles on a commission basis, receiving no salary, and furnishing, maintaining, and using his own car, is held to be an independent contractor, so that his employer is not liable for an injury which resulted from the negligent operation of the salesman's automobile, although it appeared that he was required to report at his employer's place of business each morning to discuss the previous day's work and receive suggestions or criticisms and prospect cards, but, after having reported, he could go where he pleased, and sell cars anywhere within the county. James v. Tobin-Sutton Co. 182 Wis. 36, 195 N. W. 848, 29 A.L.R. 457.

[13] Auer v. Sinclair Ref. Co. 103 N. J. L. 372, 137 A. 555, 54 A.L.R. 623; Dishman v. Whitney, 121 Wash. 157, 209 P. 12, 29 A.L.R. 460.

Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 621, s. 29 A.L.R. 470, and 54 A.L.R. 627.

Where the facts presented with respect to the relation of employer and employee are as consistent with the relation of agency as with that of independent contractor, the one asserting the existence of the latter relation has the burden of proof. Dishman v. Whitney, 121 Wash. 157, 209 P. 12, 29 A.L.R. 460.

In Auer v. Sinclair Ref. Co. 103 N. J. L. 372, 137 A. 555, 54 A.L.R. 623, where the defendant employed a person on a salary to devote his whole time to the sale of the company's products in a specified territory, authorizing him to use his own automobile and paying him for its upkeep and running expenses, the employee was held to be a servant of the company and not an independent contractor, where the company controlled and directed the work from its office, so as to render the company liable for the death of a person due to the negligence of the employee.

[14] Khoury v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 265 Mass. 236, 164 N. E. 77, 60 A.L.R. 1159.

Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 739, s. 60 A.L.R. 1163, and 87 A.L.R. 787.

The fact that the driver of a car was an employee of the defendant and had no other employment is not decisive of the relationship of master and servant at the time of the injury, since a person may be an agent or a servant as to one part of an undertaking and an independent contractor as to other parts. Khoury v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 265 Mass. 236, 164 N. E. 77, 60 A.L.R. 1159.

An employer is not liable, under the doctrine of respondeat superior, for the negligent operation by the employee of the latter's own car which he was using in the course of, and prosecution of, the employer's business at the time of the accident, where the employer's sole interest was that the employee should be at places where work was to be performed, the employer leaving the means of transportation to the employee's decision and convenience, limiting its own liability for expense, if the employee used his own car, to an amount equivalent to the fares of a common carrier, and assuming no obligation to keep the car in repair, such duty resting upon the employee himself. Ibid.

[15] Auer v. Sinclair Ref. Co. 103 N. J. L. 372, 54 A.L.R. 623, 137 A. 555.

Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 739, s. 60 A.L.R. 1163, and 87 A.L.R. 787.

A salesman employed on a salary to devote his whole time to the sale of the company's products in a specified territory, who is authorized to use his automobile and is paid by the company for its upkeep and running expenses, and whose work is controlled and directed by daily communications from the company's office, is the servant of the company, and not an independent contractor, so as to render the company liable for a death due to his negligent operation of the automobile while he was driving from the point of his last call knowledge and assent of the employer, repeatedly uses an automobile, not owned by the employer, in the latter's business, the employer will be held to have impliedly authorized its use and to be liable for negligence in connection therewith, but the mere fact that an automobile was used on one occasion, unaccompanied by any evidence of other similar acts, does not justify any inference that the employee was later authorized to use the machine upon the employer's business.[16] The employer is not liable where the use of the automobile or other vehicle operated by the employee is not expressly or impliedly authorized by the employer, and he exercises no control over its operation.[17] He cannot be held liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for personal injuries inflicted by an employee while engaged in unnecessarily driving his own automobile upon the master's business, without the latter's knowledge or express or implied authorization.[18]

§ 394. Liability to Person Whom Employee Permits or Invites to Ride.—The question of the liability of the employer to a person invited by an employee to ride in an automobile driven by the employee, for injuries due to the negligent operation of the automobile by the employee, depends primarily upon whether the employee, in extending the invitation to ride, can be said to have been acting within the scope of his authority. Many cases may be found in which an employer has been held liable for injuries to persons riding with the implied consent of the driver of an automobile or truck in the employment of the owner,[19] and in any case in which there is support for a finding that the employee, in inviting a third person to ride with him, acted, either expressly or by implication, within the line of his duty and under his employment, the master can be held liable for an injury to such invitee resulting proximately from the servant's negligence.[20] The tendency of the more recent decisions, however, is to enlarge the employer's freedom from liability for the act of his employee in inviting others to ride with him[1] by holding that an employee charged with the duty of driving the employer's automobile has no implied authority, in the absence of any necessity for securing assistance from others, to invite third persons to ride with him.[2] Sending the chauffeur of a private to the garage at his home where he kept his car. Auer v. Sinclair Ref. Co. 103 N. J. L. 372, 137 A. 555, 54 A.L.R. 623.

---

[16] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 740, 741, s. 60 A.L.R. 1163, and 87 A.L.R. 787.

[17] Annotation: 60 A.L.R. 1163, s. 87 A.L.R. 788.

[18] Kennedy v. Union Charcoal & Chemical Co. 156 Tenn. 666, 4 S. W. (2d) 354, 57 A.L.R. 733.

[19] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1021, s. 40 A.L.R. 1340, 47 A.L.R. 328, 51 A.L.R. 583, 61 A.L.R. 1257, and 65 A.L.R. 955.

[20] Paiewonsky v. Joffe, 101 N. J. L. 521, 129 A. 142, 40 A.L.R. 1335.

In Crowell v. Duncan, 145 Va. 489, 134 S. E. 576, 50 A.L.R. 1425, it was held that the fact that the driver of a taxicab had a friend in the taxi with him, and they both testified that they were pursuing their own pleasure, was not conclusive, as a matter of law, of the nonliability of the owner for the negligence of the driver, where the accident occurred during regular business hours, within the territory where he ordinarily solicited trade, and while a taxi sign was prominently displayed. The court observed that a taxi driver obviously has some discretion as to the routes to be taken in serving his employer.

In Anderson v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 73 Fla. 432, 74 So. 975, L.R.A.1917E, 715, the question of the owner's liability was held to be for the jury where its chauffeur, with the knowledge of the managing officer, had used the car to go to his dinner and also to drive a friend of the chauffeur's to and from the place where she worked, and an accident occurred while he was doing an errand for his friend.

Where the evidence permits an inference that a merchant, for business reasons, adopted the practice of having the driver of his delivery automobile take customers and their companions to the customers' homes with packages purchased, the jury may find that the driver was authorized to invite a companion of a customer to ride to the customer's house with packages purchased, and hence may find the merchant liable for an injury resulting to such invitee from want of reasonable care on the part of the driver. Paiewonsky v. Joffe, 101 N. J. L. 521, 129 A. 142, 40 A.L.R. 1335.

[1] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1167, s. 74 A.L.R. 163.

automobile on an errand does not give him authority to take into the car a person casually met upon the highway.[3] In the absence of authority on part of the driver to invite or permit others to ride, the only duty which the employer owes to one invited or permitted to ride is to avoid a wanton or wilful injury to him; such a person is not a licensee of the employer.[4] However, one riding in an automobile with the permission of a servant is not, according to the weight of authority, deprived of all recourse against the master for an injury sustained, though the servant, in granting the permission, is not acting within the scope of his employment, or is not clothed by the master with the apparent authority to grant it. In the case of such an unauthorized permission to a third person to be on the vehicle, it is generally held that although the master is not required to exercise the same degree of care as where the permission is authorized actually or ostensibly, he is nevertheless liable for a wanton, wilful, or reckless injury inflicted on the third person by a servant who is acting within the scope of his employment.[5] But in the absence of wilfulness or wantonness on the part of the driver, the invitee or licensee of the driver cannot recover from the owner of the truck for injuries received while riding in it.[6]

§ 395. —Where Employee Violates Instructions.—Generally speaking, the liability of an employer for injuries to a person whom an employee, in violation of instructions of the employer, permits or invites to ride in an automobile being driven by the employee depends upon whether the employee, in granting permission or extending the invitation to ride, acted within the apparent or ostensible scope of his authority.[7] If such invitation or permission is within the scope of the servant's employment or within the apparent authority with which he has been clothed by his master, the employer is generally held liable for the failure of the employee to exercise ordinary care for the safety of the invitee, even though the invitation or permission is in violation of express instructions of the employer,[8] provided the invitee is justified in relying upon the ostensible or apparent authority of the agent.

The recent decisions, however, have shown a tendency to enlarge the freedom from liability on the part of the master for injury under the circumstances

---

[2] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1001.

See Union Gas & E. Co. v. Crouch, 123 Ohio St. 81, 174 N. E. 6, 74 A.L.R. 160, where it is held that the owner of an automobile being driven by a servant in the business of the owner, within the scope of the servant's employment, is not liable for damages to a guest of the servant for injuries caused to such guest by the negligence of the servant while riding in the automobile without the knowledge and consent of the owner, it not appearing that such guest is, at the time, rendering necessary assistance to the servant within the scope of his employment.

[3] Rolfe v. Hewitt, 227 N. Y. 486, 125 N. E. 804, 14 A.L.R. 125.

[4] Ibid.

[5] Illinois C. R. Co. v. Messina, 240 U. S. 395, 60 L. ed. 709, 36 S. Ct. 368; Clark v. Colorado & N. W. R. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 165 F. 408, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 988; Cleveland v. Pine Bluff, A. River R. Co. 107 Ark. 93, 154 S. W. 191, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 687; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Jones, 96 Ark. 558, 132 S. W. 636, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 418; Houston, C. A. & N. R. Co. v. Bolling, 59 Ark. 395, 27 S. W. 492, 27 L.R.A. 190, 43 Am. St. Rep. 38; Lovejoy v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 59 Colo. 222, 146 P. 263, L.R.A.1915E, 888, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1075; Rolfe v. Hewitt, 227 N. Y. 486, 125 N. E. 804, 14 A.L.R. 125; Dover v. Mayes Mfg. Co. 157 N. C. 324, 72 S. E. 1067, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 199; Vassor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 68, 54 S. E. 849, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, 9 Ann. Cas. 535; Higbee Co. v. Jackson, 101 Ohio St. 75, 128 N. E. 61, 14 A.L.R. 131, overruled on other grounds in Union Gas & E. Co. v. Crouch, 123 Ohio St. 81, 174 N. E. 6, 74 A.L.R. 160.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 147, s. 62 A.L.R. 1169, and 74 A.L.R. 165.

[6] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1171, s. 74 A.L.R. 164.

[7] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 145, s. 62 A.L.R. 1167, and 74 A.L.R. 163.

[8] Palmer Transfer Co. v. Smith, 137 Ky. 319, 125 S. W. 725, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 321, 136 Am. St. Rep. 295; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scott (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Weaver) 108 Ky. 392, 56 S. W. 674, 50 L.R.A. 381; Solomon v. Public Serv. R. Co. 87 N. J. L. 284, 92 A. 942, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 356.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 145, s. 62 A.L.R. 1167, and 74 A.L.R. 163.

herein considered. The position now generally taken is that an employee driving his employer's automobile or truck does not in the ordinary case, by virtue of his employment, have implied or apparent authority to invite others to ride on the automobile or truck and thus bind the employer by an invitation which is contrary to his express instructions to the employee not to permit others to ride.[9] Accordingly, under this view, where one riding in a pleasure automobile, with the permission or at the invitation of the owner's chauffeur, who had instructions not to permit others to ride with him, is injured or killed by the negligence of the chauffeur in operating the car, the employer is not liable.[10] Like rulings have been made with respect to persons invited to ride by the driver of a truck.[11] Clearly, one who obtains the permission to ride by collusion or by a personal payment to the servant, or under circumstances which would make it clear to a man of ordinary intelligence that the servant had no authority to grant permission,[12] or who has knowledge that the permission is a violation of instructions given by the master, cannot rely on the servant's apparent authority; such a person is not entitled to recover from the master for a failure of the servant to exercise ordinary care for his safety.[13] Nor is one riding on a vehicle in violation of a state or Federal statute justified in relying on the apparent authority of a servant to grant him permission; he is a trespasser to whom the owner of the vehicle is not liable for a failure of its servant to exercise ordinary care.[14]

§ 396. Where Car Is Loaned to Employee.—Generally speaking, the fact that an employer consents to or permits the use of his car by an employee for the latter's own personal pleasure or business does not render the employer liable for the negligence of the employee while so using the car.[15] It is also well settled that the lending of an automobile to an employee under circumstances which create the relationship of bailor and bailee does not entail liability on the owner for the negligence of the employee to whom the automobile is loaned,[16] except in jurisdictions which take the view that the possibilities of injury from the operation of an automobile are so great as to render an owner who allows his servant to use the machine on personal business liable for the negligence of the servant while so engaged,[17] or where a statutory liability is imposed for the negligence of anyone whom the owner permits to use and drive his car.[18] This assumes, of course, that the employer was not negligent in lending the car to an employee incompetent to operate it.[19] As in other cases where the master loans his automobile to a servant, the servant stands as any other borrower for whose negligence the owner is not liable.[20]

---

[9] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 1167, s. 74 A.L.R. 163.

[10] Rolfe v. Hewitt, 227 N. Y. 486, 125 N. E. 804, 14 A.L.R. 125.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 177, s. 62 A.L.R. 1170, and 74 A.L.R. 163.

In answer to the contention that the presumption should obtain that a servant intrusted with a pleasure automobile has ostensible or implied authority to invite others to ride, it has been said that there is no good reason apparent for holding that a jury may be allowed to infer that a servant or chauffeur driving an automobile has ostensible or implied authority to invite or permit others to ride; it is not in the interest of the ordinary automobile owner to give free rides to others and incur the risk incident to so doing. Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 163, 164.

[11] Psota v. Long Island R. Co. 246 N. Y. 388, 159 N. E. 180, 62 A.L.R. 1163; Union Gas & E. Co. v. Crouch, 123 Ohio St. 81, 174 N. E. 6, 74 A.L.R. 160.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 178, s. 62 A.L.R. 1171, and 74 A.L.R. 164.

A guest of a servant, riding in a truck intrusted to the servant in the course of the business of the owner who instructs the servant not to permit others to ride, is neither an invitee nor a licensee of the owner, but, on the contrary, is a trespasser to whom no duty is owing by the owner, except that of not wilfully injuring him. Union Gas & E. Co. v. Crouch, 123 Ohio St. 81, 174 N. E. 6, 74 A.L.R. 160, overruling in part Higbee v. Jackson, 101 Ohio St. 75, 128 N. E. 61, 14 A.L.R. 131.

[12] Purple v. Union P. R. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 114 F. 123, 57 L.R.A. 700; Mendenhall v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 66 Kan. 438, 71 P. 846, 61 L.R.A. 120, 97 Am. St. Rep. 380.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 150, s. 62 A.L.R. 1169, and 74 A.L.R. 163.

[13] People v. Union P. R. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 114 F. 123, 57 L.R.A. 700.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 149, 150, s. 62 A.L.R. 1169, and 74 A.L.R. 163.

[14] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 150, s. 62 A.L.R. 1169, and 74 A.L.R. 163.

See also Illinois C. R. Co. v. Messina, 240 U. S. 395, 60 L. ed. 709, 36 S. Ct. 368.

[15] See supra, § 375.

[16] Fletcher v. Meredith, 148 Md. 580, 129 A. 795, 45 A.L.R. 474; Reilly v. Connable, 214 N. Y. 586, 108 N. E. 853, L.R.A.1916A, 954, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 656.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1143, s. 68 A.L.R. 1012, and 100 A.L.R. 922.

6. Statutory Liability of Owner

§ 397. Generally.—In many jurisdictions statutes have been enacted making the owner of an automobile liable for injuries negligently inflicted as a result of the operation of the automobile by persons other than the owner himself or his servant or agent acting within the scope of his employment, and others make an owner liable for the acts of a person under a certain age or an incompetent or inexperienced driver to whom he intrusts his car. These statutes vary greatly in form. Some statutes provide generally that the owner shall be liable for the negligence of anyone operating his car with his knowledge or consent; others make the owner liable for the acts of members of his family; still others make one renting an automobile liable for the bailee's negligence.[1] Their effect is to extend the common-law rules which, except in the few jurisdictions that consider an automobile to be a dangerous agency within the rule of law making the owner responsible for the manner in which it is used by anyone with his knowledge or consent,[2] limit the liability of the owner of an automobile for injuries resulting from its negligent operation by another person to cases where the owner exercises some control over its operation by such third person, as where a relationship of master and servant exists at the time of the injury complained of. These statutes recognize the present-day frequent use of motor vehicles by others than the owner, where no such relationship exists between the owner and driver as, under the common law, will create a liability on the part of the owner for the negligence of the driver.[3] Some of the earlier statutes dealing with the responsibility of owners for the operation of their automobiles by others attempted to impose liability even where the car was used without the knowledge or consent of the owner. Statutes of this character, however, have generally been held unconstitutional.[4]

§ 398. Validity of Statute.—Statutes which make the owner liable for the negligent operation of his motor vehicle when driven by others with his express or implied consent have been sustained as a valid exercise of the police power.[5] Such statutes have been sustained against attacks upon their constitutionality on the ground that they are arbitrary or oppressive, impair the obligation of contract, or deprive the owner of his liberty or property without due process of law.[6] Such a statute does not, as applied to a nonresident owner who loaned his automobile in another state by the law of which he was immune from liability for the borrower's negligence, and who was not within the state at the time of the accident, deprive him of his liberty to contract or of his property without due process of law.[7] Nor does it deny him equal protection of the law.[8] Nor does a statute making the lessor of an automobile liable for injury done by the negligent driving of the car by the lessee unconstitutionally deprive the owner of his property without due process of law.[9] Automobiles kept and used for the purpose of renting them to be driven by the lessees on the public streets may be separately classified for the purposes of regulation.[10] Legislation of this character is said to be an exercise of the police power which acts in furtherance of the public safety, health, and welfare and is coextensive with the public need. The reasonableness of its exercise in such cases must be measured largely by the same standard.[11] However, statutes which impose liability upon the owner although his car is taken without his consent or knowledge are void as a violation of constitutional guaranties of due process and of equal protection of the law[12] although a statute which establishes a conclusive presumption that an automobile driven by a member of the owner's family is so driven with his consent or knowledge has been held a valid exercise of the police power.[13]

---

[17] Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 80 Fla. 441, 86 So. 629, 16 A.L.R. 255; Anderson v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 73 Fla. 432, 74 So. 975, L.R.A.1917E, 715.

[18] See infra, §§ 397 et seq.

[19] See supra, § 355.

[20] Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 1145, s. 68 A.L.R. 1012.

[1] Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 361, s. 61 A.L.R. 866, 83 A.L.R. 878, and 88 A.L.R. 174.

[2] See supra, §§ 11, 12.

[3] Maine v. James Maine & Sons Co. 198 Iowa, 1278, 201 N. W. 20, 37 A.L.R. 161.

[4] See infra, § 398.

[5] Young v. Masci, 289 U. S. 253, 77 L. ed. 1158, 53 S. Ct. 599, 88 A.L.R. 170; Levy v. Daniels' U-Drive Auto Renting Co 108 Conn. 333, 143 A. 163, 61 A.L.R. 846; Robinson v. Bruce Rent-A-Ford Co. 205 Iowa, 261, 215 N. W. 724, 61 A.L.R. 851; Bowerman v. Sheehan, 242 Mich. 95, 219 N. W. 69, 61 A.L.R. 859; Stapleton v. Independent Brewing Co. 198 Mich. 170, 164 N. W. 520, L.R.A.1918A, 916.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 361, s. 61 A.L.R. 866, 83 A.L.R. 879, and 88 A.L.R. 175.

[6] Robinson v. Bruce Rent-A-Ford Co. 205

§ 399. Construction and Application.—Statutes imposing liability upon the owner of an automobile for its negligent operation by one who does not stand in the relationship of agent or servant to the owner,[14] where no personal negligence can be charged to the owner in intrusting his car to one incompetent to drive it,[15] extend the common-law liability of an automobile owner for the acts of others.[16] They, in effect, make the one who uses an automobile with the consent of the owner his agent [17] for the purpose of holding him liable for an

---

Iowa, 261, 215 N. W. 724, 61 A.L.R. 851; Bowerman v. Sheehan, 242 Mich. 95, 219 N. W. 69, 61 A.L.R. 859.

The statute making one liable for injuries done by the use of his motorcar by any member of his immediate family is within the police power, and not invalid as arbitrary or oppressive. Bowerman v. Sheehan, 242 Mich. 95, 219 N. W. 69, 61 A.L.R. 859.

[7] Young v. Masci, 289 U. S. 253, 77 L. ed. 1158, 53 S. Ct. 599, 88 A.L.R. 170.

[8] Ibid.

[9] Levy v. Daniels' U-Drive Auto Renting Co. 108 Conn. 333, 143 A. 163, 61 A.L.R. 846; Robinson v. Bruce Rent-A-Ford Co. 265 Iowa, 261, 215 N. W. 724, 61 A.L.R. 851.

The imminent danger of injury to the public upon or near public highways from the rental of motor vehicles to any but competent and careful operators or to persons of unknown responsibility justifies, as a reasonable exercise of the police power, a statute requiring all who engage in such business to become responsible for any injury inflicted upon the public by the tortious operation of the rented vehicle. Levy v. Daniels' U-Drive Auto Renting Co. 108 Conn. 333, 143 A. 163, 61 A.L.R. 846.

[10] Hodge Drive-It-Yourself Co. v. Cincinnati, 123 Ohio St. 284, 175 N. E. 196, 77 A.L.R. 889, affirmed in 284 U. S. 335, 76 L. ed. 323, 52 S. Ct. 144.

Such use is a use of the streets by the lessor for the purpose of gain, although the use by the lessee is a use of such streets by a member of the public in the ordinary way. Ibid.

[11] Hodge Drive-It-Yourself Co. v. Cincinnati, 123 Ohio St. 284, 175 N. E. 196, 77 A.L.R. 889, affirmed in 284 U. S. 335, 76 L. ed. 323, 55 S. Ct. 144.

[12] Daugherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371, 140 N. W. 615, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1163.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 361, s. 61 A.L.R. 867, 83 A.L.R. 879, and 88 A.L.R. 175.

[13] Bowerman v. Sheehan, 242 Mich. 95, 219 N. W. 69, 61 A.L.R. 859.

Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 867, s. 83 A.L.R. 879, and 88 A.L.R. 175.

In Bowerman v. Sheehan, 242 Mich. 95, 219 N. W. 69, 61 A.L.R. 859, it was said: "This law should be sustained as a valid exercise of the police power upon the broad principle that he who owns property, in its nature a dangerous instrumentality when recklessly operated, will not be permitted to suffer it to be handled by a member of his immediate family, over whom he has full control, in such a negligent manner as to inflict injury upon another, without responding in damages therefor."

[14] See supra, § 397.

[15] See supra, § 355.

[16] Grant v. Knepper, 245 N. Y. 158, 156 N. E. 650, 54 A.L.R. 845.

[17] Secured Finance Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 207 Iowa, 1105, 224 N. W. 88, 61 A.L.R. 855; Maine v. James Maine & Sons Co. 198 Iowa, 1278, 201 N. W. 20, 37 A.L.R. 161.

injury caused as a result of its negligent operation. These statutes do not, however, make the driver the agent with all the legal incidents thereof.[18] A statute making the owner liable for injuries occasioned when the car is driven by his consent and declaring that where the car is driven by a member of his family, consent shall be conclusively presumed creates a substantive rule of law, rather than a mere rule of evidence.[19]

Statutes imposing liability upon an owner who consents to the use of his automobile by others for the negligence of such other persons, being in derogation of common law, must be strictly followed,[20] although their plain wording and obvious meaning cannot be avoided. A statute making the owner of an automobile liable for injuries caused by a bailee while in the performance of the owner's business within the scope of his employment does not apply to special bailments for the sole benefit of the bailee.[1]

It may be stated generally that under statutes imposing responsibility upon an owner of an automobile for negligence in its use by another, there is no need of suing the driver and detaining judgment before suing the owner.[2] However, no comprehensive rule can be stated by which to determine whose acts or what acts come within the meaning of such statutes; the varying forms of statutes found in the different states and the different situations in which they are called into application make general rules impossible.[3]

A statute making an owner liable for injuries resulting from his bailee's use of the car while attending to the owner's business applies to vehicles used for pleasure as well as profit.[4]

§ 400. —Who Are Owners within Meaning of Statute; Liability of Joint Owner.—The word "owner" as used in a statute imposing upon the owner of an automobile liability for its negligent operation by another does not include a person who might be mediately or immediately in possession, such as a person with whom a car has been left for repairs, but means only the real owner.[5] A statutory definition of the term "owner of an automobile" as including any person having lawful ownership, use, or control or the right to use or control under a lease, or otherwise, for a period of ten or more days does not affect the statutory provision making the owner of the car liable for an injury resulting from negligent operation of the car when driven by another with the owner's consent.[6] Those engaged in the business of letting automobiles for hire are, however, within the operation of the statute making the owner of an automobile liable for injury resulting from its negligent operation of one in possession with his consent, so as to be liable for injuries caused by the negligent driving of the lessee.[7] Some statutes expressly impose liability upon owners who rent out automobiles to others for the negligence of those to whom they rent cars.[8] Such a statute becomes a part of each contract of hiring by the acceptance of such condition in the voluntary renting of an automobile.[9]

---

[18] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. pp. 817–819, § 1201.

[19] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 866.

[20] Annotation: 83 A.L.R. 880.

Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 818, § 1201.

[1] Wolf v. Sulik, 93 Conn. 431, 106 A. 443, 4 A.L.R. 356.

[2] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 817, § 1201.

[3] For detailed discussion of cases construing statute, see annotation: 4 A.L.R. 361, s. 61 A.L.R. 866, 83 A.L.R. 878, and 88 A.L.R. 174.

[4] Wolf v. Sulik, 93 Conn. 431, 106 A. 443, 4 A.L.R. 356.

[5] Daugherty v. Thomas, 174 Mich. 371, 140 N. W. 615, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1163.

An automobile finance corporation which purchases the notes of the purchaser of an automobile which he gives when he buys an automobile under a conditional sale agreement is not the "owner" within the meaning of a statute providing that the "owner" shall include any person, firm, copartnership, association, or corporation holding title to a vehicle or having the lawful possession or control of the same under a written sale agreement. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 871.

[6] Robinson v. Bruce Rent-A-Ford Co. 205 Iowa, 261, 215 N. W. 724, 61 A.L.R. 851.

[7] Ibid.

The owner of an automobile is liable for injuries inflicted by her husband in using it for his own pleasure under a general authority to do so whenever he wishes to, under a statute making the owner liable for injuries done by the bailee while in the performance of the owner's business.[10]

The courts have differed as to whether municipally owned vehicles come within the meaning of statutes imposing liability on owners of automobiles for the negligence of others.[10a] The words "owner of a motor vehicle" as used in such a statute have been held to include municipalities and other political subdivisions which own and operate automobiles[11] and to make them liable for properly authorized acts in connection with the use of such automobiles.[12] Other statutes have been held inapplicable to municipal vehicles used solely for governmental purposes.[13]

One joint owner of an automobile is not rendered liable for the acts of another joint owner who has an equal right to use the car or one whom the latter permits to use the automobile by virtue of a statute imposing liability for the negligent operation of an automobile by any person operating it with the owner's express or implied permission.[14]

§ 401. —Consent of Owner to Use by Another.—Under most statutes, it is essential, in order to hold an owner liable, that it be made to appear that the car was being used with the owner's consent or permission.[15] He cannot, generally speaking, be held liable if the automobile was used without his knowledge or consent,[16] notwithstanding the automobile is operated by a minor child of the owner (assuming, of course, that the child is of such age that he can legally operate the car), although a rebuttable presumption may arise.[17] The plaintiff has the burden of establishing the fact of consent.[18] Statutes

---

[8] Levy v. Daniels' U-Drive Auto Renting Co. 108 Conn. 333, 143 A. 163, 61 A.L.R. 846; Robinson v. Bruce Rent-A-Ford Co. 205 Iowa, 261, 215 N. W. 724, 61 A.L.R. 851; Hodge Drive-It-Yourself Co. v. Cincinnati, 123 Ohio St. 284, 175 N. E. 196, 77 A.L.R. 889, affirmed in 284 U. S. 335, 76 L. ed. 323, 52 S. Ct. 144.

[9] Levy v. Daniels' U-Drive Auto Renting Co. 108 Conn. 333, 143 A. 163, 61 A.L.R. 846.

[10] Wolf v. Sulik, 93 Conn. 431, 106 A. 443, 4 A.L.R. 356.

[10a] Annotation: 13 B. R. C. 481.

[11] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 877, 878, 13 B. R. C. 481.

In Aikens v. Kingston, 53 Ont. L. Rep. 41, 13 B. R. C. 469, a municipal corporation as owner was held liable for an injury and damages resulting from the negligent operation of its motor police van by an officer in the performance of his duty, under a statute providing that "the owner of a motor vehicle shall be responsible for any violation of this act or of any regulation prescribed unless at the time of such violation the motor vehicle was in the possession of some person other than the owner, without his consent, express or implied, not being a person in the employ of the owner."

[12] Where a municipally owned truck was being used by the driver for his own purposes, by permission of the foreman of a gang, the city was held not liable where such permission was given without authority and outside the scope of business of the city. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 878.

[13] Annotation: 13 B. R. C. 481.

Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. pp. 817–819, § 1201.

[14] Masci v. Young, 109 N. J. L. 453, 162 A. 623, 83 A.L.R. 869, affirmed in 289 U. S. 253, 77 L. ed. 1158, 53 S. Ct. 599.

Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 876.

A statute providing that the owner of an automobile should be equally liable with an agent or any person employed by him to operate it does not render a joint owner of an automobile liable for an injury inflicted by the machine while it is being used alone by the other co-owner for his pleasure. Hamilton v. Vioue, 90 Wash. 618, 156 P. 853, L.R.A.1916E, 1300.

[15] Maine v. James Maine & Sons Co. 198 Iowa, 1278, 201 N. W. 20, 37 A.L.R. 161.

[16] Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 364, s. 61 A.L.R. 868, 83 A.L.R. 880, and 88 A.L.R. 176.

[17] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 873.

[18] Heavilin v. Wendell, 214 Iowa, 844, 241 N. W. 654, 83 A.L.R. 872.

Annotation: 83 A.L.R. 878.

It has been held necessary for the plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the car causing him damage was operated in a negligent manner, that the defendant was the owner of the car, attempting to impose liability regardless of the owner's consent to the use of his car have been held unconstitutional.[19] Some statutes, however, create a conclusive presumption of consent where the automobile is driven by a member of the owner's family.[20] It has been held, also, that the use and control of an automobile in a public place fairly gives rise to the inference that the person in control is the owner or in lawful possession of it with the express or implied consent of the owner, where the statute makes it a felony to use a motor vehicle without authority.[1] Moreover, proof of the defendant's ownership of the automobile may raise an inference that it was being driven with the owner's consent.[2] It is to be noted, also, that the Canadian courts have construed statutes making the owner of a motor vehicle responsible for any violation of motor vehicle acts to impose liability upon the owner of an automobile for an injury resulting from its negligent operation, even while it is being used by one without the knowledge or consent of the owner,[3] except where it is being operated by one who has stolen it, and there has been no negligence on his part in permitting the machine to fall into the hands of the thief.[4] Some of the Canadian statutes do not, however, extend liability to an owner whose car is used without his consent.[5] There is no formula that will aid the court in deciding whether a motor vehicle has been used or operated with the consent or permission of the owner within the meaning of statutes imposing liability upon the owner of an automobile for the negligence of anyone using the car with his permission or consent; whether or not it has been so used is to be decided as a question of fact and, in some cases, as one of fact and of law.[6] Of course, if an automobile owner expressly grants an-

---

and that he had given his consent to its operation by the one driving it at the time of the accident. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 868.

[19] See supra, § 398.

[20] Bowerman v. Sheehan, 242 Mich. 95, 219 N. W. 69, 61 A.L.R. 859.

[1] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 871.

[2] Heavilin v. Wendell, 214 Iowa, 844, 241 N. W. 654, 83 A.L.R. 872.

[3] Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 365, 366, s. 61 A.L.R. 879, and 83 A.L.R. 885.

In Mattei v. Gillies, 16 Ont. L. Rep. 558, 12 Ann. Cas. 970, under the same provision of the statute, it was held that as between the owner and the public, the chauffeur or driver was to be regarded as the alter ego of the proprietor; that the owner of an automobile was liable for the driver's negligence in all cases where the use of the machine was with his sanction or permission; that in driving the motorcar, the chauffeur was within the ostensible scope of his employment; that liability would remain with the owner by virtue of the statute, even though the driver might be out on an errand of his own; that the provisions of the act covered responsibility with regard to fines and penalties imposed, and also civil responsibility for damages; and that a verdict against an owner for an injury inflicted by his machine while his chauffeur was making a detour for his own purposes was affirmed.

[4] Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 366.

[5] Annotation: 83 A.L.R. 885, 886.

In Halparin v. Bulling, 50 Can. S. C. 471, 20 D. L. R. 598, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 474, the courts stated that the statutes of Manitoba did not reach far enough to cover a case in which it was sought to hold the owner of an automobile liable for an injury inflicted by his machine while it was being used by his chauffeur for his own purposes without the owner's knowledge.

[6] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 872, s. 83 A.L.R. 881, 887.

That a man was acting under his wife's authority in driving her automobile at the time he caused injury with it may be found from the fact that he had general authority to use the car and that she refrained from testifying that he was not acting under such authority at the time of the injury. Wolf v. Sulik, 93 Conn. 431, 106 A. 443, 4 A.L.R. 356.

It has been held that to permit another to use one's automobile as contemplated by the statute means to allow or consent to and is the legal equivalent of stating that a thing was done with the consent and knowledge of the person charged, implying an intent to do the thing complained of, and that knowledge and an active operation of the mind are required, that the passive happening of the event is not enough. Annotation: 83 A.L.R. 881.

Where the evidence showed that the owner rented the car and that an injury resulted from its negligent operation by the lessee several days after it was rented to him, implied permission may be found to exist, although there was evidence that the car was to be returned to the owner on the day following the letting. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 872.

The owner of a truck who loaned it for a certain time cannot be held liable under the Michigan statute for an injury which resulted from the negligent operation of the truck after the expiration of the time other permission to use his car, he can be held liable for the latter's negligence. When one lends[7] or hires[8] his car to another, the latter drives with his express or implied consent within the meaning of such statutes. The common understanding between joint owners of an automobile when they bought the car that each should use it when he wished is not the permission contemplated.[9]

§ 402. —Acts for Which Owner Is Liable; Use of Car for Another Purpose.—The liability of an owner for the use of a car by another depends, under most statutes, upon the consent of the owner to the use of the car by the driver[10] and the negligence of the driver. If no liability is created by the act of the driver, there is no liability to be imposed upon the owner. No liability on the part of the owner, independent of the negligence of the driver, is created[11] where the driver is not liable, whether his freedom from liability arises from a want of negligence on his part or from the existence of such a relationship between himself and the person injured as to preclude any liability on his part for the injury.[12] A statute making the owner of an automobile liable for the negligence of the driver where the car is driven with the owner's consent does not operate to impose liability upon the owner for a use of the car by the person to whom the consent was given for some purpose beyond or outside of the terms of the consent given.[13]

§ 403. —Liability to Invitee or Licensee of Person Permitted to Use Car.—Statutes imposing liability upon the owner of a car for injuries resulting from the negligence of persons whom the owner permits to drive the automobile render the owner liable for injuries to persons riding in the car as invitees agreed upon because he failed to take steps to learn why it was not returned as agreed. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 872.

---

There was held to be no issue for the jury as to whether the defendant's automobile was being operated by another with his consent at the time the accident occurred, within the meaning of the Michigan statute, where the uncontradicted evidence showed that the owner had loaned the machine, that it had not been returned within the time agreed upon, that the accident occurred after that time, and that it was being driven by a third person for his own purposes without the permission of the owner or the borrower. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 872.

Where one leaves his automobile with an independent contractor to be repaired, he cannot be held liable for an injury occurring where the car was being driven for a road test by the contractor. Annotation: 83 A.L.R. 882.

[7] Stapleton v. Independent Brewing Co. 198 Mich. 170, 164 N. W. 520, L.R.A.1918A, 916.

[8] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 872.

[9] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 876.

[10] See supra, § 401.

[11] Maine v. James Maine & Sons Co. 198 Iowa, 1278, 201 N. W. 20, 37 A.L.R. 161.

It is the negligence of the driver that creates liability, and it is the statute that imposes that liability on the owner who has consented to the driver's use of the car. Ibid.

[12] Maine v. James Maine & Sons Co. 198 Iowa, 1278, 201 N. W. 20, 27 A.L.R. 161, holding that a master is not liable under a statute imposing liability on the owner of an automobile for injuries caused by another's driving of the car with his consent for personal injuries negligently inflicted by his servant upon the servant's wife where the wife has no right of action against her husband for such injuries.

A father's action for loss of services, however, comes within the meaning of the words "injuries to persons" as used in this section of the Highway Law, liability under such section not being limited to the person who receives the injury. Psota v. Long Island R. Co. (1927) 246 N. Y. 388, 159 N. E. 180, 62 A.L.R. 1163.

[13] Heavilin v. Wendell, 214 Iowa, 844, 241 N. W. 654, 83 A.L.R. 872; Maine v. James Maine & Sons Co. 198 Iowa, 1278, 201 N. W. 20, 37 A.L.R. 161.

Annotation: 83 A.L.R. 885.

In Heavilin v. Wendell, 214 Iowa, 844, 241 N. W. 654, 83 A.L.R. 872, the owner was held not liable where he had loaned the car to one representing that his wife was ill, in order to procure medicine, and an accident happened while the borrower was using the car to take a joy ride.

The owner was held entitled to a direction of a verdict where the testimony both of the driver and the owner of the automobile which caused the accident that it was loaned for a purpose other than that for which it was being driven was uncontradicted by any fact or circumstance which would tend to cast doubt upon it. Heavilin v. Wendell, 214 Iowa, 844, 241 N. W. 654, 83 ALR 872.

or licensees of the person to whom the car was intrusted, regardless of whether the owner knows of, or assents to, the presence of such persons in the car.[14] The view has been taken that a statute imposing liability upon the owner of an automobile for a personal injury resulting from its negligent operation in the business of the owner or otherwise by any person legally using the car with the owner's express or implied permission does not extend the liability of the owner of an automobile to include acts of his employee, who, contrary to his instructions and without the scope of his employment, invites children for a ride.[15]

§ 404. —Liability for Act of Third Person Allowed to Drive.—Some courts have construed statutes making the owner responsible or creating a lien for injury or damage inflicted by another operating his automobile not to go to the extent of making him liable for the negligent acts of any third person to whom the borrower, without the knowledge or consent of the owner, has intrusted the use and operation of the car.[16] Others, however, have construed the owner to be liable for the negligence of one to whom the permittee temporarily intrusts the automobile,[17] at least in cases where permittee was present with the one to whom he intrusted the car.[18] It seems clear, however, that one who has loaned his car cannot be held liable for an injury resulting from its negligent operation by a third person who took it for his own private use, without leave from the owner or the one to whom the owner had loaned it.[19]

§ 405. —Extraterritorial Operation.—Liability in a tort action must be determined by the law of the place where the wrong occurred.[20] Accordingly, the view has been taken that a statute imposing liability upon an owner of an automobile for damage resulting from its negligent operation by one using it with his permission has no application to accidents happening in another state.[1] However, statutes imposing liability upon one renting automobiles for the negligence of those to whom the automobiles are rented have been held to create a liability of a contractual nature.[2] And since the courts of one state will enforce rights of action on contracts arising in other jurisdictions unless they contravene their own law, or their own fundamental and important public policy imperatively requires their nonenforcement,[3] where the laws of a state impose the aforementioned liability, an action may be maintained against a lessor of an automobile, arising out of injuries received outside the state by reason of the negligence of the lessee, even though the state where the accident occurred imposed no liability in such case upon the lessor unless he was negligent in renting a defective vehicle and in failing to disclose the defect.[4] Moreover, the liability imposed by the law of the state in which an automobile accident occurred, on the owner of the car, for the negligence of one driving it with his permission, will be enforced by the courts of another state, even though such owner is a resident of the state of the forum and the lending of the automobile took place there.[5]

---

[14] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 875, 881, s. 83 A.L.R. 884, and 88 A.L.R. 177.

[15] Psota v. Long Island R. Co. 246 N. Y. 388, 159 N. E. 180, 62 A.L.R. 1163, wherein the court stated that the legislature by this act did not extend the liability of the master for the acts of his servant; that it placed the borrower of a car in the same relationship with the lender as that of master and servant or principal and agent, but that it did not increase the liability of the lender beyond that of a master for acts of a servant coming within the scope of his employment.

[16] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 873.

Evidence that a dealer who loaned a car to a purchaser to use until delivery could be made of a new car, and that the one to whom the car was loaned permitted another to take it for the latter's own purposes, and that while such other was using it, through his negligence an accident occurred, is insufficient to hold the dealer liable. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 873.

[17] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 874, s. 83 A.L.R. 883, and 88 A.L.R. 177.

The owner of a taxicab, which he turned over to an "operator" who took complete charge of the car and hired the chauffeur, is liable for an injury which occurred through the negligent operation of the car while it was being driven by one to whom the regularly employed chauffeur had turned it over when he became ill and unable to operate it. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 873.

It is not necessary that the particular driver be known to and his driving consented to by the owner, under a statute providing that the owner of a motor vehicle shall be liable for any injury occasioned by the negligent operation of the vehicle, whether such negligence consists in the violation of the provisions of the statutes of the state, or in the failure to observe such ordinary care in such operation as the rule of the common law requires, but that the owner shall not be liable unless the car is being driven with his or her express or implied consent or knowledge. Annotation: 83 A.L.R. 882.

[18] Grant v. Knepper, 245 N. Y. 158, 156 N. E. 650, 54 A.L.R. 845.

Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1390.

An employee placed in charge of a truck for the transportation of persons and property is "using" it within the meaning of a statute making the owner liable for injuries resulting from the operation of the vehicle in the business of the owner, by any person legally using or operating it with the permission of the owner, while he is on the truck in furtherance of the general enterprise, although he has wrongfully permitted another to drive it. Grant v. Knepper, 245 N. Y. 158, 156 N. E. 650, 54 A.L.R. 845

[19] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 874.

[20] See CONFLICT OF LAWS [Also 5 R. C. L. p. 1038, § 129].

§ 406. Statutes Creating Lien.—Some statutes, instead of imposing a general liability upon the owner of an automobile for injury or damage by reason of its negligent operation while in the hands of a third person, create a lien against the automobile itself for damage occasioned while it is being operated by anyone to whom the car has been loaned or hired, or who is otherwise permitted to use the car; statutes of this kind have been sustained against attacks upon their constitutionality.[6] Such liens may be given priority over other liens against the automobile.[7] Moreover, a statute subjecting an automobile, used in violation of the motor vehicle laws, and thereby causing damage to any public highway, to a lien, is not lacking in due process in that it does not provide notice and opportunity to be heard, where foreclosure of the lien must be by a bill in equity of which the owner will have notice.[8]

VII. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

A. In General

§ 407. Generally.[9]—The general rules defining the rights of those injured by the negligence of others to recover in the face of their own acts contributing in whole or in part to the accident complained of[10] apply with the same force and effect to automobile accidents,[11] except in those jurisdictions where the doctrine of comparative negligence is recognized,[12] or the general rules are modified by the application of the rules of last clear chance.[13] Thus, a person whose negligent acts proximately caused or contributed to an accident will be precluded from recovering against the defendant,[14] unless the latter's conduct was wanton or wilful,[15] in which event the defense of contributory negligence is unavailing.[16] Before the defense of contributory negligence will prove availing, it must be shown that the acts alleged as constituting such defense directly contributed to the injury.[17] In general, the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence presents a question of fact for the jury to decide upon the basis of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident.[18]

---

[1] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 878, s. 83 A.L.R. 885, and 88 A.L.R. 177.

[2] Levy v. Daniels' U-Drive Auto Renting Co. 108 Conn. 333, 143 A. 163, 61 A.L.R. 846.

[3] See Conflict of Laws [Also 5 R. C. L. p. 931, §§ 25 et seq.].

[4] Levy v. Daniels' U-Drive Auto Renting Co. 108 Conn. 333, 143 A. 163, 61 A.L.R. 846.

[5] Masci v. Young, 109 N. J. L. 453, 162 A. 623, 83 A.L.R. 869, affirmed in 289 U. S. 253, 77 L. ed. 1158, 53 S. Ct. 599, 88 A.L.R. 170.

[6] Mammina v. Alexander Auto Serv. Co. 333 Ill. 158, 164 N. E. 173, 61 A.L.R. 649; Merchants & P. Bank v. Brigman, 106 S. C. 362, 91 S. E. 332, L.R.A.1917E, 925.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 362, s. 61 A.L.R. 866, 83 A.L.R. 878, and 88 A.L.R. 174; 4 A.L.R. 654.

[7] In Merchants & P. Bank v. Brigman, 106 S. C. 362, 91 S. E. 332, L.R.A.1917E, 925, where the statute provided that when a motor vehicle is operated in violation of the provisions of law, or negligently and carelessly, and when any person receives personal injury thereby, or when a wagon or other property is damaged by it, the damages done to such person or property shall be and constitute a lien next in priority to the lien for state taxes upon such motor vehicle, and that the person sustaining the damage shall have a right to attach the vehicle, but that the act shall not be effective in case the motor vehicle was stolen by the breaking of a building under a secure lock, or when the vehicle was securely locked, it was held within the power of the legislature to impose a lien upon a motor vehicle for injuries done by it, which should be superior to that of a chattel mortgage executed after the passage of a statute, but before the injury was done, and the act in question was held not unconstitutional or in violation of art. 1, § 5, or of § 17, art. 3, of the state Constitution, or in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution.

[8] Mammina v. Alexander Auto Serv. Co. 333 Ill. 158, 164 N. E. 173, 61 A.L.R. 649.

[9] As to contributory negligence in driving on a defective street or highway, see

§ 408. What Constitutes Contributory Negligence.—The precise quantum of care and caution imposed upon a motorist or pedestrian in his use of the public thoroughfare is not capable of an approximation applicable to all situations. The exigencies of each case will alone set the extent of care required,[19] so that before the reciprocal duties of those who make use of the public highways can be said to have been violated, thereby making the defense of contributory negligence available to the person sued, various factors, depending upon the particular situation, must be taken into consideration. The presence of lights,[20] the speed of the car at the time of the accident,[1] conditions of visibility,[2] control of the vehicle,[3] compliance with traffic rules,[4] the condition of the automobile,[5] the condition of highway, etc.,[6] are some of the factors that may prove determinative of the plaintiff's contributory negligence. The test by which the contributory negligence of a person injured in an automobile accident is measured is whether he acted as a reasonably prudent man would have acted[7] under the peculiar circumstances of the case, considering the surrounding hazards and any other factors explanatory of the particular situation.[8]

HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND SIDEWALKS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 462, §§ 378 et seq.].

[10] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. pp. 99 et seq.].

[11] Hansen v. Kemmish, 201 Iowa, 1008, 209 N. W. 277, 45 A.L.R. 498; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Yeiser, 141 Ky. 15, 131 S. W. 1049, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137.

[12] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 145, §§ 119, 120], generally, and see infra, § 503.

[13] See §§ 489 et seq. infra.

See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1]; PROXIMATE CAUSE [Also 22 R. C. L. p. 144].

[14] Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Yeiser, 141 Ky. 15, 131 S. W. 1049, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1137.

See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 99, §§ 87 et seq.].

[15] See infra, § 414.

See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 20; F. S. 4846].

[16] Hopkins v. Droppers, 184 Wis. 400, 198 N. W. 738, 36 A.L.R. 1156.

[17] Cupples Mercantile Co. v. Bow, 32 Idaho, 774, 189 P. 48, 24 A.L.R. 1296; Hansen v. Kemmish, 201 Iowa, 1008, 208 N. W. 277, 45 A.L.R. 498; Norris v. Litchfield, 35 N. H. 271, 69 Am. Dec. 546.

[18] New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Maidment (C. C. A. 3d) 168 F. 21, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 794.

[19] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027; Coffin v. Laskau, 89 Conn. 325, 94 A. 370, L.R.A.1915E, 959; Carruthers v. Campbell, 195 Iowa, 390, 192 N. W. 138, 28 A.L.R. 949; Minor v. Stevens, 65 Wash. 423, 118 P. 313, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178.

[20] See infra, § 412.

[1] See infra, § 410.

[2] See infra, § 429.

[3] See infra, § 420.

[4] See infra, § 421.

[5] See infra, § 428.

[6] See HIGHWAYS.

[7] Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.

[8] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027; McKeon v. Delbridge, 55 S. D. 579, 226 N. W. 947, 67 A.L.R. 311; Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505.

§ 409. Violation of Statute or Ordinance.—It is well settled that the violation of a statute or ordinance regulating the movement of vehicles on public streets, highways, bridges, etc., which does not contribute directly to an injury, does not relieve from liability an individual who has been guilty of negligence; however, such a violation, if proximately causing an injury, may be set up as a defense by pleading it as contributory negligence.[9] The fact that the plaintiff violated a traffic regulation at the time of the accident, while not conclusive or necessarily determinative of his own contributory negligence, is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether, at the time of the accident complained of, he acted with reasonable care, so as to free himself from negligence contributing directly to the injury.[10] The mere concurrence of the violation of a traffic regulation with an accident in point of time does not, of itself, render the violation a concurring cause of the injury.[11] It should be noted however, that while the violation of a statute or ordinance, if proximately causing an injury, may be set up as a defense, the statute or ordinance violated must have been enacted for the benefit of the party who seeks to invoke its violation, as distinguished from the public generally or a class to whom the ordinance necessarily applies.[12] For example, it has been held that a street car company, in an action against it for damaging an automobile, could not plead, by way of contributory negligence, that the owner of the automobile was in the center of the street, contrary to an ordinance requiring vehicles to keep to the right of the center of the street, since this ordinance was not intended to keep vehicles off the street car track, nor was it intended for the protection of street car companies.[13]

§ 410. —Speed Laws.—Applying the rule that violation of a traffic regulation does not constitute a defense to an action by the violator to recover for negligence unless the violation proximately contributed to the injury, it has been held that violation of a speed law does not preclude a recovery for injuries where the excessive speed is not a direct, contributing cause of the injury, but that where the unlawful speed was a direct, contributing cause, it does preclude recovery.[14]

§ 411. —Rules of Road.—Violation of an ordinance providing that vehicles, in turning corners to the left, shall pass to the right of the intersection of the two streets, or, in turning to the right, shall keep as near to the curb as possible, does not preclude a recovery for injuries received in a collision with another vehicle, or resulting from a defective street or highway, except where such violation proximately contributed to the injury.[15] Nor does the mere fact itself that one has violated the rule of the road by passing or attempting to pass another vehicle on the wrong side or ahead of the same absolutely or necessarily bar all right to recover for injuries negligently inflicted, although it will have that effect if the unlawful act proximately contributes to the injury complained of.[16]

---

[9] Broschart v. Tuttle, 59 Conn. 1, 21 A. 925, 11 L.R.A. 33; Coffin v. Laskau, 89 Conn. 325, 94 A. 370, L.R.A.1915E, 959; Baker v. Portland, 58 Me. 199, 4 Am. Rep. 274; Arey v. Newton, 148 Mass. 598, 20 N. E. 327, 12 Am. St. Rep. 604; Newcomb v. Boston Protective Dept. 146 Mass. 596, 16 N. E. 555, 4 Am. St. Rep. 354; Damon v. Scituate, 119 Mass. 66, 20 Am. Rep. 315; Norris v. Litchfield, 35 N. H. 271, 69 Am. Dec. 546; Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.

Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 458.

[10] Newcomb v. Boston Protective Dept. 146 Mass. 596, 16 N. E. 555, 4 Am. St. Rep. 354.

Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 467.

The fact that one seeking to recover damages for a collision between his car and another did not give audible warning and display such light as the traffic law required, although evidential on the question of negligence, was held not conclusive on that point. Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 1245, 1246.

[11] Broschart v. Tuttle, 59 Conn. 1, 21 A. 925, 11 L.R.A. 33; Baker v. Portland, 58 Me. 199, 4 Am. Rep. 274.

[12] Rampon v. Washington Water Power Co. 94 Wash. 438, 162 P. 514, L.R.A.1917C, 998.

[13] Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 463.

[14] Coffin v. Laskau, 89 Conn. 325, 94 A. 370, L.R.A.1915E, 959; Broschart v. Tuttle, 59 Conn. 1, 21 A. 925, 11 L.R.A. 33; Hart v. Stence, 219 Iowa, 55, 257 N. W. 434, 97 A.L.R. 535.

Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 463.

The specific question as to whether the operation of an automobile at such a rate of speed that it cannot be stopped within the range of the driver's vision constitutes contributory negligence is treated elsewhere in this article. See infra, § 426.

§ 412. —Lights on Car.—The absence of lights on an automobile may be contributory negligence preventing recovery.[17] To make the absence of lights required on an automobile by statute a good defense to an action for damages sustained where the car ran off a road which was not kept in repair as required by statute, there must be some relation between the violation of the law and the accident, and whether the violation was such as to have caused or helped to cause the accident is for the determination of the jury; the violation of the statute does not make the offender a trespasser on the road, but only subjects him to the penalties of the act.[18]

B. FACTORS AFFECTING DEFENSE OF CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

§ 413. Generally.—The defense of contributory negligence is not absolute in the sense that every act of negligence on the part of the plaintiff will operate to deprive him of the right to recover. There may be present circumstances which will serve to take the case out of the application of the conventional rules respecting contributory negligence;[19] for example, acts of wanton negligence on the part of the defendant,[20] or other factors, such as an emergency,[1] explanatory of the plaintiff's acts.

§ 414. Wanton Negligence.—It may be stated as a general rule that the defense of contributory negligence is unavailable where the cause of action is based upon conduct which may properly be defined as wilful and wanton.[2] For example, where the driver of an automobile carelessly and wantonly runs over a boy playing ball in the street, the contributory negligence of the boy will not relieve the driver from liability for his wanton negligence.[3]

For an act to fall within the category of "wanton" or "wilful" negligence it does not necessarily have to spring from ill will or wear the cloak of malicious intent.[4] The conduct which in law will be held wilful and wanton must be either such conduct as intentionally inflicts an injury, or that which ethically, under the facts and circumstances appearing, is the equivalent thereof.[5] While the degree of negligence necessary to preclude the defense of contributory negligence may not be defined with a nicety of precision, but must rest largely upon the factual situation of each case, it seems clear that more than mere violation of a traffic rule,[6] or a speed in excess of that defined by statute,[7] or any other act violative of the requirements of a statute or ordinance,[8] is required to constitute wanton negligence. While a violation of the law of the road is not necessarily recklessness or wantonness, it is properly to be taken into consideration in determining whether the conduct of one traveling upon the highway was reckless or wanton.[9] Thus, the operation of an automobile by a minor, contrary to statute, while constituting negligence as a matter of law, does not amount to such gross negligence as will preclude the defense of contributory negligence.[10]

---

[15] Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 465.

[16] Damon v. Scituate, 119 Mass. 66, 20 Am. Rep. 315.

Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 465.

The mere violation of an ordinance prohibiting vehicles from standing transversely in a street does not preclude recovery for injuries negligently inflicted upon such a vehicle, where such unlawful position did not contribute directly to the injury. Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 466.

[17] See infra, § 426.

[18] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 794, s. 40 A.L.R. 1243.

Before a plaintiff's violation of a statute requiring a lighted lamp in front of his automobile can operate as a bar to recovery, it must be found to have caused, or contributed to, the accident. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 794, s. 40 A.L.R. 1243.

While it is the duty of one driving an automobile to have it equipped with the lights required by statute, and to drive on the right-hand side of the road, yet, to defeat recovery for an injury sustained when the car ran off the road, there being no proper barrier or guard rail at that point, it must appear that his failure to observe these statutory requirements contributed to his injury, the determination of which is for the jury, and that the proximate cause was the failure to maintain proper guards or barriers on the grade. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 794, s. 40 A.L.R. 1243.

[19] See supra, § 408.

[20] See infra, § 414.

[1] See infra, § 415.

[2] Potter v. Gilmore, 282 Mass. 49, 184 N. E. 373, 87 A.L.R. 1462; Wittstruck v. Lee, 62 S. D. 290, 252 N. W. 874, 92 A.L.R. 1361.

Where defendant's conduct that occasioned a personal injury was wanton, or where it indicates that degree of indifference to the rights of others which may be justly characterized as recklessness, the doctrine of contributory negligence as a defense has no application. Carlson v. Johnke, 57 S. D. 544, 234 N. W. 25, 72 A.L.R. 1352. Annotation: 38 A.L.R. 1424, s. 72 A.L.R. 1357, and 92 A.L.R. 1367.

[3] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1306.

§ 415. Emergency.—Contributory negligence will not be attributed to a motorist who, through the negligent acts of another, is suddenly confronted with a dangerous situation and compelled to act at once to avert an accident.[11] His choice of action is not tested by the inquiry whether it was the best or most effective under the circumstances, but rather by a comparison with what might reasonably be expected of the average prudent traveler placed in a similar stiuation.[12] For example, one approaching a blind corner in an automobile is not negligent if, when another car suddenly turns the corner on the wrong side of the street, he, in the emergency, turns his car to the left to avoid the collision, although the other car also turns to that side of the street so that he is on the wrong side of the road when the accident occurs.[13] However, before one can absolve himself from liability for injury caused by acting in an emergency to save himself from harm, he must show that such emergency was brought about by no negligent act of his own and that the resultant injury could not be prevented after the peril had passed.[14]

§ 416. —Railroad Crossings.—Numerous cases involving the emergency rule as applied to automobile drivers have arisen out of accidents at railroad crossings in which the driver sought to avoid a charge of contributory negligence on the ground that through the defendant's negligence he was placed in a position of peril and danger, by reason of which he was not required to take the wisest course, but was excusable if the course taken by him was one which a person of ordinary prudence would have taken under the circumstances.[15] In some of these, the driver, after seeing the approaching train, attempted to cross ahead of it. The plaintiff has generally been viewed as not contributorily negligent in such a situation, where it appears that the defendant had, by its neglect of duty and failure to give timely warning, lulled plaintiff into a sense of security and brought him unawares into the peril from which he sought to extricate himself.[16] For example, where the driver of an automobile is placed in a sudden peril at a railroad crossing by reason of the railroad employees' failure to give proper signals, and without his fault, his jumping from the car instead of stopping it cannot be said to be contributory negligence as a matter of law.[17] It has been held further that where the driver of an automobile approaching a crossing, when he reaches a point where the view of the tracks is unobstructed, loses his presence of mind because of the proximity of a train approaching at a high rate of speed, without the statutory signal, and consequently loses control of his machine, by reason of which it becomes stalled on the track, he cannot be charged with contributory negligence because of a failure to exercise proper judgment.[18]

---

[4] Bolin v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 108 Wis. 333, 84 N. W. 446, 81 Am. St. Rep. 911.
Annotation: 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 158.

[5] Bessemer Coal, Iron & Land Co. v. Doak, 152 Ala. 166, 44 So. 627, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 389; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Anchors, 114 Ala. 492, 22 So. 279, 62 Am. St. Rep. 116; Wilson v. Chippewa Valley Electric R. Co. 120 Wis. 636, 98 N. W. 536, 66 L.R.A. 912.
Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1369.
See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 20, § 15].

[6] Bentson v. Brown, 186 Wis. 629, 203 N. W. 380, 38 A.L.R. 1417.

[7] Annotation: 38 A.L.R. 1424, s. 72 A.L.R. 1357, and 92 A.L.R. 1369.

[8] Ludke v. Burck, 160 Wis. 440, 152 N. W. 190, L.R.A.1915D, 968.

[9] Carlson v. Johnke, 57 S. D. 544, 234 N. W. 25, 72 A.L.R. 1352. Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1367.

[10] Hopkins v. Droppers, 184 Wis. 400, 198 N. W. 738, 36 A.L.R. 1156.

[11] Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669; Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676.
Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 680, s. 27 A.L.R. 1197, and 79 A.L.R. 1277; 57 A.L.R. 1106.

[12] Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669.

[13] Ibid.

[14] Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676.
Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 680, s. 27 A.L.R. 1197, and 79 A.L.R. 1277.
Failure of an automobile driver to turn sufficiently to the right to avoid collision with another automobile coming from the opposite direction is not excused as a matter of law, so as to entitle him to a directed verdict in an action, brought by one riding with him, for personal injuries sustained in the ensuing collision, by the circumstance that such other automobile had pulled over beyond the center of the road, with a view to making a right-hand turn, and that he did not become aware of its presence until within 20 or 25 feet of it. Lange v. Affleck, 160 Md. 695, 155 A. 150, 79 A.L.R. 1274.

§ 417. Contributory Negligence as Constituting Proximate Cause of Accident.—It is essential that the acts complained of as constituting contributory negligence contribute directly and proximately to the accident.[19] Contributory negligence in violating a statute by driving on the wrong side of the road must, in order to defeat recovery, have been the proximate cause of the injury.[20] The mere occurrence of an act of negligence on the part of the person instituting the action will not, of itself, preclude recovery, unless the surrounding circumstances establish such act as the direct cause of the accident resulting in the injuries complained of.[1] Thus, the defense of contributory negligence will fail where the relationship of the fault with respect to the accident as a proximate and contributing cause is not a necessary inference under the circumstances.[2]

§ 418. Degrees of Negligence.—It is essential to draw a sharp distinction between negligence contributing to the accident and negligence contributing to the damage sustained. The line of demarcation in this respect is not always easily discernible.[3] An act or omission that merely increases or adds to the extent of the loss or injury occasioned by another's negligence will not have the effect of contributory negligence to defeat a recovery.[4] Expressed differently, negligence which plays no part in causing the injury complained of, and only has the effect of adding to the damage resulting, is ineffective in barring the action.[5]

---

[15] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 681, s. 27 A.L.R. 1202, and 79 A.L.R. 1286.

[16] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 681, s. 27 A.L.R. 1202, and 79 A.L.R. 1286.

[17] Dickinson v. Erie R. Co. 81 N. J. L. 464, 81 A. 104, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 150.

[18] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 681, s. 27 A.L.R. 1202, and 79 A.L.R. 1286.
See supra, § 415.

[19] Newcomb v. Boston Protective Dept. 146 Mass. 596, 16 N. E. 555, 4 Am. St. Rep. 354; Norris v. Litchfield, 35 N. H. 271, 69 Am. Dec. 546; Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.

[20] Jeffords v. Florence County, 165 S. C. 15, 162 S. E. 574, 81 A.L.R. 313.

[1] Melville v. Rollwage, 171 Ky. 607, 188 S. W. 638, L.R.A.1917B, 133; Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396; Gerhard v. Ford Motor Co. 155 Mich. 618, 119 N. W. 904, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232; Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92; Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

[2] Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 1244.

[3] A driver of an automobile negligently colliding with another car is not exonerated from liability for any part of the damage to such car by reason of the fact that because of the excessive speed with which it was traveling, it could not be brought under control in time to prevent it from running off the road and overturning, where no negligence on the part of the driver of the second car is found. Mahoney v. Beatman, 110 Conn. 184, 147 A. 762, 66 A.L.R. 1121.

C. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF PARTICULAR PERSONS

§ 419. Generally.—The following sections are indicative of the wide variety of situations that may arise in connection with determining the contributory negligence of particular persons involved in automobile accidents. Application of the rules of law heretofore stated,[6] is indicated in the case of pedestrians,[7] motorists,[8] workmen in the road,[9] and other persons likely to become involved in an automobile accident.[10]

§ 420. Driver or Operator of Vehicle.—The general rules of contributory negligence apply to the driver or operator of a motor vehicle in his operation of the car upon the public highway. The more common situations in which he is placed, testing the factum of his own contributory negligence, are set out in the following sections. Regardless of the particular factual situation, however, the broad requirements as to the proper degree of care exercisable by the driver of a motor vehicle apply to each instance. In general, the operator of a motor vehicle is precluded from recovering for any injuries sustained or damage to his car, where the accident is attributable to his own negligence.[11] When the facts relating to contributory negligence are of such character that reasonable minds might reach different conclusions thereon, a question of fact is presented for the determination of the jury.[12]

§ 421. —Violation of Statute or Ordinance.—The mere fact that at the time of the accident the driver violated a statute or ordinance will not necessarily stamp him as contributorily negligent.[13] It is essential that the element of proximate cause be established.[14] It will not be presumed from such violation alone, and even where the defendant chooses to rest under the imputation of negligence which follows by reason of the violation of a statute or ordinance, it has been held that the motorist's negligence, no matter of what it consists, cannot create or defeat a right of action unless it is the proximate cause of the injury complained of.[15] Violation of a traffic ordinance regulating the movement of vehicles does not preclude recovery on the theory that the plaintiff is obliged to lay the foundation of his action in his own violation of law, in which case such violation would necessarily be a proximate cause, at least where the plaintiff can and does make a case without reference to any violation of law by him.[16]

---

[4] Mahoney v. Beatman, 110 Conn. 184, 147 A. 762, 66 A.L.R. 1121.
Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 1134.

[5] Mahoney v. Beatman, 110 Conn. 184, 147 A. 762, 66 A.L.R. 1121 (refusing to permit mitigation of damages); Gould v. McKenna, 86 Pa. 297, 27 Am. Rep. 705.
Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 1136.

[6] See supra, §§ 407–418.

[7] See infra, §§ 446–463.

[8] See infra, §§ 420–438.

[9] See infra, § 444.

[10] See infra, §§ 439–443.

[11] See infra, §§ 421–438.

[12] Keir v. Trager, 134 Kan. 505, 7 P. (2d) 49, 81 A.L.R. 181.

[13] Broschart v. Tuttle, 59 Conn. 1, 21 A. 925, 11 L.R.A. 33; O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 350, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 582.
Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 458; 77 A.L.R. 598.
See supra, § 415.

[14] Arey v. Newton, 148 Mass. 598, 20 N. E. 327, 12 Am. St. Rep. 604.
Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 464.

[15] Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 464.

[16] Newcomb v. Boston Protective Dept. 146 Mass. 596, 16 N. E. 555, 4 Am. St. Rep. 354; Steele v. Burkhardt, 104 Mass. 59, 6 Am. Rep. 191.

§ 422. —Law of Road.—The law of the road, as established by common law, statute, or ordinance, is not an inflexible, hard and fast rule, the violation of which will, under the majority view, necessarily render the offender guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[17] Wherever, under the peculiar circumstances of the particular situation, ordinary care requires the motorist to turn in violation of the ordinary rule of the road, to avoid an obstruction, person, or another vehicle, he will not, according to the majority view, be deemed contributorily negligent as a result thereof.[18] A deviation from the law of the road is sometimes necessary, and where the deviation is made to avoid an accident and is apparently necessary, it will not operate to prevent a plaintiff, otherwise free from negligence, from recovering for injuries sustained.[19] Thus, emergencies may arise when the failure to observe the ordinary rule of the road requiring a driver, in meeting another driver, to turn to the right, will not be accounted a basis for denying a plaintiff the right to recover for injuries sustained through the negligence of another.[20] It should be noted, however, that one cannot shield himself behind an emergency created by his own negligence.[1]

The view has been taken, however, that under a statute requiring drivers meeting and passing to pass on the right, a driver is never justified in turning to the left.[2]

§ 423. —Excessive Speed.—Applying the rule that violation of a traffic regulation does not constitute a defense to an action by the violator to recover for negligence unless the violation proximately contributed to the injury,[3] it has been held that violation of a speed law does not preclude a recovery by the plaintiff for injuries where the excessive speed was not a direct, contributing cause of the injury, but that it does preclude recovery where the unlawful speed was a direct, contributing cause.[4] Even though the disregard of statutory regulations as to speed is regarded as negligence per se, as it is in some jurisdictions,[5] it has been held that it does not preclude recovery unless it directly contributed to the injury complained of.[6]

---

[17] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1304, s. 63 A.L.R. 277.

[18] Riepe v. Elting, 89 Iowa, 82, 56 N. W. 285, 26 L.R.A. 769, 48 Am. St. Rep. 356; Sims v. Eleazer, 116 S. C. 41, 106 S. E. 854, 24 A.L.R. 1293; Lawson v. Dye, 106 W. Va. 494, 145 S. E. 817, 63 A.L.R. 271; O'Malley v. Dorn, 7 Wis. 236, 73 Am. Dec. 403.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1304, s. 63 A.L.R. 277.

[19] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1304, s. 63 A.L.R. 277.

[20] Lawson v. Dye, 106 W. Va. 494, 145 S. E. 817, 63 A.L.R. 271.

It has been held that it is the law of the road, based on reason, that where one driving on the right side of the road is compelled to turn to the left in order to avoid a head-on collision with another car which is violating the law of the road, he is not negligent in so doing, qualified only by the condition that he act as an ordinarily prudent person would act under similar circumstances. Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 278.

Similarly, a bicyclist cannot be said, as a matter of law, to have been guilty of contributory negligence in swerving from his proper side of the highway in an endeavor to avoid an automobile which suddenly turned from an intersecting street on the wrong side of the road, at a high speed, so as to place him in imminent danger of collision. Calahan v. Moll, 160 Wis. 523, 152 N. W. 179, L.R.A.1916A, 744.

[1] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 1304, s. 63 A.L.R. 277.

See supra, § 415.

[2] Cupples Mercantile Co. v. Bow, 32 Idaho, 774, 189 P. 48, 24 A.L.R. 1296 (the majority opinion, although announcing this broad rule, does state that the danger was apparent, and not real; what would be held in the event of a real danger is problematical).

[3] See supra, § 417.

[4] Coffin v. Laskau, 89 Conn. 325, 94 A. 370, L.R.A.1915E, 959; Broschart v. Tuttle, 59 Conn. 1, 21 A. 925, 11 L.R.A. 33; Newcomb v. Boston Protective Dept. 146 Mass. 596, 16 N. E. 555, 4 Am. St. Rep. 354; Molin v. Wark, 113 Minn. 190, 129 N. W. 383, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 346; Bloom v. Bailey, 292 Pa. 348, 141 A. 150, 57 A.L.R. 585; O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 350, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 582.

Excessive speed cannot be said to have necessarily contributed to a collision between an automobile traveling at such speed on its proper side of the highway and a car proceeding in the opposite direction, not on its proper side. Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 598.

[5] Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 465.

[6] Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 464, 465; 77 A.L.R. 598.

§ 424. —Skidding.—The skidding of an automobile may be an incidental, rather than determinative, factor in judging the contributory negligence of a motorist injured in a collision.[7] Frequently, for example, the skidding will appear to follow, rather than precede, the collision. Such factors as the speed of the car, violation of the traffic rules, condition of the brakes, visibility—to suggest a few—may be involved with the skidding and prove equally as determinative as the latter, if not more so, in deciding the factum of contributory negligence. However, it is clear that the mere skidding of an automobile, even without the presence of any other acts of negligence on the part of the driver, may in some instances amount to negligence precluding a recovery for injuries sustained in a collision with another vehicle.[8] Thus, the entirely unexpected skidding of an automobile, under proper control, on a highway, has been viewed as constituting a sufficient basis upon which to deny recovery in the accident that followed, at least in the absence of any negligent acts on the part of the other motorist contributing thereto.[9] In cases holding that a motorist's contributory negligence, where his car skidded on a street railway or railroad track, precluded any recovery against the railway or railroad, the view has sometimes been taken that he cannot excuse his negligent conduct upon the ground that the slippery condition of the street or road made the skidding unavoidable.[10]

§ 425. —Slippery Road; Collision with Street Car.—In cases holding that a motorist's contributory negligence, where his car has skidded on a street railway or railroad track, precludes any recovery against the railway or railroad, frequently the view has been taken that he cannot excuse his negligent conduct upon the ground that the slippery condition of the street or road made the skidding unavoidable.[11] Thus, one driving a car along a country road on a stormy day was held, as a matter of law, to be chargeable with contributory negligence, precluding his recovery against the railroad, where he was driving at such speed that he was unable to stop when he saw the train coming, and so skidded onto the track.[12] A wife sitting beside her husband was held to be negligent in failing to warn him that he was driving too fast on a slippery tarvia surface on which the car suddenly skidded and tipped over onto a trolley car track.[13] Where a small truck, after turning at a corner, increased its speed and skidded on the wet street into a street car, the driver's contributory negligence was held to preclude any recovery in his behalf, the court remarking that there

---

For a discussion of the rule that the speed of vehicles should be such that they can stop within the driver's range of vision, see infra, § 426.

[7] Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582; Gage v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 91 Kan. 253, 137 P. 938, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 410; Linden v. Miller, 172 Wis. 20, 177 N. W. 909, 12 A.L.R. 665.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 265.

See infra, § 417.

[8] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 265.

[9] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 265.

[10] Gage v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 91 Kan. 253, 137 P. 938, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 410.

Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 282.

[11] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 282.

[12] Gage v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 91 Kan. 253, 137 P. 938, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 410.

In holding that the contributory negligence of a motorist who skidded into the path of a locomotive precluded a recovery, a court said: "It is manifest the accident would not have happened if the highway had not been coated with ice. This coating of ice was not merely at the point of the accident, but general throughout the village. The condition of the highway was open to plaintiff's observation and should have been noted by him as a factor to be considered in operating his car. Every driver of a motor vehicle is bound, in using a highway, to notice the condition thereof occasioned by climatic incidents." Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 282.

[13] Lambert v. Eastern Massachusetts Street R. Co. 240 Mass. 495, 134 N. E. 340, 22 A.L.R. 1291.

was no room for the doctrine of last clear chance, the motorman having done all in his power to avert the collision.[14]

§ 426. —Insufficient Lights.—The failure of the operator of an automobile, traveling at night, to comply with statutory requirements as to lights, or to have such lights as will disclose the condition of the road and discover obstacles and dangerous places in time for his own safety, constitutes such negligence on his part as will preclude recovery for damages resulting from the negligence of another, at least in the absence of proof that plaintiff's failure to have proper lights did not contribute to the injury, contributory negligence having been set up as a defense.[15] In a number of cases, however, the defense of contributory negligence failed because the relationship between the accident and the fault in respect of the light, as a proximate and contributing cause, was not a necessary inference under the circumstances.[16] Whether the alleged absence of lights was the proximate cause of the accident and constituted such contributory negligence as will preclude recovery[17] is generally a question of fact for the jury to decide in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.

§ 427. —Parking without Lights.—In various cases a party who stopped his car on the highway, without a rear light, has sought to recover damages for an injury to his car by another car colliding with it in the rear, or an action has been brought for personal injuries or death alleged to have been caused by the driver of the car approaching from the rear.[18] In such instances it has generally been held that while it is negligence to stop an automobile upon the highway after dark, without headlights or taillights,[19] such negligence does not absolve motorists approaching from the rear from the duty of exercising reasonable care and caution. A motorist who fails to exercise a degree of care commensurate with the surrounding hazards, and collides with an automobile standing without lights, will be precluded from recovery.[20]

---

[14] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 283.

[15] Phillips v. Davis (C. C. A. 3d) 3 F. (2d) 798, 40 A.L.R. 1241; Rebillard v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 216 F. 503, L.R.A.1915B, 953; Fisher v. O'Brien, 99 Kan. 621, 162 P. 317, L.R.A. 1917F, 610; Serfas v. Lehigh & N. E. R. Co. 270 Pa. 306, 113 A. 370, 14 A.L.R. 791; Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 794, s. 40 A.L.R. 1243.

In Phillips v. Davis (C. C. A. 3d) 3 F. (2d) 798, 40 A.L.R. 1241, the plaintiff was denied recovery on the ground of his contributory negligence in failing to turn on full lights long enough to ascertain the condition of a crossing, notwithstanding that the municipal ordinance required the dimming of lights.

See also supra, § 417.

[16] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 795, s. 40 A.L.R. 1244.

Negligence with respect to headlights, on the part of one driving his automobile into collision with an animal on the highway will not prevent his holding the owner of the animal liable for the resulting injury, unless such negligence contributed thereto. Hansen v. Kemmish, 201 Iowa, 1008, 208 N. W. 277, 45 A.L.R. 498.

[17] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 795, s. 40 A.L.R. 1243.

See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[18] Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 510, s. 47 A.L.R. 706, and 62 A.L.R. 972.

[19] See supra, § 426.

[20] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 972.

Where plaintiffs stopped their truck without a rear light, on the right-hand side of the road, with the left wheels resting a few inches from the edge of the pavement, in which position it was struck by defendant's automobile moving in the same direction, the court held that as the night was clear and defendant had good lights, he could not have been observing his duty to proceed carefully and to be on the alert to avoid colliding with others, and that it would not disturb a verdict of the jury in favor of plaintiffs. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 972.

Where plaintiff left a car standing on a highway in violation of a statute requiring a red taillight from half an hour after sunset to half an hour before sunrise, and defendant first saw plaintiff's car when he was from 30 to 50 feet in the rear thereof, but could not stop in time to prevent a collision, the court held that although the plaintiff was negligent, the evidence was sufficient to justify the application of the last clear chance doctrine, and a verdict for plaintiff was affirmed. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 972.

See also supra, § 417.

§ 428. —Defective Brakes.—Evidence of the defective condition of the brakes on the plaintiff's vehicle at the time of the accident is an important factor in judging the presence of contributory negligence.[1] Thus, proof that the emergency brake on the automobile driven by the plaintiff was defective at the time the accident occurred would tend to show that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in using the car in that condition.[2] Where a statute requires motor vehicles to be equipped with adequate brakes, it has been held that failure to use reasonable care in complying therewith constitutes negligence as a matter of law.[3] However, it should be noted in this connection that no determination of liability can be made on the evidence of the defective brakes alone. It is essential that there be shown a causal connection between such defect and the accident.[4] It is generally within the province of the jury to decide what part, if any, the defective brakes had in causing the accident, and whether the rôle they played was of such character as might properly be made the basis for a finding of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.[5]

§ 429. —Traveling with Impaired Vision.—A driver of an automobile, whose view is obscured by dust, smoke, or atmospheric conditions, and who nevertheless proceeds, disregarding the caution required in such situation, will be deemed contributorily negligent so as to bar a recovery by him for damages resulting from a collision with another vehicle.[6] The extent to which the speed of a car must be slackened or any other precautionary measures adopted is dependent upon the exigencies of the particular situation.[7] It has been held, for example, that an automobile driver encountering fog is not bound as a matter of law to stop and wait for the fog to lift in order to escape the charge of contributory negligence.[8] Whether the motorist exercised such care under the conditions of impaired visibility as will free him from the charge of contributory negligence is generally a question for the jury to decide.[9] As a general rule, a motorist who proceeds while blinded by the glaring headlights of an approaching vehicle, and meets with an accident, will be treated as contributorily negligent.[10] It appears in some instances that the duty of exercising the proper degree of care and caution under these circumstances is discharged by slowing up the speed of the vehicle; in other cases, nothing short of a full stop will suffice.[11]

---

[1] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 402.

[2] The fact that the brakes on an automobile, though applied 20 feet from the point of a collision, did not stop the car in time, does not show that they are defective, so as to make the owner guilty of contributory negligence. Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 402.

[3] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 402.

[4] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 403.

[5] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 404.

[6] Phillips v. Davis (C. C. A. 3d) 3 F. (2d) 798, 40 A.L.R. 1241; Mathers v. Botsford, 86 Fla. 40, 97 So. 282, 32 A.L.R. 881; Gage v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 91 Kan. 253, 137 P. 938, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 410; Thompson v. Bellingham, 112 Wash. 583, 192 P. 952, 19 A.L.R. 864; Schwalen v. W. P. Fuller & Co. 107 Wash. 476, 182 P. 592, 187 P. 367; Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30 (holding that one driving an automobile on a dark, rainy night was not exercising ordinary care if he was driving it at such a rate of speed that he could not stop it within the distance in which objects were visible).

Annotation: 37 A.L.R. 587, s. 73 A.L.R. 1020.

See also infra, § 426.

[7] In Lindquist v. Thierman, 216 Iowa, 170, 248 N. W. 504, 87 A.L.R. 893, a motorist was held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where, after seeing the headlights of a standing car facing towards him, he drove for some distance, in violation of a statute requiring the driver of a motor vehicle to stop "within the assured clear distance ahead."

See supra, § 426.

[8] Peasley v. White, 129 Me. 450, 152 A. 530, 73 A.L.R. 1017.

[9] Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

Annotation: 37 A.L.R. 594, s. 73 A.L.R. 1025.

[10] Ruth v. Vroom, 245 Mich. 88, 222 N. W. 155, 62 A.L.R. 1528.

Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1531.

[11] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1532, 1533.

§ 430. —Intoxication of Driver.—Voluntary drunkenness on the part of a motorist in no event furnishes an excuse for negligence or relieves him from exercising the degree of care required of a sober man under the same circumstances.[12] If one becomes voluntarily intoxicated, and negligently operates his automobile to the injury or damage of another, his intoxication furnishes no excuse for his negligence;[13] rather, it presents a question of fact to be considered by the jury in determining whether the intoxicated person was negligent, and to what extent, if any, his drunkenness contributed to the accident.[14] While it may be negligence per se to violate a statute making it a criminal offense to drive a motor vehicle while in an intoxicated condition,[15] there is no civil liability under a statute of that kind, so as to bar a plaintiff from recovering for injuries sustained, solely upon the basis of such violation.[16] Accordingly, it has been held that the fact that the injured person at the time of the accident was unlawfully operating a vehicle while intoxicated does not preclude recovery where it does not appear that his violation of the statute in driving while in that condition was the proximate cause of the injuries.[17]

§ 431. —Collisions at Intersections.—While it is true that one driving on a right-of-way street has a right to assume that his passage will not be impeded at intersections,[18] and that other motorists approaching the vicinity will obey the traffic regulations pertaining to the movement of vehicles at such intersections.[19] he will nevertheless be held to a reasonable degree of care in watching for other automobiles and to the exercise of such caution as is commensurate with reasonable prudence.[20] The driver of an automobile on a main or primary road has a right to rely on stop signs at the junction of a street and such highway; he is not guilty of contributory negligence in assuming that a vehicle on the street will regard the stop sign and stop before entering the primary highway, and he cannot be charged with negligence in acting upon such assumption.[1] A motorist who fails to exercise the required degree of care and caution in this respect and meets with an accident involving a vehicle being operated along the main thoroughfare will be deemed contributorily negligent, where it appears that such neglect proximately caused the accident, without which it would not have occurred.[2]

§ 432. —Turning between Intersections.—A motorist who attempted to turn his vehicle around between intersections and met with an accident while in the course of making such a turn will be deemed contributorily negligent, where it appears that a local ordinance prohibited such a maneuver,[3] or where other circumstances exist which indicate that the driver knew, or, in the exercise of reasonable care, should have known, of the hazards surrounding a turn of this character at that particular time and place, and failed to exercise the requisite degree of care and caution,[4] provided, of course, that such factors proximately contributed to the accident.[5] Traffic conditions, lights, warning signals, extent of observation by the motorist, etc., are all pertinent in connection with judging the contributory negligence of a driver who is injured in the course of making a turn between intersections.[6]

---

[12] McIntosh v. Standard Oil Co. 89 Kan. 289, 131 P. 151, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 730, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 112; Bageard v. Consolidated Traction Co. 64 N. J. L. 316, 45 A. 620, 49 L.R.A. 424, 81 Am. St. Rep. 498.

Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 341.

[13] Powell v. Berry, 145 Ga. 696, 89 S. E. 753, L.R.A.1917A, 306.

[14] Bageard v. Consolidated Traction Co. 64 N. J. L. 316, 45 A. 620, 49 L.R.A. 424, 81 Am. St. Rep. 498.

Where an intoxicated man crowded, with three other intoxicated persons, into a small, one-seated, closed car which was being driven by one of the men who was an inexperienced driver, such act constitutes contributory negligence sufficient to bar recovery for his death from being struck at a crossing when the driver attempted to cross in the face of an approaching train, since if any of the men had used, or been in condition to use, their sight or hearing, they could not have failed to know of the train and avoid the accident. Annotation: 36 A.L.R. 340.

[15] Packard v. O'Neil, 45 Idaho, 427, 262 P. 881, 56 A.L.R. 317.

Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 327.

[16] Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 327.

[17] Annotation: 12 A.L.R. 469.

[18] Annotation: 81 A.L.R. 185.

See also supra, § 421.

[19] Keir v. Trager, 134 Kan. 505, 7 P. (2d) 49, 81 A.L.R. 181.

[20] Annotation: 81 A.L.R. 185.

[1] Keir v. Trager, 134 Kan. 505, 7 P. (2d) 49, 81 A.L.R. 181.

[2] Annotation: 81 A.L.R. 186.

§ 433. —Turning without Signaling.—A driver who turns from the course he is following and drives into an intersecting street or a private driveway without giving any signal to drivers in the rear, as it is his duty to do,[7] is guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery for injuries sustained as a result of a collision with a vehicle in the rear.[8] However, even though the driver of an automobile fails to give any signal of his intention to turn, the circumstances may be such as to render the driver of an automobile approaching from the rear, and colliding therewith, guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, precluding recovery by him for the resulting injury.[9] Thus, where the defendant, approaching the top of a hill with the car in low gear, having looked back and seen no car approaching from the rear, turned to the left into an unfrequented driveway without signaling, and collided with the plaintiff, a motorcycle officer, who was following and who attempted to pass without warning, the latter was held to be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[10]

§ 434. —Backing Vehicle.—A motorist is guilty of contributory negligence if in backing his vehicle in a public highway, he fails to look backward, not only before he begins to back up, but also while the car is in motion, or if he fails to signal other motorists who may be in the car's path, and as a result thereof an accident occurs.[11] In appraising the contributory negligence of a driver whose car was involved in an accident while backing up, there are several factors that should be carefully considered. The direction in which the car was traveling, the rate of speed, whether any signal or warning was given, the condition of traffic, visibility, the direction and general position of the other vehicle, and what observation, if any, the one in charge of the car made while backing it, are all pertinent in this connection.[12] Generally, the issue of the driver's contributory negligence in an accident occurring while his vehicle is backing up is a question of fact for the jury to decide in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[13]

§ 435. —Parking on Wrong Side.—While the standing of an automobile on the wrong side of the street or highway may afford a sufficient basis for a finding of contributory negligence,[14] it is a factor which must be considered in its relation to other matters, such as whether it was daylight or dark,[15] whether the street or highway is frequented or isolated in character,[16] whether there were lights on the car,[17] and whether the parking or stopping was unavoidable.[18] The questions of negligence, contributory negligence, and proximate cause must be determined from all of the circumstances, and not from the mere fact of standing on the wrong side of the street or highway.[19] It has also been held, in this connection, that a driver of an automobile on a public highway at night, who sees in front of him the headlights of another car facing him, has a right to assume to a reasonable extent that such car is in motion and will be operated in conformity with the law of the road; he cannot be charged with contributory negligence as matter of law in failing to stop or to discover that the other car is stalled.[20] The inquiry whether the acts alleged as constituting contributory negligence proximately caused the accident is generally a question for the jury to decide in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[1]

---

[3] Nashville v. Black, 142 Tenn. 397, 219 S. W. 1043, 12 A.L.R. 453 (violation of ordinance prohibiting turning of vehicles upon street between corners of block may prevent recovery for injury resulting when wheel of vehicle drops into hole negligently left in pavement).

[4] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 1107, 1108.

[5] Newcomb v. Boston Protective Dept. 146 Mass. 596, 16 N. E. 555, 4 Am. St. Rep. 354; Norris v. Litchfield, 35 N. H. 271, 69 Am. Dec. 546.

See also supra, § 417.

[6] Annotation: 57 A.L.R. 1107, 1108; 62 A.L.R. 976.

[7] See supra, § 432.

[8] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 979.

[9] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 979.

[10] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 979.

[11] Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.

Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 647.

See also supra, § 433.

[12] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.

[13] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 647.

See supra, § 408.

§ 436. —Disregard of Traffic Signal.—While there is little authority on the question of what effect the signal of a traffic officer has upon the issue of a motorist's contributory negligence where he chooses to disregard such signal and thereafter meets with an accident, it would seem clear that the violation of a traffic warning or direction is an important factor in determining the driver's contributory negligence. Here, as in all other phases of the broad subject of contributory negligence in automobile accidents, the determination of a plaintiff's negligence precluding recovery presupposes the performance of a definite duty on his part, for the breach of which he will be barred from maintaining the action.[2] It is unquestioned that a motorist may rely to a reasonable extent upon the signal of a traffic officer,[3] at least to the point where he sees, or in the exercise of ordinary care should see, that to follow the course indicated by the signal would be to proceed in the face of danger. Then it becomes his duty to stop or take such other measures as are warranted by the exigencies of the situation.[4] The blind disregard of a traffic signal, resulting in an accident which, had the motorist obeyed the warning, never would have occurred, will undoubtedly operate to deprive the driver of his right of recovery.[5]

§ 437. —At Railroad Crossings.—A motorist who approaches a railroad crossing without exercising such care and caution as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances is guilty of contributory negligence, barring recovery for any injuries resulting from a collision with a railroad train.[6] Failure to stop, look, and listen as the vehicle approaches the crossing may constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law. The duty to exercise such precautions is not, however, a hard and fast one, applicable to all situations alike, but is largely dictated by the exigencies of the particular case.[7] Some jurisdictions apply the hard and fast rule that a motorist who enters upon a railroad crossing without first stopping, looking, and listening for approaching trains is guilty of contributory negligence per se barring recovery.[8] The fact that a motorist, in coming to a stop at a railroad crossing, does not shut off his motor, does not necessarily render him guilty of contributory negligence.[9]

---

[14] Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582; Whitworth v. Riley, 132 Okla. 72, 269 P. 350, 59 A.L.R. 584; Waynick v. Walrond, 155 Va. 400, 154 S. E. 522, 70 A.L.R. 1014.
Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1021.

[15] See supra, § 426.

[16] See supra, §§ 165–170.

[17] See supra, § 412.

[18] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1021.
See supra, § 415.

[19] Waynick v. Walrond, 155 Va. 400, 154 S. E. 522, 70 A.L.R. 1014.

[20] Whitworth v. Riley, 132 Okla. 72, 269 P. 350, 59 A.L.R. 584.

[1] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1026.

[2] See supra, § 408.

[3] Annotation: L.R.A.1917B, 137, 138.

[4] Melville v. Rollwage, 171 Ky. 607, 188 S. W. 638, L.R.A.1917B, 133, holding that the signal of a traffic officer to an automobilist to cross a street intersection did not absolve him from the duty of exercising reasonable care for the safety of pedestrians in the vicinity.

[5] Annotation: L.R.A.1917B, 138.

The stopping of a street car at the customary place for the discharge and taking on of passengers is no invitation to a motorist to cross ahead of the street car before it proceeds on its journey if the motorist is so situated that the street car can safely proceed and he yields the right of way; he may be held guilty of contributory negligence if he sees, or could see, that the street car has started in time to stop his automobile before reaching the tracks, and does not do so.[10] Moreover, the facts may be such as to make the motorist guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in driving or backing across the street car tracks without ascertaining whether a street car was approaching.[11]

§ 438. —Injury by Frightened Horse.[12]—A motorist who sustains injuries as a result of an accident caused by a horse taking fright at his vehicle may be guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery, if he knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, that the horse was about to become frightened and that there was danger of its running away; and if, notwithstanding he had time to get out of the vehicle, he remained inside and was injured.[13] Similarly, the driver of restive horses may be debarred from recovery by his own negligence in trying to force them past an automobile after they had become unmanageable.[14]

§ 439. Motorcyclists.—Motorcycles being included within the category of "motor vehicles,"[15] and those who operate same being held to a degree of care and caution not dissimilar from that imposed upon operators of automobiles,[16] it is generally held that the operator of a motorcycle is to be deemed contributorily negligent so as to bar recovery for any injuries sustained in an accident involving an automobile or another motorcycle, where the same acts would constitute contributory negligence if applied to the driver of an automobile.[17]

---

[6] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Yingling, 148 Md. 169, 129 A. 36, 41 A.L.R. 398; Union Trust Co. v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 239 Mich. 97, 214 N. W. 166, 66 A.L.R. 1515.
Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 203, s. 2 A.L.R. 767, 41 A.L.R. 405; 54 A.L.R. 542.

[7] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Yingling, 148 Md. 169, 129 A. 36, 41 A.L.R. 398; Union Trust Co. v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 239 Mich. 97, 214 N. W. 166, 66 A.L.R. 1515.
Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 204, s. 2 A.L.R. 767, and 41 A.L.R. 405.

[8] Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 203, s. 2 A.L.R. 767, and 41 A.L.R. 405.

In Pennsylvania the rule that a motorist is required to stop, look, and listen is strictly applied, so that failure to comply therewith constitutes contributory negligence per se. Aiken v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 130 Pa. 380, 18 A. 619, 17 Am. St. Rep. 775.

[9] Townsend v. Missouri P. R. Co. 163 La. 872, 113 So. 130, 54 A.L.R. 538.
For further discussion of this subject, see supra, § 173. And see RAILROADS [Also 22 R. C. L. p. 1028, § 260].

[10] Dering v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 171 Wis. 8, 176 N. W. 343, 14 A.L.R. 809.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 811.

[11] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 811.

[12] As to duty toward horses, see infra, § 441.

[13] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487.

[14] Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Yeiser, 141 Ky. 15, 131 S. W. 1049, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1137.
See also, in this connection, Pease v. Cochran, 42 S. D. 130, 173 N. W. 158, 5 A.L.R. 936, holding that one who operates upon the road a motorcar loaded in such manner that a horse drawing a buggy becomes frightened at it is not negligent.

[15] See supra, § 5.
See also annotation: 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 41.

[16] See supra, § 5.

§ 440. Bicyclists.—The mere use of a bicycle on the public highway does not make the user guilty of contributory negligence.[18] The reciprocal duties of a bicyclist and automobilist being governed by the common-law rule that each is bound to exercise reasonable care toward the other in their use of the public highways,[19] the same rules as to lack of care constituting contributory negligence are generally applied to a bicyclist as to a motorist or motorcyclist.[20]

§ 441. Drivers of Horse-drawn Vehicles or Riders of Horses.—It being well settled that the driver of an automobile and the driver or rider of a horse upon a highway are each held to the observance of mutual care and caution to avoid injury to the other,[1] it is generally held that the driver or rider of a horse, when approached by a motor vehicle, is required to exercise the care and caution of a reasonably prudent person,[2] and that for a failure to exercise such care he will be deemed contributorily negligent.[3] To drive upon the road with a horse known to be afraid of automobiles is not, in itself, a sufficient basis upon which to predicate a finding of contributory negligence,[4] although evidence that the horse was easily frightened in the presence of motor vehicles and would run away without apparent cause is competent upon the issue of contributory negligence.[5] A driver of a horse-drawn vehicle, who sees that the horse is about to become frightened at an approaching automobile, or is already frightened, and who fails either to stop or to take such other measures as are warranted by the exigencies of the situation, will be precluded by his negligence from recovering for any injuries resulting from a collision with the motor vehicle.[6]

---

[17] Nordby v. Sorlie, 35 N. D. 395, 160 N. W. 70, L.R.A.1917B, 753; Spillers v. Griffin, 109 S. C. 78, 95 S. E. 133, L.R.A.1918D, 1193.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1917A, 222.

The duty of one riding a motorcycle to avoid an injury to himself by collision with an automobile is not altered by the existence of conditions in the road which make it dangerous to turn out when riding rapidly. Nordby v. Sorlie, 35 N. D. 395, 160 N. W. 70, L.R.A.1917B, 753.

[18] Annotation: 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 944.

[19] Rogers v. Phillips, 206 Mass. 308, 92 N. E. 327, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 944.

See supra, § 184.

[20] Simpson v. Snellenburg, 96 N. J. L. 518, 115 A. 403, 24 A.L.R. 503; Calahan v. Moll, 160 Wis. 523, 152 N. W. 179, L.R.A. 1916A, 744.

When an automobile suddenly turns from an intersecting street on the wrong side of the road at high speed, so as to place a bicyclist traveling on the right side of the road in imminent danger of collision, the latter is not negligent per se in turning from side to side to avoid a collision. Calahan v. Moll, 160 Wis. 523, 152 N. W. 179, L.R.A.1916A, 744.

It is not negligence per se for a man riding a bicycle along a street in front of an automobile to attempt to cross the road in front of the machine if it is so far behind him that it may reasonably be expected that the driver will see him, and can and will, by the exercise of proper care, so manage the machine as to avoid a collision; but the question is one for the jury under all the circumstances of the case. Rogers v. Phillips, 206 Mass. 308, 92 N. E. 327, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 944.

See supra, § 439.

[1] Butler v. McCabe, 116 Ark. 26, 171 S. W. 1190, L.R.A.1915C, 702; Minor v. Mapes, 102 Ark. 351, 144 S. W. 219, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214; Millsaps v. Brogdon, 97 Ark. 469, 134 S. W. 632, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1177; McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087; Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656; Dreier v. McDermott, 157 Iowa, 726, 141 N. W. 315, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 566; Ware v. Saufley, 194 Ky. 53, 237 S. W. 1060, 24 A.L.R. 500; Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 77 S. W. 196, 105 Am. St. Rep. 249.

Annotation: 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 947.

The driver of a team on a public highway may be found not to be negligent in failing to turn out to meet an approaching automobile if there is room in the highway for the automobile to pass without his doing so. Savoy v. McLeod, 111 Me. 234, 88 A. 721, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 971.

Contributory negligence on the part of one driving a cow along a public highway when it was killed by an automobile will defeat recovery for its death. Bombard v. Newton, 94 Vt. 354, 111 A. 510, 11 A.L.R. 1402.

The rider of a vicious horse, upon seeing an automobile approach and knowing that an attempt to pass it will result in a struggle for the mastery between himself and the horse, is negligent in attempting to keep the horse in the road while the automobile passes without warning the driver of the danger, so that, in case he is thrown and killed, the driver of the automobile cannot be held liable for the injury. Dreier v. McDermott, 157 Iowa, 726, 141 N. W. 315, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 566.

See supra, § 419.

[2] Millsaps v. Brogdon, 97 Ark. 469, 134 S. W. 632, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1177; Ware v. Saufley, 194 Ky. 53, 237 S. W. 1060, 24 A.L.R. 500.

The question of the negligence of a delivery boy who is struck and injured by an automobile is for the jury where the evidence tends to show that before leaving his wagon, he looked, but did not see the automobile, and that after he had reached the ground and taken the packages he was to deliver, he walked a few steps beside the wagon, waiting for it to pass so that he could walk behind it to approach the house where the packages were to be delivered, when he was struck by the automobile coming rapidly up behind him. Gerhard v.

§ 442. Motorist Repairing Vehicle in Road.—A traveler engaged about an automobile in the highway is bound to use reasonable care for his own safety. The questions whether such care has been exercised, and whether one is guilty of contributory negligence, depend upon the facts in each case and are ordinarily questions of fact for the jury.[7] It has been held in this connection that a traveler is not confined to the right-hand side of the highway under penalty of being charged with contributory negligence, provided he does not unreasonably interfere with other motorists in their use of the road.[8] Nor is the duty of constant, unceasing vigilance imposed upon him as he works upon the automobile.[9] Similarly, the fact that the person working over the car is outside the line of the vehicle will not necessarily make him contributorily negligent.[10]

§ 443. Police or Traffic Officer.—While it may be accepted as the general rule that a traffic officer is not required to use the same degree of care in looking for approaching vehicles as would be required of an ordinary pedestrian,[11] he is, nevertheless, required to exercise such care and caution as are dictated by the exigencies of the particular situation,[12] and for a failure to discharge such duty, resulting in an accident with an automobile, the traffic

---

Ford Motor Co. 155 Mich. 618, 119 N. W. 904, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232.

The failure of the driver of a horse-drawn vehicle to give the statutory signal to stop to the driver of an automobile does not preclude a recovery by him for injury suffered in an action based on common-law negligence. Messer v. Bruening, 25 N. D. 599, 142 N. W. 158, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 945.

[3] Dreier v. McDermott, 157 Iowa, 726, 141 N. W. 315, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 566.

The driver of a buggy, who refuses to yield the road when an automobile attempts to pass from behind, can recover no damages for injuries inflicted by collision between the vehicles. Ware v. Saufley, 194 Ky. 53, 237 S. W. 1060, 24 A.L.R. 500.

The driver of a restive horse who, upon seeing an automobile approaching, drives into an offset from the road, where the horse becomes unmanageable, assumes the risk of injury in attempting to force it past the machine after it has been stopped beside the road. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Yeiser, 141 Ky. 15, 131 S. W. 1049, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137.

[4] Butler v. Cabe, 116 Ark. 26, 171 S. W. 1190, L.R.A.1915C, 702.

[5] Bliss v. Wolcott, 40 Mont. 491, 107 P. 423, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 566, 135 Am. St. Rep. 636.

[6] McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087.

[7] Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507; Humes v. Schaller, 39 R. I. 519, 99 A. 55, L.R.A. 1917B, 316; Long v. Steffen, 194 Wis. 179, 215 N. W. 892, 61 A.L.R. 1155; Schacht v. Quick, 178 Wis. 330, 190 N. W. 87, 25 A.L.R. 130.

A truck driver who, to repair a punctured tire, places his truck on the side of the road, with ample passing space in the highway, with lights lighted and a person on guard to signal approaching cars while he works in front of the car within its protection, is free from contributory negligence as a matter of law. Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 136, s. 34 A.L.R. 1513, and 61 A.L.R. 1159.

[8] Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194; Schacht v. Quick, 178 Wis. 330, 25 A.L.R. 130, 190 N. W. 87.

Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 136, s. 34 A.L.R. 1515, and 61 A.L.R. 1164.

[9] Annotation: 34 A.L.R. 1515, s. 61 A.L.R. 1164.

[10] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1166.

[11] Beyrent v. Kaplan, 315 Pa. 353, 172 A. 651, 92 A.L.R. 1515.

See infra, § 446.

[12] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1520.

officer will be viewed as contributorily negligent, barring a recovery. Precisely what will be treated as the minimum of reasonable care in this respect, so as to preclude application of the doctrine of contributory negligence, is largely a question of fact for the jury to decide in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[13] For example, a traffic officer was held contributorily negligent where, after informing a motorist that her car was improperly parked and that she must move on, he walked behind the vehicle and was injured when it backed up, it appearing that that was the only way the motorist could comply with the officer's request to move on.[14]

§ 444. Persons Working in Road.—The general rule is that a workman employed in the street, being required to exercise only that degree of care which a reasonably prudent or careful person would exercise under the same circumstances,[15] is justified in assuming that the driver of an automobile will exercise some care to avoid striking him.[16] Accordingly, it has been held that since a person employed at work in a street must necessarily devote his attention to his work, he is not guilty of contributory negligence for failure to keep a sharp lookout for approaching vehicles.[17] While it is clear that in some instances one working in the road may be held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, precluding recovery for an injury received when he was struck by an automobile,[18] the question of his contributory negligence is generally one for the jury to decide.[19]

§ 445. Persons Alighting from or Boarding Street Car.—A passenger who is about to get off a stationary trolley car at its regular stopping place is not, as a matter of law, contributorily negligent because he fails to look out for approaching vehicles.[20] He may assume to a reasonable extent that the car itself, in coming to a stop at a customary stopping place, will warn vehicles in the vicinity not to pass too close, and that if they do pass, they will give him sufficient space to clear safely the street car.[1] However, situations may arise where failure on the part of the passenger to look before leaving the street car, or while crossing to the curb, will constitute such contributory negligence as will preclude recovery.[2] Whether a person is chargeable with contributory negligence for failure to look in both directions after alighting from the street car, before starting to cross the street, is a question for the jury to determine.[3] Similarly, the question whether a person standing in the street at the regular stopping place of an approaching street car, intending to board the car, is guilty of contributory negligence in failing to observe the approach of an automobile is largely a factual one for the jury to decide.[4] In general, the rules applicable to the care and caution properly exercisable by a pedestrian in crossing a road or street will prevail in determining the contributory negligence of a person who is injured while crossing to or from a trolley car.[5]

---

[13] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1520.

[14] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1520.

[15] Chaney v. Moore, 101 W. Va. 621, 134 S. E. 204, 47 A.L.R. 800.
Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 808.

[16] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 808.

[17] Chaney v. Moore, 101 W. Va. 621, 134 S. E. 204, 47 A.L.R. 800.
Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 809.

[18] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 809.

[19] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 809.

In one case where an employee of a street railway company, while working in the road, was struck from the rear by defendant's automobile, it was held to be proper to submit the case to the jury under the doctrine of last clear chance, where the evidence showed that the plaintiff, while engaged in his work in broad daylight on the street, was standing with his back to the defendant's automobile when it was approaching him. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 810.

[20] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1244.

A passenger is not negligent in alighting from a street car, knowing that an automobile is following the car, if it is not so close that it cannot be stopped by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence on the part of the driver before it reaches him. Marsh v. Boyden, 33 R. I. 519, 82 A. 393, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582.

[1] Marsh v. Boyden, 33 R. I. 519, 82 A. 393, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582.
Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1244, 1247.

A passenger alighting from a street car at a place other than a crosswalk has a right to presume that the driver of an automobile following the car will pass to the left as required by statute, and the jury may consider the driver's failure to do so, to the injury of the passenger, as evidence of negligence on his part. Foster v. Curtis, 213 Mass. 79, 99 N. E. 961, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1188, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1116.

[2] Day v. Cunningham, 125 Me. 328, 133 A. 855, 47 A.L.R. 1229.
Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1246.

§ 446. Pedestrians—In General.—It is sought to include herein the more common situations involving a pedestrian's contributory negligence in his use of the public streets. As in other instances in which the negligence of a motorist or the person injured through the operation of the vehicle is tested by familiar rules to determine whether any acts on the part of the person seeking recovery are of such character that they may reasonably be said to have proximately contributed to the accident, so, with pedestrians injured by an automobile upon the street, it is essential to determine the reciprocal duties of the automobilist as well as of the pedestrian before any determination relative to contributory negligence can be arrived at. Reference to the foregoing sections should therefore be supplemented by a perusal of such textual material elsewhere in this work as defines the duties of pedestrians in specific situations and the correlative duties of motorists in connection therewith.[6]

§ 447. —Rules Applicable to Pedestrians.—The general rule is stated that pedestrians have the right to use a public street at any time of day or night.[7] They not only have the legal right to travel in the street, but, in the absence of a restrictive statute or ordinance, may cross or traverse the road at any point and in any direction, and the mere fact that one does so does not render him guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[8] As in other cases, however, he must exercise reasonable care for his own safety, taking into account all the circumstances, and where he seeks to cross at a point other than the intersection, he may be chargeable with some additional vigilance over that required of those who use the road under less dangerous conditions.[9] Negligence of a pedestrian in his use of the public thoroughfares, contributing to an accident involving an automobile being operated thereupon, will bar recovery for any resulting injuries,[10] subject, of course, to the general requirement that the acts

---

[3] Wolfe v. Ives, 83 Conn. 174, 76 A. 526, 19 Ann. Cas. 752.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1244.

See supra, § 215.

Stepping off a moving car when an automobile is in plain view and only a few feet away has been viewed as constituting contributory negligence as a matter of law. Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1249.

[4] Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396; Ouellette v. Superior Motor & Mach. Works, 157 Wis. 531, 147 N. W. 1014, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 299.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1252.

It is not negligence per se for a pedestrian to stop at a point upon a crosswalk to await the passing of a street car, to which point he had proceeded after satisfying himself that no automobile was in the immediate vicinity, without thereafter keeping a constant watch for the approach of such vehicles. Melville v. Rollwage, 117 Ky. 607, 188 S. W. 638, L.R.A.1917B, 133.

[5] See infra, § 451.

[6] See supra, §§ 187–228.

[7] Annotation: 50 A.L.R. 1512; 67 A.L.R. 109.

See also infra, § 189.

[8] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

See supra, § 211.

[9] See supra, § 211.

[10] Baker v. Close, 204 N. Y. 92, 97 N. E. 501, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487; Ludke v. Burck, 160 Wis. 440, 152 N. W. 190, L.R.A.1915D, 968; Minor v. Stevens, 65 Wash. 423, 118 P. 313, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178; Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1916E, 669.

A pedestrian is not, however, bound, as a matter of law, when lawfully using the public highways, to be continuously looking or listening to ascertain if automobiles are approaching under penalty that upon his failure to do so, if he is injured, his own complained of as constituting contributory negligence must be the proximate cause of the accident.[11] Thus, a pedestrian who, while crossing a street, sees an automobile approaching and thereafter voluntarily leaves a place of safety and attempts to cross in front of the vehicle, will be deemed contributorily negligent so as to bar recovery, even though the driver failed to sound a warning signal.[12]

§ 448. —Nature of Pedestrian's Right.—The rights of pedestrians and vehicular traffic in the use of streets and highways are generally "mutual, equal, and co-ordinate." A pedestrian should use ordinary care for his own safety when crossing a street or highway; however, he has the right to assume that others will use a like care to avoid injuring him.[12a] It is not necessary for a pedestrian to look and listen continually for the approach of a motor vehicle.[12b] In case of injury to a pedestrian by a vehicle, what constitutes ordinary care is generally a question of fact for the jury.[13] The law does not view a pedestrian as contributorily negligent because he has not looked a certain number of times before crossing a street or highway, nor does it impose the absolute duty of waiting until an approaching vehicle passes before attempting a crossing, unless its proximity or speed renders crossing hazardous.[14]

§ 449. —Walking along Road.—The rule is generally recognized that in the absence of an applicable statute or ordinance, a pedestrian has the right to walk longitudinally in a street or highway and is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in doing so.[15] However, a pedestrian walking longitudinally in a street or highway must exercise reasonable or ordinary care for his safety.[16] The fact that a pedestrian walks along the traveled parts of the highway, while not contributory negligence as a matter of law, is a circumstance to be considered in determining the degree of care required under the existing conditions.[17] The strict law of the road, that where one is traveling in a vehicle negligence must be conclusively presumed. Gerhard v. Ford Motor Co. 155 Mich. 618, 119 N. W. 904, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 232.

---

[11] Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92; Salsich v. Bunn, 205 Wis. 524, 238 N. W. 394, 79 A.L.R. 1069.
Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205; 79 A.L.R. 1069.
See also supra, § 417.

[12] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205.
A finding that no recovery could be had upon the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence was held sustained where there was evidence that he had taken a step or two into a street, 35 feet wide, when he saw approaching the taxicab which hit him, and that when he had proceeded to within about 5 feet of the curb, the cab was about 80 feet away, and that he was struck just as he was stepping from the street to the curb. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 206.

Where it is found that a pedestrian, without looking, stepped off the curb immediately in front of defendant's automobile, which was moving slowly and carefully and giving warning signals, no recovery can be had. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205.

It is not necessary that pedestrians look at the precise moment when they step from the curb, but they must look at such a time and place as reasonably to be of some benefit in protecting them, and so as to give them knowledge of the condition of the traffic. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205.
See infra, § 451.

[12a] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1916E, 670.

[12b] Bachelder v. Morgan, 179 Ala. 339, 60 So. 815, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 888; Baker v. Close, 204 N. Y. 92, 97 N. E. 501, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 487; Mosso v. E. H. Stanton Co. 75 Wash. 220, 134 P. 941, L.R.A.1916A, 943.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1916E, 669.

[13] Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505; Salsich v. Bunn, 205 Wis. 524, 238 N. W. 394, 79 A.L.R. 1069.
See supra, § 447.

[14] Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505.

[15] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027; Marton v. Pickrell, 112 Wash. 117, 191 P. 1101, 17 A.L.R. 68.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 109.

[16] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027; Marton v. Pickrell, 112 Wash. 117, 191 P. 1101, 17 A.L.R. 68.

[17] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.
A pedestrian walking along a highway is required by law to use only reasonable and ordinary care under the circumstances, and it is error to instruct the jury that "he must use all his senses to prevent an accident." Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 111.

and meets another vehicle, he must turn to the right, does not apply to pedestrians.[18] It has been held that a pedestrian who walks along a street or highway in violation of a statute requiring pedestrians at night to walk on the left-hand side of the street or roadway is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[19] However, a pedestrian lawfully walking longitudinally in a street or highway is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence because he does not look, or continue to look, back for the approach of automobiles from the rear.[20] Pedestrians walking along on the left-hand side of a street would not naturally expect an automobile to come up behind them on that side of the road, and they are under no legal obligation to look back to see whether they are in danger of being struck from behind.[1] It is for the jury to determine the questions of relative negligence in case of a collision between an automobile and a pedestrian who was walking along the road.[2]

§ 450. —Crossing Road Generally.—The contributory negligence of a pedestrian who meets with injury by an automobile while crossing the street, always a source of prolific litigation, is, to a very large extent, a factual question and dependent in the main upon the peculiar circumstances of the individual case, rather than upon abstract rules of conduct, nonconformity to which may or may not form a sufficient basis upon which to predicate a finding of contributory negligence. The conditions of traffic at the time of the accident,[3] extent of visibility,[4] character of crossing attempted,—whether diagonal,[5] between intersections,[6] or at crossings,[7]—and any other explanatory factors, are all pertinent in connection with an evaluation of the pedestrian's conduct at the time of the accident.

§ 451. —Failure to Look while Crossing Road.—A pedestrian, upon stepping from the curb on to a traveled street, is bound to take notice of the conditions of traffic, and must not blindly step into a place of obvious danger.[8] Similarly, a pedestrian will be viewed as guilty of contributory negligence where it appears that she attempted to cross the street ahead of a vehicle which was plainly visible and approaching from a distance at a rate that rendered her attempt to cross palpably dangerous.[9] However, a pedestrian who is lawfully crossing a public thoroughfare need not be constantly looking or listening to ascertain if automobiles are approaching, under the penalty that if he fails to do so and is injured, his failure conclusively charges him with negligence.[10]

---

[18] Marton v. Pickrell, 112 Wash. 117, 191 P. 1101, 17 A.L.R. 68.
Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 71; 67 A.L.R. 111.

[19] Keller v. Breneman, 153 Wash. 208, 279 P. 588, 67 A.L.R. 92.

[20] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

[1] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027; Marton v. Pickrell, 112 Wash. 117, 191 P. 1101, 17 A.L.R. 68.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 112.

[2] Annotation: 17 A.L.R. 72.

[3] See supra, § 413.

[4] See infra, § 459.

[5] See infra, § 456.

[6] See infra, § 454.

[7] See infra, § 452.

[8] Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620, 124 N. W. 527, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 435, 134 Am. St. Rep. 752; Salsich v. Bunn, 205 Wis. 524, 238 N. W. 394, 79 A.L.R. 1069.

A pedestrian is required to use such care as a reasonably prudent person in a like situation would use. Wolfe v. Ives, 83 Conn. 174, 76 A. 526, 19 Ann. Cas. 752.
Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205; 79 A.L.R. 1073.

The jury must determine how far failure to observe the amount and kind of travel on the street is indicative of such want of care as ought to bar his recovery. Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396.

[9] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 205.

[10] Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505; Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

Ordinary care requires that a pedestrian crossing a busy city street observe, before leaving the zone of safety at the sidewalk or curb, the traffic approaching from the left, and, when at or near the center, note the traffic approaching from the right, unless there are attending circumstances

Nor is he under a duty to look for automobiles traveling on the wrong side of the street, under penalty of being deemed contributorily negligent in the event of an accident.[11] In determining the existence of contributory negligence, it is not required that the pedestrian shall have looked at the precise moment when he stepped from the curb, but rather, at such time and place as would reasonably have been of some benefit in protecting him, and would have given him knowledge of the condition of traffic.[12]

§ 452. —At Intersections.—Since the general rule is that a pedestrian is under no absolute duty to look up and down the street which intersects the one he is about to cross, to see if there are any vehicles approaching from such direction,[13] his failure so to act is not contributory negligence as a matter of law.[14] Similarly, since it is well settled that a pedestrian is not under a duty, on crossing a street at a proper place, constantly to keep his eyes on an automobile which, without warning, turns a corner, since his rights are equal to those of the driver,[15] a finding of contributory negligence on the part of the pedestrian is not warranted where it is shown he exercised reasonable care in traversing the intersection.[16] Generally the question of the pedestrian's contributory negligence under these circumstances is for the jury to decide, in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[17] However, the situation may be such as to make the pedestrian guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law,[18] as where a pedestrian enters upon an intersection without using his senses of sight and hearing, and blindly proceeds in the face of dangers which would have been observed had he exercised reasonable care.[19]

Statutes or ordinances giving pedestrians the right of way at street crossings create a preferential, but not an absolute, right in their favor; notwithstanding such statutes or ordinances, pedestrians still owe a duty to exercise ordinary care for their own safety.[20] They have, however, a right to assume that the driver of an approaching automobile will exercise reasonable care and comply with which reasonably cause his attention to be diverted. Ivy v. Marx, 205 Ala. 60, 87 So. 813, 14 A.L.R. 1173; Wolfe v. Ives, 83 Conn. 174, 76 A. 526, 19 Ann. Cas. 752; Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396; Baker v. Close, 204 N. Y. 92, 97 N. E. 501, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487; Salsich v. Bunn, 205 Wis. 524, 238 N. W. 394, 79 A.L.R. 1069; Bentson v. Brown, 186 Wis. 629, 203 N. W. 380, 38 A.L.R. 1417.

---

If observation is made before entering the street, failure to look the second time while crossing the thoroughfare is not contributory negligence, as a matter of law, but the question is one for the jury to determine. Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1083.

[11] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1089.

[12] See infra, § 458.

A pedestrian about to cross a city street is not necessarily negligent in failing to look backward for approaching automobiles. Cusick v. Miller, 102 Kan. 663, 171 P. 599, L.R.A.1918D, 1086.

[13] See supra, § 451.

[14] In one instance a pedestrian struck by an automobile turning around the corner from an intersecting street was held not to be guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law because she failed, before crossing, to look in the direction from which the car came, the court saying that if she had done so and had seen the automobile, she could not have known it would turn around the corner, but, on the contrary, would have had the right to assume that it would not make the turn, because no horn was blown. Hempel v. Hall, 136 Md. 174, 110 A. 210, 9 A.L.R. 1245. Annotation: 9 A.L.R. 1248, s. 44 A.L.R. 1299; 96 A.L.R. 786.

[15] See supra, § 448.

[16] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1301.

[17] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1300; 96 A.L.R. 788.

[18] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1301.

It has been held that where a boy running along a street sees and constantly watches an automobile coming from the opposite direction on the street on which he is running, and, when starting across the intersecting street, slows up a little on the thought that the car may turn into such street, but, being unable to stop in time when the car suddenly turns into the intersecting street, tries to pass diagonally in front of it and is struck by it, he is guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law. Stewart v. Olson, 188 Wis. 487, 206 N. W. 909, 44 A.L.R. 1292.

[19] Henderson v. O'Leary, 177 Wis. 130, 187 N. W. 994, 24 A.L.R. 942.

[20] Horwitz v. Eurove, 129 Ohio St. 8, 193 N. E. 644, 96 A.L.R. 782.
Annotation: 96 A.L.R. 786.

the provisions of the statutes or ordinances governing the movement of vehicles at intersections.[21] The question of the pedestrian's contributory negligence in such cases is generally one of fact for the jury.[22]

§ 453. —Reliance on Traffic Signal.—In accordance with the well-settled rule that a pedestrian starting to cross a street at a crossing, with the traffic signal in his favor, has the right of way over traffic until he reaches the opposite curb,[23] it is clear that a pedestrian who does not continually look for approaching vehicles as he makes such crossing is not thereby rendered contributorily negligent in the event of an accident.

§ 454. —Between Intersections.—In accordance with the general rule that a pedestrian has the right, in the absence of prohibition by statute or ordinance, to cross a street at any point, either directly or diagonally, and is not restricted to the regular crossings,[1] it may be accepted as the prevailing rule, subject, of course, to local statutory exceptions thereto, that the fact that a pedestrian undertakes to cross a street at a place other than a regular crossing will not, of itself, constitute contributory negligence, so as to defeat an action for injuries received on being struck by an automobile.[2] However, such fact is a circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining his contributory negligence.[3] It is clear that while a pedestrian has the right to cross between crossings, if he elects to do so rather than go to the regular crossing, he will be required to use greater care for his own safety than is required of him when he crosses at the place provided for pedestrians.[4] However, an instruction that a pedestrian attempting to cross a street at a place other than a crosswalk must exercise greater care for his safety than one attempting to cross on a crosswalk has been viewed as too general in scope.[5] It appears, from a review of the decisions treating the point, that the rule by which to determine whether one crossing a street between crossings has exercised the proper degree of care is the rule of ordinary caution, i. e., Did he use the care which the ordinarily prudent person would use in the same place and under the same circumstances?[6]

---

[21] Annotation: 96 A.L.R. 787.

The element of reassurance as to the right of way and the expected yielding thereof on the part of the driver of an automobile takes some of the burden of the necessity of dodging across streets from the pedestrians. Annotation: 96 A.L.R. 787.

[22] Horwitz v. Eurove, 129 Ohio St. 8, 193 N. E. 644, 96 A.L.R. 782.
Annotation: 96 A.L.R. 788.

[23] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963; Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.
Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 970.
See also supra, § 448.

[1] Stringer v. Frost, 116 Ind. 477, 19 N. E. 331, 2 L.R.A. 614, 9 Am. St. Rep. 875.

[2] Peterson v. Ballantine, 205 N. Y. 29, 98 N. E. 202, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1147; Watts v. Plymouth, 255 Pa. 185, 99 A. 470, 3 A.L.R. 1110; McKeon v. Delbridge, 55 S. D. 579, 226 N. W. 947, 67 A.L.R. 311; Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1183, s. 67 A.L.R. 320.

[3] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1184, s. 67 A.L.R. 320.

[4] Ivy v. Marx, 205 Ala. 60, 87 So. 813, 14 A.L.R. 1173.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 321.
See supra, § 450.

[5] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 321.

It has been held that one attempting to cross a congested street diagonally does not exercise his full duty of care by merely looking in the direction from which traffic may be expected under a municipal ordinance; he must also look out for automobiles which may be backing into a parking space. Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.

[6] Peterson v. Ballantine, 205 N. Y. 29, 98 N. E. 202, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1147; Watts v. Plymouth, 255 Pa. 185, 99 A. 470, 3 A.L.R. 1110.
Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 321.

A pedestrian crossing a street 40 feet from an intersection is not required to anticipate heedless acts on the part of automobile drivers, but may assume that they will act with care. Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505.
See also supra, § 448.

§ 455. —Effect of Violation of Statute or Ordinance.—In some jurisdictions pedestrians are forbidden by statute or ordinance from crossing a street between intersections. The decisions interpreting the effect of a violation of such statutes or ordinances are not entirely in accord. In a few jurisdictions the view has been expressed that the mere violation of such a statute or ordinance would not alone, as a matter of law, render the pedestrian guilty of contributory negligence if he was struck by an automobile, unless his act constituted the proximate cause of the accident.[7] The decisions in other jurisdictions favor a more strict construction of such regulatory provisions and hold a pedestrian to be contributorily negligent as a matter of law if he crosses a street in violation of a statute or ordinance.[8] However, it appears that even in such instances the contributory negligence of the pedestrian in violating the statute or ordinance will not necessarily operate as a bar to recovery. Such questions as the proximate cause of the accident, whether the defendant saw the pedestrian in time to avoid the occurrence, and the degree of care or vigilance exercised by the motorist, may make the issue one of fact for the jury to decide in the light of all the surrounding circumstances.[9]

§ 456. —Diagonal Crossing.—The degree of care imposed upon a pedestrian who crosses a street at a point other than the crosswalk[10] is particularly emphasized where he does not essay a direct crossing, but pursues a long diagonal route.[11] A pedestrian who seeks to make a diagonal crossing will be held contributorily negligent if he fails to exercise the degree of caution and observance imposed by the dangers and hazards surrounding such a course.[12] Thus, it has been held that where a pedestrian crosses diagonally a street on which considerable automobile traffic moves, it becomes his duty to look for automobiles not only when he leaves the curb, but also when he arrives at the center of the street, before proceeding across the path of any oncoming traffic on his right,[13] and that if he fails to perform such duty, he will be viewed as contributorily negligent.[14]

§ 457. —Turning or Jumping Back.—The sudden jumping or turning back of a pedestrian as he crosses the street may make him guilty of such contributory negligence as will preclude recovery for any injuries sustained in an accident with an automobile being driven along the street.[15] Having gained a place of comparative safety, or adopted a course calculated to remove him from danger, a pedestrian who thereafter confuses a motorist by suddenly placing himself in the car's path is viewed as having contributed directly to the resulting accident.[16] Whether the pedestrian's conduct in turning or jumping back constituted the proximate cause of the accident is generally a question for the jury to decide.[17]

---

[7] Ivy v. Marx, 205 Ala. 60, 87 So. 813, 14 A.L.R. 1173.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1198, s. 67 A.L.R. 333.

[8] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1198, s. 67 A.L.R. 333; 49 A.L.R. 1407, 1408.

[9] Snyder v. Campbell, 145 Miss. 287, 110 So. 678, 49 A.L.R. 1402, holding that while such violation may be viewed as necessarily contributing to the accident, the plaintiff is not thereby precluded from recovery, but that any amount recovered should be reduced in the proportion that his negligence bore to the negligence of the defendant.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1198, s. 67 A.L.R. 335.

[10] See supra, § 454.

[11] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.

The duty of using due care requires a greater degree of alertness when a pedestrian is crossing a street diagonally than is necessary when he is crossing at a crosswalk. Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1092.

[12] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1092.

[13] Mosso v. E. H. Stanton Co. 75 Wash. 220, 134 P. 941, L.R.A.1916A, 943 (contributory negligence of pedestrian held question for jury).

Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1092.

[14] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493; Mosso v. E. H. Stanton Co. 75 Wash. 220, 134 P. 941, L.R.A.1916A, 943.

[15] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 565.

A pedestrian crossing a wide street, who stops in the roadway, at a safe place beside the street car track, for a street car to pass, and then walks back in the direction from which he came, without looking for approaching vehicles, is guilty of contributory negligence where, in retracing his steps, he walks in front of an automobile proceeding at a moderate rate of speed and is knocked down and injured before the motorist can avoid him. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 209.

§ 458. —Failure to Look Behind.—A pedestrian who arrives at a street intersection and attempts to make a crossing is not contributorily negligent because he fails to look behind him for approaching vehicles.[18] However, situations may arise, due to the dangerous character of the surrounding circumstances, where such failure will be viewed as contributory negligence barring a recovery.[19] For example, such dangerous conditions may be congested and dangerous traffic conditions at an intersection,[20] obscured vision,[1] poor visibility, etc.[2]

§ 459. —Obstructed View.—Under the rule requiring every user of the highway to exercise reasonable care for his own safety and protection, a pedestrian crossing or about to cross a street or highway when his view of an approaching motor vehicle is obstructed is usually required to exercise a greater degree of care than would under other circumstances be necessary, and he is contributorily negligent if he fails to take proper precautions to discover and observe the approach of such vehicles before placing himself in a position of danger and as a result meets with an accident.[3] There are cases which state that how often or how thoroughly a person must look before crossing a street is a question of fact for the jury. But these same cases assert his duty to use his eyes for self-protection, and they assume a view through sufficient space to give him a reasonable assurance of safety. Looking only when the view is so obstructed as not to give such assurance is no better than not looking at all. To illustrate, it has been held that a pedestrian who attempts to cross from one side of a bridge to the other by stepping onto the roadway, which he knows to be used by automobiles, in immediate proximity to a cloud of smoke which completely obscures his vision, is so negligent as a matter of law as to prevent his holding the owner of an automobile liable for injuries inflicted upon him when it emerges from the smoke.[4] But it is not contributory negligence as a matter of law for a pedestrian to attempt to cross a street merely because his view to the right is obstructed. For example, to require a pedestrian to refrain from crossing a busy street intersection in the business section of a large city during a rush hour until the street is free from obstructions would be to require more than ordinary care and to impose on such pedestrian the degree of care applicable in all its strictness only to travelers at a railroad crossing in looking out for approaching trains.[5]

§ 460. —Standing on Sidewalk.—While the sidewalk is considered a safety zone for pedestrians thereon[6] so as to absolve them from the duty of looking and listening for the approach of a vehicle,[7] it is clear that if the failure of a pedestrian to use ordinary and reasonable care contributes to cause his injury by a motor vehicle while he is on the sidewalk, he cannot recover.[8]

---

[16] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 210.

[17] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 210.

[18] Cusick v. Miller, 102 Kan. 663, 171 P. 599, L.R.A.1918D, 1086.

[19] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1094.

[20] See supra, § 452.

[1] See infra, § 459.

[2] See infra, § 459.

[3] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1094.

[4] State ex rel. Schaffer v. Allen (Mo.) 253 S. W. 768, 28 A.L.R. 1270.

[5] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1094.

A pedestrian's failure to see an automobile approaching in a blinding and tempestuous rainstorm, with its lights difficult to distinguish from street lights, or even his failure to lok at all, has been held not to constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law. Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1094.

[6] See supra, § 189.

§ 461. —Crossing Private Driveway.—A pedestrian on the sidewalk has the right to assume that motorists driving their vehicles along an intersecting private driveway into the road will give proper warning of their approach.[9] Thus, a pedestrian will not be deemed guilty of contributory negligence when struck by an automobile which is being backed from a driveway while he is passing along the sidewalk merely because he fails to look up the intersecting drive for the approach of the vehicle.[10] However, circumstances may exist which will impose upon the pedestrian a greater degree of vigilance and caution than would ordinarily be exacted. Any facts that would serve to increase the caution of the prudent person—as, for example, prior knowledge of the presence of a driveway at that particular point—will prove pertinent in determining the pedestrian's contributory negligence at the time of the accident.[11]

§ 462. —Stepping around Vehicle.—When a pedestrian steps from behind one automobile in front of another automobile, without looking or listening, and is injured by the moving car, he is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[12] Accordingly, a pedestrian who suddenly comes into the street from behind a standing automobile immediately in front of a car being driven along the highway is guilty of contributory negligence and is not entitled to recover for the resulting injuries.[13] However, one attempting to cross a street in front of a standing street car is not negligent in failing to observe that an automobile is attempting to pass the car on the left contrary to the municipal ordinances.[13a]

§ 463. —Struck by Backing Vehicle.—A pedestrian crossing a street will be viewed as contributorily negligent if he fails to exercise ordinary care to protect himself against automobiles which may be backing in or into the street. The observation of ordinary care in this connection is not fully performed by the pedestrian's merely looking to the left or right as he steps on the street.[14] If the pedestrian observes the approach of the backing vehicle in time to avoid its approach,[15] or is placed in such a position that if he looks and exercises the care demanded of the prudent pedestrian, he will be able to avoid being struck by the vehicle as it backs up, he will be deemed contributorily negligent so as to preclude a recovery.[16]

---

[7] Corona Coal & I. Co. v. White, 158 Ala. 627, 48 So. 362, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958; Brown v. Des Moines Steam Bottling Works, 174 Iowa, 715, 156 N. W. 829, 1 A.L.R. 835.

Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 853, s. 75 A.L.R. 575.

[8] Mastin v. New York, 201 N. Y. 81, 94 N. E. 611, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 784.

Annotation: 1 A.L.R. 856, s. 75 A.L.R. 575.

It was held, in one case, that a photographer who placed his camera on the sidewalk near the curb and covered his face with a dark cloth to focus the instrument and, while in that position, was struck by an ashcart, was guilty of contributory negligence. Mastin v. New York, 201 N. Y. 81, 94 N. E. 611, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 784.

A child over five years of age cannot be said to be guilty of contributory negligence if, while playing upon the sidewalk in front of her home on a narrow city street, she hugs an electric lamppost with her arm and it is crushed by a long iron pipe extending from the rear of a truck which the driver is attempting to turn from the street into an alley on the opposite side. Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 575.

See supra, § 417.

[9] See supra, § 447.

[10] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 661.

[11] See supra, § 447.

[12] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 207.

The driver of an automobile is not liable for the death of a person suddenly stepping into the path of the machine from the protection of a standing car. Grein v. Gordon, 280 Pa. 576, 124 A. 737, 34 A.L.R. 1511

[13] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 208.

As to contributory negligence of one repairing automobile along highway, see supra, § 442.

[13a] Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 P. 1155, L.R.A.1917C, 477.

[14] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.

[15] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 662.

§ 464. Persons under Disability—In General.—While persons of impaired faculties—as, for example, persons who are deaf, blind, or paralyzed—are equally with other pedestrians entitled to the use of the streets and highways and it is not necessarily negligence for them to travel thereon unattended, yet they, like other persons, will be held contributorily negligent if they fail to exercise reasonable care for their own safety and, as a result thereof, meet with an accident.[17] Like those in possession of all of their faculties, persons under disabilities are required to use ordinary care under the circumstances. In order to exercise that care, however, such persons are undoubtedly called upon to take precautions which one under no disability need not take.[18] Precisely what quantum of care and caution will be exacted in each situation is obviously dependent upon the facts of the individual case, as well as upon the nature and extent of the disability of the person involved.[19]

§ 465. —Blind Persons.—The mere circumstance that a person who is injured in an automobile accident on a street or highway is blind does not necessarily make him guilty of contributory negligence.[20] A blind pedestrian is held to the exercise of ordinary care in his use of the streets and highways.[1] In evaluating the measure of care properly exercisable under such circumstances, the oft-repeated statement that a blind person is called upon to take precautions which one under no disability need not take [2] is logically interpreted as meaning that he must use such prudence in his conduct as conforms to the test of what a reasonably cautious person similarly afflicted would use under like circumstances.[3] The general requirement that a blind pedestrian should make greater use of his other senses to discover, if possible, whether any vehicle is approaching the street over which he is passing,[4] does not carry with it the implication that in the discharge of such duty, the disabled person is held to anything higher than the exercise of ordinary care as that expression is used herein.[5]

§ 466. —Deaf Persons.—The fact that one is deaf does not in itself make it negligence for him to be on the public streets.[6] A citizen's right to be upon the public highway does not depend upon his ability to hear, so long as he makes proper use of his sight and other faculties.[7] A pedestrian whose hearing is impaired, like other persons using the highway,[8] is bound to use ordinary care; but one so afflicted may be obliged, under penalty of being considered contributorily negligent, to take precautions, practice diligence, and sharpen other senses, unnecessary for a normal person in order to exercise the ordinary care which the law requires of all.[9]

---

[16] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 662.

[17] Weinstein v. Wheeler, 127 Or. 411, 271 P. 733, 62 A.L.R. 574.
Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 578.

[18] Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.
Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 580.

[19] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 580.

[20] Weinstein v. Wheeler, 127 Or. 411, 271 P. 733, 62 A.L.R. 574.
Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 581.

[1] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 581.

[2] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 580.

[3] Keith v. Worcester & B. Valley Street R. Co. 196 Mass. 478, 82 N. E. 680, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 648; Neff v. Wellesley, 148 Mass. 487, 20 N. E. 111, 2 L.R.A. 500; Weinstein v. Wheeler, 127 Or. 411, 271 P. 733, 62 A.L.R. 574.
Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 581.

[4] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 581.

[5] Keith v. Worcester & B. Valley Street R. Co. 196 Mass. 478, 82 N. E. 680, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 648.

[6] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 580.

[7] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 580.

[8] See supra, § 449.

[9] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 582.
A pedestrian who was struck by an auto-

§ 467. —Aged Persons.—A person is not prohibited from using the streets because he has reached old age,[10] nor will contributory negligence be attributed to him solely because of the infirmities incidental to his advanced years where he is involved in an automobile accident.[11] The aged person is held to the exercise of ordinary care in his use of the streets,[12] and it is only for a failure to use such care that he may be deemed contributorily negligent so as to bar recovery for injuries sustained in an automobile accident.[13]

§ 468. —Intoxicated Persons.—The fact that a pedestrian who was injured by an automobile was intoxicated at the time of the accident does not of itself charge him with contributory negligence,[14] although in an action to recover for the injuries sustained, the voluntary intoxication of the plaintiff may be considered by the jury in determining whether, at the time of the accident, he was taking such care of his safety as would be required of a reasonably prudent man under the circumstances.[15] His intoxication will not operate to relieve him from the necessity of exercising the ordinary care for his safety which the law imposes upon a sober man.[16] No greater care, however, is required of such a person than is required of one in his sober senses, and the fact that he was intoxicated becomes immaterial if he exercised the degree of care required of a sober person.[17]

§ 469. —Other Disabilities.—The circumstance that one is subject to vertigo or other illness will not serve to make him contributorily negligent in his use of the public thoroughfares.[18] He has as much right to the use of the mobile which was backing out across the sidewalk had a perfect right to assume that the sidewalk was safe for her to walk upon and that it was as safe for a deaf and nearsighted person as it was for those whose sight and hearing were normal. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 582.

---

[10] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 580.

[11] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 580.

[12] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 583.

The degree of care which a pedestrian about to cross a street at an intersection must exercise is ordinary care—that is, such care as persons of ordinary prudence would use under similar circumstances. It is error in an action by a pedestrian sixty-eight years of age who was struck by an automobile to instruct the jury that the plaintiff could only be held to that degree of care which might reasonably be expected from one under the same conditions of the same age, sex, intelligence, and judgment, there being no claim of incompetency due to any of these causes. If the person did not use ordinary care for her own safety, she was not to be excused on account of her age, because she was neither too young nor too old to be unappreciative of the dangers to which she was exposed, and her sex was no excuse for her carelessness. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 582.

[13] See supra, § 408.

An elderly man is not as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence, but the question is one for the jury, where there is evidence that at 10 o'clock in the evening he attempted to cross a street intersection; that before leaving the curb, he looked up and down the street and saw only one automobile and waited for that to pass; that he then took two steps off the curb and looked again both ways and, seeing no automobile, proceeded to cross the street, which was 50 or 60 feet wide, and had reached a point about 15 feet from the opposite curb when, suddenly confronted by the glare of the headlights of the defendant's automobile, which he had not seen, he became confused, stopped, turned around sharply, put up his hands, started again, and was struck by the car which was approaching very fast and gave no audible signal. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 583.

[14] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 583.

[15] While a drunken man is as much entitled to a safe street as a sober one, nevertheless evidence of the plaintiff's physical and mental condition as to sobriety or intoxication is relevant, in an action by him to recover for an injury, to the issue as to whether he had heedlessly and witlessly exposed himself to injury at the immediate moment of the accident. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 584.

The plaintiff in an action to recover for an injury resulting from being run into by an automobile may be cross-examined as to whether or not he was intoxicated at the time, since such evidence reflects upon his capacity for accurate observation, correct memory, and unbiased judgment. Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 584.

See also NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[16] Annotaiton: 62 A.L.R. 584.

[17] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 584. See supra, § 408.

[18] Woodson v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 224 Mo. 685, 123 S. W. 820, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 931, 20 Ann. Cas. 1039.

streets as one not so afflicted.[19] Similarly, a person who faints upon the road is not for that reason viewed as contributorily negligent;[20] and the same applies to one who is lame or a cripple.[1]

§ 470. Children.—The defense of contributory negligence may be invoked in an action by or on behalf of a child for injuries sustained in an automobile accident[2] where the child was of sufficient age to exercise discretion for the avoidance of the injury;[3] but a child is not held to the same precautions as an adult and is required to exercise only that care which is ordinarily exercised by minors of like age, mental capacity, and discretion.[4] There is no precise age at which, as a matter of law, a child is to be held accountable for his actions to the same extent as an adult, but the question as to the capacity of a particular child at a particular time to exercise care to avoid a particular danger is one of fact falling within the province of a jury to determine.[5] However, the doctrine of contributory negligence admits of no general application in the instance of children involved in automobile accidents. It can only apply where the child is of sufficient age, knowledge, experience, intelligence, and discretion to be capable to some extent of deliberating and acting upon his own experience and judgment.[6] In the event it appears that the conduct of a motorist in striking a child is wanton in character, the contributory negligence of the infant will not relieve the driver of liability.[7]

§ 471. —Playing in Street.—A boy playing in the street has the right to assume to a reasonable extent that an automobile driver will exercise the care required by law, and will give some warning before running him down, and to that degree is not bound to use constant viligance to avoid a charge of contributory negligence.[8] At the same time, however, an infant is not given the full run of the streets for play to the exclusion of motorists who may be driving in the vicinity.[9] Where it appears that the child's play is attended by dangers which the infant is fully capable of appreciating, taking into consideration all the factors explanatory thereof,[10] such as his age, intelligence, etc.,[11] he will generally be viewed as having assumed the risk of playing in the street under the particular circumstances surrounding the accident and will hence be barred by his contributory negligence from recovery for any resulting injuries.[12] In no sense are motorists on the highway insurers against accidents arising from negligence of children,[13] although such negligence in a particular case may not be a defense for a driver who is also guilty of negligence.[14]

---

[19] See supra, § 447.

[20] McGee v. Jones County, 161 Iowa, 296, 142 N. W. 957, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 141.

[1] Annotation: 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 648 et seq.; 103 Am. St. Rep. 276.

[2] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 329.

[3] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 124, §§ 105 et seq.].

[4] Although not requiring from a child an adult's caution, the law requires that in order for him to absolve himself from the charge of contributory negligence, he must exercise that degree of care which ordinarily prudent children of his age and experience are accustomed to use under similar circumstances. Day v. Cunningham, 125 Me. 328, 133 A. 855, 47 A.L.R. 1229. Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 330.

See supra, § 447.

[5] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 329.

[6] Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620, 124 N. W. 527, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 435, 134 Am. St. Rep. 752.

The degree of care required of a boy playing ball in the street in order to be free from the charge of contributory negligence when he is struck by an automobile has been defined as the same care that a person of the same age, education, and mental and physical capacity ordinarily uses under like circumstances. If he has greater natural capacity and intelligence than the average boy of his age, he is bound to use a degree of care proportionately greater. Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1305.

A boy between fourteen and fifteen years of age who, while playing ball in the street, ran backward to catch a ball and was struck by a motor truck, was held guilty of contributory negligence, there being no element of danger which a boy of his age was not capable of fully appreciating. Day v. Cunningham, 125 Me. 328, 133 A. 855, 47 A.L.R. 1229; Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620, 124 N. W. 527, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 435, 134 Am. St. Rep. 752; Clerici v. Gennari, 102 N. J. L. 377, 132 A. 667, 44 A.L.R. 1302.

[7] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1306.

See supra, § 414.

[8] Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1305.

[9] Clerici v. Gennari, 102 N. J. L. 377, 132 A. 667, 44 A.L.R. 1302.

See infra, § 447.

[10] If the child has greater natural capacity and intelligence than the average boy of his age, he is bound to use a degree of care proportionately greater. Annotation: 44 A.L.R. 1305.

[11] Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620, 124 N. W. 527, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 435, 134 Am. St. Rep. 752.

See supra, § 470.

§ 472. —Coasting along Road.—The fact that a child injured by an automobile was coasting in the street or highway at the time of the accident does not necessarily render him contributorily negligent so as to preclude recovery for the resulting injuries.[15] For example, children who coast along snow-laden streets upon sleds are not thereby viewed by the law as contributorily negligent in the event of an automobile accident. The precise degree of care and caution that devolves upon those who use the highways or streets for this purpose must depend upon the facts and circumstances of the individual case, considering the hazards of the situation. Whether a motorist exercised the requisite degree of care and vigilance in watching for coasters in his path is a factual question for the jury to decide, unless the facts are not in dispute.[16]

§ 473. —Alighting from or Boarding Street Car.—The conventional rules of conduct applicable to a person who alights from or boards a street car [17] do not generally apply to children with the same force and effect,[18] for it is generally held that the failure of a child to look carefully for any automobiles in the immediate vicinity as he boards or leaves a street car will not of itself constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law so as to bar recovery for any resulting injuries.[19] The standard of care and caution properly exercisable by the child in boarding or alighting from the street car is that which may reasonably be expected of one of the same age and intelligence.[20]

§ 474. —Darting in Front of Automobile.—The rule that when any person, without looking or listening, suddenly steps from behind an object in the street in front of another object, which injures him, he is guilty of contributory negligence,[1] is not applicable with the same strictness in the case of a child of immature years.[2] But an infant who recklessly leaves a place of safety and runs into the face of danger without such regard for the hazards of his actions as may reasonably be looked for in one of his age and capacity will be viewed as contributorily negligent.[3]

---

[12] Clerici v. Gennari, 102 N. J. L. 377, 132 A. 667, 44 A.L.R. 1302.

Where a thirteen-year-old boy at play in the street became so engrossed in his play that he attempted to run across the street directly in front of an approaching automobile, without taking any precaution to look, such evidence was held sufficient to show contributory negligence. Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620, 124 N. W. 527, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 435, 134 Am. St. Rep. 752.

[13] See supra, § 447.

[14] Albert v. Munch, 141 La. 686, 75 So. 513, L.R.A.1918A, 240.

[15] Terrill v. Virginia Brewing Co. 130 Minn. 46, 153 N. W. 136, L.R.A.1915E, 1028, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 453.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1435.

[16] Terrill v. Virginia Brewing Co. 130 Minn. 46, 153 N. W. 136, L.R.A.1915E, 1028, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 453.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1438.

[17] See supra, § 215.

[18] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1253.

See supra, § 470.

[19] Day v. Cunningham, 125 Me. 328, 133 A. 855, 47 A.L.R. 1229 (expressive of the minority view that the negligence of a parent is imputed to the child).

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1253, 1254.

[20] Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1191; 47 A.L.R. 1253.

[1] See supra, § 462.

[2] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 214.

[3] Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620, 124 N. W. 527, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 435, 134 Am. St. Rep. 752.

A boy eight years old who alighted from a vehicle in the street and started to run across, then stopped when he saw the defendant's automobile approaching a few

§ 475. Occupant of Car—In General.—A person riding in an automobile driven by another, even though generally not chargeable with the driver's negligence,[4] is not absolved from all personal care for his own safety, but is under the duty of exercising reasonable care to avoid injury.[5] The care exacted is that which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances.[6] The law fixes no different standard of duty for a passenger in an automobile than for the driver. Each is bound to use reasonable care. What conduct on the passenger's part is necessary to comply with this duty must depend upon all the circumstances, one of which—and unquestionably an important one—is that he is merely a passenger having no control over the management of the vehicle in which he is riding.[7] feet away, and again started and endeavored to cross the street in front of the car, which he either ran against or was struck by, was held guilty as a matter of law of contributory negligence so as to bar a recovery. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 215.

---

While the driver of an automobile is required to be vigilant, he is not bound to anticipate that a child will suddenly dart from the side of the street or suddenly run across the street in front of his car. Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 197.

See supra, § 470.

[4] As to imputing the negligence of the driver to the occupant, see infra, § 494.

[5] Ferguson v. Lang, 126 Kan. 273, 268 P. 117, 63 A.L.R. 1423; Winston v. Henderson (Farmers' Bank & T. Co. v. Henderson) 179 Ky. 220, 200 S. W. 330, L.R.A.1918C, 646; Wachsmith v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 233 Pa. 465, 82 A. 755, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 679; Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S. W. 32, 47 A.L.R. 323.

Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 309, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 41 A.L.R. 767, 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

A guest in a car is not barred from recovering against the driver or owner for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the automobile on the theory of joint enterprise or joint adventure if he had no control over the operation of the car. Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 309, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 41 A.L.R. 767, 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

Noncompliance with a statutory requirement that automobiles should be supplied with two lights at the front of the car does not as a matter of law amount to contributory negligence on the part of a guest riding in the car. Chambers v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 37 N. D. 377, 163 N. W. 824, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 954. See also, in same connection, Tyree v. Tudor, 183 N. C. 340, 111 S. E. 714, citing R. C. L.

A person who, possessed of all his faculties and knowing that there is always some danger in traveling in an automobile, accepts an invitation to ride as the guest of the driver, assumes the risk of the ordinary dangers of which he is aware and cannot hold the driver of the car responsible in damages for an accident if there was no fault or negligence or imprudence on the driver's part. Jacobs v. Jacobs, 141 La. 272, 74 So. 992, L.R.A.1917F, 253.

The voluntary drinking of liquor until intoxicated, by one subsequently killed while riding in an automobile because of the negligent operation thereof by the driver, who was himself intoxicated, furnishes no excuse for the former's negligence, or relief to him from the consequences thereof. Powell v. Berry, 145 Ga. 696, 89 S. E. 753, L.R.A.1917A, 306.

[6] Brommer v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (C. C. A. 3d) 179 F. 577, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 924, writ of certiorari denied in 223 U. S. 718, 56 L. ed. 628, 32 S. Ct. 522; Davis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 159 F. 10, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 424; Cotton v. Willmar & S. F. R. Co. 99 Minn. 366, 109 N. W. 835, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 643, 116 Am St. Rep. 422, 9 Ann. Cas. 935; Howe v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 62 Minn. 71, 64 N. W. 102, 30 L.R.A. 684, 54 Am. St. Rep. 616; Minnich v. Easton Transit Co. 267 Pa. 200, 110 A. 273, 18 A.L.R. 296; Wachsmith v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 233 Pa. 465, 82 A. 755, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 679.

Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 311, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 41 A.L.R. 767, 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

The circumstances of a case may be such that a guest may be held to have assumed risks arising from the operation of an automobile. Walker v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. 214 Wis. 519, 252 N. W. 721, 92 A.L.R. 680.

If the passenger or guest does not exercise such care as a reasonably prudent person should exercise in the circumstances, not being an infant non sui juris, he cannot recover for injuries occasioned by a failure to exercise such care. Union Traction Co. v. Gaunt, 193 Ind. 109, 135 N. E. 486, 23 A.L.R. 649.

Whether a passenger or guest in a public or private conveyance, including a wife riding in a car driven by her husband, having no control over its movement, may be denied recovery for personal injury or death on the ground of contributory negligence, depends upon his or her own failure to exercise a proper degree of care, and not upon that of the driver. Miller v. Union P. R. Co. 290 U. S. 227, 78 L. ed. 285, 54 S. Ct. 172.

[7] Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 311, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 41 A.L.R. 767, 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

A guest riding in the front seat of a motor vehicle is not excused from all responsibility with reference to watching the road for approaching cars, but he may rely upon the driver's watchfulness more or less, according to the circumstances, without forfeiting his right of recovery against one through whose negligence he is injured. Leclair v. Boudreau, 101 Vt. 270, 143 A. 401, 63 A.L.R. 1427.

See infra, § 494.

§ 476. —Extent of Reliance.—The general rule may be stated to be that ordinarily a driver is intrusted with caring for the safety of the occupants of his car, and that unless the danger is obvious or is known to the guest, the latter may rely upon the assumption that the driver will exercise proper care and caution; but that if a guest in an automobile driven by another sees, or ought by due diligence to see, a danger not obvious to the driver, or sees that the driver is incompetent,[8] careless, or not taking proper precautions,[9] it is his duty to give some warning of danger,[10] and that a failure to do so constitutes contributory negligence.[11] Accordingly, a passenger in an automobile who was injured by a street car when the automobile skidded and overturned on the street car track cannot hold the street car company liable for the injury if he abandoned the exercise of his own faculties and trusted entirely to the care and caution of the driver whose negligence caused or contributed to the accident.[12] In other words, a passenger may not rely blindly upon the skill and driving judgment of the person at the wheel.[13]

On the other hand, there is the general rule that ordinarily, a passenger in an automobile should sit still and say nothing because any other course may be dangerous.[14] At precisely what point the duty arises to change from passive reliance to active protest is largely a factual question to be properly decided by the jury upon the basis of the available facts and circumstances.[15] Generally speaking, the duty to remain silent exists in sudden emergencies.[16]

§ 477. —Knowledge of Driver's Habits.—There can be no contributory negligence or assumption of risk arising on the part of an invited guest from the mere knowledge that the driver on former occasions has so driven his automobile as to indicate that he is likely to drive recklessly, although this may be a circumstance imposing upon the guest the exercise of reasonable care.[17] To ride with a person whom one knows to be negligent does not of itself constitute contributory negligence.[18] Accordingly, a guest who hesitates about accepting an invitation to ride by reason of having considered the driver careless on previous occasions has been held not negligent in finally consenting to go along, particularly where he asks the defendant to slow up after the latter has been speeding.[19] Where the facts are in dispute as to the driver's incompetency and the guest's knowledge thereof, the question of the guest's contributory negligence is for the jury.[20]

---

[8] See supra, § 74.

[9] See infra, § 479.

[10] See infra, § 478.

[11] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1026.

A passenger on the back seat of an automobile traveling over a road in apparently good condition is not bound to pay constant atention to the management of the car or to keep constant lookout for imperfections in the road. Brubaker v. Iowa County, 174 Wis. 574, 183 N. W. 690, 18 A.L.R. 303. Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 309, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 41 A.L.R. 767, 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

A wife riding in an automobile driven by her husband when it collided at night with an unlighted train at a railroad crossing cannot be said as a matter of law to have assumed the risk of her husband's negligence where, though his eyesight and hearing were defective, there was no evidence that the wife knew that his hearing was defective, or that such defects had any causal relation to the accident, and the jury found upon sufficient evidence that the automobile was not being driven at an improper rate of speed. Archer v. Chicago, M. St. P. & P. R. Co. 215 Wis. 509, 255 N. W. 67, 95 A.L.R. 851.

[12] Lambert v. Eastern Massachusetts Street R. Co. 240 Mass. 495, 134 N. E. 340, 22 A.L.R. 1291.

In one case it was held that although the defendant was driving his automobile at an excessive speed, if the plaintiff's deceased was riding in the car and did not protest against the rate of speed at which the automobile was being driven and, by his failure so to object, acquiesced in the speed at which the automobile was being driven, and such speed was the proximate cause of his death, then the deceased was guilty of negligence which contributed to his own death and the plaintiff could not recover. Annotation: 26 A.L.R. 1428.

The apt observation has been made that it is impossible to lay down fixed rules by which to determine "just when and under what circumstances an automobile should be driven from the rear seat. Each case must rest upon its own facts." Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 1341.

To aid in determining whether one injured while riding as a passenger in an automobile was guilty of contributory negligence, the courts of Pennsylvania have laid down in striking form a rule to the effect that if a passenger voluntarily joins the driver in testing a known or manifest danger, the former is chargeable with such contributory negligence as will prevent a recovery. Minnich v. Easton Transit Co. 267 Pa. 200, 110 A. 273, 18 A.L.R. 296; Hardie v. Barrett, 257 Pa. 42, 101 A. 75, L.R.A.1917F, 444; Wachsmith v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 233 Pa. 465, 82 A. 755, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 679.

The same rule was laid down by the supreme court of Colorado, in reference to persons riding in other vehicles. Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Thomas, 33 Colo. 517, 81 P. 801, 70 L.R.A. 681, 3 Ann. Cas. 700.

[13] Ferguson v. Lang, 126 Kan. 273, 268 P. 117, 63 A.L.R. 1423.

Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 767, s. 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

[14] See infra, § 482.

[15] Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 311, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 41 A.L.R. 768, 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[16] See infra, § 482.

§ 478. —Duty to Warn Driver.—When dangers which are either reasonably manifest or known to an invited guest confront the driver of a vehicle and the guest has an adequate and proper opportunity to control or influence the situation for safety, if he sits by without warning or protest and permits himself to be driven carelessly to his injury, this is negligence which will bar recovery.[1] Accordingly, a person riding in the automobile of another, who fails to warn of approaching danger which, had he been reasonably careful, he could have observed in time, will be deemed contributorily negligent.[2] But if the occupant, by such use of his eyes and ears as the situation permits and such as a prudent person would have made, fails to discover a peril in time to avoid an accident, or if the situation was such as to excuse a prudent person from the duty of active care, he is not contributorily negligent.[3]

The place which a passenger occupies in an automobile is important in determining whether he exercised reasonable care and prudence to detect and warn against danger, for one on the front seat with the driver may have a far better opportunity of discovering any danger ahead in the path of the car than one in the back seat.[4]

---

[17] Annotation: 51 A.L.R. 584, s. 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952; 91 A.L.R. 556.

One about to enter a motorcar should exercise reasonable care to see that the driver in charge is an experienced, reasonably safe, and sober person; and if he fails to do this and injury results to him from a defect in the street to which the negligence or want of skill or care on the part of the driver contributed, such negligence is chargeable to him. Winston v. Henderson (Farmers' Bank & T. Co. v. Henderson) 179 Ky. 220, 200 S. W. 330, L.R.A.1918C, 646.

[18] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1261, s. 65 A.L.R. 952.

The belief or fear by a guest, based upon past experience, that the driver of a car may drive negligently, does not make him contributorily negligent in his acceptance of the invitation to ride with such driver. Marks v. Dorkin, 105 Conn. 521, 136 A. 83, 61 A.L.R. 1224.

[19] Marks v. Dorkin, 105 Conn. 521, 136 A. 83, 61 A.L.R. 1224.

[20] Annotation: 91 A.L.R. 556.

[1] Ferguson v. Lang, 126 Kan. 273, 268 P. 117, 63 A.L.R. 1423; Minnich v. Easton Transit Co. 267 Pa. 200, 110 A. 273, 18 A.L.R. 296.

A policeman clothed with authority to enforce speed laws, who makes no effort to control the speed of an automobile in which he is riding as a guest, is, where such automobile is driven at an unlawful rate of speed, guilty of negligence which will preclude him from recovering damages occasioned by the negligence of the driver of another vehicle. Hubbard v. Bartholomew, 163 Iowa, 58, 144 N. W. 13, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 443.

[2] Kirby v. Kansas City, K. V. & W. R. Co. 106 Kan. 163, 186 P. 744, 18 A.L.R. 299.

Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1027, s. 26 A.L.R. 1425, 40 A.L.R. 1338, 47 A.L.R. 327, 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952; 41 A.L.R. 780.

The failure of a passenger in an automobile who saw another automobile approaching a street intersection while 140 feet away to give warning of the danger to the driver was held not to be contributory negligence as a matter of law, but under the circumstances, to raise a question of fact for the jury. See also Avery v. Thompson, 117 Me. 120, 103 A. 4, L.R.A. 1918D, 205.

If an adult, while riding in an automobile driven by another, sees, or ought by due diligence to see, a danger not obvious to the driver, or who sees that the driver is incompetent or careless, or is not taking proper precautions, it is his duty to give some warning of danger, and a failure to do so is negligence. Knoxville R. & Light Co. v. Vangilder, 132 Tenn. 487, 178 S. W. 1117, L.R.A.1916A, 1111.

See supra, § 77.

[3] Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 769, s. 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

The warning in those cases where it is required should be issued promptly and as soon as the passenger observes the danger.[5]

§ 479. —Duty to Protest.—An invited guest riding in an automobile driven in a reckless and dangerous manner is required to exercise such care as is reasonable and practicable to avoid injury to himself; and if he fails to warn the driver, remonstrate with him, or demand that the automobile be stopped so that he may leave it, or take any precaution for his own protection when there are time and opportunity to do so, no recovery can be had for injuries sustained by him through the negligent operation of the car.[6] By accepting the hospitality of a friend he does not excuse himself from the duty of acting for his own safety as a reasonably prudent person would, under like conditions. An invited guest is not expected to sit back and act the rôle of "mere freight."[7] A mild protest is unavailing, particularly where the passenger continues to ride in the car without further protest or request to stop.[8] But the duty of a passenger to remonstrate against excessive speed or to withdraw from the automobile if a reasonable opportunity is afforded is not absolute; he must use ordinary care for his own safety, and it is incumbent upon him to take proper steps for his own protection. But whether failing to protest against the conduct of the driver or failing to leave the automobile constitutes a want of ordinary care proximately contributing to the injury is a

[4] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 1435.

It has been held that the occupants of the rear seat of an automobile, whose only means of observation was through the isinglass in the side curtains, it being nighttime, had a right to rely on the superior opportunity of the driver to look and listen, and on his judgment and discretion in going upon a crossing; but that the occupant of the front seat, who had an opportunity to realize the dangerous situation, owed the duty to exercise care and warn the driver of any danger ahead. Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 1435.

The fact that the passenger is on the rear seat with the side curtains up has been viewed as lessening such passenger's obligation to keep a lookout. Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 1435.

The fact that the plaintiff was sitting upon a seat running lengthwise of a bus, with his back to the approaching train, has been held to lighten his obligation to keep a lookout for his own safety. Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 1435.

An occupant of the rear seat of an automobile, although he did not do or say anything, was held not to be guilty of contributory negligence where it appeared that by reason of banks on both sides of the road, no view could be had of an approaching train until the traveler was very near the crossing. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 775.

An instruction which could be construed to the effect that it was as much the duty of an invited guest sitting on the rear seat to learn of danger and avoid it as it was of the driver was held erroneous. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1262.

[5] Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 775, 776, s. 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

Where an occupant of an automobile approaching a railroad crossing saw an approaching train as soon as it could be seen and a second later warned the driver thereof, she cannot be said to be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 775, 776, s. 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

[6] Sharp v. Sproat, 111 Kan. 735, 208 P. 613, 26 A.L.R. 1421; Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 150 P. 524, L.R.A.1915F, 876, Ann. Cas. 1916E. 264.

A guest who consents to stay in an automobile when the driver attempts to run it after dark, without lights, along a road with which no one in the car is familiar, is so negligent that he cannot hold the one responsible for an unguarded excavation in the road liable for injury caused by the machine falling into it. Rebillard v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. (C. C. A. 6th) 216 F. 503, L.R.A.1915B, 953.

One who, without protest, permits the chauffeur of a hired automobile to drive at a manifestly dangerous speed on the wrong side of the road is guilty of contributory negligence so that he cannot recover from the owner of a wagon with which the automobile comes into collision. Ferguson v. Lang, 126 Kan. 273, 268 P. 117, 63 A.L.R. 1423; Hardie v. Barrett, 257 Pa. 42, 101 A. 75, L.R.A.1916F, 444. Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 1343, s. 47 A.L.R. 327, 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

[7] Sharp v. Sproat, 111 Kan. 735, 208 P. 613, 26 A.L.R. 1421; Hardie v. Barrett, 257 Pa. 42, 101 A. 75, L.R.A.1917F, 444.

[8] Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 1343, s. 47 A.L.R. 327, 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

question of fact for the jury.[9] A jury should not, however, be permitted to infer that a guest acquiesced by his silence in the reckless manner in which the driver was operating the automobile at the time of the accident, unless the reckless driving continued long enough to give the guest a reasonable opportunity to protest against it.[10]

§ 480. —Duty to Observe Danger.—A passenger in an automobile cannot be charged with contributory negligence in failing to see warning signals along the road or to observe a dangerous condition in the path where there is no evidence that any existed which would warn an ordinarily prudent person.[11] Similarly, with respect to the speed of the car, no negligence can properly be attributed to the passenger in failing to observe and warn against any excessive speed where there is nothing to show that he could have formed an intelligent estimate of the rate of speed.[12] Directly pertinent to this duty is the relative position of the passenger in the car.[13] It may well be, for example, that the person in the rear seat of the car did not enjoy the same range of vision as one seated next to the driver. Hence, this factor becomes important in judging the proper degree of care exercised in a particular situation.[14]

§ 481. —Duty to Leave Vehicle.—If a passenger knows or should, as a reasonably cautious and prudent person, know that danger may follow the operation of the car in a particular manner or in a particular course, it is his duty to take such measures as may be open to him to avoid it and he is guilty of negligence if he fails to do so.[15] If the discharge of such duty can only be met by leaving the vehicle at the first available opportunity, the passenger may be deemed contributorily negligent if he elects to remain in the car. But the passenger's duty to leave the automobile must be judged in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[16] Thus, an elderly lady sitting in the back seat of a car which was proceeding in the rain at an isolated part of a highway and skidded over the embankment was held not required to insist on being let out of the car, but to have done enough in cautioning the driver to reduce its speed.[17]

§ 482. —Interfering with Driver.—In certain situations the safest course is for a passenger in an automobile to sit still and say nothing, because any other course is dangerous. Certainly, interference by laying hold of an operating lever or, in an emergency, by exclamation, or even by direction or inquiry, is generally to be deprecated, as in the long run the greater safety lies in letting the driver alone.[18] The apt suggestion has been made that accidents are as likely to be caused as to be averted by outcries and unwarranted suggestions or other interference with the driver.[19] At the same time, however, a situation may arise where the circumstances are of so impelling a nature as to justify, and in some instances require, interference by the passenger—as, for example, an imminent collision of which the driver is not aware.[20] Where the exercise of reasonable care requires interference on the part of the passenger, he will be deemed contributorily negligent where he fails to take such steps as are warranted by the exigencies of the situation.[1]

---

[9] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 331, s. 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

[10] Annotation: 51 A.L.R. 585, s. 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.
See supra, § 476.

[11] Brubaker v. Iowa County, 174 Wis. 574, 183 N. W. 690, 18 A.L.R. 303.
See supra, § 476.

[12] Brubaker v. Iowa County, 174 Wis. 574, 183 N. W. 690, 18 A.L.R. 303.

[13] See supra, § 484.

[14] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 1435, s. 90 A.L.R. 984.

[15] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 1435.
A guest may be held negligent who consents to stay in an automobile when the driver attempts to run it after dark without light on an unfamiliar road. Rebillard v. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. 216 F. 503, 133 C. C. A. 9, L.R.A.1915B, 953.

[16] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 957.

[17] Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1262, s. 65 A.L.R. 952.

Where a guest told the owner that the operator (another guest) was not physically fit to drive, the former was held not required to leave the car, rather than continue therein, where she was far from home near midnight on a dark and rainy night. Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 1262.

Where the evidence did not show how many times a guest riding to the defendant's automobile had spoken to the latter concerning the speed of the car and the speed itself was uncertain prior to the accident, it was held that the guest was not required as a matter of law to have gotten out "and not have gone any further with the party;" nor was he guilty of such negligence as would necessarily bar a recovery. Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 1342, s. 47 A.L.R. 327, 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

§ 483. —Intoxication of Driver.—A passenger who enters a car with knowledge of the driver's intoxicated condition and thereafter rides with him under such conditions as would impel a reasonably prudent man to take all possible measures to stop or leave the vehicle is guilty of contributory negligence.[2] One is contributorily negligent in riding in an automobile with knowledge that the chauffeur is drunk so as to prevent his holding the driver of another automobile liable for an injury to him resulting from a collision of the two cars if the injury was caused by the act of the driver of the car in which he was riding.[3] But it should be clear that the accident resulting in the injuries complained of was proximately caused by the driver's lack of control over the wheel. Where, for example, it appears that an accident resulted, not from the defendant's incapacity to handle the car, but from his lack of care and desire to do a stunt to frighten his passengers, the latter may not be deemed contributorily negligent in having entered the car in the first place.[4] It should be carefully noted that the mere circumstance of having entered a car driven by an intoxicated person is not of itself determinative of the passenger's contributory negligence.[5]

§ 484. —Riding in Dangerous Position.—The position that a passenger assumes in an automobile while riding therein may prove important in determining his contributory negligence.[6] Where it is clear that the injuries complained of would not have happened except for the dangerous or precarious position of the passenger injured, he is barred from a recovery.[7] The mere assumption of an unconventional position in or upon the vehicle is not of itself, however, a sufficient basis upon which to predicate a finding of contributory negligence.[8] Several cases have held that it cannot be said as a matter of law to be contributory negligence on the part of one injured in a traffic accident to ride on the running board, but that in such case the question is for the jury.[9] It would appear, however, that in some situations, because of the surrounding circumstances, riding on the running board of an automobile would constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law.[10]

---

[18] Annotation: 18 AL.R. 314, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 41 A.L.R. 767, 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

It has been held that in many cases the highest degree of caution may consist of inaction. "In situations of great and sudden peril, meddlesome interference with those having control, either by physical act or by disturbing suggestions and needless warnings, may be disastrous in its results." Ibid.

[19] Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 354, 355, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 41 A.L.R. 767, 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

[20] Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 355, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 41 A.L.R. 767, 47 A.L.R. 293, 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

[1] See supra, § 479.

[2] Powell v. Berry, 145 Ga. 696, 89 S. E. 753, L.R.A.1917A, 306; Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S. W. 32, 47 A.L.R. 323; Wayson v. Rainier Taxi Co. (Wayson v. Gould) 136 Wash. 274, 239 P. 559, 45 A.L.R. 290.

[3] Lynn v. Goodwin, 170 Cal. 112, 148 P. 927, L.R.A.1915E, 588.

The application of this rule is particularly emphasized where the car is driven through the traffic of a populous city. Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S. W. 32, 47 A.L.R. 323.

[4] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1028, s. 26 A.L.R. 1425; 40 A.L.R. 1338; 47 A.L.R. 327; 51 A.L.R. 581; 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

[5] Accordingly, an instruction, in an action by a guest to recover for an injury sustained while riding in the defendant's automobile, that the plaintiff's mere knowledge that the defendant was under the influence of intoxicants would as a matter of law bar any recovery was held erroneous, upon the theory that this withdrew from the jury the essential factor of the plaintiff's volition in continuing the journey up to the place of the collision. Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1028, 1029, s. 26 A.L.R. 1425; 40 A.L.R. 1338; 47 A.L.R. 327; 51 A.L.R. 581; 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

Where the evidence is conflicting as to the intoxication of the driver of the car in which the plaintiff in an automobile accident case was riding, the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence in riding with a drunken driver is for the jury. Meese v. Goodman, 167 Md. 658, 176 A. 621, 98 A.L.R. 480.

[6] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1028.

§ 485. —Excessive Speed, Acquiescence in.—It is the duty of a passenger to register protest against the excessive rate of speed of a car in which he is riding and to take such measures looking to his safety as may be expected of a reasonably prudent man under similar circumstances.[11] For a failure to discharge his duty in this respect, he will be considered contributorily negligent.[12] Precisely what manner or form such protest may assume is largely governed by the facts of each case, just as a determination of the proper degree of care exercisable under the circumstances must meet its solution by the same test. For example, a guest will not be held guilty of contributory negligence on the ground that he acquiesced in a high or dangerous rate of speed where, at the beginning of the journey, the driver proceeded at a moderate rate of speed until he struck a concrete road, whereupon he increased the speed to about 30 miles an hour and the guest protested at this rate of speed three different times in a distance of 4 miles.[13] Then again, it has been held that where one was riding as the guest of the driver of an automobile without making any objection to the unlawful rate of speed at which the car was being driven and without paying any attention to what was in front of the car on the road, but leaned back and talked to other passengers on the rear seat, he could not recover for injuries sustained when the car overturned because of the unlawful speed at which it was being driven.[14] Similarly, a person shown to be familiar with the speed of automobiles who makes no effort to control the speed of an automobile in which he is riding as a guest is, where such automobile is driven at an unlawful rate of speed, guilty of negligence which will preclude him from recovering damages occasioned by the negligence of the driver of another automobile.[15] In the determination of whether a guest is contributorily negligent by acquiescing in a high rate of speed, due consideration should be given to the guest's ability to judge speed, whether he ever owned or drove a car, and the extent to which he has ridden in motor vehicles.[16]

---

[7] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1028, s. 26 A.L.R. 1425, 40 A.L.R. 1338, 47 A.L.R. 327, 51 A.L.R. 581, 61 A.L.R. 1252, and 65 A.L.R. 952.

[8] Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 779, 780 (fourth occupant of a three-passenger automobile); 51 A.L.R. 585 (sitting in lap of another passenger).

[9] Vandell v. Sanders, 85 N. H. 143, 155 A. 193, 80 A.L.R. 550; Schomaker v. Havey, 291 Pa. 30, 139 A. 495, 61 A.L.R. 1241.

Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 1449.

[10] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 561.

Riding at night on the running board of a swiftly moving automobile, though offered a seat inside, constitutes negligence as a matter of law, so as to bar a recovery for injuries received when thrown from the automobile under a truck which the driver of the automobile barely escaped colliding with when driving on the wrong side of the road on a sharp curve. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 778.

[11] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 331.

[12] Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 353, s. 41 A.L.R. 778, 47 A.L.R. 331.

A policeman clothed with authority to enforce speed laws who makes no effort to control the speed of an automobile in which he is riding as a guest is, where such automobile is driven at an unlawful rate of speed, guilty of negligence which will preclude him from recovering damages occasioned by the negligence of the driver of another automobile. Hubbard v. Bartholomew, 163 Iowa, 58, 144 N. W. 13, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 443.

[13] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 331.

There was held to be no evidence whatever of any contributory negligence on the part of a back-seat guest who did not know the speed at which the car was going and who had ridden with the defendant many times and considered him a careful driver. Annotation. 65 A.L.R. 957.

[14] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 331.

§ 486. —At Railroad Crossings.—It is the duty of one riding in an automobile with another, on approaching a railroad crossing, to use ordinary care for his own protection and safety by looking or listening a reasonable distance from the railroad tracks for the approach of a train, so that he can, by the exercise of ordinary care, inform the driver of the approaching train in time to prevent a collision; and if he sees, or can see the approaching train if he looks, in time to inform the driver of the approach of the train and to cause the driver to stop the automobile and thereby prevent the collision, but fails to do so, he is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[17] The mere sight of a railroad crossing, however, by a passenger in an automobile approaching such crossing does not of itself impose a duty to warn the driver of what lies ahead.[18] While it is true that under the circumstances here suggested a guest is not required to exercise the same degree of care and watchfulness as the driver of an automobile, yet if he sits by without warning or protest and permits himself to be driven carelessly to his injury, he will be held guilty of contributory negligence.[19] Under the Pennsylvania rule, where it is contributory negligence as a matter of law to fail to stop, look, and listen before crossing a railroad track, a passenger in an automobile who knowingly suffers a violation thereof is also guilty of contributory negligence.[20] The sudden presence of imminent danger is an element in determining the contributory negligence of a passenger in an automobile approaching a railroad crossing.[1] In the determination of the contributory negligence of the passenger, it is for the jury to decide whether he exercised such care for his own safety as a reasonably prudent person would have exercised under like circumstances.[2]

---

[15] Hubbard v. Bartholomew, 163 Iowa, 58, 144 N. W. 13, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 443 (traffic officer).

[16] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 330, s. 51 A.L.R. 584.

[17] Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Markens, 88 Ga. 60, 13 S. E. 855, 14 L.R.A. 281; Crowley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 204 Iowa, 1385, 213 N. W. 403, 53 A.L.R. 964; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McLeod, 78 Miss. 334, 29 So. 76, 52 L.R.A. 954, 84 Am. St. Rep. 630; Brickell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 290, 24 N. E. 449, 17 Am. St. Rep. 648; Dean v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 129 Pa. 514, 18 A. 718, 6 L.R.A. 143, 15 Am. St. Rep. 733.

Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 315, s. 41 A.L.R. 770, 47 A.L.R. 295, 63 A.L.R. 1436, and 90 A.L.R. 990.

A passenger in an automobile performs his duty at a railroad crossing by exercising a reasonable degree of watchfulness and, when occasion arises, by warning the driver of the threatening danger. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 768.

The rule that a passenger of an automobile must use reasonable care for his own safety at railroad crossings does not apply with the same degree of strictness where he is sitting in the back seat of an auto with closed curtains as it would were he in the front seat with a like opportunity to observe as, and in close communication with, the driver. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 769.

The following cases are examples of contributory negligence on the part of a passenger in a vehicle approaching a railroad crossing:

— Where a passenger sat quietly in an automobile while approaching a railroad crossing and allowed the driver to take him into a place of danger without effectively exercising his senses for his own protection or without warning the driver or making a protest. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 771;

— Where an occupant of an automobile had a better opportunity than the driver of seeing an approaching train, but did not look in time and warned the driver too late. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 771, s. 47 A.L.R. 295, 63 A.L.R. 1436, and 90 A.L.R. 990;

— Where a normal boy of eighteen, when approaching a railroad crossing in an automobile with the curtains closed, failed to look for an approaching train, as requested by the driver of the automobile, when it could have been seen for three quarters of a mile. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 771;

— Where a woman, on approaching a railroad crossing in an automobile driven by her husband, had a better opportunity than he of observing the approach of a train and could have seen it in sufficient time to have warned him of the danger, but did not do so. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 771;

—Where the occupant of the rear seat of an automobile failed to see a railway crossing signboard and utter a timely warning, where the driver apparently had not noticed the sign. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 771;

— Where a passenger joined with the driver in testing the danger of attempting to cross the tracks in front of the train. Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Thomas, 33 Colo. 517, 81 P. 801, 70 L.R.A. 681, 3 Ann. Cas. 700.

But the mere fact that a guest in an automobile, injured as a result of a collision at a highway crossing, stated that she was willing to take a chance with the driver in going across the track without stopping or slowing up to see if a car was coming, did not, as a matter of law, indicate that she joined with the driver in testing the danger, where he had the car under full control, indicated a sense of care and responsibility by sounding the horn, and the driver and guest were both keeping a lookout for danger. Minnich v. Easton Transit Co. 267 Pa. 200, 110 A. 273, 18 A.L.R. 296.

[18] Crowley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 204 Iowa, 1385, 213 N. W. 403, 53 A.L.R. 964.

Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 315, s. 22 A.L.R. 1294, 47 A.L.R. 295, 63 A.L.R. 1436, and 90 A.L.R. 990.

§ 487. —As to Street Cars.—With respect to street railway crossings, the general rule is that the mere failure of a passenger to look and listen for approaching cars before the vehicle in which he is driving is driven across the tracks does not ordinarily constitute contributory negligence.[3] But here, as in the instance of accidents to passengers at railroad crossings,[4] the suggested inquiry for determining the contributory negligence of guests in the car is whether their conduct conformed to the conventional test of what might be expected of reasonably prudent persons under like circumstances.[5] To that extent each case must set its own pattern of liability.[6] For example, if dan-

---

[19] Howe v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 62 Minn. 71, 64 N. W. 102, 30 L.R.A. 684, 54 Am. St. Rep. 616.

Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 769, s. 47 A.L.R. 295, 63 A.L.R. 1436, and 90 A.L.R. 990.

The duty, on approaching a railroad crossing, of looking from where he can see or listening from where he can hear is incumbent upon a passenger, as well as upon the driver of an automobile, where he has an equal chance; and if the passenger does nothing to carry out this direction of the law, he is negligent on his own account. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 770.

[20] Brommer v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (C. C. A. 3d) 179 F. 577, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 924.

Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 317, s. 22 A.L.R. 1494, 47 A.L.R. 295, 63 A.L.R. 1436, and 90 A.L.R. 990.

[1] Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Thomas, 33 Colo. 517, 81 P. 801, 70 L.R.A. 681, 3 Ann. Cas. 700.

Although the failure of the enginemen to sound the whistle or ring the bell as required by statute does not excuse one riding in an automobile from the exercise of due care for his own safety, it is a circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining whether he exercised the requisite care or not, for negligence cannot be imputed to one who is deceived by circumstances calculated to mislead a prudent man. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 769.

The failure of an occupant of an automobile to warn the driver of an approaching train at a railroad crossing was held to be negligence on her part where she knew the crossing and, as they neared the crossing, was continuously looking in the direction of approaching trains and the train was visible to her and she was necessarily aware of the danger. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McNulty (C. C. A. 8th) 285 F. 97, writ of certiorari denied in 262 U. S. 746, 67 L. ed. 1212, 43 S. Ct. 521.

[2] Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 768, s. 47 A.L.R. 295, 63 A.L.R. 1436, and 9 0A.L.R. 990.

[3] Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 344, s. 22 A.L.R. 1300, 41 A.L.R. 777, 47 A.L.R. 297, and 63 A.L.R. 1445.

[4] See supra, § 416.

[5] Mahany v. Kansas City R. Co. (Mo.) 254 S. W. 16, 29 A.L.R. 817; Minnich v. Easton Transit Co. 267 Pa. 200, 110 A. 273, 18 A.L.R. 296.

A passenger in an automobile who is injured by being struck by a street car after the automobile has skidded and overturned on the track cannot recover damages from the street car company if in the exercise of common prudence he ought to have warned the driver of careless driving which caused the skidding or should have observed and directed the attention of the driver to the approaching street car. Lambert v. Eastern Massachusetts Street R. Co. 240 Mass. 495, 134 N. E. 340, 22 A.L.R. 1291.

[6] The following cases were held, upon the issue of contributory negligence, to be questions of fact:

—Where the plaintiff remained in an automobile standing on the street car tracks on the side of the street to allow passengers to alight after she saw a street car approaching from the rear until it was too late to escape injury, where another passenger of the automobile had gone back to stop the street car. Fitch v. Bay State Street R. Co. 237 Mass. 65, 129 N. E. 423, 15 A.L.R. 234;

— Where, as the automobile in which he was riding, approached a dangerous situation, the plaintiff, in response to an inquiry, discounted the dangers ahead. Wilson v. Puget Sound Electric Co. 52 Wash. 522, gers which are either reasonably manifest or known to a guest confront the driver of a vehicle approaching street railway tracks and the guest, with an adequate and proper opportunity to control or influence the situation for safety, sits by without warning or protest and permits himself to be driven carelessly to his injury, this is negligence which will bar recovery.[7]

§ 488. —At Street Intersections.—Since no duty is imposed upon a guest to keep a lookout for impending danger at street intersections,[8] he will not be viewed as contributorily negligent where an accident results at an intersection and it appears that the passenger failed to keep any watch or observe the condition of traffic in the vicinity.[9] It is clear that the law does not hold a passenger equally bound with the driver to watch for the approach of vehicular traffic at street intersections, for so to hold would require such constant interference with the driver as to increase, rather than diminish, the danger.[10]

D. Last Clear Chance

§ 489. Generally.—Inasmuch as the doctrine of last clear chance will be treated more exhaustively and in greater detail elsewhere in this work,[11] no attempt will be made here to formulate rules for determining the applicability of the doctrine in any specific case involving an automobile accident. The reader will find the doctrine discussed under the various factual situations found herein.[12]

The doctrine of last clear chance, in its origin at least, seems to have been but a phase of the doctrine of proximate cause.[13] It is frequently said that the doctrine presupposes negligence on the part of the person injured or whose property is damaged which, apart from the doctrine itself, would constitute contributory negligence so as to preclude recovery in spite of the defendant's negligence.[14]

§ 490. Statement of Rule.—In general, it may be stated that under the doctrine of last clear chance, irrespective of the negligent acts of a person injured by an automobile in placing himself in the path of the vehicle, or otherwise negligently putting himself in a position of danger, he may recover as against the defendant in the event the latter failed to use reasonable and ordinary care in avoiding the accident after he discovered the perilous position of the plaintiff.[15] The cases are not agreed upon the application of the doctrine

---

101 P. 50, 18 A.L.R. 349, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1044;

— Where one was riding on the running board of a coupé, because of the great number of its passengers, at the time of its collision with a street car. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 778.

[7] Stoker v. Tri-City R. Co. 182 Iowa, 1090, 165 N. W. 30, L.R.A.1918F, 515; Minnich v. Eastern Transit Co. 267 Pa. 200, 110 A. 273, 18 A.L.R. 296.

Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 339, s. 22 A.L.R. 1300, 47 A.L.R. 297, 63 A.L.R. 1445, and 90 A.L.R. 998.

A passenger in a street car cannot sit inactive when the danger of collision with a street car is imminent and be regarded as having exercised due care for his own safety. Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 339.

[8] See supra, § 480.

[9] Campion v. Eakle, 79 Colo. 320, 246 P. 280, 47 A.L.R. 289.

[10] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 298, s. 63 A.L.R. 1445, and 90 A.L.R. 998.

[11] See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 138, §§ 114 et seq.].

[12] As to pedestrians, see supra, § 446.

As to passing at intersections, see supra, § 452.

As to a person working in the road, see supra, § 444.

[13] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 47.

[14] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 293, s. 63 A.L.R. 1432, and 90 A.L.R. 984.

[15] Johnson v. Boston & M. R. Co. 83 N. H. 350, 143 A. 516, 61 A.L.R. 1178.

Even though the plaintiff was negligent, yet if the defendant saw the plaintiff in time to avoid the collision, the plaintiff might still recover where there was a collision of the plaintiff's motorcycle with the defendant's automobile. Rogers v. Interstate Transit Co. 212 Cal. 36, 297 P. 884, where the danger is not actually discovered. The more carefully considered cases make the application of the doctrine in such cases depend upon the duty to discover the danger. In those situations where there is a duty to keep a lookout, as in the case of automobiles being driven upon the public streets and highways, street cars operating on the streets of a city, and railroads passing over public crossings, the doctrine of last clear chance applies if the danger could have been discovered had the driver kept a proper lookout.[16] Here again, the question of the injured person's physical ability to escape enters into the problem. Obviously, if he is unable to escape and the danger ought to have been discovered, the doctrine applies.[17] But where he was physically able to escape, the great weight of authority denies the application of the doctrine where the danger was not actually discovered although it should have been.[18] The doctrine presupposes time for action. The doctrine is not applicable where the emergency is so sudden that there is no time in which to avoid the accident.[19]

The jurisdictions are not uniform in their application of this rule. While it is clear that in many instances the apparent differences in the use of the rule rest largely in the terminology employed, rather than in any basic conflict, the same practical result being achieved in either event,[20] there exists no doubt that the doctrine of last clear chance has received conflicting constructions and that varying theories regarding its applicability have been expressed by the courts.[1]

§ 491. Application to Various Situations.—In the application of the last clear chance doctrine to actions arising out of collisions between automobiles writ of certiorari denied in 284 U. S. 640, 76 L. ed. 545, 52 S. Ct. 22; Spillers v. Griffin, 109 S. C. 78, 95 S. E. 133, L.R.A. 1918D, 1193 (automobile which the plaintiff was driving struck by auto stage after the plaintiff, going in the same direction, had passed it). Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 84 (motorman, by exercise of due care after the car struck the auto, could have stopped it in time to have prevented fatal injury).

---

This doctrine was held applicable on the assumption that the plaintiff, whose automobile was struck by a street car, was negligent before he entered the zone of danger, but was afterwards in a position from which he could not escape, while it was still possible for the motorman, if he had kept a proper lookout, to have averted the accident. Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 103.

A plaintiff who negligently placed himself or his property in a situation of imminent peril and was either unconscious of the situation or unable to avoid the danger, or both, was held entitled to recover damages of the defendant who negligently inflicted the injury. Smith v. Gould, 110 W. Va. 579, 159 S. E. 53, 92 A.L.R. 28.

[16] Nicol v. Oregon-Washington R. & Nav. Co. 71 Wash. 409, 128 P. 628, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 174.

This doctrine was applied in a case where an automobile stalled on a track was struck by a train, upon the theory that the motorist properly signaled the approaching train, so that if the engineer had been on the lookout, as was his duty, he would have seen the signal in time to have avoided the accident. Ibid.

If the driver of an automobile could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered the peril of one crossing the street in such a manner as to be likely to come in contact with the vehicle and who was oblivious of his danger in time to have avoided the collision, his negligence in failing to do so, and not that of the pedestrian in walking into the side of the vehicle, was held to be the proximate cause of the injury. Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508.

A contention that the last clear chance doctrine includes knowledge of helpless peril only, and does not include the duty to exercise vigilance to discover helpless peril has been considered and has been held to be unsound. Leinbach v. Pickwick Greyhound Lines, 138 Kan. 50, 23 P. (2d) 449, 92 A.L.R. 1.

[17] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 101.

[18] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 128.

[19] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 286, s. 46 A.L.R. 1046.

The last clear chance doctrine can never apply where the party charged is required to act instantaneously and where the injury cannot be avoided by the application of all means at hand after the peril is or should have been discovered, at least in cases in which any previous negligence of the party charged cannot be said to have contributed to the injury. O'Mally v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

[20] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 53.

[1] Smith v. Gould, 110 W. Va. 579, 159 S. E. 53, 92 A.L.R. 28.

Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 47–150.

See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

and street cars at street intersections, the general rule is that a street railway company is liable for injuries due to a collision between one of its cars, negligently operated, and an automobile, notwithstanding negligence of the driver of the motorcar, if the operator of the street car, knowing of the perilous position of the automobile, could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have prevented the collision.[2] A pedestrian who is struck by an automobile while crossing a street not at a regular crossing, may recover under some circumstances, even though negligent, by reason of the last clear chance doctrine. Accordingly, where a person in charge of an automobile could, by keeping a reasonably careful lookout commensurate with the dangerous character of the vehicle and the nature of the locality, have discovered the dangerous situation of a pedestrian crossing the street in time to avoid injuring him by the exercise of reasonable care and injury results from failure to perform such duty, the doctrine of last clear chance applies.[3] The motorist is liable in such case, regardless of the pedestrian's prior negligence, if such negligence of the pedestrian has terminated or culminated in a situation of peril from which the exercise of ordinary care on his part would not thereafter extricate him.[4]

E. Imputed Negligence

§ 492. Generally.—The question frequently arises as to whether, assuming that the plaintiff in an automobile accident case is himself free from personal contributory negligence,[5] he can be so charged with the contributory negligence of another as to bar his recovery against a third person whose concurrent negligence injured him.[6] The question generally arises in actions by a passenger in an automobile injured in a collision with another car who brings suit against the driver or owner of such other's car.[7] Generally, however, the negligence of the driver cannot be considered against the occupant injured in a collision with another car unless that negligence was the sole cause of the accident,[8] unless the driver was the agent or servant of the occupant and subject to his direction and control at the time and place of the injury,[9] or unless the driver and occupant were engaged in a joint enterprise under circumstances which gave a right to share in the control of the automobile.[10] It is only in those instances where the passenger or guest has some control or authority over the operation of the car that the negligence of the driver may be imputed to him.[11] It makes no difference in this respect that the injured person was riding uninvited and without the knowledge of the driver of the vehicle.

---

[2] Washington R. & Electric Co. v. Stuart, 50 App. D. C. 74, 267 F. 632, writ of certiorari denied in 254 U. S. 649, 65 L. ed. 456, 41 S. Ct. 63; Norman v. Charlotte Electric R. Co. 167 N. C. 533, 83 S. E. 835, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 508.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 284, s. 46 A.L.R. 1047.

Where if the motorman of a street car did not avail himself of the last opportunity to avoid a collision with a stalled automobilist, after his helplessness was or should have been discovered, the street railway could not be relieved from liability because of the motorist's prior negligence. Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 284, s. 46 A.L.R. 1047.

[3] Mosso v. E. H. Stanton Co. 75 Wash. 220, 134 P. 941, L.R.A.1916A, 943.

[4] Ibid.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1191, s. 67 A.L.R. 328.

See also, § 490, supra.

[5] See supra, §§ 408 et seq.

[6] For general discussion of the doctrine of imputed contributory negligence, see Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 148, §§ 121 et seq.].

[7] See supra, §§ 475–488.

[8] Drury v. Franke, 247 Ky. 758, 57 S. W. (2d) 969, 88 A.L.R. 917.

It is well settled that where a person is riding in a vehicle over which he has no authority and where he has no control over the driver and has no reason to suspect a want of care, skill, or sobriety upon his part and is injured by the concurring negligence of the driver and some third person or corporation, the negligence of the driver is not imputed to him so as to prevent a recovery for damages from the other tort-feasor. Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 631.

[9] See supra, § 384.

[10] See supra, § 346.

[11] Corley v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 90 Kan. 70, 133 P. 555, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 764;

The question of imputed contributory negligence may also arise in an action by the owner of an automobile against the driver or owner of another car for damages to the car caused by the concurring negligence of the defendant and a bailee in possession of the car at the time of the injury.[12]

It has been held that a person riding in a hired automobile as a guest of the other passengers may recover against the owner for injuries caused by the chauffeur's negligence in driving at an unsafe rate of speed, although his fellow passengers demanded a high rate of speed, as he is not bound by the acts and language of others in the automobile.[13]

§ 493. Imputing Bailee's Negligence to Bailor.—In accord with the modern rule that a bailee's contributory negligence is not imputable to the bailor in the latter's action for an injury to, or destruction of, the subject of bailment,[14] the contributory negligence of one to whom an automobile is loaned by its owner and who is using it for his own pleasure or benefit is not imputable to the owner so as to prevent the latter's holding another liable for negligently injuring the car,[15] unless the owner retains some direction or control over the action of the bailee.[16] The fact that the bailee may be the bailor's employee is not sufficient to preclude a recovery by the bailor unless the bailee was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury.[17] An employee's negligence contributing to an injury to his employer's car is not imputable to the employer where the employee, as permitted by the employer, is using the car for his own pleasure.[18] Where, however, a statute makes the owner liable for any damage done by reason of the negligence of one who is driving it with his consent,[19] the contributory negligence of the borrower of an automobile in case the car is injured by a third person is imputable to the owner.[20]

§ 494. Imputing Driver's Negligence to Other Occupant.—Modern authorities have, with few exceptions, adopted the rule that the contributory negligence of the driver of a vehicle is not imputable to another occupant of the vehicle who has no control or authority over the driver so as to prevent the former, when injured by the concurrent negligence of the driver and another person, from recovering from the third person.[1] In accord with this rule, it is well established that the contributory negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be imputed to a guest or passenger riding therein who has no control or authority over the driver or over the operation of the car; a guest having no such control or authority over the driver or the automobile is not precluded from recovering from a third party for injuries received in a collision due to the concurring negligence of such third party and the driver [2] in

---

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bell, 58 Okla. 84, 159 P. 336, L.R.A.1917A, 543.
Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 631.

[12] See supra, § 356.

[13] Annotation: 9 Ann. Cas. 408.

[14] See BAILMENTS [Also 3 R. C. L. p. 146, § 70].

[15] Morgan County v. Payne, 207 Ala. 674 93 So. 628, 30 A.L.R. 1243; Cain v. Wickens, 81 N. H. 99, 122 A. 800, 30 A.L.R. 1246; Gibson v. Bessemer & L. E. R. Co. 226 Pa. 198, 75 A. 194, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 689, 18 Ann. Cas. 535; Lloyd v. Northern P. R. Co. 107 Wash. 57, 181 P. 29, 6 A.L.R. 307.
Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 316, s. 30 A.L.R. 1248.

[16] Morgan County v. Payne, 207 Ala. 674, 93 So. 628, 30 A.L.R. 1243.

[17] Cain v. Wickens, 81 N. H. 99, 122 A. 800, 30 A.L.R. 1246.

[18] Lloyd v. Northern P. R. Co. 107 Wash. 57, 181 P. 29, 6 A.L.R. 307.

[19] See supra, §§ 397 et seq.

[20] Secured Finance Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 207 Iowa, 1105, 224 N. W. 88, 61 A.L.R. 855.
Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 878.

[1] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 158, § 132].

[2] Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Watkins (C. C. A. 5th) 37 F. (2d) 710, citing R. C.

which the guest does not participate.[3] Moreover, it does not make any difference that the injured person was riding uninvited and without the knowledge of the driver of the vehicle.[4] Under the rule stated, the contributory negligence of a chauffeur cannot be imputed to one who is traveling in the vehicle with him by invitation of the owner of the car.[5] Generally speaking, the negligence of the driver of an automobile can be imputed to a passenger only when the passenger has authority to direct the driver or has charge of the car,[6] when the driver is under the control or authority of the occupant,[7] or when the passenger is shown to have co-operated in running the car.[8] The test is whether the passenger had a right to control or to share in the control of the operator of the vehicle.[9] Generally, negligence of the driver

---

L.; Winona v. Botzet (C. C. A. 8th) 169 F. 321, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 204; Perkins v. Galloway, 194 Ala. 265, 69 So. 875, L.R.A. 1916E, 1190, second appeal in 198 Ala. 658, 73 So. 956; Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327; Lynn v. Goodwin, 170 Cal. 112, 148 P. 927, L.R.A.1915E, 588; Campion v. Ekle, 79 Colo. 320, 246 P. 280, 47 A.L.R. 289; St. Mary's Academy v. Solomon, 77 Colo. 463, 238 P. 22, 42 A.L.R. 964; Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas 487; Crowley v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. 204 Iowa, 1385, 213 N. W. 403, 53 A.L.R. 964 (gratuitous guest); Hubbard v. Bartholomew, 163 Iowa, 58, 144 N. W. 13, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 443; Burizo v. Joplin & P. R. Co. 102 Kan. 287, 171 P. 351, L.R.A.1918C, 997; Corley v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 90 Kan. 70, 133 P. 555, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 764; Drury v. Franke, 247 Ky. 758, 57 S. W. (2d) 969, 88 A.L.R. 917; Beard v. Klusmeier, 158 Ky. 153, 164 S. W. 319, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 342; Vitale v. Checker Cab Co. 166 La. 527, 117 So. 579, 59 A.L.R. 148; Jacobs v. Jacobs, 141 La. 272, 74 So. 992, L.R.A.1917F, 253; Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Merriken, 147 Md. 572, 128 A. 277, 41 A.L.R. 763; Shultz v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 193 Mass. 309, 79 N. E. 873, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 597, 118 Am. St. Rep. 502, 9 Ann. Cas. 402; Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463; Carson v. Turrish, 140 Minn. 445, 168 N. W. 349, L.R.A. 1918F, 154; Kokesh v. Price, 136 Minn. 304, 161 N. W. 715, 23 A.L.R. 643; Hines v. McCulliers, 121 Miss. 666, 83 So. 734, citing R. C. L.; Applebee v. Ross, — Mo. —, 48 S. W. (2d) 900, 82 A.L.R. 288; Laird v. Berthelote, 63 Mont. 122, 206 P. 445, citing R. C. L.; Mick v. Oberle, 124 Neb. 433, 246 N. W. 869, citing R. C. L.; Jessup v. Davis, 115 Neb. 1, 211 N. W. 190, 56 A.L.R. 1403, writ of error dismissed in 276 U. S. 593, 72 L. ed. 722, 48 S. Ct. 300; Smith v. Atlantic & Y. R. Co. 200 N. C. 177, 156 S. E. 508, citing R. C. L.; Odom v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 193 N. C. 442, 137 S. E. 313, citing R. C. L.; Parker v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 181 N. C. 95, 106 S. E. 755, citing R. C. L.; Chambers v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 37 N. D. 377, 163 N. W. 824, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 954; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bell, 58 Okla. 84, 159 P. 336, L.R.A.1917A, 543; Alio v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 312 Pa. 453, 167 A. 326, 90 A.L.R. 980; Richards v. Warner Co. 311 Pa. 50, 166 A. 496, 87 A.L.R. 1159; Minnich v. Easton Transit Co. 267 Pa. 200, 110 A. 273, 18 A.L.R. 296; Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967; Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S. W. 32, 47 A.L.R. 323; Dallas v. Maxwell (Tex.) 248 S. W. 667, 27 A.L.R. 927; Leclair v. Boudreau, 101 Vt. 270, 143 A. 401, 63 A.L.R. 1427; Reiter v. Grober, 173 Wis. 493, 181 N. W. 739, 18 A.L.R. 362; O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 550, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 631; 1 B. R. C. 597.

In the absence of facts establishing a relationship other than that of host and guest between the driver and the occupants of an automobile, the negligence of the driver is not imputable to the occupants. Walker v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. 214 Wis. 519, 252 N. W. 721, 92 A.L.R. 680.

The negligence of the driver of an automobile in failing to yield the right of way to a car on his right at a street intersection cannot be imputed to his guest. Campion v. Ekle, 79 Colo. 320, 246 P. 280, 47 A.L.R. 289.

One who voluntarily becomes a passenger in a conveyance does not thereby so far identity himself with the driver that he cannot recover for an injury negligently inflicted by a third person if the driver's negligence was a contributing cause. Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 150 P. 524, L.R.A.1915F, 876, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 264.

[3] Bresee v. Angeles Traction Co. 149 Cal. 131, 85 P. 152, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1059.

[4] See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 163, § 137].

[5] St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bell, 58 Okla. 84, 159 P. 336, L.R.A.1917A, 543.

[6] Applebee v. Ross, — Mo. —, 48 S. W. (2d) 900, 82 A.L.R. 288; Odom v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 193 N. C. 442, 137 S. E. 313, citing R. C. L.

[7] Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S. W. 32, 47 A.L.R. 323.

[8] Chambers v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 37 N. D. 377, 163 N. W. 824, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 954.

[9] Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280.

Operation, ownership, and control are essential elements in the doctrine of imputing negligence of a driver to guest in an automobile. Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Merriken, 147 Md. 572, 128 A. 277, 41 A.L.R. 763.

Negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be imputed to one merely riding with him; but where the driver is in an enterprise of any kind for the benefit of the of an automobile is imputable to a passenger only where the driver is the agent or servant of the passenger at the time of the negligent act and the act is committed in the scope of the agent's or servant's employment,[10] or when the driver and passenger are business partners or engaged in a joint enterprise and the operation of the vehicle is in furtherance of the business.[11] In at least one jurisdiction, however, the negligence of the driver of an automobile is imputable to an adult riding with him as a guest or ordinary passenger.[12]

The question whether the negligence of the driver is imputable to one riding with him is distinct from the question of the care required of one riding in an automobile driven by another as affecting his right to recover against a third person. Persons riding in an automobile driven by another, even though not chargeable with the driver's negligence, are not absolved from all personal care for their own safety, but are under the duty of exercising reasonable or ordinary care to avoid injury.[13]

§ 495. —To Passenger for Hire.—It is universally conceded that the negligence of the driver of an automobile for hire is not attributable to a passenger having no control over the driver further than to indicate the route to be followed or the place to which the car is to be driven.[14] Even courts which adopt the minority view imputing the contributory negligence of the driver of an automobile to passengers in the automobile have refused to extend this rule to private carriers for hire.[15]

§ 496. —Effect of Owner's Presence.—The owner's presence in his car at the time an injury occurs while it is being operated by another will not of itself preclude his right to recover for injury or damage.[16] Such presence, however, is an element tending to show that the car was being driven by his party riding with him, is his employee or under his control, or where the automobile is under his control and direction and owned by him and he has a right to control and direct it, whether he assumes such right or not, he is held for the negligence of the driver. Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221.

---

[10] See infra, § 499.

[11] See infra, § 500.

[12] Ruth v. Vroom, 245 Mich. 88, 222 N. W. 155, 62 A.L.R. 1528; Granger v. Farrant, 179 Mich. 19, 146 N. W. 218, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 453.

Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 632; 11 B. R. C. 611.

The Wisconsin court, which formerly applied the doctrine of imputed negligence to occupants of an automobile (Puhr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 171 Wis. 154, 176 N. W. 767, 14 A.L.R. 1334; Lauson v. Fond du Lac, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N. W. 629, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 135 Am. St. Rep. 30) has since repudiated that doctrine and now follows the general rule that a mere guest is not chargeable with the negligence of the driver of an automobile (Reiter v. Groher, 173 Wis. 493, 181 N. W. 739, 18 A.L.R. 362. Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 933; 11 B. R. C. 611).

[13] See supra, § 475.

[14] Dale v. Denver City Tramway Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 173 F. 787, 19 Ann. Cas. 1223; Perkins v. Galloway, 194 Ala. 265, 69 So. 875, L.R.A.1916E, 1190; Roby v. Kansas City S. R. Co. 130 La. 88, 58 So. 696, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 355; Meyers v. Tri-State Auto. Co. 121 Minn. 68, 140 N. W. 184, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113; Odom v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 193 N. C. 442, 137 S. E. 313, citing R. C. L.; Hardie v. Barrett, 257 Pa. 42, 101 A. 75, L.R.A.1917F, 444; Wachsmith v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 233 Pa. 465, 82 A. 755, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 679; Wilson v. Puget Sound Electric R. Co. 52 Wash. 522, 101 P. 50, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1044; Godfrey v. Cooper, 46 Ont. L. Rep. 565, 51 D. L. R. 455, 10 B. R. C. 134.

Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 633.

[15] Lachow v. Kimmick, 263 Mich. 1, 248 N. W. 531, 90 A.L.R. 626.

One who, without protest, permits the chauffeur of a hired automobile to drive at a manifestly dangerous speed on the wrong side of the road cannot hold the owner of a vehicle with which the car comes into collision liable for the resulting injury to himself. Hardie v. Barrett, 257 Pa. 42, 101 A. 75, L.R.A.1917F, 444.

[16] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 291.

In Virginia R. & Power Co. v. Gorsuch, 120 Va. 655, 91 S. E. 632, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 838, it was held that the negligence of the plaintiff's husband in operating her automobile could not be imputed to her where she had loaned the car to her husband for a week to use in his work in another place and she was riding with him in the car while she was visiting him at the time she was injured in a collision between the automobile and a street car.

servant or agent or that its operation was under his control, so that the negligence of the driver is imputable to him; and if the owner and the driver are engaged in a joint enterprise, the negligence of the driver is imputable to the owner;[17] where the owner of a truck who is its regular driver, permits an unlicensed driver to operate it while he, the owner, sits on the seat beside him, he is chargeable with the acts of the driver; and if the driver is guilty of contributory negligence, the owner cannot recover against a third person.[18]

§ 497. —To Infant.—In accord with the rule of the majority of the jurisdictions that in an action by, or on behalf of, an infant for personal injury, the fault or contributory negligence of the parent or custodian cannot be imputed to the child,[19] the negligence of a parent, a guardian, or a custodian of an infant child in driving an automobile in which the child is riding will not be imputed to the child to prevent a recovery by it for injuries inflicted by the negligence of a third person.[20] Nor is the negligence of a parent in permitting a child to be upon the street without adequate attendance imputed to the child in an action by it for injuries inflicted upon it by the negligent operation of an automobile in the street.[1] However, in several jurisdictions the view is taken that the negligence of the parent or custodian contributing to the injury of a child should be imputed to it so as to bar a recovery by or on behalf of the child if the child itself is not capable of exercising the ordinary care of an adult.[2] In these jurisdictions, in an action on behalf of such an infant for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, the negligence of its parent in operating the automobile in which the child was riding will be imputed to the child.[3]

§ 498. —To Husband, Wife, or Other Relative.—The general rule that as between the driver of an automobile and a passenger therein, the negligence of the former is not imputable to the latter so as to bar recovery against a third person whose concurrent negligence caused an injury to the occupant,[4] is not changed by the fact that the occupants of the automobile are husband and wife.[5] In the absence of some control or authority over the operation of the car by the wife, the negligence of a husband in driving a motor vehicle is not imputable to his wife, who is riding with him as a passenger[6] and will not, where damages for personal injuries to a wife are her own separate property and are recoverable by her without joining her husband in the action,[7] prevent her from holding a third person liable for injuries incurred by reason of the concurring negligence of her husband and such third person.[8] A wife, when traveling in an automobile driven by and under the control of her husband, is in no different position from that which she would occupy if the driver of the vehicle had been a person other than her husband.[9] The husband's contributory negligence is not imputable to her when she is riding with him by virtue of the marital relationship or of the fact that she is the owner of the automobile.[10] It is only when the husband is acting as agent for the wife in the matter at hand[11] or when they are engaged in a joint or common enterprise and participate jointly in the operation of the automobile that the negligence of the one driving the automobile becomes contributory negligence on the part of the other and defeats recovery against a third person.[12]

---

[17] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 291, 292.

[18] Zandras v. Moffett, 286 Pa. 477, 133 A. 817, 47 A.L.R. 699.

[19] See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 155, § 129].

[20] Burzio v. Joplin & P. R. Co. 102 Kan. 287, 171 P. 351, L.R.A.1918C, 997; Northern Texas Traction Co. v. Thetford (Tex. Civ. App.) 28 S. W. (2d) 906 (modified on other grounds in (Tex.) 44 S. W. (2d) 902), citing R. C. L.; Southwestern Bell Teleph. Co. v. Dodd (Tex. Civ. App.) 1 S. W. (2d) 501, citing R. C. L.; Gulesserian v. Madison R. Co. 172 Wis. 400, 179 N. W. 573, 15 A.L.R. 406.

Annotation: 15 A.L.R. 414; 90 A.L.R. 630.

Even under the rule adopted in Michigan, holding that the negligence of a driver of an automobile is attributable to a passenger riding therein (see supra, § 494), reasoning on the facts that the law of imputed negligence is based on the theory of a fiction of a relationship of principal and agent, and that such relationship cannot exist as to an infant, it has been held that the negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be imputed to an infant who was riding in the car as a guest. Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 633.

[1] Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co. 180 Cal. 32, 179 P. 203, 15 A.L.R. 401.

[2] See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 153, § 128].

[3] Gallagher v. Johnson, 237 Mass. 455, 130 N. E. 174, 15 A.L.R. 411.

Annotation: 15 A.L.R. 423.

[4] See supra, § 494.

[5] Kokesh v. Price, 136 Minn. 304, 161 N. W. 715, 23 A.L.R. 643.

[6] Southern R. Co. v. King, 128 Ga. 383, 57 S. E. 687, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 829, 119 Am. St. Rep. 390; Hazel v. Hoopeston-Danville Motor Bus Co. 310 Ill. 38, 141 N. E. 392, 30 A.L.R. 491; Denton v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Kan. 51, 133 P. 558, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 820, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 639 (second appeal 97 Kan. 498, 155 P. 812); Kokesh v. Price, 136 Minn. 304, 161 N. W. 715, 23 A.L.R. 643; Marshall v. Olson, 102 Or. 502, 202 P. 736, citing R. C. L.; Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280; Knoxville R. & Light Co. v. Vangilder, 132 Tenn. 487, 178 S. W. 1117, L.R.A.1916A,

The mere fact that the automobile in which the plaintiff was riding when injured was being driven by a relative does not take the case out of the general rule that the driver's negligence is not attributable to a passenger.[13]

§ 499. —To Employer or to Fellow Employee.—Where a relation of principal and agent or master and servant exists between the driver and an occupant of an automobile, the rule is too well settled to need support of authority that the negligence of the agent or the servant is imputable to the principal or master and will prevent his recovery against a third person.[14]

1111; Virginia R. & Power Co. v. Gorsuch, 120 Va. 655, 91 S. E. 632, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 838; Brubaker v. Iowa County, 174 Wis. 574, 183 N. W. 690, 18 A.L.R. 303.

Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 634; 11 B. R. C. 613.

The negligence of a man is not imputed to his wife riding with him in an automobile from the mere fact of the marital relationship between them. Brubaker v. Iowa County, 174 Wis. 574, 183 N. W. 690, 18 A.L.R. 303.

[7] See HUSBAND AND WIFE [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 966].

[8] Hazel v. Hoopeston-Danville Motor Bus Co. 310 Ill. 38, 141 N. E. 392, 30 A.L.R. 491; Denton v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Kan. 51, 133 P. 558, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 820, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 639; Vitale v. Checker Cab Co. 166 La. 527, 117 So. 579, 59 A.L.R. 148; Knoxville R. & Light Co. v. Vangilder, 132 Tenn. 487, 178 S. W. 1117, L.R.A.1916A, 1111.

Annotation: 59 A.L.R. 153.

Where a wife may sue in her own name to recover damages for injuries to her person and her husband has no interest in the recovery, his negligence as driver of the conveyance in which she was riding at the time of the injury will not be imputed to her so as to preclude her recovering against the other negligent person where, in the particular instance, the relationship of principal and agent or master and servant did not exist between them. Louisville R. Co. v. McCarthy, 129 Ky. 814, 112 S. W. 925, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 230, 130 Am. St. Rep. 494.

Except as to those jurisdictions in which damages recoverable by the wife are community property and subject to the control and disposition of the husband, it is generally held that the negligence of the husband will not, because of the marital relation, be imputed to the wife in an action brought to recover for personal injuries sustained by her. Annotation: 59 A.L.R. 154.

[9] Vitale v. Checker Cab Co. 166 La. 527, 117 So. 579, 59 A.L.R. 148.

[10] Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280.

[11] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 151].

The relationship of principal and agent or that of master and servant does not necessarily arise from the fact that the wife owns the car which the husband is driving in which she is a passenger; she is not, in such case, prima facie chargeable with the husband's negligence in driving the car. Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280.

[12] Lindquist v. Thierman, 216 Iowa, 170, 248 N. W. 504, 87 A.L.R. 893.

[13] Burzio v. Joplin & P. R. Co. 102 Kan. 287, 171 P. 351, L.R.A. 1918C, 997; Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 150 P. 524, L.R.A. 1915F, 876, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 264; Southwestern Bell Teleph. Co. v. Doell (Tex. Civ. App.) 1 S. W. (2d) 501, citing R. C. L.

Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 636; 11 B. R. C. 617.

[14] Secured Finance Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 207 Iowa, 1105, 224 N. W. 88, 61 A.L.R. 855; Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221; Kokesh v. Price, 136 Minn. 304, 161 N. W. 715, 23 A.L.R. 643; Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280.

Annotation: 11 B. R. C. 629–631.

The negligence of an employee in driving a motor vehicle is held to be attributable to his employer riding with him, since the latter has control or authority over his servant's acts.

Where two employees of the same employer are riding in a vehicle, the contributory negligence of the one who drives cannot ordinarily be imputed to the other who has no control over the management of the vehicle.[15] Thus, the negligence of the driver of a motor vehicle is not imputable to a fellow servant who was riding therein when an accident occurred who had no control in driving the automobile.[16] The driver of a motor truck in the business of his employer and a helper riding on the truck to assist in unloading it are not engaged in a joint enterprise within the rule that negligence on the part of the operator is imputable to others accompanying him in the prosecution of the joint enterprise.[17]

§ 500. —To Member of Joint Enterprise.—If two or more persons unite in the joint prosecution of a common purpose under such circumstances that each has authority, express or implied, to act for all in respect of the control of the means or agencies employed to execute such common purpose, the negligence of one in the management thereof will be imputed to the others.[18] Accordingly, if an occupant of an automobile is engaged in a joint enterprise with the driver and is injured by reason of the concurrent negligence of the driver and a third person, the driver's contributory negligence will be imputed to such occupant and will bar a recovery by him against the third person.[19]

§ 501. —Test of Joint Enterprise.—The test of a joint enterprise between the driver of an automobile and another occupant is whether they were jointly operating and controlling the movements of the vehicle.[20] In order to constitute a joint enterprise so that the negligence of the driver of an automobile may be imputed to an occupant of the car, it is generally held that there must be a common purpose and a community of interest in the object of the enterprise and an equal right to direct and control the conduct of each other with respect thereto.[21] In other words, the passenger, as well as the driver, must be entitled to a voice in the control and direction of the vehicle.[1] There must be a community in the object and purpose of the undertaking and an equal right to direct and govern the movements and conduct of each other in respect thereof.[2] Each must have the control of the means or agencies employed to prosecute the common purpose.[3] The use of an automobile for the mutual benefit of co-owners is such a joint control that either one is the agent of the other in the conduct of their common undertaking, so as to render one chargeable with the contributory negligence of the other.[4]

---

[15] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 160, §§ 134, 135].

[16] Annotation: 90 A.L.R. 637; 11 B. R. C. 631.

A salesman employed by an ice cream manufacturer to deliver the cream upon a truck is not chargeable with the negligence of the driver of the truck who is employed by the common employer and over whom the salesman has no control in driving the truck into collision with a street car. Stoker v. Tri-City R. Co. 182 Iowa, 1090, 165 N. W. 30, L.R.A.1918F, 515.

[17] Anderson v. Asphalt Distributing Co. — Mo. —, 55 S. W. (2d) 688, 86 A.L.R. 1033.

[18] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 149, § 122].

[19] Union Traction Co. v. Gaunt, 193 Ind. 109, 135 N. E. 486, 23 A.L.R. 649; Lindquist v. Thierman, 216 Iowa, 170, 248 N. W. 504, 87 A.L.R. 893; Wiley v. Dobbins, 204 Iowa, 174, 214 N. W. 529, 62 A.L.R. 432; Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221; Sharp v. Sproat, 111 Kan. 735, 208 P. 613, 26 A.L.R. 1421; Jacobs v. Jacobs, 141 La. 272, 74 So. 992, L.R.A. 1917F, 253; Beaucage v. Mercer, 206 Mass. 492, 92 N. E. 774, 138 Am. St. Rep. 401; Kokesh v. Price, 136 Minn. 304, 161 N. W. 715, 23 A.L.R. 643; Anderson v. Asphalt Distributing Co. — Mo. —, 55 S. W. (2d) 688, 86 A.L.R. 1033; Mick v. Oberle, 124 Neb. 433, 246 N. W. 869, citing R. C. L.; Harber v. Graham, 105 N. J. L. 213, 143 A. 340, 61 A.L.R. 1232; Christopherson v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 28 N. D. 128, 147 N. W. 791, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 683; Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280 (dictum); Lucey v. John Hope & Sons Engraving & Mfg. Co. 45 R. I. 103, 120 A. 62, citing R. C. L.; O'Brien v. Woldson, 149 Wash. 192, 270 P. 304, 62 A.L.R. 436; Brubaker v. Iowa County, 174 Wis. 574, 183 N. W. 690, 18 A.L.R. 303.

Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 441, s. 85 A.L.R. 630; 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 628; 11 B. R. C. 620.

This rule is founded on a theory of partnership or a relationship akin to partnership. Kokesh v. Price, 136 Minn. 304, 161 N. W. 715, 23 A.L.R. 643.

[20] Kokesh v. Price, 136 Minn. 304, 161 N. W. 715, 23 A.L.R. 643; Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S. W. 32, 47 A.L.R. 323.

[21] Campbell v. Campbell, 104 Vt. 468, 162 A. 379, 85 A.L.R. 626.

In recent years there have been many attempts to charge passengers riding as guests of an automobile owner or driver with the negligence of the driver on the theory of a joint enterprise, but the courts have uniformly held that one who is merely a passenger cannot be deemed to be engaged in a joint enterprise with the driver for the purpose of imputing to him the negligence of the latter.[5] Clearly, a mere guest having no voice in directing and governing the movements of the automobile cannot be said to be engaged in a joint adventure with the driver within the meaning of the law of negligence so as to bar recovery from a third party for injuries sustained on account of the latter's negligence, even though the one with whom the guest was riding was guilty of contributory negligence.[6] It is not sufficient that the passenger indicates the route or that both parties have certain plans in common, such as a "joy ride;" the community of interest must be such that the passenger is entitled to be heard in the control and management of the vehicle—such as practically to amount to joint or common possession thereof.[7] Nor does the fact that the guest agreed to pay the expenses of a trip necessarily establish a joint enterprise.[8] However, under the particular circumstances of the case, the jury may find that an agreement between the owner of an automobile and another to take a trip and to share the expenses equally creates a joint enterprise within the meaning of the law of negligence.[9] This is so where each has control and authority as to the manner of driving.[10] Again, where all the occupants of an automobile are engaged in the common purpose of a pleasure drive and each might direct the movement or operation of the car, the negligence of the driver is imputed to them in an action to recover damages for injuries against the owner of another car which collided with the one in which they were riding.[11]

---

[1] Union Traction Co. v. Gaunt, 193 Ind. 109, 135 N. E. 486, 23 A.L.R. 649; Mick v. Oberle, 124 Neb. 433, 246 N. W. 869, citing R. C. L.

Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1079, 1080, s. 63 A.L.R. 921, 80 A.L.R. 312, and 95 A.L.R. 857.

[2] Jessup v. Davis, 115 Neb. 1, 211 N. W. 190, 56 A.L.R. 1403, writ of error dismissed in 276 U. S. 593, 72 L. ed. 722, 48 S. Ct. 300.

[3] Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S. W. 32, 47 A.L.R. 323; Campbell v. Campbell, 104 Vt. 468, 162 A. 379, 85 A.L.R. 626.

[4] Clark v. Hampton, 83 N. H. 524, 145 A. 265, 61 A.L.R. 1171.

[5] Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1078, s. 63 A.L.R. 921, 80 A.L.R. 312, and 95 A.L.R. 857; 11 B. R. C. 620.

[6] Bushnell v. Bushnell, 103 Conn. 583, 131 A. 432, 44 A.L.R. 785; Corley v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 90 Kan. 70, 133 P. 555, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 764; Jacobs v. Jacobs, 141 La. 272, 74 So. 992, L.R.A.1917F, 253; Cotton v. Willmar & S. F. R. Co. 99 Minn. 366, 109 N. W. 835, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 643, 116 Am. St. Rep. 422, 9 Ann. Cas. 935; Jessup v. Davis, 115 Neb. 1, 211 N. W. 190, 56 A.L.R. 1403, writ of error dismissed in 276 U. S. 593, 72 L. ed. 722, 48 S. Ct. 300; Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 586, 280 S. W. 32, 47 A.L.R. 323; West v. Bruns (Tex. Civ. App.) 294 S. W. 235, citing R. C. L.; Brubaker v. Iowa County, 174 Wis. 574, 183 N. W. 690, 18 A.L.R. 303; Reiter v. Grober, 173 Wis. 493, 181 N. W. 739, 18 A.L.R. 362.

Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1078, 1079, s. 63 A.L.R. 921, 80 A.L.R. 315, and 95 A.L.R. 857; 11 B. R. C. 620.

One accepting an invitation to ride in an automobile does not thereby engage in such a common enterprise or joint venture with the driver that neither would be liable to the other for an act of negligence. Jacobs v. Jacobs, 141 La. 272, 74 So. 992, L.R.A.1917F, 253.

A mother who, desiring to visit other children, has procured a son to take her in his automobile to their place of residence, cannot be deemd to have been engaged with him in a joint enterprise, where the evidence fails to show that she had the right to direct his movements and conduct in any particular, and did show that she had agreed to pay the expenses of the trip. Campbell v. Campbell, 104 Vt. 468, 162 A. 379, 85 A.L.R. 626.

The mere request of a mother who is riding in an automobile belonging to, and operated by, her son at his invitation that sometime during the ride he should call at a certain house and obtain a cake that a friend had promised to make for her does not make the trip a joint enterprise or make her responsible for the negligence of her son or for injuries to which she did not personally contribute. Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 150 P. 524, L.R.A.1915F, 876.

[7] Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1080, s. 63 A.L.R. 921, 80 A.L.R. 312, and 95 A.L.R. 857; 11 B. R. C. 620.

[8] Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1081, s. 63 A.L.R. 921, 80 A.L.R. 312, and 95 A.LL.R 857; 11 B. R. C. 620.

A wife, when riding with her husband, is not ordinarily to be deemed to be engaged in a joint enterprise with her husband within the law of negligence.[12] The test for determining whether the husband and wife are engaged in a joint enterprise is whether they are jointly operating or controlling the movements of the vehicle in which they are riding.[13] A husband and wife who jointly own an automobile in which one or the other indifferently acts as driver are, in using it, engaged in a joint adventure, so as to make the contributory negligence of one in operating it imputable to the other.[14]

§ 502. —To Prevent Recovery against Driver.—The doctrine that the negligence of a member of a joint or common enterprise in the operation of an automobile is imputable to other members riding with him is applicable only as regards third persons, not as to parties to such enterprise.[15] When one member of a joint enterprise or common adventure is injured by the negligent operation of an automobile by another member while operating it within the scope of the enterprise and an action is brought against the driver, the doctrine of imputed negligence is inapplicable and will not bar a recovery.[16] In other words, the fact that both occupants of an automobile are engaged in a joint enterprise does not preclude one of them from recovering damages from the other for injuries sustained through the latter's negligent driving.[17] Accordingly, where the rule prevails that one spouse may maintain an action against the other for personal injuries,[18] the doctrine of joint enterprise does not prevent a woman from holding her husband liable for personal injuries inflicted upon her by his negligence in the operation of an automobile in which both were returning to their home from the performance of an errand.[19]

---

[9] Beaucage v. Mercer, 206 Mass. 492, 92 N. E. 774, 138 Am. St. Rep. 401; O'Brien v. Woldson, 149 Wash. 192, 270 P. 304, 62 A.L.R. 436.

[10] Christopherson v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 28 N. D. 128, 147 N. W. 791, L.R.A.1915A, 761.

[11] Wiley v. Dobbins, 204 Iowa, 174, 214 N. W. 529, 62 A.L.R. 432.

[12] Kokesh v. Price, 136 Minn. 304, 161 N. W. 715, 23 A.L.R. 643; Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280; Brubaker v. Iowa County, 174 Wis. 574, 183 N. W. 690, 18 A.L.R. 303.

Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1082, s. 63 A.L.R. 921, 80 A.L.R. 315, and 95 A.L.R. 857.

The mere fact that a man and his wife are journeying together in a motor car from one city to another for the purpose of changing their abode, with the intention on his part of teaching and on her part of preparing for and taking a business position does not constitute their journey a joint enterprise so as to impute to her his negligence in handling the car. Brubaker v. Iowa County, 174 Wis. 574, 183 N. W. 690, 18 A.L.R. 303.

[13] Kokesh v. Price, 136 Minn. 304, 161 N. W. 715, 23 A.L.R. 643.

[14] Lindquist v. Thierman, 216 Iowa, 170, 248 N. W. 504, 87 A.L.R. 893; Archer v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co. 215 Wis. 509, 255 N. W. 67, 95 A.L.R. 851.

[15] Harber v. Graham, 105 N. J. L. 213, 143 A. 340, 61 A.L.R. 1232.

[16] Pepper v. Morrill (C. C. A. 1st) 24 F. (2d) 320, 57 A.L.R. 750; Bushnell v. Bushnell, 103 Conn. 583, 131 A. 432, 44 A.L.R. 785; Harber v. Graham, 105 N. J. L. 213, 143 A. 340, 61 A.L.R. 1232; Campbell v. Campbell, 104 Vt. 468, 162 A. 379, 85 A.L.R. 626.

Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 442, s. 85 A.L.R. 632.

[17] Harber v. Graham, 105 N. J. L. 213, 143 A. 340, 61 A.L.R. 1232; O'Brien v. Woldson, 149 Wash. 192, 270 P. 304, 62 A.L.R. 436.

[18] See HUSBAND AND WIFE [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 966].

[19] Bushnell v. Bushnell, 103 Conn. 583, 131

F. Comparative Negligence

§ 503. Generally.—In the vast majority of jurisdictions the doctrine of comparative negligence has been expressly repudiated,[20] so that where a person injured by a motor vehicle is contributorily negligent, he will be barred from recovery therefor, irrespective of the relative degrees of negligence of those participating in the accident,[1] and notwithstanding how slight or disproportionate to the accident his own contributory negligence may have been, provided the same proximately contributed to its occurrence.[2] In some jurisdictions local statutes expressly preserve certain phases of the comparative negligence doctrine[3] and measure the plaintiff's right to recovery by the extent and degree of his contributory negligence.[4]

VIII. INSURANCE

A. In General

§ 504. Generally.—A policy of insurance is an agreement by which one person, for a consideration, promises to pay money or its equivalent, or to do some act of value to another, on the destruction or injury of something by specified perils.[1] A modern branch of insurance which bids fair to contribute largely to the bulk of the insurance law is found in policies, which have become common, covering automobiles, and those indemnifying against liability for injuries thereby.

It is hardly necessary to say that automobile insurance is a comparatively new branch of the insurance business. However, as a result of the extensive use of automobiles in recent years, many questions arising in connection with automobile insurance contracts have already been passed on by the courts. The subject has also been dealt with by the legislatures of some jurisdictions wherein statutes have been enacted authorizing automobile insurance.[2]

§ 505. Nature.—Insurance on automobiles is similar to other insurance and does not present any peculiar question except in so far as the nature of the thing insured and the liabilities that may arise thereby are concerned. Statutes relating to automobile insurance contemplate insurance against all recognized hazards to which automobiles are subject, and, accordingly, cases have

---

A. 432, 44 A.L.R. 785; Archer v. Chicago, M. St. P. & P. R. Co. 215 Wis. 509, 255 N. W. 67, 95 A.L.R. 851.

[20] New Jersey Exp. Co. v. Nichols, 33 N. J. L. 434, 97 Am. Dec. 722; McLean v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 81 S. C. 100, 61 S. E. 900, 1071, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 763, 128 Am. St. Rep. 892; Wittstruck v. Lee, 62 S. D. 290, 252 N. W. 874, 92 A.L.R. 1361; McDonald v. International & G. N. R. Co. 86 Tex. 1, 22 S. W. 939, 40 Am. St. Rep. 803; Smith v. Union Trunk Line, 18 Wash. 351, 51 P. 400, 45 L.R.A. 169.

For more detailed treatment of subject of comparative negligence, see Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 145, §§ 119, 120].

[1] New Jersey Exp. Co. v. Nichols, 33 N. J. L. 434, 97 Am. Dec. 722; Merrihew v. Goodspeed, 102 Vt. 206, 147 A. 346, 66 A.L.R. 1109.

If the negligence of the person injured contributed to the accident in the least degree, there can be no recovery.

[2] See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[3] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 692, holding that if both the plaintiff and the defendant were at fault, the former could still recover, provided he was not lacking in ordinary care, but that his damages would be diminished in proportion to the amount of fault attributable to him.

[4] Walker v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. 214 Wis. 519, 252 N. W. 721, 92 A.L.R. 680.

A statute which provides that negligence of the plaintiff shall not bar recovery if such negligence was not so great as that of the defendant, but that the damages shall be diminished in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the plaintiff, contemplates that the causal negligence of all the other participants in the transaction, whether made parties defendant or not, shall constitute the other term of the proportion. Ibid.

[1] See Insurance [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 839, § 2].

[2] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1915A, 627.

arisen involving liability,[3] collision,[4] fire,[5] and theft,[6] which classes of insurance will be considered separately in the following sections.

§ 506. Definitions.—In connection with automobile insurance, statutes in some states contain a comprehensive series of definitions applicable to motor vehicles, such as "vehicle," "motor vehicle," "owner," "pneumatic tires," "operator," etc. While some of these or other such terms have been defined by courts, the reader is advised to consult the statutes in his jurisdiction as to such definitions.

The word "operate," as used in automobile policies, is held to mean to regulate and control the management or operation of the car, that is, to have charge of it as the driver.[7] Thus, the owner of an automobile does not "operate" it within the meaning of an automobile indemnity policy applying only when the machine is being "operated" by the owner, where he is merely present in the car, directing its operation by another.[8] The word "operated," in a clause of a fire policy involved, which provided that the insurer should not be liable if the car was "operated" by the insured's son, meant having charge of it as driver, putting it in motion, and supervising its working, and the son was not, at the time of the accident, regulating and controlling the management of the machine as a machine, even though he had, from the back seat, full control over the choice of the route.[9] In some cases where the policies involved have used the term "drive," or "driving," this also seems to have been construed as meaning the actual mechanical control of the car.[10]

§ 507. Construction.—The general principle that an insurance policy which contains language reasonably susceptible of different interpretations will be given the construction most favorable to the assured is applied to cases of automobile insurance.[11] It has been said that these insurance policies, which are prepared by the insurance companies, are to be most strongly construed against them and in favor of the assured.[12]

---

[3] See infra, §§ 516 et seq.

[4] See infra, §§ 554 et seq.

[5] See infra, §§ 558 et seq.

[6] See infra, §§ 567 et seq.

[7] Witherstine v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 235 N. Y. 168, 139 N. E. 229, 28 A.L.R. 1298; O'Connell v. New Jersey Fidelity & P. G. Ins. Co. 201 App. Div. 117, 193 N. Y. S. 911, affirmed in 235 N. Y. 583, 139 N. E. 744; O'Reilly v. Canada Acci. & F. Assur. Co. 63 Ont. L. Rep. 413, [1929] 2 D. L. R. 70, 16 B. R. C. 298.

Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 303.

[8] Winterstine v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 235 N. Y. 168, 139 N. E. 229, 28 A.L.R. 1298.

Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 303.

[9] O'Reilly v. Canada Acci. & F. Assur. Co. 63 Ont. L. Rep. 413, [1929] 2 D. L. R. 70, 16 B. R. C. 298.

Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 304.

[10] Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 304.

In Williams v. Nelson, 228 Mass. 191, 117 N. E. 189, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 538, where a liability policy provided that it did not cover loss from liability for, or any suit based on, injuries caused by any automobile while driven or manipulated by any person under the age of sixteen years in any event, a finding was held supported by the evidence that prior to an accident causing an injury, a son of the insured, under sixteen years of age, had been driving the insured's automobile, but that shortly before the machine struck the person injured, the insured had suddenly leaned over and taken the wheel from his son, and that, although he was not in a position readily to prevent the accident by manipulating the pedals or levers for stopping the machine, yet he was driving, and his was the dominating mind in control of the car, and it was therefore held that a recovery might be had under the policy. Annotation: 16 B. R. C. 304.

[11] St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. American Compounding Co. 211 Ala. 593, 100 So. 904, 35 A.L.R. 1018; Illinois Auto. Ins. Exch. v. Southern Motor Sales Co. 207 Ala. 265, 92 So. 429, 24 A.L.R. 734; Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500; Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Cartmel, 87 Fla. 495, 100 So. 802, 35 A.L.R. 1013; Great American Mut. Indem. Co. v. Jones, 111 Ohio St. 84, 144 N. E. 596, 35 A.L.R. 1023, 23 N. C. C. A. 647.

Annotation: 35 A.L.R. 1031, s. 40 A.L.R. 999, 42 A.L.R. 1130, and 54 A.L.R. 1445.

[12] Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Haley, 129 Miss. 525, 92 So. 635, 23 A.L.R. 1470.

§ 508. Representations and Warranties.—The general rules as to fraud, misrepresentation, and affirmative warranties, as affecting insurance policies generally, considered in another article,[13] are applicable to insurance on automobiles. It will be sufficient to state here, therefore, that there can be no doubt that a material false representation is a ground for the avoidance of an insurance policy, the same as any other contract.[14] As to warranties, any statement or description, or any undertaking on the part of the insured, on the face of the policy or in another instrument properly incorporated in the policy, which relates to the risk, is a warranty.[15] The distinction between a representation and a warranty in an insurance contract is that the former precedes and is not part of the contract and need be only materially true, while the latter is part of the contract and must be strictly fulfilled or the policy is void. Another difference between a warranty and a representation is that a warranty must be strictly true,—a representation need only be substantially true.[16]

These matters often depend, however, upon the provisions of the policies and statutory provisions of the particular jurisdiction. A breach of a condition as to the use of a car in an automobile insurance policy, not printed in the form required by statute, is not available to the insurer.[17]

To avoid the policy, misrepresentations must be material and their falsity unknown to the insurer. An applicant for automobile insurance is not guilty of omitting to disclose a circumstance material to the risk, in stating that the car was paid for, when he had given a note which was still current for part of the price.[18] And a misstatement in a proposal for insurance as to the place where the insured motor vehicle is to be garaged is not material within the meaning of a condition on the back of the policy that "material misstatement or concealment of any circumstance by the insured, material to assessing the premium herein, or in connection with any claim, shall render the policy void."[19] Nor is the validity of an automobile liability insurance policy affected by the falsity of a representation or warranty as to the ownership of the vehicle, if such falsity was known to the insurer at the time the policy was issued.[20]

§ 509. Provisions as to Uses of Car.—Usually an automobile liability policy contains a clause whereby the insurer is not to be liable for any loss incurred while the automobile is being operated by, or is in charge of, any person not meeting certain requirements as to age.[1] Quite often an automobile policy covering injury to the car by collision, etc., contains a clause of the same general character.[2] Ordinarily sixteen years is fixed as a minimum age limit in any event.[3] An exclusion clause of this character, where not prohibited by law, inserted in an automobile insurance policy, is valid.[4] It will not be questioned that the parties can make any contract not prohibited by law, and there appears to be good reason why an indemnity company would not be willing to assume the risk for damages resulting from cars being driven by persons under sixteen years of age.[5]

---

[13] See INSURANCE [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 1021, §§ 202 et seq.].

[14] See INSURANCE [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 1021, § 202].

[15] See INSURANCE [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 1026, § 206].

[16] See INSURANCE [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 1027, § 207].

[17] Western Assur. Co. v. Caplan [1924] (Can.) S. C. R. 227, [1924] 2 D. L. R. 935, 14 B. R. C. 275.

[18] Western Assur. Co. v. Caplan [1924] (Can.) S. C. R. 227, [1924] 2 D. L. R. 935, 14 B. R. C. 275.
Annotation: 14 B. R. C. 284.

[19] Dawsons v. Bonnin, [1922] 2 A. C. (Eng.) 413, 11 B. R. C. 441.

[20] Commonwealth Casualty Co. v. Arrigo, 160 Md. 595, 154 A. 136, 77 A.L.R. 1250.
Knowledge of a soliciting agent of an automobile liability insurer, of the fact that the person in whose name the policy was issued, while the nominal owner, was not the real owner of the vehicle, is imputable to the insurer. Ibid.

[1] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1071.
The words "fixed by law," as used in an insurance policy, exempting the insurer from liability where the car is driven by one under the age fixed by law, are intended to apply to valid municipal ordinances as well as statutes. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Guenther, 281 U. S. 34, 74 L. ed. 683, 50 S. Ct. 165, 72 A.L.R. 1064.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1082.
An ordinance which, while not purporting to fix an age limit for operators of automobiles, makes it unlawful for any owner or custodian of a motor vehicle to permit a minor under eighteen years of age to operate it upon the streets of the city may properly be regarded as fixing an

§ 510. Provisions as to Carrying Passengers.—Policies of automobile insurance, such as those insuring against collision, fire, liability, property damage, and theft, frequently contain provisions exempting the insurer from liability, or terminating the policy, if the insured automobile is used for the carrying of passengers for hire or compensation.[6] There is no serious doubt that such provisions are valid.[7] Such a restriction of use is held to violate no rule of public policy, on the theory that insurance companies have the right to insert in their policies reasonable conditions as to use.[8] Furthermore, a breach of a provision against carrying passengers for hire, constituting, as it often does, a warranty or condition subsequent, avoids the policy, in the absence of any waiver or estoppel.[9] age limit. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Guenther, 281 U. S. 34, 74 L. ed. 683, 50 S. Ct. 165, 72 A.L.R. 1064.

---

Where it appeared that the insured was driving with his son who was under the minimum age, that the son was operating the car, and that just before the accident the insured leaned over and took the wheel and had driven the car about fifty feet when the accident occurred, it was held that the car was not being driven by a person under sixteen at the time of the accident, within the meaning of the policy, though a dangerous situation had been produced while it was so driven, and though the insured was at a disadvantage in operating the car because he was not in the driver's seat. Williams v. Nelson, 228 Mass. 191, 117 N. E. 189, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 538. Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1918D, 540.

[2] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1071.

That an eleven-year-old boy, left in charge of a truck while the regularly employed competent driver enters a building on business, attempts to move it by command of a stranger does not deprive the owner of the benefit of insurance against injury by operation of the truck, although the policy provides that the insurer shall not be liable for losses occasioned by the truck being operated by any person under the age of sixteen years. Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Etoch, 174 Ark. 409, 295 S. W. 376, 72 A.L.R. 1068.

[3] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1071.

Use of Car by Member of Family over Sixteen.—the insertion in a policy of automobile liability insurance of an exclusion clause exempting insurer from liability in respect of any accident occurring while the car is being driven by any person under sixteen years of age is indicative of an understanding on the part of the insured that it shall be liable to the assured in respect of accidents occurring while the car is being driven by any member of his family over that age. Fullerton v. United States Casualty Co. 184 Iowa, 219, 167 N. W. 700, 6 A.L.R. 367. Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1071.

[4] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1071.

[5] Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Etoch, 174 Ark. 409, 295 S. W. 376, 72 A.L.R. 1068. Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1071.

[6] Crowell v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 169 N. C. 35, 85 S. E. 37, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 50; Gross v. Kubel, 315 Pa. 396, 172 A. 649, 95 A.L.R. 146.

Annotation: 95 A.L.R. 150.

Regarding provisions as to renting or use for hire in automobile insurance policies, see infra, § 561.

[7] Annotation: 95 A.L.R. 151.

[8] Crowell v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 169 N. C. 35, 85 S. E. 37, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 50.

[9] Annotation: 95 A.L.R. 151.

In Crowell v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 169 N. C. 35, 85 S. E. 37, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 50, it was held that a stipulation that the insured car "will not be rented or used for passenger service of any kind for hire" implied more than a single act of renting or using, and referred to the business of carrying passengers for hire, so that it was not breached by the use of the car by the owner's chauffeur, without his knowledge, on a single occasion, to carry passengers for hire, and consequently, that the insurer against fire was liable, although the car burned while it was being returned to the garage after having been so used.

In Western Assur. Co. v. Caplan [1924] (Can.) S. C. R. 227, [1924] 2 D. L. R. 935, 14 B. R. C. 275, it was held that the evidence showed no proof of payment for the carriage of passengers for hire, as against a mere explainable affirmative inference or suspicion was the sworn statement of the insured that the car had not been used to carry passengers for hire.

A member of a basketball team transporting other members in his automobile

Of course, if the insurer is liable under its policy, it may be liable to injured persons.[10] However, the rights of an injured person against a liability insurer cannot rise higher than those of the insured, and if the latter is not entitled to recover because of a breach of a condition against carrying passengers for hire, persons injured by the insured car cannot hold the insurer liable.[11] Moreover, if the policy excludes liability for injuries occurring while the insured car is being used to carry passengers for hire, no liability can arise while the car is carrying paying passengers, either as to a paying passenger or as to another passenger or guest who is riding free.[12]

B. Insurable Interest

§ 511. Generally.—The general principles relating to insurable interest generally are considered in another article.[13] As a general rule, and in whatever form the insurance, some form of an interest in the subject of insurance is essential. In practically all jurisdictions, however, the necessity and nature and extent of such interest are regulated by statutes which must be consulted by the reader for the rule in any particular jurisdiction. The application of these general rules to insurance on automobiles is the subject of the following sections.

§ 512. Necessity.—As stated in the section immediately preceding,[14] an interest in the subject of insurance is essential. Automobile liability[15] or theft[16] insurance, like other forms of insurance, must be supported by an insurable interest in the insured. This interest need not, however, be absolute. The nature and extent of the insurable interest necessary will be considered in the section immediately following.[17]

§ 513. Nature and Extent.—As a general rule, anyone has an insurable interest in property who derives a benefit from its existence or would suffer loss from its destruction. It is not necessary, to constitute an insurable interest, that the interest be such that the event insured against would necessarily subject the insured to loss; it is sufficient that it might do so and that to a place where they were to play a game, for which transportation he received the cost of oil and gasoline and a small amount in addition for the use of the car, may properly be found to have been operating the automobile "for carrying passengers for hire," within the exception clause of a liability policy. Gross v. Kubel, 315 Pa. 396, 172 A. 649, 95 A.L.R. 146.

---

Waiver of Right to Disclaim Liability.—An automobile liability insurer will not be regarded as having waived the right to disclaim liability on the ground that the accident was not within the coverage of the policy because the automobile was being used for carrying passengers for hire, by causing its attorney to enter appearance for insured in actions brought by occupants of the car, where the insured, in notifying the insurer of the accident, did not inform it that he was carrying passengers for hire at the time, divulging the fact only when the attorney began to prepare one of the cases for trial, whereupon the insurer promptly disclaimed liability and withdrew from the defense. Ibid.

A delay of seven months on the part of an automobile liability insurer after undertaking the defense of actions against the insured, in disclaiming liability on the ground that as the automobile was being used for carrying passengers for hire, the accident was not within the coverage of the policy, is not unreasonable where, in causing its attorney to appear for defendant in such actions, it relied on the insured's report, which did not disclose that he was carrying passengers for hire at the time, and made disclaimer as soon as it learned of the fact, and a year and a half elapsed before the case came on for trial, so that insured had ample time to prepare his own defense. Ibid.

[10] Annotation: 95 A.L.R. 156.

[11] Gross v. Kubel, 315 Pa. 396, 172 A. 649, 95 A.L.R. 146.
Annotation: 95 A.L.R. 157.

[12] Gross v. Kubel, 315 Pa. 396, 172 A. 649, 95 A.L.R. 146.
Annotation: 95 A.L.R. 157.

[13] See Insurance [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 905, §§ 84 et seq.].

[14] See supra, § 511.

[15] Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 1256.

[16] Hessen v. Iowa Auto. Mut. Ins. Co. 195 Iowa, 141, 190 N. W. 150, 30 A.L.R. 657.

[17] See infra, § 513.

pecuniary injury would be the natural consequence, and the courts of this country, as well as of England, are well disposed to maintain policies where it is clear that the party assured had an interest which would be injured in the event that the peril insured against should happen.[18] For instance, as regards automobile liability insurance, if the assured has such abiding interest in the use of the automobile in his business that he may become legally liable to others for injuries resulting from its operation, he has a beneficial interest, an insurable interest.[19] The right to recover does not depend upon the insured's being the holder, in fact, of either a legal or equitable title in the automobile, but upon whether he is primarily charged at law or in equity with an obligation for which he is liable.[1] A policy issued to one in whose name title to a truck stood is not invalid for want of insurable interest, though another was the real owner.[2]

On the other hand, a person has no insurable interest where his only right to a car arises under a contract which is void or unenforceable, either at law or in equity.[3] In some instances, failure to comply with statutory provisions as to sales of automobiles deprives the purchaser of an automobile from acquiring an insurable interest in such automobile.[4]

§ 514. Sole and Unconditional Ownership.—Automobile insurance policies frequently contain provisions to the effect that the policies shall be void if the interest of the assured is other than that of an unconditional and sole owner.[5] A purchaser of a stolen car does not have sole and unconditional

[18] See INSURANCE [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 910, § 87].

[19] Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 1257.

[1] Commonwealth Casualty Co. v. Arrigo, 160 Md. 595, 154 A. 136, 77 A.L.R. 1250.
Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 1256.

[2] Commonwealth Casualty Co. v. Arrigo, 160 Md. 595, 154 A. 136, 77 A.L.R. 1250.

[3] Hessen v. Iowa Auto. Mut. Ins. Co. 195 Iowa, 141, 190 N. W. 150, 30 A.L.R. 657.

Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 662, s. 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 536, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

[4] A purchaser of an automobile who does not receive the assignment required by a mandatory provision of the statute acquires no title, and therefore has no insurable interest in the car which will enable him to recover from the insurer upon a fire insurance policy upon the automobile. State v. Cox, 306 Mo. 537, 268 S. W. 87, 37 A.L.R. 1456.

One who buys an automobile from any person other than a regular dealer having an established place of business, without requiring the seller to be identified by two persons of the buyer's acquaintance, and without requiring a bill of sale to be executed by the seller, with his name and address, and giving an accurate and comprehensive description of the car, and particularly its correct engine number, and containing also the signatures and addresses of the identifying witnesses, has no insurable interest in such automobile against its theft. Morris v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 121 Kan. 482, 247 P. 852, 52 A.L.R. 696.

The owner of an automobile, living in Missouri, undertook to sell it to a resident of Kansas, receiving the agreed price and delivering the car to the buyer, who brought it to Kansas. None of the requirements of the Missouri statute as to sale of automobiles was complied with. Just after the expiration of the five days allowed by the statute for a record of the sale with the secretary of state, the seller asserted that the car had been stolen, and later collected its value from an insurance company. The car having been seized as a stolen one, the purchaser brought replevin for it, making the insurance company which held an assignment of the rights of the insured one of the defendants. It was held that the insurance company could invoke the protection of the statute referred to, inasmuch as the deceit practised upon it was facilitated by the plaintiff's failure to obey the law. Miller v. Colonial Underwriters Ins. Co. 117 Kan. 240, 230 P. 1030, 38 A.L.R. 1113.

There are, however, cases holding to the contrary, to the effect that the buyer does obtain an insurable interest. Hennessy v. Automobile Owners' Ins. Asso. (Tex.) 282 S. W. 791, 46 A.L.R. 521.

This question depends upon the broader question as to the effect upon the passing of title, of the failure to comply with statutes requiring sales of automobiles to be evidenced in a certain way. This question is discussed in the article on Sales.

[5] Hessen v. Iowa Auto. Mut. Ins. Co. 195 Iowa, 141, 190 N. W. 150, 30 A.L.R. 657; Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Todino, 111 Ohio St. 274, 145 N. E. 25, 38 A.L.R. 1118, overruled upon other grounds in Commercial Credit Co. v. Schreyer, 120 Ohio St. 568, 166 N. E. 808, 63 A.L.R. 674; Barnett v. London Assur. Corp. 138 Wash. 673, 245 P. 3, 46 A.L.R. 526.

Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 665, s. 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

ownership.[6] The question whether the ownership of a chattel mortgagor or mortgagee, or conditional buyer or seller, is sole and unconditional is discussed at another point.[7]

§ 515. Change of Ownership.—Some policies provide that the policy shall be void "in case of transfer or termination of any interest of the insured other than by the death of an insured, or any change in the nature of the insurable interest of the insured in the property described herein, either by sale or otherwise."[8] Under a policy with such a provision, the change of ownership or interest in the automobile by award thereof to the insured's wife in a divorce decree was held to avoid the policy.[9]

C. Liability Insurance

1. In General

§ 516. Generally.—Since the advent of the automobile, policies insuring owners of automobiles against loss sustained on account of having to pay damages for injuries inflicted by their machines have become very common. Because of the beneficial nature of such insurance, some states have enacted laws making it compulsory.

§ 517. Power to Issue Policy.—The liability of automobile owners for injuries to persons or property resulting from the ownership, maintenance, or use of their automobiles, while a recognized subject of insurance, is not a risk which may be taken by all concerns authorized to write insurance against accidents, etc.; authority therefor must be found in some charter provision or provision of the insurance law. This question of authority has been considered in several cases,[10] and the right to issue such policies has been denied under certain statutes.[11]

§ 518. Validity.—The validity of policies insuring against liability for injuries resulting from the operation of an automobile is generally sustained.[12] Such policies are not contrary to public policy.[13] And the fact that the insured was violating the law at the time of the accident or that a policy did not contain an exemption from liability arising while the insured was violating the law, such as while driving at excessive speed, does not render such policies invalid as contrary to public policy.[14] Nor is one operating an automobile on a public highway without a license, which act is a statutory crime, precluded by public policy from enforcing a policy indemnifying him against liability for bodily injuries inflicted by use of the automobile.[15] Such insurance is not restricted to cases where there has been no violation of criminal law or ordinance.[16] To restrict insurance to cases where liability is incurred without fault of the insured would reduce indemnity to a shadow.[17] Where, however, injury is caused intentionally, as where the insured runs down a man and kills him intentionally, the insurer would be absolved of any liability.[18]

---

[6] Purchase of Stolen Car.—Where the automobile, when purchased and when the policy of theft insurance was obtained by the plaintiff, was a stolen car, the policy, which provided that it should be void if the interest of the insured in the property was other than "unconditional and sole ownership," was held void, since the plaintiff acquired no title to the stolen car, had no insurable interest therein, and was not the unconditional and sole owner. Hessen v. Iowa Auto. Mut. Ins. Co. 195 Iowa, 141, 190 N. W. 150, 30 A.L.R. 657. Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 740, s. 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

Purchase of Stolen Car in Good Faith.—On the other hand, a policy with such provision was not avoided where the insured, a purchaser in good faith, had the right to the car as against everyone except the one from whom it was originally stolen, who was making no claim to it. Barnett v. London Assur. Corp. 138 Wash. 673, 245 P. 3, 46 A.L.R. 526.

[7] See Insurance [Also 14 R. C. L. pp. 1057, 1058].

The insurable interest of these parties is likewise discussed in Insurance. See also 14 R. C. L. pp. 915, 916.

[8] Coffin v. Northwestern Mut. F. Asso. 43 Idaho, 1, 249 P. 89, 48 A.L.R. 1225.

[9] Ibid.

[10] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 376, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

[11] Annotation: 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 73.

[12] Annotation: 11 B. R. C. 265.

[13] McMahon v. Pearlman, 242 Mass. 367, 136 N. E. 154, 23 A.L.R. 1467; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Haley, 129 Miss. 525, 92 So. 635, 23 A.L.R. 1470.

2. Compulsory Insurance

§ 519. Generally.—Because of the increased use of cars of little value by persons financially incapable of responding in damages for the greatly increasing number of injuries inflicted by the negligent operation of their cars, there has been considerable public agitation in favor of legislation requiring liability insurance as a condition of the private use of automobiles not operated for hire. There has been no judicial holding as to the validity of such legislation other than that contained in the advisory opinions as to proposed laws, rendered by the supreme courts of a few states in answer to the request of the legislature.[19] According to these opinions, it would seem that under its authority over public highways and its power to provide for the public safety by the reasonable regulation of undertakings that are inherently dangerous, a state legislature may require persons seeking to operate motor vehicles upon the public highways to provide indemnity insurance.[20]

§ 520. Validity.—The validity of legislation requiring liability insurance as a condition of private use of automobiles depends, of course, upon the nature and character of the particular legislation. A general requirement that a motor vehicle may be operated upon the public highways only when adequate provision has been made for compensation to persons injured because

---

Tinline v. White Cross Ins. Asso. [1921] 3 K. B. (Eng.) 327, 11 B. R. C. 260.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 376, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

[14] Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Haley, 129 Miss. 525, 92 So. 635, 23 A.L.R. 1470.

Annotation: 11 B. R. C. 266.

In Messersmith v. American Fidelity Co. 232 N. Y. 161, 133 N. E. 432, 19 A.L.R. 876, 21 N. C. C. A. 500, affirming 187 App. Div. 35, 175 N. Y. S. 169, a policy covering liability for injury caused by the use of an automobile by one under the age permitted by statute to operate a car on the highway was held not against public policy where a statute authorized insurance companies to insure against liability for loss or damage through the use and maintenance of automobiles.

Manslaughter by Reason of Driving at Excessive Speed.—A policy undertaking to indemnify an automobile owner against liability to third persons for personal injury through the operation of the car covers a case where a person was killed and the insured was convicted of manslaughter by reason of driving at an excessive speed, and such policy is not void on the ground that it is against public policy. Tinline v. White Cross Ins. Asso. [1921] 3 K. B. (Eng.) 327, 11 B. R. C. 260. Annotation: 11 B. R. C. 265.

[15] McMahon v. Pearlman, 242 Mass. 367, 136 N. E. 154, 23 A.L.R. 1467.

[16] Ibid.

[17] Annotation: 11 B. R. C. 267.

[18] Tinline v. White Cross Ins. Asso. [1921] 3 K. B. (Eng.) 327, 11 B. R. C. 260 (dictum).

Annotation: 11 B. R. C. 265.

[19] Annotation: 39 A.L.R. 1029, s. 69 A.L.R. 397.

[20] Re Opinion of Justices, 81 N. H. 566, 129 A. 117, 39 A.L.R. 1023.

Annotation: 39 A.L.R. 1028, s. 69 A.L.R. 397.

of fault in such operation is a valid law.[1] Such provision is not an invalid interference with interstate commerce.[2] Moreover, requiring persons not pecuniarily able to satisfy claims for injury caused by operation of a motor vehicle upon the highway to furnish indemnity insurance to the exclusion of indemnity bonds does not render the statute invalid.[3]

A statute requiring provision for indemnity from those operating motor vehicles upon the highways must apply to those operating under short-term regulations and zone privileges, as well as to those having unlimited licenses to operate on the highways generally.[4]

Power of the legislature respecting the control of travel on the highways and regulation of business of insurance do not extend far enough, however, to compel every owner of a motor vehicle, before using it upon the highway, to contribute to a private or quasi public corporation designated as the "State Motor Vehicle Insurance Fund," as in practical effect it would create a substantial monopoly in the field of competitive insurance business.[5] The creation of such a corporation, which is not a public corporation in the sense that it is established as an instrumentality of government, cannot be justified as an exercise of the police power.[6]

Exempting a property owner from the necessity of securing indemnity insurance before operating motor vehicles upon the highway if the commissioner is satisfied of the collectability of any judgment which might be secured for injuries negligently caused by such operation does not render the statute void for discrimination.[7] But it has been held that permitting property owners to operate motor vehicles on the highway without securing indemnity insurance, while denying others the right to furnish indemnity bonds with individual surety, is a discrimination which renders the sustaining of the statute doubtful.[8]

3. Duties and Liabilities of Insurer in General

§ 521. Generally.—The duties and liabilities of the insurer are ordinarily based upon the provisions of the insurance policy issued and upon statutes relating to the particular insurances. The following sections will consider in particular such duties and liabilities arising under particular circumstances.[9]

§ 522. Use of Car by Other than Insured.—Under automobile liability policies, the question has arisen as to whether the insurer is liable for loss resulting to the insured on account of an injury inflicted while his car was being operated by others.[10] The determination of this question depends, of course, upon the provisions of the policy involved. Some automobile indemnity policies are so worded as to apply only where the car is being operated by the owner or by a person connected with a repair shop or garage in connection with repair work, testing, delivering, or calling for said car.[11] For example, the owner of an automobile does not operate it within the meaning of an indemnity policy applying only when the machine is being operated by the owner when he is merely present in the car directing its operation by another person.[12] On the other hand, a policy insuring the owner of an automobile against liability on account of injuries suffered by reason of the ownership, maintenance, or use of the car covers injuries caused by operation of the car by the owner's adult son, who is a member of his family and maintained by him, at least if the policy provides against liability if the car is being driven by any person under sixteen years of age.[13]

---

[1] Re Opinion of Justices, 81 N. H. 566, 129 A. 117, 39 A.L.R. 1023.

[2] Ibid.

[3] Ibid.

[4] Ibid.

[5] Ibid.

[6] Ibid.

[7] Ibid.

[8] Ibid.

[9] See infra, §§ 522 et seq.

[10] "Omnibus" Coverage Clause.—Oftentimes there appears either within the policy of insurance or by way of a rider or indorsement attached thereto a clause purporting, or the effect of which is, to extend the protection of the policy to any person or persons coming within a defined group. This is the so-called "omnibus" clause, the effect of which, upon the liability of the insurer will be considered elsewhere in this article. See infra, §§ 532 et seq.

Operation by Infant or Other Unauthorized Person.—As to the liability of the insurer where the car was being driven by an infant or other unauthorized person, see infra, § 523.

§ 523. Use of Car by Infant or Other Unauthorized Person.—An interesting question has arisen under automobile liability policies as to the insurer's liability for loss resulting to the insured on account of an injury inflicted while his car was being operated by an infant or unlicensed person in violation of regulations governing the issuing of licenses to persons for driving such machines.[14] Liability under such circumstances depends upon the provisions of statutes, ordinances, and insurance policies. Legislative permission to insure against liability for loss or damage through the use and maintenance of automobiles authorizes a policy covering liability for injury caused by the use on the highway of an automobile by an infant under the age permitted by statute.[15]

§ 524. Provisions as to Determination of Insurer's Liability in Payment of Claim.—The provisions in some liability policies are such as to render the contract one of liability—that is, such as to enable the insured to recover where he is liable for an injury, although he has not actually paid the injured person.[16] Other policies, however, provide that no action shall lie against the insurer unless brought by the insured for loss or expense actually sustained and paid in money after trial of the issues.[17] The provisions of other policies bind the insurer to pay only after payment of a final judgment against the insured.[18] It is thus clear that the liability of the insurer is determined by the provisions of the policies or the construction of such provisions by the court—that is, whether the policies constitute contracts of indemnity against liability or against actual loss.[19]

---

[11] Witherstine v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 235 N. Y. 168, 139 N. E. 229, 28 A.L.R. 1298.

[12] Ibid.

[13] Fullerton v. United States Casualty Co. 184 Iowa, 219, 167 N. W. 700, 6 A.L.R. 367.

Reformation of Policy to Cover Members of Family.—A policy insuring the owner of an automobile kept for business calls and pleasure against loss by injuries caused by operation of the car may be reformed so as to cover injuries while the car is being driven by members of the owner's family, where he understood that the policy would so cover, the agent knew that he did not drive the car himself, and the insurer, upon notice of the accident, settled part of the claims and attempted to settle others. Fullerton v. United States Casualty Co. 184 Iowa, 219, 167 N. W. 700, 6 A.L.R. 367.

The fact that a son driving an automobile at the time it inflicted injury was of legal age does not take the accident out of the operation of an indemnity insurance policy against liability on account of injuries suffered by reason of the ownership, maintenance, and use of the car if he was just out of school living at home as a member of his father's family and dependent upon his father for support. Ibid.

[14] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 378, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

[15] Messersmith v. American Fidelity Co. 232 N. Y. 161, 133 N. E. 432, 19 A.L.R. 876.

Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 879.

[16] Merchants Mut. Auto. Liability Ins. Co. v. Swart, 267 U. S. 126, 69 L. ed. 538, 45 S. Ct. 320; Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 380, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

[17] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 380, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

Application of Rule.—It has been held that such a provision applies only in case the company denies liability and refuses to defend. Patterson v. Adan, 119 Minn. 308, 138 N. W. 281, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184.

§ 525. —Effect of "No Action" Clause.—The insertion in the policy of a "no action" clause, or provision that no action shall lie upon the policy except for loss actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a final judgment against the insured automobile owner, ordinarily creates indemnity, as distinguished from liability, insurance, and contemplates that the insured must be liable to the injured person and that this liability must be established by a judgment rendered against the insured and paid by him before the insurance company can be held liable.[20]

§ 526. —Medical or Surgical Expenses.—Some automobile liability insurance policies provide for the payment of immediate medical or surgical expense rendered to the injured at the time of the accident. The intent and scope of the undertaking to pay for "such immediate medical or surgical aid as was imperative at the time of the accident" must depend upon the nature and circumstances of the accident.[1] The liability of an insurer under such a policy includes the cost of a surgical operation performed upon a child whose skull was fractured as a result of being struck by the insured's automobile, and of medical attendance and hospital expenses up to the time when it was judged safe to move the child from the hospital, but does not extend to expenses thereafter incurred by the insured in having the child cared for in his own home, although they may have been necessary for the proper treatment of the case.[2]

---

[18] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 380, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

As a result of such provisions, a distinction is made by the authorities between a simple contract of indemnity against damages and a contract of indemnity against liability for damages: in the former case only does the common-law rule that there is no cause of action until there is actual damage apply; in the latter case it has very generally been held that an action may be brought and recovery had as soon as the liability is legally imposed. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 509.

[19] Indemnity against Liability.—A number of cases have taken the view that the policy under consideration by the court was a contract of indemnity against liability, giving to the insured a right of action upon the policy as soon as final judgment has been rendered against him for an injury covered by the policy, without the necessity of showing actual loss or payment of the judgment by him. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 509, 510.

Indemnity against Actual Loss.—Other cases have taken the view that the policy under consideration by the court was a contract of indemnity against actual loss, giving to the insured no right to recover against the company the amount of a judgment against him until such judgment has been actually paid by him. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 511.

[20] Combs v. Hunt, 140 Va. 627, 125 S. E. 661, 37 A.L.R. 621, wherein the agreement was "to indemnify the assured designated in the schedule against loss arising or resulting from claims upon the assured for damages." The court said: "Learned counsel for the plaintiff in error insists that the contract so made is harsh and unfair to the assured. We agree that it is harsh, and but very imperfectly relieves the average automobile owner from the embarrassment caused by a claim and suit for damages against him. But the court cannot read into the written instrument any stipulation it does not contain, nor can we give it a construction plainly in conflict with its expressed purport."

Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 512.

Accepting the minority view, it has been held that where, in an automobile indemnity policy containing a "no action" clause, the insurer agrees to defend any suit brought to enforce a claim for damages thereon, unless it elects to effect a settlement thereof, the insurer, by assuming to defend an action against the insured, is rendered liable for the judgment up to the amount of the policy and the insured is not compelled to pay the judgment in order to recover from the insurer. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 513, 514.

[1] Laidlaw v. Hartford Acci. & Indem. Co. 254 N. Y. 391, 173 N. E. 557, 77 A.L.R. 1191.

[2] Ibid.

An insurance adjuster has no authority to bind an automobile liability insurer by a promise to reimburse the insured for expenses incurred in caring for an injured person beyond the liability assumed by the insurer in the policy. Ibid.

§ 527. Recovery by Person Injured.—Assuming that an accident is covered by an automobile liability insurance policy,[3] the right of a person injured to recover the insurance depends somewhat on whether the policy is a contract of indemnity against liability or indemnity against actual loss.[4] If the policy is treated as a contract of indemnity against liability, as distinguished from indemnity against actual loss, the company is subject to garnishment by a person who has recovered judgment against the insured for an injury covered by the policy where the company has waived any defense which it might otherwise have urged as against the insured.[5] On the other hand, if the policy is treated as a contract of indemnity against actual loss, as distinguished from indemnity against liability, ordinarily the company is not subject to garnishment by the injured party, since no amount is due to the insured until payment of the judgment by him.[6] In the absence of statute or express provision, this is true regardless of the fact that the insured is insolvent and has no property out of which a judgment may be satisfied.[7] Moreover, according to the

---

[3] There is no basis for a recovery on the policy by the injured party where the accident was one not covered by the policy. Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500; Whitney v. Employers' Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 25, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495.

Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 520.

The fact that a conditional vendor of an automobile included it in his list of machines covered by an indemnity policy which insured against liability for destruction of property by reason of the ownership, maintenance, or use of an automobile covered in the schedule and which inured to the benefit of any person using the machine with the consent of the insured does not give one whose property was injured by the car while in the possession of the conditional vendee a right of action against the insurer where the car was practically paid for and by law the grantee was to be regarded as the owner of it. Whitney v. Employers' Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 236, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495.

[4] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 381, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

[5] Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 516.

One injured while riding as a passenger in an automobile of another who carries liability insurance cannot, after recovering judgment against the latter, which is not paid, recover from the insurer unless the assured has complied with the provisions of the policy. Ocean Acci. & G. Corp. v. Lucas (C. C. A. 6th) 74 F. (2d) 115, 98 A.L.R. 1461.

[6] Combs v. Hunt, 140 Va. 627, 125 S. E. 661, 37 A.L.R. 621 (where the policy contained a "no action" clause); Luger v. Windell, 116 Wash. 375, 199 P. 760, 37 A.L.R. 641.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 381, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879; 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

Judgment against Insured as Condition Precedent to Action by Injured Person against Insurer.—No action lies against an insurer against liability for injury by an automobile in favor of one so injured before judgment against the insured where the policy provides that no claim against the insurer can arise on behalf of an injured person until execution has been returned unsatisfied against the insured. Small v. Morrison, 185 N. C. 577, 118 S. E. 12, 31 A.L.R. 1135.

Payment of Damages as Condition of Liability.—The automobile accident policy involved insuring against damages for bodily injuries to third persons caused in the operation of the automobile by the insured, the insurer reserving the right to defend against the claim of damages in the name of the insured, and to negotiate settlements without interference by the insured, is held to be a contract of liability rather than of indemnity payable only when the damage actually sustained has been paid by the insured, and the right to recover for the injuries is complete when the liability attaches. Brandon v. St. Paul Mercury Indem. Co. 132 Kan. 68, 294 P. 881, 83 A.L.R. 673, following Blanton v. Kansas City Cotton Mills Co. 103 Kan. 118, 172 P. 987, L.R.A.1918E, 541.

[7] Fidelity & C. Co. v. Martin, 163 Ky. 12, 173 S. W. 307, L.R.A.1917F, 924.

Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 516.

Effect of Statutory Provisions.—Under a statute providing that any bond or policy of insurance covering liability to others by reason of the operation of a motor vehicle shall be deemed to contain a condition making the insurer directly liable to the person injured or suffering loss, the insurer is liable in a direct action by the person injured, whether its insurance is evidenced by an indemnity policy or by a so-called "straight liability" policy. Biller v. Meyer (C. C. A. 7th) 33 F. (2d) 440, 66 A.L.R. 436.

In Williams v. Nelson, 228 Mass. 191, 117 N. E. 189, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 538, where a statute permitted a judgment creditor of one insured by a contract of casualty insurance against loss or damage on account of bodily injury or death by accident of any person, arising from causes for which the insured was responsible, such judgment having been recovered for a cause covered by the contract of insurance, to proceed in equity against both the insured and the insurer, to recover and apply the insurance money to the satisfaction of the judgment, it was held that one who had recovered a judgment against the owner of an automobile for an injury covered by an indemnity policy held by the latter was en-majority rule, this is true even though the company took charge of and defended the action against the insured.[8] But, according to the minority rule, where the company assumes a defense as it agreed to do under the policy, a judgment in the action against the insured becomes, as between the plaintiff, the defendant, and the insurer, a liability or debt owing unconditionally by the insurer to the insured which the injured party may reach by garnishment, notwithstanding the policy contained a "no action" clause.[9]

§ 528. Settlement with Injured Person.—Usually, under the express terms of a liability or indemnity policy, the insurer is privileged to settle any claim made against the insured within the coverage of the policy;[10] and the insured himself is denied this privilege of settlement except by the insurer's consent[11] or at his own risk.[12] For example, the owner of an automobile holding a policy indemnifying him against loss resulting from claims upon him by reason of the ownership, maintenance, or use of the machine, which prohibits him from settling any claim without the written consent of the insurer and provides that action will not lie against the insurer except for expenses paid in money after actual trial of the issues, cannot hold the insurer liable for the expenses incurred by him in voluntarily settling a judgment against his daughter for injury caused by her operation of the machine.[13] Furthermore, under such a contract, the fact that the insurer refuses to recognize liability upon a judgment recovered against the daughter of the insured for injury caused by operation of the machine by her does not entitle the insured to make an adjustment of the claim at the expense of the insurer.[14] Furthermore, an intitled to maintain an action against the insurer, although there had been no payment of the judgment. But it was held that the words, "bodily injury . . . of any person," were confined to physical injury, and did not include financial damage to the husband of the person injured, arising from the injury.

---

Statutory Provision Where Insured Insolvent or Bankrupt.—A statute requiring automobile liability policies to contain a provision that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the insured should not release the company from the payment of damages for injuries sustained during the life of the policy, and that in case execution against the insured should be returned unsatisfied, in an action brought by the injured person, because of such insolvency, then an action might be maintained by the injured person against the company for the amount of the judgment in said action not exceeding the amount of the policy, is within the police power of the state and cannot be said to be unconstitutional as depriving the company of property without due process of law. Merchants Mut. Auto. Liability Ins. Co. v. Smart, 267 U. S. 126, 69 L. ed. 538, 45 S. Ct. 320, affirming 236 N. Y. 577, 142 N. E. 290, which dismissed an appeal from 206 App. Div. 630, 198 N. Y. S. 949. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 518.

Validity of Statute.—The statute is not invalid as making provision for an unlawful preference under the National Bankruptcy Act, when the insured is bankrupt at the time of the injury. Merchants Mut. Auto. Liability Ins. Co. v. Smart, 267 U. S. 126, 69 L. ed. 538, 45 S. Ct. 320, affirming 236 N. Y. 577, 142 N. E. 290, which dismissed an appeal from 206 App. Div. 630, 198 N. Y. S. 949. Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 518.

Construction of Statute.—In construing a state statute which provides that any bond or policy of insurance covering liability to others by reason of the operation of a motor vehicle shall be deemed to contain a condition that the insurer shall be directly liable to the person injured or suffering loss, the construction placed by the state supreme court upon the words "liability" and "insurer" is binding upon a Federal court. Biller v. Meyer (C. C. A. 7th) 33 F. (2d) 440, 66 A.L.R. 436.

The exception of want of interest in the plaintiff does not lie to an action brought on an automobile liability insurance policy by an injured person by virtue of a provision therein giving such person, in case of the insolvency or bankruptcy of the assured, a right of action against the insurer. Lawrason v. Owners' Auto. Ins. Co. 172 La. 1075, 136 So. 57, 77 A.L.R. 1412.

[8] Combs v. Hunt, 140 Va. 627, 125 S. E. 661, 37 A.L.R. 621.
Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 516.

[9] Patterson v. Adan, 119 Minn. 308, 138 N. W. 281, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184.
Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 516.

[10] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1118.
See also generally INSURANCE [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 823].

[11] Thacher v. Ætna Acci. & Liability Co. (C. C. A. 9th) 287 F. 484, 28 A.L.R. 1280.
Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 381, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507; 79 A.L.R. 1118.

[12] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 381, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

[13] Thacher v. Ætna Acci. & Liability Co. (C. C. A. 9th) 287 F. 484, 28 A.L.R. 1280.

[14] Ibid.

surer, under a contract entitling it to settle claims if it sees fit and prohibiting the insured from doing so without its consent, is not liable, in case it refuses to settle the claim at the suggestion of the insured, for the difference between the amount of the proffered settlement and the amount of the judgment recovered in excess of the face of its policy.[15] And where an insurer has, under its policy, an option to defend or settle any action against its insured by him turned over to it to defend, it is not liable to him in consequence of its consenting to the entry of judgment against him in an action growing out of a collision, by reason of which a verdict in his favor in a counteraction brought by him against the plaintiff therein was set aside on the ground that the consent judgment was conclusive of his negligence, although such course was taken over his protest and with knowledge of the prejudice to him which might result.[16] Where, however, the insurer abandons its obligation to defend a suit against the insured, it cannot defeat a recovery for money paid by the insured in settlement of the claim on the ground that it was paid in compromise without a judgment, whereas the contract provides for recovery only when the payment is in satisfaction of a judgment.[17]

§ 529. Defense of Suit by Insurer.—Practically all automobile liability policies provide in effect that the insurer shall have the right to defend all actions brought against the insured to recover for any injury covered by the policy.[18] And when this right is exercised, it cannot be withdrawn. The insured has the right to expect that the insurer, having undertaken to represent him in an action against him, will continue that representation until some notice is given of its withdrawal or of a change in the capacity in which it is acting in the matter.[19] The insurer cannot, after settling some of the claims growing out of an accident and undertaking the defense of a suit on other claims, withdraw from the defense and cast the burden thereof on the insured on the theory that it had mistaken the nature of its obligation.[20] And the refusal by the insurer to comply with its obligation to defend an action against the insured as required by the policy is a breach of its contract for which the insured may recover.[1]

A policy obligating the insurer to indemnify the assured against loss from the liability imposed by law upon him for damages on account of bodily injuries, including death, accidentally sustained by any person by reason of the maintenance or use of his automobile, and to defend in the name and on behalf of the assured any suits which may at any time be brought against him on account of such injuries, does not bind the insurer to defend a criminal prosecution for manslaughter instituted against the insured.[2] However, the fact that the liability arose by reason of a violation of law has been considered not to excuse the insurer so far as civil liability is concerned.[3]

---

[15] Auerbach v. Maryland Casualty Co. 236 N. Y. 247, 140 N. E. 577, 28 A.L.R. 1294.

In Schmidt v. Travelers Ins. Co. 244 Pa. 286, 90 A. 653, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 126, it was held that an insurer against loss by reason of the use of the insured's automobile, with liability limited to a certain amount for each claim, did not, by refusing permission to the insured to settle a claim, render itself liable in excess of its undertaking for the amount for which a judgment recovered against the insured exceeded the amount which the claim might have been settled for, where the policy provided that the assured should not voluntarily assume any liability or settle any claim, except at his own cost, or incur any expense, or interfere in any negotiations for settlement, or legal proceeding, without the previous consent of the insurer in writing, and also contained a provision that if any suit should be brought against the insured on account of such injuries as were covered by the policy, the insured should forward the summons and process to the insurer, which would at its own cost defend such suit.

[16] Long v. Union Indem. Co. 277 Mass. 428, 178 N. E. 737, 79 A.L.R. 1116.

[17] Fullerton v. United States Casualty Co. 184 Iowa, 219, 167 N. W. 700, 6 A.L.R. 367.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 376.

[18] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 383, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507.

[19] Daly v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 269 Mass. 1, 168 N. E. 111, 72 A.L.R. 1436.

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1494.

[20] Fullerton v. United States Casualty Co. 184 Iowa, 219, 167 N. W. 700, 6 A.L.R. 367.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 376.

[1] Combs v. Hunt, 140 Va. 627, 125 S. E. 661, 37 A.L.R. 621.

Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 525.

§ 530. Liability for Depreciation of Injured Machine.—The question has arisen as to whether one holding a policy insuring him against loss by reason of liability imposed by law upon him for destruction of, or injury to, property of others arising from the use of his automobile, is entitled to recover from the insurer not only the actual cost of repairs to a machine which has been damaged by his car, but also the amount which he is obliged to pay for depreciation in the value of the automobile caused by its having been in a collision; and it has been held that such a recovery can be had, although the policy contains a limitation clause that the insurer's liability "is limited to the actual intrinsic value of the property damaged or destroyed, . . . which shall not be greater than the actual cost of repairs or replacement thereof," it being held that this clause does not limit the liability of the insurer to the actual cost of repairs made, when it appears that they do not, and cannot, make the car as good as it was before the accident.[4]

§ 531. Effect of Death of Insured.—An examination of the surprisingly few cases in which the courts appear to have determined the effect of the death of the named insured on a policy discloses a contrariety of conclusion, although this is due largely to the differing phraseology used in the policies and the facts involved in the respective cases.[5] In the absence of some policy provision extending coverage beyond the death of the named insured, it would seem that coverage would terminate with his death, in view of the well-settled general rule that insurance is a personal contract, whatever the subject-matter thereof may be.[6] Furthermore, it has been held that the fact that the premium has been paid upon a policy for a period which extends beyond the death of the named insured does not, on equitable considerations, justify a court in construing a policy so as to extend the coverage during such full term if the terms of the contract are not susceptible of such a construction, since the court cannot make a contract for the parties or impose upon the insurer an obligation not assumed by it in its written contract.[7] Some policies, however, contain provisions under which the coverage extends beyond the death of the insured. Undoubtedly, such is the effect of an express provision that if the death of the insured shall occur within the policy period, the policy, during the unexpired portion of such period, shall cover the legal representatives of the insured.[8] It has been held that a provision that the policy shall be void in case of termination of the interest of the insured other than by his death implies that the obligation of the insurer is not necessarily terminated by the death of the named insured.[9] But even such provision does not apply where no executor or administrator has been appointed.[10] A fortiori, an alternate executor is not entitled to the protection of the policy prior to probate of the will and his appointment as executor.[11] Several attempts to establish coverage as to one other than the named insured also have been premised upon permissive use under a so-called "omnibus" clause, which extended coverage to third persons operating the automobile of the named insured with his permission, or, under some such clauses, with the permission of an adult member of the named insured's household. It has been held, however, that permission given by the named insured in his lifetime terminates with his decease.[12] Nor may an executor, after his appointment, ratify a previous use of the automobile by another so as to create protection as to an accident which occurred subsequent to the death of the named insured, since the rights of the parties must be considered as of the time of the accident, and during the interval between the death of the insured and the appointment of his executors there was no insured within the meaning of the policy, wherefore the risk was suspended.[13]

---

[2] Patterson v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. 178 Mich. 288, 144 N. W. 491, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 583, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 632.

[3] Annotation: 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 584.

[4] Christison v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 138 Minn. 51, 163 N. W. 980, L.R.A.1917F, 612.
Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 385, s. 13 A.L.R. 135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507; L.R.A.1917F, 615.

[5] Annotation: 97 A.L.R. 1241.

[6] See 1 Couch, Ins. § 3.
Annotation: 97 A.L.R. 1241.
Generally as to the termination of a policy by death, see 6 Couch, Ins. § 1351.

[7] Collins v. Northwest Casualty Co. 180 Wash. 347, 39 P. (2d) 986, 97 A.L.R. 1235.

[8] Annotation: 97 A.L.R. 1242.

4. LIABILITY OF INSURER UNDER "OMNIBUS" CLAUSE

§ 532. Generally.—Independently of the general insuring clause in an automobile liability policy, oftentimes there appears, either within the policy or by way of rider or indorsement attached thereto, a clause purporting, or the effect of which is, to extend the protection of the policy to any person or persons coming within a defined group. This is the so-called "omnibus" clause.[14] Sometimes, though not nearly so often, the general insuring clause itself is so framed as to grant this type of coverage, that is, to create liability insurance in favor not only of the named assured, but also of any person or persons coming within a defined group.[15] Policies with such clauses have been held valid.[16]

§ 533. Nature and Effect.—Sometimes, by the general insuring clause in the policy, the insurer agrees to "indemnify" not only the named assured, but also "any licensed personal friend or relative of the insured while driving the car with the insured's general knowledge and consent,"[17] or "any relation or friend driving with the insured's consent,"[18] or "any person responsible for the operation of the named assured's motor vehicle . . . with his express or implied consent,"[19] or "any person or persons while riding in or legally operating any of the automobiles . . . or any person, firm, or corporation legally responsible for the operation thereof, provided such riding, use, or operation is with the permission of the named insured."[20] In the absence of eccentricities of form, such as sometimes occur, it is clear that such a clause creates liability insurance in favor of one other than the named assured answering the description of persons therein contained.[1]

---

[9] Collins v. Northwest Casualty Co. 180 Wash. 347, 39 P. (2d) 986, 97 A.L.R. 1235.

[10] Ibid.

[11] Ibid.

[12] Ibid (wherein it was also held that the fact that the extended coverage clause afforded protection to whoever had been given permission by a member of the insured's household to operate the insured car would not make such permission effective subsequent to the death of the named insured, since his "household" did not survive his death and continue to exist as an entity in the sense in which the term is used in such a clause). Annotation: 97 A.L.R. 1242.

[13] Collins v. Northwest Casualty Co. 180 Wash. 347, 39 P. (2d) 986, 97 A.L.R. 1235.

[14] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1376.

[15] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1376.

[16] Williams v. Baltic Ins. Asso. [1924] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 282, 15 B. R. C. 280.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1384.

[17] Williams v. Baltic Ins. Asso. [1924] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 282, 15 B. R. C. 280.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1376.

[18] Under a clause providing that "while the automobile covered by this policy is being used with the express or implied consent of the assured named in the policy . . . it is agreed that any insurance granted by this policy shall, in addition to the said named assured, inure to the benefit of any person responsible for the operation of the said automobile," the policy would inure to the benefit of and protect one operating the car with the express or implied consent of the named assured, the same as if his name had been filled in. Whitney v. Employers Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 25, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495.

§ 534. "Permission" or "Consent" of Assured.—Most omnibus coverage clauses indemnify others than the insured only where such other persons are riding in or operating the insured automobile with the "permission" or "consent" of the assured.[2] In many of the clauses, the words relating to permission or consent are somewhat removed from the descriptive words "riding in," "operating," etc. Yet in all cases involving the operation of the clause with respect to a person "riding in" the car, or to a person "operating" the car, as the case may be, the words relating to permission or consent have been regarded applicable to such person. Thus, as regards a clause, by its terms applicable to "any person or persons while riding in or legally operating any automobile insured hereunder and any person, firm, or corporation legally responsible for the operation thereof with the permission of the named assured," etc., the words "with the permission of the named assured," etc., have been regarded applicable not only to a "person . . . legally responsible for the operation" of the car,[3] but also to a "person . . . riding in" the car[4] and a "person . . . operating" the car.[5] With one exception, most clauses are so framed as to leave little or no room for doubt as to the applicability of the words relating to permission or consent to a person "operating," etc., the car; the exception is that clause by its terms applicable to "(a) any person (s) while riding in or legally operating" the car, "or (b) any person, firm or corporation legally responsible for the operation thereof, providing such use or operation is with the permission of the named assured," etc. But, even as regards a clause couched in the language last quoted, the proviso relating to permission has been regarded applicable to a "person . . . operating" the car.[6] Under a clause of this character, to entitle one other than the named assured to indemnity on account of an accident in which the car was involved, the use or operation of the car at the time of such accident must have been with the "permission" ("or consent") of the named assured, etc., within the meaning and intent of the clause.[7]

---

[19] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1377.

[20] Clements v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 41 F. (2d) 470, 76 A.L.R. 17 (involving clause reading: "The word 'assured' wherever used in the policy shall include in addition to the assured named in the policy any person, firm, or corporation riding in or responsible for the operation of said automobile or automobiles . . . with the permission of said named assured," etc., recovery denied for breach of condition relating to notice of accident).

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1377.

"The words 'additional assured(s),' used in the insuring agreements, shall mean (a) any person(s) while riding in or legally operating an automobile insured hereunder, or (b) any person, firm, or corporation legally responsible for the operation thereof, providing such use or operation is with the permission of the named assured." Stovall v. New York Indem. Co. 157 Tenn. 301, 8 S. W. (2d) 473, 72 A.L.R. 1368.

Protection against third party risks to one coming within the defined group is afforded by a clause reading: "The insurance provided by this policy is so extended as to be available, in the same manner and under the same conditions ['provisions' sometimes substituted] as it is available to the named assured, to any person or persons while riding in or legally operating" the car, "and ['or' sometimes substituted] to any person, firm, or corporation legally responsible for the operation thereof, provided such use or operation is with the permission of the named assured." Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ronan (C. C. A. 2d) 37 F. (2d) 449, 72 A.L.R. 1360; Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500.

"Assured" to Include Third Persons or Form.—Protection against third party risks to one coming within the defined group is likewise afforded by a clause reading: "The unqualified word 'assured,' wherever used in this policy, shall be construed to include, in addition to the named assured in this policy, any person or persons while riding in or legally operating any automobile insured hereunder, and any person, firm, or corporation legally responsible for the operation thereof with the permission of the named assured." Odden v. Union Indem. Co. 156 Wash. 10, 286 P. 59, 72 A.L.R. 1363.

One who rents a car from a corporation engaged in the business of renting automobiles, without drivers, to persons who either drive them or independently employ drivers, comes within the protection of a policy issued to the corporation and specifying as those who are insured not only the corporation itself and allied companies designated as the "named assured," but also "renters," "drivers," etc. Royal Indem. Co. v. Morris (C. C. A. 9th) 37 F. (2d) 90, writ of certiorari denied in 281 U. S. 748, 74 L. ed. 1160, 50 S. Ct. 353.

[1] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1377.

[2] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1386.

[3] Odden v. Union Indem. Co. 156 Wash. 10, 286 P. 59, 72 A.L.R. 1363.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1387.

[4] Odden v. Union Indem. Co. 156 Wash. 10, 286 P. 59, 72 A.L.R. 1363.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1387.

[5] Odden v. Union Indem. Co. 156 Wash. 10, 286 P. 59, 72 A.L.R. 1363.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1387.

As regards the construction of the word "permission," as used in a clause of this character, there applies, under some circumstances at least, the general rule to the effect that where words are so used in a contract of insurance that their meaning is ambiguous or susceptible of two interpretations differing in import, that interpretation which will sustain the claim of the policyholder and cover the loss should be adopted.[8] There applies also, however, the general rule to the effect that "the terms of the policy cannot be enlarged or diminished by judicial construction."[9]

§ 535. —Capacity to Grant.—For one's use and operation of a car to be "with the express or implied consent" of the named assured, within the meaning and effect of the omnibus clause, the relation of the named assured to the car must be such that he or it is in a position to give consent.[10] A conditional vendor of the car, which, though retaining title to the car until fully paid for, has no control over the car and no right to the use of the same in its business, is in no position to give the consent provided for in such a clause, so as to bring the conditional vendee within the protection of a policy issued to the conditional vendor as the named assured, and containing such a clause.[11]

By the terms of some omnibus clauses the permission or consent prerequisite to the applicability of the clause may be granted not only by the named assured himself, where an individual, but also by an adult member of his family or household.[12] A bailee has been held authorized to give such permission.[13]

---

[6] Stovall v. New York Indem. Co. 157 Tenn. 301, 8 S. W. (2d) 473, 72 A.L.R. 1368.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1387.

[7] Whitney v. Employers Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 25, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495; Stovall v. New York Indem. Co. 157 Tenn. 301, 8 S. W. (2d) 473, 72 A.L.R. 1368.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1387.

[8] Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500; Stovall v. New York Indem. Co. 157 Tenn. 301, 8 S. W. (2d) 473, 72 A.L.R. 1368.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1388.

[9] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1388.

[10] Whitney v. Employers Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 25, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1390.

[11] Whitney v. Employers Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 25, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1390.

[12] Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500 (car held to have been operated with the "permission" of a brother of the named assured, he being an adult member of the named assured's household other than a chauffeur or a domestic servant).
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1391.

[13] Bailee with Full Power to Permit Its Use by Others.—Where from the findings of the trial judge, supported by the evidence, it plainly appears that the loan of the car by the named assured to one H. vested in the latter full power, while the car was so in his possession, to use it personally for his own business and pleasure, and full power to permit its use by others for their own business and pleasure, as if he were the owner of the automobile it follows that H.'s permission to another, one B., so to use and permit the use of the car, was in legal effect the same as if the named assured himself had granted to the said B. permission to use the car for his own pleasure. Odden v. Union Indem. Co. 156 Wash. 10, 286 P. 59, 72 A.L.R. 1363 (held, as a further conclusion that a fourth person, one O., riding in the car as

Ordinarily, "permission" (or "consent") to use the car, granted by an officer of the named assured, where the latter is a corporation, is "permission" (or "consent") "of the named assured" [some clauses omit the word "named"], within the meaning and effect of "omnibus" clause.[14]

536. —Continuous Permission.—"Permission," within the meaning of the omnibus clause, may be continuous.[15]

§ 537. —Implied Permission or Consent.—Some omnibus clauses use the words "express or implied consent," thereby precluding any question as to whether or not the consent contemplated by the clause may be implied as well as express. In other such clauses, the words "permission," "permission and consent," "knowledge and consent," etc., if and when they are used, appear without definition; in that event, the word or words involved are construed to include implied permission, etc.[16] For one's use and operation of a car to be "with the express or implied consent" of the named assured, within the meaning and effect of an omnibus clause, the relation of the named assured to the car must be such that it (he) is in a position to give its (his) consent.[17] Permission to take and use the car upon a particular occasion, within the meaning and effect of the omnibus clause, may, in a proper case, be implied by usage and common practice of the parties.[18]

By some courts it is held that for one's use or operation of the car to be with the "permission" of the named assured, etc., within the meaning and effect of the omnibus clause, he need have received only permission or authority to take and use the car in the first instance.[19] Some other courts take the less extreme view, as regards one having permission to take and use the car in the first instance, that slight deviations by him in the use of the car from the purpose, etc., for which he received permission to use it do not make his use or operation of the car at the time without the "permission" of the person granting him the limited permission to take and use the car.[20]

§ 538. —Effect of Deviations.—As regards the breadth to be given the word "permission," as used in an omnibus coverage clause, where one asks for and receives permission to use the car for a purpose indicated by him in his request, it will not be held that any deviation or departure from the purpose an invited guest of B.—at a time when it was being used by the latter for his own pleasure, with the permission of H.—was in legal effect riding in the car with the permission of the named assured). Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1395.

---

[14] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ronan (C. C. A. 2d) 37 F. (2d) 449, 72 A.L.R. 1360; Whitney v. Employers Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 25, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495 (named assured held to have been in no position to grant its "express or implied consent" to the use of particular car); Stovall v. New York Indem. Co. 157 Tenn. 301, 8 S. W. (2d) 473, 72 A.L.R. 1368 (sales manager).

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1394.

[15] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1397.

[16] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1398.

[17] Whitney v. Employers Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 25, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495.

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1398.

[18] Where a salesman of the named assured, for whose use as such the latter purchased and kept a car, not only used it in and about the business of the named assured, but used it in and about his own private affairs, at times with the knowledge and express permission of the officers of the named assured, and at other times without their knowledge or express permission, permission having always been given when asked for, and no objection having ever been made to his use of the car for his personal accommodation without their knowledge or express permission, though on numerous occasions he had afterwards told them of such use of the car, such salesman's taking of the car and driving it to the cemetery, for his personal accommodation, though without having obtained specific permission of the officers of the named assured, was with their "permission," and therefore that of the named assured, implied by usage and common practice, within the meaning of a clause of this character. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ronan (C. C. A. 2d) 37 F. (2d) 449, 72 A.L.R. 1360. Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1398.

[19] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1400.

[20] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1400.

so indicated by him annuls the permission and puts him in the position of unlawfully using the car.[1] Nor will slight deviations from the route to the place to which he asked for, and received, permission to drive the car have that effect.[2] The view taken by some courts is, broadly stated, that for the use or operation of the car to be with the "permission," or "consent," of the named assured, etc., within the meaning and effect of an omnibus clause, permission or consent must have been given, impliedly at least, not only to the taking and use of the car in the first instance, but also to the particular use being made of the car at the time in question.[3] Other courts take the view that for one's use or operation of the car to be with the "permission" of the named assured, etc., within the meaning and effect of an omnibus clause, he need have received only permission or authority to take and use the car in the first instance.[4] In other words, if one receives the permission of the named assured, etc., to take and use the car in the first instance, his use or operation of the car while the same remains in his possession is with the "permission" of that person, within the meaning and effect of the omnibus clause, though for a purpose, etc., not contemplated by said person at the time he parted with possession.[5]

§ 539. Liability Depending on Lawful Operation of Car.—Very often the omnibus clause by its terms applies to, or among others to, any person or persons while riding in or "legally operating" the car, with the permission of the named assured, etc., or—as more often appears in the clause, provided ["providing" sometimes used] such use or operation is with the permission of the named assured, etc. In some such clauses, otherwise similar, the words "lawfully operating" are substituted for those above quoted. In still other such clauses, there is the proviso, following the enumeration of those to whom the clause applies, "provided the use and operation thereof are lawful" and with the permission of the named assured, etc.[6] If the person operating the car at the time of an accident is doing so with the permission of the named assured, its owner, and in violation of no law, it follows, as a matter of course, that he is "legally operating" said car, within the meaning and effect of those words, as employed in an omnibus clause by its terms applicable to any person or persons while riding in or "legally operating" the car, etc.[7]

---

[1] Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1401.

Deviation by Borrower of Car as Affecting Right of His Guest to Insurance.—Under an omnibus clause in a policy insuring the owner of an automobile against liability for injuries through the operation of the car, which makes the insurance available to any person while riding in or legally operating the car, "provided such use or operation is with the permission" of the assured, the permission is not limited to use of the car for a specified purpose, but extends to any use made while the permission lasts, so that if the car is lent to one to go to his home to change his clothes, the insurance will inure to the benefit of a guest of the borrower while the borrower is operating the car entirely off the route along which the errand for which he borrowed the car would have taken him. Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500.

[2] Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1402.

[3] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1403.

[4] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1405.

[5] Stovall v. New York Indem. Co. 157 Tenn. 301, 8 S. W. (2d) 473, 72 A.L.R. 1368. See also Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1406.

[6] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1411.

[7] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ronan (C. C. A. 2d) 37 F. (2d) 449, 72 A.L.R. 1360.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1411.

Other cases, involving such a clause, in which judgment for the plaintiff was affirmed, it appearing that the driver of the car at the time of the accident was then operating it with the permission of the named assured or other person having authority under the clause to grant permission include Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500; Stovall v. New York Indem. Co. 157 Tenn. 301, 8 S. W. (2d) 473, 72 A.L.R. 1368. Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1411.

The use of the words "legally operating," as employed in an "omnibus" clause,—in this case a clause providing that the unqualified word "assured,"

§ 540. Legal Responsibility for Operation of Car.—In one of its simplest forms, the omnibus clause by its terms applies, without further enumeration, to "any person responsible for the operation" of the car while the same is being used with the express or implied consent of the named assured.[8] Ordinarily a person operating the car is "responsible," or "legally responsible," "for the operation" of the same, within the meaning of the omnibus clause. Of that there can be no doubt.[9]

§ 541. Inapplicability of Clause to Certain Classes of Persons.—Frequently, the omnibus clause contains an exception or proviso, the effect of which is to declare the clause inapplicable to "a public automobile garage, automobile repair shop, automobile sales agency, automobile service station, and the agents or ['and'] employees thereof."[10] There may be, of course, variations of the language quoted.[11]

§ 542. Preferential Protection of Assured.—A proviso inserted in the omnibus clause, to the effect that "insurance payable hereunder shall be applied first to the protection of the named assured, and the remainder, if any, to the protection of other persons entitled to insurance under the provisions and conditions of this clause, as the named assured shall in writing direct," applies only where more than one person is entitled to the protection of the insurance contract, in respect of an accident upon which a claim is based.[12]

§ 543. Right of Action against Insurer.—One within the protection of the omnibus clause, in respect of an accident and his liability therefor, is an "assured," within the meaning and effect of a policy provision giving to an injured person, or his or her personal representative, a right of action against the insurer "in case execution against the assured is returned unsatisfied" because of the latter's insolvency or bankruptcy.[13] wherever used in the policy, shall be construed to include, in addition to named assured therein, "any person or persons while riding in or legally operating any automobile insured hereunder, and any person, firm, or corporation legally responsible for the operation thereof with the permission of the named assured," etc.,—is meant to absolve the insurer from liability to one to whom the clause otherwise applies only in case his use of the car is illegal as between himself and the named assured, the owner of the car. Odden v. Union Indem. Co. 156 Wash. 10, 286 P. 59, 72 A.L.R. 1363.

---

[8] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1414.

[9] See Whitney v. Employers Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 25, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495. See also, in effect so declaring, Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ronan (C. C. A. 2d) 37 F. (2d) 449, 72 A.L.R. 1360.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1414.

[10] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1415.

[11] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1415.

[12] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ronan (C. C. A. 2d) 37 F. (2d) 449, 72 A.L.R. 1360.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1417.

Where the driver of the car, himself within the protection of the clause, is the only person entitled to claim indemnity in respect of an accident, being the only person liable therefor, his right to such indemnity, notwithstanding the proviso in question, is not dependent upon any direction in writing by the named assured. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ronan (C. C. A. 2d) 37 F. (2d) 449, 72 A.L.R. 1360.

In Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 866, the proposition is apparently assumed.

[13] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1430.

One within the protection of an "omnibus" clause, in respect of an accident and his liability therefor, is an "assured," or an "insured," as the case may be, within the meaning and effect of a statutory or policy provision giving to injured person, etc., a right of action against insurer after recovery of judgment against "the assured," or "the insured;" in several cases, however, there was no room for the application of the rule, for the reason that the judgment debtor, for one cause or another, was held not to have been within the protection of the "omnibus" clause. Clements v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 41 F. (2d) 470, 76 A.L.R. 17; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ronan (C. C. A. 2d) 37 F. (2d) 449, 72 A.L.R. 1360; Royal Indem. Co. v. Morris (C. C. A. 9th) 37 F. (2d) 90, writ of certiorari denied in 281 U. S. 748, 74 L. ed. 1160, 50 S. Ct. 353; Dickinson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 101 Conn. 369, 125 A. 866, 41 A.L.R. 500; Whitney v. Employers Indem. Corp. 200 Iowa, 25, 202 N. W. 236, 41 A.L.R. 495; Stovall v. New York Indem. Co. 157 Tenn. 301, 8 S. W. (2d) 473, 72 A.L.R. 1368; Odden v. Union Indem. Co. 156 Wash. 10, 286 P. 59, 72 A.L.R. 1363.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1431.

5. Duties and Liabilities of Insured

§ 544. Generally.—The duties and liabilities of an insured against liability by reason of his maintenance or operation of an automobile arise after the occurrence of the act resulting in liability, and consist in giving proper notice of an accident or claim which might result in the insurer's liability, and in co-operating with the insurer in the defense of an action to recover upon such liability. These questions will be considered separately in the following sections.[14]

§ 545. Co-operation by Insured.[15]—Sometimes there is included in liability or indemnity policies a clause, positive in its character, providing that the assured shall co-operate with and assist the insurer in resisting claims, etc., or, more particularly, that he shall aid in securing information, evidence, and the attendance of witnesses, in effecting settlements, in prosecuting appeals, etc.[16] A clause of this character is a perfectly reasonable one, framed with the object of protecting the insurance company against the risk of collusion between the assured and persons claiming damages for alleged torts,[17] and is a material condition of the policy, the violation of which by the assured forfeits his right to claim indemnity under the policy.[18] The insured must, therefore, comply with such provision,[19] as for a breach thereof in some material respect, the insurer is justified in withdrawing from the defense of the action brought against the assured and canceling the protection to him.[20]

On the other hand, co-operation may be excused as a matter of law if improperly demanded.[1] The assured "is not to be a mere puppet in the hands of the insurer, he is under no obligation to permit a sham defense to be set up in his name, nor can he be expected to verify an answer which he does not believe to be true; he cannot evade personal responsibility, and hence he is not bound to yield to any demand which would entail violation of any law or ethical principle; but he cannot arbitrarily or unreasonably decline to assist in making any fair and legitimate defense."[2]

---

[14] See infra, §§ 545 et seq.

[15] See Insurance [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 823].

[16] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1448, s. 98 A.L.R. 1466.

[17] Fidelity & C. Co. v. Marchand [1924] (Can.) S. C. R. 86, 13 B. R. C. 1135, [1924] 4 D. L. R. 157.

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1451, s. 98 A.L.R. 1467.

[18] Royal Indem. Co. v. Morris (C. C. A. 9th) 37 F. (2d) 90, writ of certiorari denied in 281 U. S. 748, 74 L. ed. 1160, 50 S. Ct. 353; Collins v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. 170 Ky. 27, 185 S. W. 112, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 59; Daly v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 269 Mass. 1, 168 N. E. 111, 72 A.L.R. 1436.

Fidelity & C. Co. v. Marchand [1924] (Can.) S. C. R. 86, 13 B. R. C. 1135, [1924] 4 D. L. R. 157, reversing Rap. Jud. Quebec 35 K. B. 5, [1923] 4 D. L. R. 913, which affirmed 29 Rev. Leg. Quebec 5, [1923] 4 D. L. R. 914.

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1448, s. 98 A.L.R. 1467.

[19] Collins v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. 170 Ky. 27, 185 S. W. 112, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 59.

Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1917D, 61.

[20] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1452, s. 98 A.L.R. 1468.

[1] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1453, s. 98 A.L.R. 1468.

In Collins v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. (1916) 170 Ky. 27, 185 S. W. 112, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 59, there was held to be no violation of a provision of a policy indemnifying against liability for injuries by an automobile, requiring the insured to aid in resisting the recovery of damages against her, because of her refusal to rely on the defense that the negligence of the chauffeur was imputable to the injured person, a guest, as, under the facts shown, there was no ground for such defense.

[2] Royal Indem. Co. v. Morris (C. C. A. 9th) 37 F. (2d) 90, writ of certiorari denied in 281 U. S. 748, 74 L. ed. 1160, 50 S. Ct. 353.

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1453, s. 98 A.L.R. 1468.

Accurate Disclosure of Facts.—Co-operation in a policy of automobile liability insurance requiring the assured, whenever requested by the insurance company, to "co-operate" with it in all matters which the company deems necessary in the defense of any suit, means that there shall be a fair, full, and accurate disclosure of facts by the assured, but does not require him to make statements, regardless of their truth, which establish nonliability.

§ 546. —Waiver of Right or Estoppel to Set Up Breach of Clause.—That the insurer may waive its right, or estop itself, to set up the assured's breach of co-operation clause, as a ground of defense when sued upon the policy, is a proposition not subject to debate.[3] Such waiver or estoppel may be accomplished by the assumption of, or continuation in, the defense of an action brought against the assured.[4] Thus, where, at the time actions brought against the assured went to trial, the insurer had notice that he could not or would not come to court at that time, and it then further knew all facts upon which, in subsequent actions against itself, it relied as establishing his breach of co-operation clause, but did not then notify the assured that it disclaimed liability under the policy, or that by continuing in the cases it would not waive its defenses to any action on the policy, or that he should engage personal counsel or otherwise take measures to protect his own interest in the cases, it, by continuing in the defense of those actions to trial and judgment, estopped itself to say that the assured's breach of co-operation clause relieved it from liability under the policy.[5]

The injured person, in an action against an insurer, is entitled to the benefit of a waiver of the right, or an estoppel, on the part of insurer to set up as against the assured the latter's alleged breach of co-operation clause; in other words, that which operates as a waiver or estoppel in favor of the assured, supposing an action upon the policy had been brought by him, also operates as a waiver or estoppel in favor of the injured person.[6]

§ 547. Notice of Accident or Claim.—Automobile liability insurance policies ordinarily contain a provision requiring immediate written notice of the occurrence of an accident or of a claim for damages resulting therefrom. The purpose of notice is to enable the insurer to inform itself promptly concerning the accident, so that it may investigate the circumstances, prepare for a defense, if necessary, or be advised whether it is prudent to settle any claim arising therefrom.[7] Because of its apparent wisdom,[8] such a provision is held reasonable[9] and valid,[10] and, being of the essence of the contract,[11] substantial com-

---

Ocean Acci. & G. Corp. v. Lucas (C. C. A. 6th) 74 F. (2d) 115, 98 A.L.R. 1461.

Deliberate and wilful falsification of material facts by the assured constitutes a violation of the terms of a policy of automobile liability insurance requiring the assured to co-operate with the insurer in all matters which the latter deems necessary in the defense of any suit. Ibid.

Variance between Statements and Testimony.—If lack of co-operation on the part of the assured, under a policy of automobile liability insurance requiring him to co-operate with the insurer in all matters which the latter deems necessary in the defense of any suit, is found to exist upon the sole ground of variance between statements of the assured to the insurer and his testimony on the trial, the variance must be not only material, but conscious. Ibid.

[3] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1492, s. 98 A.L.R. 1480.

[4] Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1493, s. 98 A.L.R. 1481.

[5] Daly v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 269 Mass. 1, 168 N. E. 111, 72 A.L.R. 1436.

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1493, s. 98 A.L.R. 1481.

Sufficiency of Disclaimer of Responsibility.—A statement by the insurer to the assured in an automobile liability insurance policy, that his unwillingness to attend the trial of the case against him violated the terms of his policy, is not in substance or effect a disclaimer on its part of full responsibility for continuing in sole control of the defense, or notice that it did not thereby intend to waive any defense to its liability under the policy. Daly v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 269 Mass. 1, 168 N. E. 111, 72 A.L.R. 1436. Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1498, s. 98 A.L.R. 1482.

[6] Daly v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 269 Mass. 1, 168 N. E. 111, 72 A.L.R. 1436.

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 1506, s. 98 A.L.R. 1486.

[7] Chapin v. Ocean Acci. & G. Corp. 96 Neb. 213, 147 N. W. 465, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227.

[8] Lewis v. Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. 142 Md. 472, 121 A. 259, 28 A.L.R. 1287.

[9] United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Miller, 237 Ky. 43, 34 S. W. (2d) 938, 76 A.L.R. 12; Chapin v. Ocean Acci. & G. Corp. 96 Neb. 213, 147 N. W. 465, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227; Miller v. Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. 50 R. I. 166, 146 A. 412.

Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 384, s. 13 A.L.R.

pliance with it is a condition precedent to the right to recover thereunder,[12] as an unreasonable failure to observe it constitutes a good ground for the forfeiture of the indemnity.[13]

§ 548. —Accidents Subject to Notice.—In an automobile liability insurance policy requiring immediate notice of the occurrence of an accident, the word "accident" means an undesigned and unforeseen occurrence of an afflictive or unfortunate character, resulting in bodily injury to a person other than the insured.[14] In other words, the provision does not require that notice be given of all accidents resulting from the operation of the insured's automobile, but merely those which result in bodily injuries to others.[15] The provision does not apply to trivial occurrences, and this is true even though such an occurrence may prove afterwards to result in serious injury,[16] provided the triviality of the occurrence is well ascertained.[17]

The word "loss," in an automobile indemnity insurance policy requiring immediate notice of accident or loss, means the injury or damage caused by the accident for which the insurer may, under the provisions of the policy, be liable, though at the time the extent of the loss may not be ascertainable.[18]

§ 549. —Time of Notice.—The time of giving notice of an accident, and its sufficiency, depend upon the provisions of the policy covering the accident. Practically all such policies provide for "immediate" notice. The word "immediate," as used in a clause by its terms requiring immediate notice of accident, claim, or suit, is not to be given a literal construction, and so does not mean that the notice shall be given instantaneously or without the lapse of any time.[19] It means notice within a reasonable time after the insured learns of an accident or claim.[20] The same construction has been applied where the words "prompt"[1] or "at once"[2] have been used instead of the usual word "immediate."

What is a reasonable time within which notice may be given depends upon the facts of the case.[3] Ordinarily notice must be given at the time of the accident, and cannot be deferred until a claim is made upon the assured for damages growing out of the accident.[4] Meritorious circumstances, however,

---

135, 19 A.L.R. 879, 23 A.L.R. 1472, 28 A.L.R. 1301, and 41 A.L.R. 507; 76 A.L.R. 180.

[10] Clements v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 41 F. (2d) 470, 76 A.L.R. 17; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Miller, 237 Ky. 43, 34 S. W. (2d) 938, 76 A.L.R. 12.

[11] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 183.

[12] Clements v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 41 F. (2d) 470, 76 A.L.R. 17.
Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 184.

[13] United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Miller, 237 Ky. 43, 34 S. W. (2d) 938, 76 A.L.R. 12.

[14] Chapin v. Ocean Acci. & G. Corp. 96 Neb. 213, 147 N. W. 465, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227.

[15] Ibid.

[16] Haas Tobacco Co. v. American Fidelity Co. 226 N. Y. 343, 123 N. E. 755, 13 A.L.R. 132.
Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 384; 13 A.L.R. 138.

[17] Haas Tobacco Co. v. American Fidelity Co. 226 N. Y. 343, 123 N. E. 755, 13 A.L.R. 132.

Where a boy is knocked down in the street by the assured's automobile, and is at least slightly injured, the assured may not, without any investigation whatever, rely upon his opinion or that of his driver that because the boy went away, the injury was too trivial to require attention. Ibid.

[18] Lewis v. Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. 142 Md. 472, 121 A. 259, 28 A.L.R. 1287.

[19] Chapin v. Ocean Acci. & G. Corp. 96 Neb. 213, 147 N. W. 465, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227.
Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 53.

[20] Chapin v. Ocean Acci. & G. Corp. 96 Neb. 213, 147 N. W. 465, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227.
Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 54.

[1] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 59.

[2] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 59.

[3] Clements v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 41 F. (2d) 470, 76 A.L.R. 17 (twenty-three months not "immediate," within provision); Haas Tobacco Co. v. American Fidelity Co. 226 N. Y. 343, 123 N. E. 755, 13 A.L.R. 132 (ten days not "immediate," within the meaning and effect of clause).
Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 60.

[4] Lewis v. Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. 142 Md. 472, 121 A. 259, 28 A.L.R. 1287.

may sometimes warrant extending beyond what would ordinarily be reasonable time, the time within which the insured may give notice,[5] such as the impossibility of giving notice,[6] or mental or physical incapacity.[7]

§ 550. —Who May or Must Give Notice.—Notwithstanding that by the terms of a clause the notice of accident is to be given by "the assured," this does not mean that the assured, where an individual, must personally give the notice; it may be given by another acting as his agent and representative in the matter.[8] Where the assured is a corporation, such notice is given by and through its officers and agents.[9] As regards the rights against the insurer of an injured person under a statutory or policy provision giving to him a right of action upon the policy, his own giving of notice of the accident sufficiently complies with a condition in the policy requiring the assured to give notice of the accident.[10]

§ 551. —Oral or Written Notice.—Some clauses requiring notice of an accident, or of a claim made against the assured on account thereof, do not specify in what manner or by what means the notice shall be given. Ordinarily, however, the clause, by its terms, requires "written" notice, or notice "in writing." A requirement that notice must be in writing is not satisfied by an oral notice [11] or notice given over the telephone.[12]

§ 552. —Scope of Notice.—When the clause requires a simple "written notice of any accident," a detailed report is unnecessary.[13] But where "the fullest information obtainable at the time" is required, the assured must furnish information not only as to how the accident occurred, but also of the injuries from which any loss covered by the policy resulted.[14]

§ 553. —Waiver of Right to Notice.—A condition in an automobile indemnity insurance policy, requiring the insured to give immediate notice of any serious accident, is for the benefit of the insurer and may be waived by the latter.[15] Similarly, a condition in the policy with respect to the forwarding of the suit papers in an action brought against the assured may be waived.[16] Such a waiver may be effected by an agent, officer, or representative of the insurer,[17] and may result from any words or conduct of the insurer, with knowledge of the facts which furnish the ground of forfeiture, that show a recognition of the continued existence of the insurance.[18] On the other hand, waiver against the insured does not constitute a waiver against others covered by the policy.[19] For instance, failure to give notice of the accident as required by an automobile liability policy, although waived as to the named assured, relieves the insurer from direct liability to the person injured who has recovered a judgment, upon which an execution has been returned unsatisfied, against one other than the named assured, who was within the coverage of the policy but who would have been precluded by such failure from holding the insurer liable if he had paid the judgment.[20]

---

[5] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 74.

[6] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 75.

By some statutes a liability policy is required to contain a provision that failure to give any notice required to be given by such policy within the time specified therein shall not invalidate any claim made by the assured if it shall be shown not to have been reasonably possible to give such notice within the time prescribed, and that notice was given as soon as was reasonably possible. Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 71.

Where No Injury Apparent.—Where, at the time a person was thrown from his bicycle as a result of being struck by the insured's automobile, no injury was apparent, and the person thrown stated that he had received none, and for about a year thereafter the insured honestly believed that none resulted, it was held that it could not be said, as a matter of law, that the conditions of the accident were such as to bring it within the class of which it was the insured's duty to give immediate notice, or that the notice given was not given within a reasonable time, it appearing that upon the insured's being notified that a suit was to be brought against him on account of the injury, he immediately notified the insurer. Chapin v. Ocean Acci. & G. Corp. 96 Neb. 213, 147 N. W. 465, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227.

Fact that Injuries Slight No Excuse for Delay.—The accident covered by the policy having in fact caused bodily injuries, the view is taken by some courts that the fact that the injuries are slight, or the fact that they are apparently so, or the fact that the assured believes them to be so, will not excuse his delay in giving notice of the accident. Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 114.

[7] Annotation: 76 A.L..R 76.

[8] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 37.

[9] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 37.

[10] Royal Indem. Co. v. Morris (C. C. A. 9th) 37 F. (2d) 90, writ of certiorari denied in 281 U. S. 748, 74 L. ed. 1160, 50 S. Ct. 353; Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Colthurst (C. C. A. 9th) 36 F. (2d) 559, writ of certiorari denied in 281 U. S. 746, 74 L. ed. 1158, 50 S. Ct. 351.

Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 38.

[11] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 40.

[12] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 41.

[13] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 43.

[14] Lewis v. Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. 142 Md. 472, 121 A. 259, 28 A.L.R. 1287.

[15] Clements v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 41 F. (2d) 470, 76 A.L.R. 17; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Miller,

D. Collision Insurance

§ 554. Generally.—Insurance against damage resulting to automobiles from collision with other automobiles, vehicles, or objects, either as part of automobile insurance policies or independently therefrom, is very common, and the courts have been frequently called upon to determine the meaning of the word "collision," to determine the liability of the insurer for damages resulting from particular accidents. The meaning of the word "collision," and what constitutes a collision within the meaning of an automobile insurance policy, will be considered in the following sections.[1]

§ 555. What Constitutes Collision.—The word "collision," as used in automobile collision insurance policies, means the act of colliding, and imports a

---

237 Ky. 43, 34 S. W. (2d) 938, 76 A.L.R. 12. Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 128.

Stipulation for Written Indorsement of Waiver.—As regards a clause in an insurance policy stipulating in effect that no condition or provision of the policy shall be waived or altered, except by written indorsement attached thereto and signed by certain designated officers, in many jurisdictions there prevails the rule that such a clause does not apply to conditions, etc., which are to be performed after a loss has occurred, such as that requiring notice. Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 137.

[16] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 128.

[17] One who is such an agent as is entitled to receive notice of an accident, under the terms of the contract, has the right to waive a written notice of the accident and to agree to take care of the matter himself. Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 139.

Provision in Policy Denying Power to Waive.—The clause of an indemnity policy providing that no officer, agent, or other representative of the company shall have power to waive any condition thereof, except such as may be indorsed thereon or added thereto, has no reference to those stipulations which are to be performed after a loss has occurred, such as giving notice of the accident. Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 138.

[18] United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Miller, 237 Ky. 43, 34 S. W. (2d) 938, 76 A.L.R. 12.

Taking Control of Litigation.—An automobile indemnity insurer irrevocably waives failure to receive immediate notice of the accident by accepting from one within the coverage of the policy the summons served upon the latter and taking control of the litigation, with knowledge of the facts and without reservation of rights in the premises. Ibid.

Conducting Defense and Offer of Settlement.—The acts of an automobile liability insurer in causing the defense of an action against the insured to be conducted by an attorney in its employ after the insured had disappeared, and in offering considerable sums in settlement of the claim and the judgment recovered thereon, operate, as to the judgment creditor garnishing the insurer, as a waiver of the failure of the insured to give notice of the accident and to assist in the defense as required by the policy. Brandon v. St. Paul Mercury Indem. Co. 132 Kan. 68, 294 P. 881, 83 A.L.R. 673.

Facts Held Not to Constitute Waiver of Absence of Notice of Claim.—An indemnity insurer does not waive its right to exemption from liability because of failure to give it immediate notice of the accident as required by the policy, by requesting a copy of notice of claim when notified of it and telling insured not to worry, that it would "look after him," if it promptly notifies insured after learning the facts that the claim is not covered by the policy. Lewis v. Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. 142 Md. 472, 121 A. 259, 28 A.L.R. 1287. Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 17.

[19] Clements v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. (C. C. A. 8th) 41 F. (2d) 470, 76 A.L.R. 17.

[20] Ibid.

[1] See infra, §§ 555 et seq.

striking together or against,[2] a violent contact,[3] the sudden contact of a moving body with an obstruction in the line of motion.[4] It is not necessary, in order to constitute a "collision" within the meaning of a policy insuring against damage resulting from a collision of an automobile with any other automobile, vehicle, or object, that both objects should be in motion.[5]

Most collisions occur in the violent impact of two bodies on the same plane or level, and it is undoubtedly true that the word is more frequently used to express such impacts than other violent impacts. However, it is doubtful that this fact has given to the word such a common understanding of its meaning as to exclude violent impacts not upon the same plane or level.[6] If one machine was going up and another going down a steep hill, and they came together violently, no one would hesitate for a moment in using the word "collision."[7] The better rule, the safe rule, is to treat and consider the word as having the meaning given it uniformly by the lexicographers, that where there is a striking together, a violent contact or meeting of two bodies, there is a collision between them, and that the angle from which the impact occurs is unimportant.[8]

§ 556. Collision with "Objects."—Automobile collision insurance policies ordinarily provide for insurance against damages by collision with other automobiles, vehicles, or objects. Such a provision covers striking against a stationary object.[9] According to some courts, water and land are "objects," and an automobile which runs into either or both collides with an object or objects, though the objects are horizontal rather than perpendicular,[10] but other courts have limited a provision as to collisions with any vehicle or other object to like objects, so as to preclude a recovery for injury caused, for instance, by running off a bank.[11] Ordinarily, the word "object," as used in provisions insuring against damage to automobiles by collision with other automobiles, vehicles, or objects, has been held not to be confined to objects similar to an automobile or vehicle,[12] but to include objects of a class different from automobiles or vehicles, since otherwise it would have no meaning because the specific words used embrace all objects of the class covered by them.[13] Because of the multiple variety of collisions and the variety of provisions in policies, no line of demarcation can be drawn between those accidents which constitute collisions within the meaning of insurance policies and those that do not. Each case seems to depend upon such provisions and facts. The insurer has been held liable for collision, by the contact of an automobile with the bank of a ditch,[14] by striking of the ground at the bottom of a declivity,[15] for collision with a paved roadway [16] or embankment,[17] for the striking of an elevator, in which an automobile was being transported in a garage, against the bottom of the shaft,[18] and for injury to an automobile truck by the falling upon it of a loaded scoop of a steam shovel.[19] On the other hand, liability has been denied for damages to an automobile due to skidding,[20] to the sinking

---

[2] Harris v. American Casualty Co. 83 N. J. L. 641, 85 A. 194, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 846.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 188, s. 26 A.L.R. 429, 30 A.L.R. 806, 35 A.L.R. 1031, 40 A.L.R. 999, 42 A.L.R. 1130, and 54 A.L.R. 1445.

[3] Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Cartmel, 87 Fla. 495, 100 So. 802, 35 A.L.R. 1013.

[4] St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. American Compounding Co. 211 Ala. 593, 100 So. 904, 35 A.L.R. 1018.

[5] Harris v. American Casualty Co. 83 N. J. L. 641, 85 A. 194, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 846.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 188, s. 26 A.L.R. 429, 30 A.L.R. 806, 35 A.L.R. 1031, 40 A.L.R. 999, 42 A.L.R. 1130, and 54 A.L.R. 1445; Ann. Cas. 1914B, 848.

[6] Universal Service Co. v. American Ins. Co. 213 Mich. 523, 181 N. W. 1007, 14 A.L.R. 183.

[7] Ibid.

[8] Ibid.

[9] Annotation: 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 583, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 630.

[10] Harris v. American Casualty Co. 83 N. J. L. 641, 85 A. 194, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 846.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 190, s. 26 A.L.R. 429, 30 A.L.R. 806, 35 A.L.R. 1031, 40 A.L.R. 999, 42 A.L.R. 1130, and 54 A.L.R. 1445; Ann. Cas. 1914B, 848.

[11] Weltengel v. United States "Lloyds," 157 Wis. 433, 147 N. W. 360, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 626.

[12] Harris v. American Casualty Co. 83 N. J. L. 641, 85 A. 194, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 846; Bell v. American Ins. Co. 173 Wis. 533, 181 N. W. 733, 14 A.L.R. 179, 20 N. C. C. A. 867.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 190, s. 26 A.L.R. 429, 30 A.L.R. 806, 35 A.L.R. 1031, 40 A.L.R. 999, 42 A.L.R. 1130, and 54 A.L.R. 1445.

[13] Bell v. American Ins. Co. 173 Wis. 533, 181 N. W. 733, 14 A.L.R. 179, 20 N. C. C. A. 867.
Exclusion of liability for injury caused by striking any portion of the roadbed or the rails of railroads does not indicate a practical construction of a policy insuring against collisions with any object, and omitting such words, as including liability for injury caused by the overturning of the vehicle. Ibid.

---

[14] The contact of an automobile with the bank of a ditch into which it dropped when the driver turned out of the road to avoid an obstruction is within the provision of an accident insurance policy against accidental collision with any object. T. C. Power Motor Car Co. v. United States F. Ins. Co. 69 Mont. 563, 223 P. 112, 35 A.L.R. 1028. Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 807, s. 35 A.L.R. 1031, 40 A.L.R. 999, 42 A.L.R. 1130, and 54 A.L.R. 1445.

[15] The striking of the ground at the bottom of the declivity by an automobile falling over a precipice at the side of the road after it has started by the force of gravity when left standing on an inclined roadway is a collision within the meaning of a policy insuring against damage by accidental collision with any other automobile, vehicle, or object. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. American Compounding Co. 211 Ala. 593, 100 So. 904, 35 A.L.R. 1018.

Reason for Rule.—This is so held upon the sound basis of reason that the form of contract is made by the insurer and tendered to the public. He may insert therein, as is often done in this kind of policy, such exceptions as he may desire, to limit the effect of general words to a narrower meaning than given by lexicographers. Ibid.

[16] Collision with Paved Roadway.—Under an insurance policy indemnifying the assured against direct loss or damage to an automobile by "accidental collision with another object, either moving or stationary," the insurer is liable for injury to such automobile caused by a collision with the paved roadway as a result of turning a sudden and sharp curve which threw the automobile over on its side. Great American Mut. Indem. Co. v. Jones, 111 Ohio St. 84, 144 N. E. 596, 35 A.L.R. 1023, 23 N. C. C. A. 647.

The term "roadbed" in a policy excluding damage caused by striking the "roadbed" has been held to apply only to that portion of the road which was constructed and used for travel, and an embankment adjoining the highway, down which the plaintiff's automobile skidded, was held not a part of the "roadbed" within the exception. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 190, s. 26 A.L.R. 429, 30 A.L.R. 806, 35 A.L.R. 1031, 40 A.L.R. 999, 42 A.L.R. 1130, and 54 A.L.R. 1445.

[17] Collision with Embankment. — Insurance of an automobile against collision with any object, moving or stationary, covers a collision with an embankment near the highway when the car becomes unmanageable, leaves the road, and strikes such embankment, crushing the front wheels and overturning. Interstate Casualty Co. v. Stewart, 208 Ala. 377, 94 So. 345, 26 A.L.R. 427.

Collision with Embankment Adjacent to Highway.—In Pred v. Employer's Indem. Corp. 112 Neb. 161, 198 N. W. 864, 35 A.L.R. 1003, it was held that when an automobile, while being driven along the highway, is driven against an embankment alongside of and adjacent to the highway with such force as to cause it to be overturned and wrecked, the injury resulting to the car is caused by a collision, within the meaning of the terms of an insurance policy which insured against loss or damage by "collision with another object, either moving or stationary." An embankment adjacent to the highway is an object, within the meaning of the clause quoted.

[18] The striking of an elevator, in which an automobile is being transported in a garage, against the bottom of the shaft upon the breaking of its apparatus is a collision, within the meaning of a clause insuring the automobile, while being transported in any conveyance, against the stranding, sinking, collision, burning, or derailment of such conveyance. National F. Ins. Co. v. Elliott (C. C. A. 8th) 7 F. (2d) 522, 42 A.L.R. 1121.

[19] Injury to a truck by the falling upon it of a loaded scoop of a steam shovel which is engaged in loading the truck is within a full coverage collision insurance policy upon the truck. Universal Service Co. v. American Ins. Co. 213 Mich. 523, 181 N. W. 1007, 14 A.L.R. 183.

[20] Skidding as Proximate Cause of Injury.—In Ploe v. International Indem. Co. 128 Wash. 480, 223 P. 327, 35 A.L.R. 999, it was held that the skidding of an automobile, which carries it out of the road and down an embankment, and not the object with which it comes in contact during its descent, is the proximate cause of the injury to it by such collision, and therefore, the loss is not within a policy insuring against damage by collision. In this case it was held that the striking of an automobile, which has left the highway on a mountain side, with the earth, as it rolls and bounds downward, is not a collision within the meaning of a policy insuring against damage by collision with any object.

The overturning of an automobile, due to its skidding upon an oiled pavement, reversing its position, and causing a wheel to collapse, is not within a policy insuring against damage to it, if caused solely by collision with another object, either movof a roadbed,[1] to running off a ferryboat in which the automobile was being transported,[2] to tipping over on the road in attempting to avoid a collision,[3] and to rolling down a hill.[4]

§ 557. Provisions as to "Upsets."—The insurance of an automobile against injury from collision with any other automobile, vehicle, or object does not include injury due to the upsetting of the machine.[5] However, a provision in a policy indemnifying against collision, that damages resulting from collision due wholly or in part to upsets shall be excluded does not operate to defeat recovery where an automobile runs off a bridge, is precipitated into the water below, and lands at the bottom of the stream upside down, the collision not being due to the upset, but rather, the upset being the result of the collision.[6]

E. Fire Insurance

§ 558. Generally.—Insuring automobiles against loss by fire is a very common type of insurance, and, consequently, actions upon such policies are just as common.[7] Sometimes, for convenience or expediency, the parties may enter into an oral contract for fire insurance before the issuance of a policy. Such a contract, if valid, is binding upon the insurer.[8]

§ 559. Provisions against Encumbrances.—Automobile fire insurance policies sometimes provide that the policy shall be void if the automobile is or ing or stationary. Great Eastern Casualty Co. v. Solinsky, 150 Tenn. 206, 263 S. W. 71, 35 A.L.R. 1007.

---

[1] Sinking in Roadbed.—A contract of insurance indemnified the owner against loss or damage sustained to an automobile described, "if caused solely by collision with another object, either moving or stationary." In an action on the policy it was proved at the trial that "all of a sudden" the roadbed "gave way under the car," and it "went down in soft sand" and "stuck." This was held not a "collision" within the meaning of the term as employed in the policy. Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Cartmel, 87 Fla. 495, 100 So. 802, 35 A.L.R. 1013.

[2] Running Off Ferryboat in Which Being Transported. — A policy insuring against loss of an automobile while being transported in any conveyance—stranding, sinking, collision, burning, or derailment of such conveyance—does not cover loss of the automobile by its running off from a ferryboat through the improper handling of the car by the owner. Johnson v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 131 S. C. 253, 127 S. E. 14, 40 A.L.R. 993. Annotation: 40 A.L.R. 999, s. 42 A.L.R. 1130, and 54 A.L.R. 1445.

[3] Injury to an automobile by tipping over on the road in attempting to avoid a collision with other cars is not within the operation of a policy insuring against injuries "caused solely by accidental collision with another object." Brown v. Union Indem. Co. 159 La. 641, 105 So. 918, 54 A.L.R. 1439.

[4] Injury to Car Rolling Down Hill.—In Continental Casualty Co. v. Paul, 209 Ala. 166, 95 So. 814, 30 A.L.R. 802, it was held that injury to an automobile by the failure of its brakes to hold on an incline, so that of its own momentum, without the application of any exterior force, and simply in obedience to the law of gravity, it rolls down an embankment to the bottom of a cut by the side of the road, is not the result of collision with any moving or stationary object within the meaning of a policy insuring against injury so caused, although the injury is caused by impact with the earth or other obstructions at the bottom of the declivity.

[5] Bell v. American Ins. Co. 173 Wis. 533, 181 N. W. 733, 14 A.L.R. 179, 20 N. C. C. A. 867.

[6] Harris v. American Casualty Co. 83 N. J. L. 641, 85 A. 194, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 846.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 191, s. 26 A.L.R. 429, 30 A.L.R. 806, 35 A.L.R. 1031, 40 A.L.R. 999, 42 A.L.R 1130, and 54 AL.R. 1445.

As to the meaning of a provision excepting damage due to "upset," it was said in Harris v. American Casualty Co. 83 N. J. L. 641, 85 A. 194, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 70, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 846: "It is true that it is provided in the indorsement insuring against damage resulting from collision that 'damage resulting from collision due wholly or in part to upsets' shall be excluded. But it cannot be said that the collision of the plaintiff's automobile with the water and land under the water was caused by an upset. It may be that the car upset by reason of contact with the water or the earth, but the collision was not due to an upset—the upset may have been the result of the collision. The provision in the policy cannot mean that where collision has first taken place, there can be no recovery because, as the result of the collision, the machine is upset. When the car ran off the bridge, dynamic force and gravitation determined the position in which it would strike first the water and then the bed of the stream. Its final position was merely incidental to the collision." Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1915A, 631.

[7] Annotation: 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 71.

[8] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 200, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

becomes encumbered by a chattel mortgage, or if any change takes place in the interest, title, or posession of the subject of insurance. A provision to this effect is reasonable and valid, and in case the insured fails to comply with it, the insurer has a right to insist that its liability is terminated.[9] But the inclusion, in a deed of trust of personal property, of an automobile insured by a fire policy providing that it shall be void if the property becomes encumbered, will not prevent a recovery on the policy if the deed of trust is only temporary, is satisfied and canceled before a loss, and is not material to the risk or is fraudulent.[10] Likewise, if, during the use and trial of an automobile by a prospective buyer, the property is covered by a fire insurance policy issued to the original owner, insuring against loss by fire, and the car is destroyed by fire, it will not defeat the insured's right to recover on the policy.[11]

§ 560. Identification and Description of Car.—In automobile fire insurance policies the insured is ordinarily required to make statements as to the age, motor number, cost, etc., of the automobile insured. Such statements are, of course, for the identification of the subject of insurance and constitute representations material to the risk, the falsity of which will avoid the policy.[12] While this is true generally, a partial misdescription of an automobile will not bar a recovery if the misdescription relates to an unimportant matter and the automobile is otherwise fully identified.[13] However, if the policy makes a misdescription a breach of warranty and this is proper under controlling statutes, a misdescription bars recovery, irrespective of its materiality.[14] The view has been taken that since the age of an automobile upon which fire insurance is sought is material only in so far as it affects its value, and thereby the moral hazard to be assumed by the insurer, an order directing a verdict for the insurer, based solely upon a misrepresentation of the age of the automobile, is not warranted, in the absence of evidence as to relative values.[15] Furthermore an erroneous statement of the year of manufacture has been held immaterial where other information was supplied or opportunity for inspection furnished from which the correct year could have been determined.[16] Moreover, where the insured obtains the car in exchange for other property, his statements as to the cost thereof may not be material.[17]

561. Provision as to Renting or Use for Hire.—In automobile fire insurance policies a condition is often stipulated to the effect that the insured automobile shall not be rented or used for passenger service of any kind for hire. Such a stipulation implies more than a single act of renting or using, and refers to the business of carrying passengers for hire.[18] A single act of renting or using the car for hire, a mere casual or isolated instance, is not contemplated thereby,[19] unless the stipulation is a warranty, in which case even a temporary breach thereof will bar a recovery.[20]

---

[9] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 201, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

A warranty or representation by insured that the automobile is unencumbered is generally held to be of a fact material to the risk, so that a breach thereof will avoid the policy or prevent its attaching. Annotation: 35 A.L.R. 1472.

[10] Cottingham v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 168 N. C. 259, 84 S. E. 274, L.R.A. 1915D, 344, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1237.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 201, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

[11] Automobile Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 93 Okla. 280, 220 P. 639, 35 A.L.R. 1463.

Where insured delivered a car to a prospective purchaser for the purpose of permitting the latter to use it a short while in order to determine the condition of the property, the final sale being made to depend on the condition in which the purchaser should find the property, it was held that the title to the car did not pass until final acceptance, so that the fact that the car burned while in the possession of such prospective purchaser did not defeat insured's right to recover on the policy. Ibid.

[12] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 202, s. 35 A.L.R. 1473; 30 A.L.R. 666, 667.

[13] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 201, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

[14] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 201, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

[15] Traynor v. Automobile Mut. Ins. Co. 105 Neb. 677, 181 N. W. 566, 14 A.L.R. 195.

[16] Ibid.

[17] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 204, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

§ 562. Place of Keeping.—Automobile fire insurance policies ordinarily provide as to the place of keeping the insured automobile.[1] Where such a policy requires the automobile to be kept in a designated private garage, a breach of this requirement, by reason of which the car is destroyed, bars a recovery.[2]

§ 563. Fire Originating within Vehicle.—A fire burning an automobile originates inside the vehicle, within the meaning of an exception of fires so originating, where, in consequence of the machine's running into a ditch, gasoline leaks from the tank and the vapor penetrates the lamp forming the headlight and explodes, causing the fire.[3]

§ 564. Effect of Insured's Negligence or Violation of Law.—Policies insuring automobiles against loss by fire sometimes provide to the effect that a loss caused by the assured's negligence or violation of law shall absolve the insurer from any liability. Such provisions are binding, and the assured has been denied a recovery where he has failed to maintain a fire extinguisher in his automobile as required by the policy,[4] where he has not properly registered the automobile, or has allowed an unlicensed chauffeur to drive it,[5] or where the automobile was wilfully burned by a copartner of the assured.[6]

---

[18] Crowell v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 169 N. C. 35, 85 S. E. 37, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 50.

[19] Ibid.

Merely carrying passengers for hire for one or two days does not constitute a breach of provisions of fire policies that the insured automobile shall not be rented or used for carrying passengers for compensation. Ibid. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 205, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

[20] Temporary noncompliance with a provision in a policy insuring an automobile against fire, against letting an automobile or using it for carrying passengers for hire, will not work a forfeiture, where the car was not let at the time it burned, unless the provision is a warranty, or where such use is without the insured's knowledge. If, however, the provision is made a warranty, even a temporary breach thereof bars a recovery. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 205, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

[1] Proposal for Policy as Basis of Contract.—A recital in a policy insuring a motor vehicle against loss by fire, that the proposal for the policy shall be the basis of the contract and be held as incorporated in the policy, makes the truth of the statements in the proposal, apart from the question of materiality, a condition of the liability of the insurer, and no recovery can be had under the policy for a destruction of the vehicle by fire where there was a misstatement inadvertently made in the proposal as to the place at which it was to be garaged. Dawsons v. Bonnin [1922] 2 A. C. 413. Annotation: 11 B. R. C. 468, 441.

[2] Lummus v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 167 N. C. 654, 83 S. E. 688, L.R.A.1915D, 239.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 206, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

It has been held that a shed or lean-to on insured's barn is a "garage," and that a policy insuring an automobile against loss by fire is not avoided by a statement in the application that the automobile was usually kept in a private garage, where it was kept in such shed or lean-to. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 206, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

Effect of Removal to Another State.—A policy on an automobile to be kept in a specified private garage with the privilege of operating the car and housing it temporarily in other places while en route or being cleaned or repaired, which has been suspended by the permanent removal of the car to another state, is not restored by temporarily placing the car in a repair shop without returning it to the place specified in the policy, so as to render the insurer liable for its destruction while in such shop. Lummus v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 167 N. C. 654, 83 S. E. 688, L.R.A.1915D, 239.

[3] Preston v. Ætna Ins. Co. 193 N. Y. 142, 85 N. E. 1006, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 133.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 207, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471; Ann. Cas. 1915A, 627.

[4] Where one of the conditions of the policy was that the insured should at all times carry a fire extinguisher on the automobile and "use due diligence to maintain said fire extinguisher in full and complete working order during the life of the policy," it was held that insured's failure to have an extinguisher on the car at the time of the fire was not excused by the fact that some two weeks earlier the extinguisher had been exhausted in putting out a fire in the car, nor by the fact that the fire causing the loss was of such a character that it could not have been extinguished even if he had had an extinguisher. Union Marine Ins. Co. v. High, 153 Ark. 156, 239 S. W. 741, 23 A.L.R. 24. Annotation: 35 A.L.R. 1475.

[5] Car Not Properly Registered, or Driven by Unlicensed Chauffeur.—A provision of a policy against loss of an automobile, that

§ 565. Proof of Loss.—A condition that a failure to furnish proofs of loss to the insurer within sixty days after the loss will avoid the policy is a valid and binding provision, and a failure to submit such proofs within the time specified in the policy will prevent a recovery,[7] unless compliance with such condition is waived by the insurer.[8]

§ 566. Amount of Recovery.—Generally the amount for which a company is liable under a policy insuring an automobile is the actual loss, which, in case of total destruction, is the value of the car.[9] Where, however, there is no total loss, the assured is often allowed to decide whether he wishes to have the car repaired or to settle for a certain amount in damages. If he elects to settle, his rights under the policy are terminated and depend upon the contract of settlement.[10]

F. THEFT INSURANCE

§ 567. Generally.—Insurance policies are commonly issued indemnifying the owner of an automobile against loss by "theft, robbery, and pilferage." Such insurance does not differ from other burglary insurance.[11]

§ 568. What Constitutes "Theft."—The general rule that words are to be given their usual and ordinary meaning unless the context requires a different construction is applicable to determine the meaning of the terms "theft," "robbery," and "pilferage," employed in automobile insurance policies.[12] The term "theft" has not been uniformly defined. The difference of opinion arises over the question whether the term is practically synonymous with the term "larceny" or whether it has a more extensive meaning.[13] There is an undercurrent of thought, however, that the usual meaning attached to the term "theft" is sub-liability shall not attach if the automobile is, at the time of loss, being driven by a person not authorized by law, or contrary to law, is not unreasonable or against public policy, and therefore no recovery can be had if at the time of loss the machine is not properly registered, or is driven by an unlicensed chauffeur. Standard Auto Ins. Asso. v. Neal, 199 Ky. 699, 251 S. W. 966, 35 A.L.R. 1468. Annotation: 35 A.L.R. 1471.

---

[6] An innocent partner cannot recover for the loss of automobiles wilfully burned by his copartner, especially in view of a provision in the policy requiring insured to use all reasonable means at hand after a fire to preserve the property. Bellman v. Home Ins. Co. 178 Wis. 349, 189 N. W. 1028, 27 A.L.R. 945. Annotation: 35 A.L.R. 1475.

[7] Annotation: 35 A.L.R. 1479.

[8] Annotation: 35 A.L.R. 1479.

[9] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 211, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

[10] In Gaffey v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 221 N. Y. 113, 116 N. E. 778, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1041, where it appeared that after proof had been made for a total loss, the insurer stated that it would settle for a certain amount, which was smaller than the face of the policy, or ship the car for repairs, and the insured wrote that if the car was made as good as before the fire, and they were not delayed too long, it would be all right, and the insurer advised them that arrangements had been made to have the repairs made and estimated that it would take about four weeks, it was held that the election of the insured to have the car repaired, and the undertaking of the insurer to make the repairs within a reasonable time, created a contractual relation between them which terminated all rights under the policy and deprived the insurer of asserting any rights or options thereunder, and also prevented the plaintiff from maintaining an action thereon, the only remedy of either party thereafter being an action for a breach of the new contract.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 210, 211, s. 35 A.L.R. 1471.

[11] See INSURANCE [Also 14 R. C. L. p. 823].

[12] Royal Ins. Co. v. Jack, 113 Ohio St. 153, 148 N. E. 923, 46 A.L.R. 529; Allen v. Berkshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. 105 Vt. 471, 168 A. 698, 89 A.L.R. 460.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 215, s. 19 A.L.R. 171, 24 A.L.R. 740, 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

[13] Royal Ins. Co. v. Jack, 113 Ohio St. 153, 148 N. E. 923, 46 A.L.R. 529; Allen v. Berkshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. 105 Vt. 471, 168 A. 698, 89 A.L.R. 460.

stantially equivalent to that attached to the term "larceny," and this is the majority view.[14] The term "pilferage" is held to mean "petit larceny."[15]

A "theft," within the meaning of a theft policy, is shown if possession is actually taken by a wrongdoer,[16]—possession, as distinguished from misuse,[17]—and if an intent to steal exists or may be inferred.[18] This is true even though the possession is but temporary.[19]

§ 569. —Intent to Steal.—To warrant a recovery on a policy insuring an automobile against theft, there must be more than a wrongful taking; the taking must be with the intent to steal.[20] The intent to steal is a necessary ingredient of the offense[1] and may be inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case.[2]

§ 570. —Obtaining Property under False Pretenses.—Obtaining property under false pretenses is not theft, as that term is employed in an insurance policy indemnifying the owner of an automobile against loss by "theft, robbery, or pilferage."[3] Accordingly, where an owner of an automobile executes a contract of sale for his car, helps the vendee change the license numbers, and, in pursuance of his contract of sale, transfers possession and title to the vendee, who pays therefor with a forged check, such fraudulent transaction, so perpetrated by the vendee, does not constitute a "theft," within the terms of the policy.[4] And there is no liability under a policy where the insured sells the car and takes notes and a mortgage on property which the buyer falsely represents that he owns, and the latter subsequently takes the car outside the state and abandons it, inasmuch as the owner intended to transfer not merely the possession, but the title.[5] However, depriving an automobile dealer of a car by a preconceived scheme of impersonation, misrepresentation, and fraud, is a species of theft, so that the loss is covered by a policy insuring against "theft, robbery, or pilferage."[6] Liability under such a policy arises in case one borrowing a car to go to a specified place, drives it to a distant state, abandons it in a remote place in a badly damaged condition, and fails to notify the owner where it may be found.[7]

---

[14] Illinois Auto. Ins. Exch. v. Southern Motor Sales Co. 207 Ala. 265, 92 So. 429, 24 A.L.R. 734; Phœnix Assur. Co. v. Eppstein, 73 Fla. 991, 75 So. 537, L.R.A.1917F, 540.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 216, s. 19 A.L.R. 171, 24 A.L.R. 740, 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

[15] Illinois Auto. Ins. Exch. v. Southern Motor Sales Co. 207 Ala. 265, 92 So. 429, 24 A.L.R. 734.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 741, s. 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

[16] Price v. Royal Ins. Co. 119 Wash. 93, 204 P. 803, 24 A.L.R. 731.

The act of a bailee of an automobile in decamping with it is theft, within the meaning of a policy insuring against "theft." Allen v. Berkshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. 105 Vt. 471, 168 A. 698, 89 A.L.R. 460. Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 465.

[17] Misuse by Chauffeur.—The mere fact that a chauffeur who, after giving a purchaser of an automobile a lesson in driving it and being told to return with the car later in the day, drives the car away on an errand of his own, during which time the car is wrecked and he is killed, does not establish his theft of the car within the meaning of a policy insuring the owner against theft. Ledvinka v. Home Ins. Co. 139 Md. 434, 115 A. 596, 19 A.L.R. 167.

Wrongful Use of Car by Garage Keeper.—A policy insuring the owner of an automobile against theft does not cover the wrongful use of the car by the keeper of a garage where it was left for repair, although such use is, by statute, declared to be larceny. Van Vechten v. American Eagle F. Ins. Co. 239 N. Y. 303, 146 N. E. 432, 38 A.L.R. 1115.

[18] See infra, § 569.

[19] Price v. Royal Ins. Co. 119 Wash. 93, 204 P. 803, 24 A.L.R. 731.

[20] Phœnix Assur. Co. v. Eppstein, 73 Fla. 991, 75 So. 537, L.R.A.1917F, 540; Rydstrom v. Queen Ins. Co. 137 Md. 349, 112 A. 586, 14 A.L.R. 212; Valley Mercantile Co. v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 49 Mont. 430, 143 P. 559, L.R.A.1915B, 327, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1126.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 215, s. 19 A.L.R. 171, 24 A.L.R. 740, 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465; Ann. Cas. 1917D, 55.

Use of Car by Employees of Garage.—A policy insuring the owner of an automobile against loss by theft does not cover a loss caused by an accident to the car while it is in the possession of employees of a shop to which it had been taken for repairs, who had taken it from the shop in the daytime, after working hours, for a joy ride, intending to return it to the shop when they were through with it, there having been no criminal intent permanently to deprive the owner of the car, and therefore no theft of it. Valley Mercantile Co. v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 49 Mont. 430, 143 P. 559, L.R.A.1915B, 327, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1126. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 217, s. 19 A.L.R. 171, 24 A.L.R. 740, 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 AL.R. 465.

[1] Phœnix Assur. Co. v. Eppstein, 73 Fla. 991, 75 So. 537, L.R.A.1917F, 540.

[2] Price v. Royal Ins. Co. 119 Wash. 93, 204 P. 803, 24 A.L.R. 731.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 740, s. 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

A theft of the insured's automobile may be found from the facts that it was left parked on an inclined street, with brakes set and gears locked, that a stranger entered and started it down the hill, and that it was soon after found abandoned, with the brakes released, but gears and transmission still locked, at the foot of the hill, where it had collided with an obstruction, to its injury. Price v. Royal Ins. Co. 119 Wash. 93, 204 P. 803, 24 A.L.R. 731.

[3] Royal Ins. Co. v. Jack, 113 Ohio St. 153, 148 N. E. 923, 46 A.L.R. 529.

§ 571. —Open Taking under Claim of Ownership.—An automobile policy against theft does not cover an open taking under claim of ownership. Indemnity against theft by others than employees covers theft by an employee of a garage keeper where the machine is stored.[8]

§ 572. —Conversion by Mortgagor or Conditional Vendee.—Quite commonly, an automobile theft policy will contain a clause expressly excepting from the risks insured against "the wrongful conversion, embezzlement, or secretion by a mortgagor or vendee in possession under mortgage, conditional sale, or lease agreement," or some clause of similar import.[9] On the other hand, some insurance contracts specifically insure against risks of the kind thus excepted.[10] A very simple type of coverage is that by which the conditional vendor of the car is insured against all direct loss or damage which he may sustain, caused by the fraudulent "disposal or concealment" of the car by the conditional vendee thereof. Other types of coverage are those by which the conditional vendor, or mortgagee, of a car is insured against loss resulting from the act or conduct of the conditional vendee, or mortgagor, by a "sale," "wrongful conversion," "embezzlement, or concealment," [11] or "larceny, embezzlement, or conversion," etc.[12] Such a policy insures the equity of the conditional vendor only so long as the conditional sales contract is in existence.[13] Whether a particular contingency is one covered by a policy must be determined by a construction of the terms of the contract of insurance when such contract is considered in the light of the nature of the risk that manifestly formed the

[4] Ibid.

[5] Illinois Auto. Ins. Exch. v. Southern Motor Sales Co. 207 Ala. 265, 92 So. 429, 24 A.L.R. 734.

[6] Hill v. North River Ins. Co. 111 Kan. 225, 207 P. 205, 24 A.L.R. 736.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 740, s. 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344; and 89 A.L.R. 465.

[7] Federal Ins. Co. v. Hiter, 164 Ky. 743, 176 S. W. 210, L.R.A.1915E, 575.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 218, s. 19 A.L.R. 171, 24 A.L.R. 740, 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

[8] Annotation: 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 584.

[9] Rydstrom v. Queen Ins. Co. 137 Md. 349, 112 A. 586, 14 A.L.R. 212; Royal Ins. Co. v. Jack, 113 Ohio St. 153, 148 N. E. 923, 46 A.L.R. 529.

Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 827.

A provision in an automobile theft policy excepting from the risks assumed a wrongful conversion, embezzlement, or secretion by a person in lawful possession of the insured property under a mortgage, conditional sale, lease, or other contract, written or verbal, does not relieve the insurer from liability where one who had been permitted to take the insured automobile on trial, with a view to its purchase, and who, on demand, had surrendered possession thereof and promised to drive it to the owner's garage, decamped with it instead. Allen v. Berkshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. 105 Vt. 471, 168 A. 698, 89 A.L.R. 460.

[10] Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 828.

[11] Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 828.

[12] Automobile Finance & Securities Co. v. Globe Indem. Co. 161 La. 303, 108 So. 545, 55 A.L.R. 823.

Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 828.

[13] Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 831.

basis of the contract, with a consideration of the purpose of the parties in bringing it forth.[14]

§ 573. —Persons Excepted from Coverage.—Policies insuring automobiles against theft usually except thefts by persons in the employment, service, or household of the insured.[15] The term "household," within the meaning of such an exception, includes all the dwellers in a house under the common control of one person,[16] such as a nephew of the owner temporarily visiting him.[17] The terms "employment" and "service" refer to persons actually employed and do not include a chauffeur furnished by the seller to give the purchaser driving instructions.[18]

Some policies except thefts by any person to whom the assured might voluntarily part possession. Here again, the owner must actually part with possession before the exception will be applied. For instance, where one who had been permitted to take an automobile on trial, with a view to purchase, surrendered the transmission keys upon demand being made for the purchase price or the car, but subsequently agreed to drive it to the owner's garage three days later, before which time he decamped with it, the owner is deemed to have been in constructive possession thereof at the time of its loss, and not to have parted with possession within the meaning of a policy insuring against the theft of the automobile excepting by any person to whom the assured might voluntarily part with possession.[19]

§ 574. Description of Car.—In policies insuring automobiles against theft, the insured is ordinarily required to describe, for purposes of identification, the automobile insured, and false statements regarding such description may avoid the policy. For example, where it was alleged that the theft policy sued on covered a touring car of a certain make, year and number, it was held that the plaintiff's proof failed to support his allegation, where the only common point of description or identification, between the car described in the policy and the car which plaintiff had in his possession, was the name.[20] On the other hand, a description of an automobile as a 1920–1921 model is not erroneous where the car was built in 1919 and altered in 1920 to make it conform in appearance and substance to the 1921 model.[1] And it has been held that in case of an erroneous description in an insurance policy of an automobile insured by it, a bill in equity will lie to reform the policy to conform to the facts.[2]

---

[14] Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 833.

In Automobile Finance & Securities Co. v. Globe Indem. Co. 161 La. 303, 108 So. 545, 55 A.L.R. 823, where, with the consent of the seller, a firm of retail automobile dealers, notes secured by a chattel mortgage on the car sold, and representing the credit portion of the purchase price thereof, were executed by the purchaser directly to finance company which, being engaged in the business of financing the sales of automobiles on credit, purchased said notes, it was held that the act of the purchaser of the car in surrendering the same to the seller thereof, with instructions to sell it—which was done, with the result that the chattel mortgage became extinguished—amounted to a "conversion" thereof by the purchaser, within the meaning of policy issued to the finance company, and insuring it against any such direct pecuniary loss as it might sustain by "any act of larceny, embezzlement, or conversion of the purchaser, whereby the obligee is deprived of the security of any motor vehicle, . . . either directly or through the connivance with others on the part" of the purchaser.

"Disposal or Concealment" with Intent to Defraud.—Under policy insuring a conditional vendor of a car against "all direct loss or damage which he may sustain by the disposal or concealment of said automobile by the said vendee, with intent to defraud the said vendor," there can be no recovery where there was in fact neither a disposal nor a concealment of the car by the conditional vendee. Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 838.

[15] Rydstrom v. Queen Ins. Co. 137 Md. 349, 112 A. 586, 14 A.L.R. 212.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 215.

[16] Rydstrom v. Queen Ins. Co. 137 Md. 349, 112 A. 586, 14 A.L.R. 212.

[17] Ibid.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 218, s. 19 A.L.R. 171, 24 A.L.R. 740, 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

[18] A chauffeur furnished by the seller of an automobile to instruct the purchaser how to run the car as part of the consideration for the purchase price is not in the employ of the purchaser when he has been sent by the seller with the car to give a lesson, so as to prevent his misappropriation of the car being theft, although the buyer had given him tips for his services. Ledvinka v. Home Ins. Co. 139 Md. 434, 115 A. 596, 19 A.L.R. 167.

[19] Allen v. Berkshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. 105 Vt. 471, 168 A. 698, 89 A.L.R. 460.

Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 465.

§ 575. Place of Keeping.—Policies insuring automobiles against theft ordinarily provide as to the place of keeping the insured automobile. Whether the assured has complied with such a provision depends upon the provisions of the particular policy. A statement, under the caption, "Warranties," in a policy purporting to cover a car while within the limits of the United States and Canada, and while in a building, on a road, railroad, or other conveyance, that the car "is usually kept" in a certain place has been held not to be a continuing warranty.[3] And a warranty that the car was "usually kept" in a certain private garage was not breached by the fact that subsequent to the issuance of the policy, and for several months prior to loss of the car, it was kept in a public garage.[4] A policy which excludes from the risks assumed the theft of the automobile stored in any building not securely inclosed and locked when unattended is merely suspended while the insured automobile is so stored, and attaches again as soon as the situation comes to an end.[5]

§ 576. Locking Safety Device.—In some policies insuring loss of automobiles by theft, the insured, in consideration of a reduced premium, warrants that the automobile will be continuously equipped with a locking device of specified make, and undertakes during the life of the policy "to use all diligence and care in maintaining the efficiency of said locking device, and in locking the automobile when leaving" the same "unattended."[6] While such a provision has been held binding, avoiding the policy when the car is left with the device unlocked,[7] it has also been construed not to require the car to be locked when unattended, but to require the owner to use the care which a man of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances.[8]

---

[20] Hessen v. Iowa Auto. Mut. Ins. Co. 195 Iowa, 141, 190 N. W. 150, 30 A.L.R. 657.
Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 744, s. 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

[1] Sawyer v. National F. Ins. Co. 53 S. D. 228, 220 N. W. 503, 61 A.L.R. 306.

[2] Hessen v. Iowa Auto. Mut. Ins. Co. 195 Iowa, 141, 190 N. W. 150, 30 A.L.R. 657.

[3] Sawyer v. National F. Ins. Co. 53 S. D. 228, 220 N. W. 503, 61 A.L.R. 306.
Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 312.

[4] Sawyer v. National F. Ins. Co. 53 S. D. 228, 220 N. W. 503, 61 A.L.R. 306.
Annotation: 61 A.L.R. 312.

[5] Allen v. Berkshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. 105 Vt. 471, 168 A. 698, 89 A.L.R. 460.

Where an automobile was stolen by a bailee thereof, an insurer against theft under a policy excluding from the risks assumed the theft of an automobile stored in any building not securely inclosed and locked when unattended, is not exonerated from liability by the fact that the automobile was kept by the bailee in a building not securely inclosed and locked, since it was not unattended by its custodian at the time it was taken. Ibid.

[6] Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1344, s. 89 A.L.R. 465.

[7] Doerr v. National F. Ins. Co. 315 Mo. 266, 285 S. W. 961, 54 A.L.R. 1336.

Estoppel to Contest Policy.—The mere fact that upon loss of an automobile by theft, the insurer's agent refers the insured to an adjuster, who states that the claim will be paid if the car is not found in sixty days, does not estop the insurer from relying on a breach of the provision requiring a locking device on the car, where there is nothing to show any change of position by the insured because of such acts. Ibid.

Waiver of Breach of Condition.—The failure to have a locking device locked when an automobile is stolen, as required by a policy insuring it against theft, is not waived by the insurer's agent referring insured to an adjuster to have the claim adjusted, which was necessary to fix the rights of a mortgagee, and by the adjuster, with knowledge of the facts, offering to pay the claim if the car was not reclaimed in sixty days, and tendering the amount for which the premium paid, in the unlocked condition of the car. Ibid.

Return of the premium by one insuring an automobile against theft is not required where, at the time of loss, the policy had run one third of its life and covered the interest of a mortgagee, which was satisfied, while knowledge of the breach of condition in failing to maintain a locking device did not come to the insurer until after the loss. Ibid.
Annotation: 54 A.L.R. 1344.

§ 577. Proof of Loss.—Insurance policies against loss of automobiles by theft ordinarily provide that the assured, in case of loss, give notice to the insurer, within a certain time, as to time and cause of loss, etc., and failure to comply with such requirement will bar a recovery on the policy.[9]

§ 578. Effect of Recovery of Stolen Car.—Obviously, in order to make a theft insurance policy of value to the owner there must be some time fixed after which the return of the automobile will not release the company from liability. Automobiles are so generally used in business affairs and other activities of life that public policy requires that a person having a theft policy should not be compelled to wait indefinitely on the chance of having the stolen automobile recovered, or be compelled to incur the expense of buying a new one and thereafter taking the old one back if recovered.[10] A common provision of the policy is to the effect that the sum for which the company is liable pursuant to the policy "shall be payable sixty days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss herein required have been received" by the company. If the car has not been found within the sixty-day limit, the insured, under such a provision, is entitled to recover as for a total loss, or the full amount for which the company may be held liable, unaffected by the fact that the car is subsequently found and recovered, and that the company offers to return it.[11] In the absence of a specified time agreed upon for the return of the car from the insurer to the insured, the law will imply that the agreement was for a return within a reasonable time.[12]

When the car is recovered in a damaged condition, the insurer has the right to retain possession thereof for a reasonable time, in order to ascertain, by agreement or by appraisal, the insured's loss and damage, but only for such length of time.[13] No right on the part of the insurer to retain possession of the car beyond a reasonable time within which to ascertain the loss is conferred by another clause in the policy that the damage is not payable until sixty days after an award has been made by the appraisers, if an appraisal is demanded.[14]

---

[8] Allgood v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 186 N. C. 415, 119 S. E. 561, 30 A.L.R. 652.

Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 670, s. 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

[9] Hessen v. Iowa Auto. Mut. Ins. Co. 195 Iowa, 141, 190 N. W. 150, 30 A.L.R. 657.

Annotation: 24 A.L.R. 745, s. 30 A.L.R. 662, 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 A.L.R. 465.

Proof of Loss.—To recover for loss of an automobile under a policy insuring by name, date, and factory number, the insured must prove the entire description appearing in the policy. Phœnix Assur. Co. v. Eppstein, 73 Fla. 991, 75 So. 537, L.R.A. 1917F, 540; Hessen v. Iowa Auto. Mut. Ins. Co. 195 Iowa, 141, 190 N. W. 150, 30 A.L.R. 657.

Sufficiency of Proof.—One whose automobile was insured against loss by theft is entitled to rely on the assurance of the insurer's agent that his proof of loss was sufficient, although sworn proof was not furnished. O'Connor v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 287 Ill. 204, 122 N. E. 489, 3 A.L.R. 787. Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 220; 19 A.L.R. 171; 24 A.L.R. 740; 30 A.L.R. 662; 38 A.L.R. 1123, 46 A.L.R. 534, 54 A.L.R. 1344, and 89 AL.R. 465.

[10] O'Connor v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 287 Ill. 204, 122 N. E. 489, 3 A.L.R. 787. See also, quoting the second or concluding sentence, Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Levy, 85 Colo. 565, 277 P. 779, 75 A.L.R. 1416.

Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 1421.

[11] O'Connor v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 287 Ill. 204, 122 N. E. 489, 3 A.L.R. 787; Sawyer v. National F. Ins. Co. 53 S. D. 228, 220 N. W. 503, 61 A.L.R. 306.

Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 1421.

Finding Prior to Institution of Action.—It is immaterial that the car was found, and offer of its return made, prior to the institution of the insured's action, where it was not found within the sixty-day limit. O'Connor v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 287 Ill. 204, 122 N. E. 489, 3 A.L.R. 787. Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 1421.

[12] Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Levy, 85 Colo. 565, 277 P. 779, 75 A.L.R. 1416.

Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 1424.

[13] Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Levy, 85 Colo. 565, 277 P. 779, 75 A.L.R. 1416.

Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 1424.

IX. ACTIONS

A. In General.

§ 579. Generally.—This subdivision deals with actions for injuries to person or property caused by the operation of an automobile, excluding, however, any discussion of actions for injuries resulting from defects in streets or highways.[1] The subject-matter defines, distinguishes, and classifies such phases of the broad subject of actions as are peculiar to automobiles. Rules of evidence and practice, the province of the jury, as well as of the court, on those disputed points that most commonly arise in automobile accident cases, and procedural matters in general, in such cases, are considered in this chapter.

The general rules governing liability in actions to recover damages for injuries sustained through the negligence of another[2] apply, except, of course, as they may be modified by local statute.[3]

§ 580. Nature and Form of Action.—The nature and form of an action brought for the recovery of damages sustained by reason of the operation of an automobile are determined by the principles applicable to civil actions generally. In most jurisdictions technical common-law forms of action or remedies for the enforcement of a cause of action have been abolished;[4] in these jurisdictions the civil remedy for injuries due to the operation of an automobile is the ordinary civil action. In jurisdictions where common-law distinctions are retained, the form of action may be either in trespass or in case.[5] Generally this is determined by whether the charge is that the defendant acted intentionally, or merely negligently; if the former, the action is to be classed as an action of trespass; if the latter, it is to be classed as an action in case.[6] In some jurisdictions all demands formerly recoverable under the various common-law forms of action ex delicto are enforced in an action of trespass; this, of course, includes actions for injuries arising from the operation of automobiles.[7]

Where the party letting an automobile for hire furnishes one that is not reasonably fit and proper for the purpose intended, the hirer may maintain an action for breach of contract, or at his option an action in tort for the damages sustained by reason of the defective condition; no contractual duty, however, is owed to a person riding with the hirer, or to a pedestrian, such as will enable either to maintain an action of contract; their remedy is by way of an action in tort.[8]

§ 581. Limitations.—In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the general rules applicable to the limitation of actions brought to recover damages[9] apply in automobile accident cases. The provisions of local statutes or regulations should always be consulted for any variance from the general rules governing limitation of actions with respect to proceedings involving the operation of motor vehicles.

---

[14] Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Levy, 85 Colo. 565, 277 P. 779, 75 A.L.R. 1416.
Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 1424.

[1] See Highways, Streets and Sidewalks [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 1].

[2] See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[3] Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 1223.

[4] See Actions, Vol. 1, p. 438, § 47.

[5] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. pp. 1575, 1576.

[6] Aldrich v. Tyler Grocery Co. 206 Ala. 138, 89 So. 289, 17 A.L.R. 617.

[7] 1 Standard Pa. Prac. p. 348, § 63.

[8] Eklof v. Waterston, 132 Or. 479, 285 P. 201, 68 A.L.R. 1002.

[9] See Limitation of Actions [Also 17 R. C. L. p. 733, § 96].

§ 582. Abatement and Revival.—The rules which govern the abatement of pending actions and the survival of causes of actions, discussed under another title,[10] govern the abatement of a pending action for injuries arising from the operation of an automobile and the survival of the cause of action therefor. Thus, the rule that the pendency in any court of competent jurisdiction in the state of another action between the same parties, involving substantially the same subject-matter or cause of action, will abate the action last begun,[11] is applicable in actions involving the operation of automobiles.[12] Whether, upon the death of the tort-feasor, a cause of action for personal injuries resulting from the negligent operation of an automobile survives, depends upon the local statutes;[13] at common law such a cause of action will not survive.[14]

§ 583. Conditions Precedent; Notice of Claim.—It is necessary, before an action can properly be commenced, that all conditions precedent to its institution, whether prescribed by statute or implied by law, be complied with unless the conduct of the defendant is such as to prevent or excuse performance thereof.[15] The local statute or ordinance should always be consulted for any provisions respecting the giving of notice of claim or injury, or intention to sue, especially in cases where liability for the accident is attributed wholly, or in part, to a municipal corporation,[16] or where the injury is the result of a defect or obstruction in a highway,[17] and any such requirement should be complied with before institution of suit.[18]

§ 584. Joinder of Causes of Action.—The joinder in one action of several causes of action arising from the operation of an automobile is determined by the general rules which control the joinder of several causes of action ex delicto. In most jurisdictions there are liberal statutory provisions which permit joinder of all claims arising out of the same transactions, or transactions connected with the same subject-matter, provided the several causes affect all the parties and are consistent with each other. In jurisdictions which follow the common-law practice the right to join causes is much more limited.[19] Under the common-law practice a cause of action in trespass for having intentionally caused an injury with an automobile cannot be joined with a cause of action in the case for mere negligence in such operation.[20] In some jurisdictions, by statute, a husband's or a parent's cause of action accruing by reason of an injury inflicted upon the wife or child, and the wife's or child's own cause of action, must be redressed in a single suit.[1]

---

[10] See Abatement, Survival, and Revival, Vol. 1, p. 15.

[11] See Abatement, Survival, and Revival, Vol. 1, pp. 27–47, §§ 14–44.

[12] Underwood v. Dooley, 197 N. C. 100, 147 S. E. 686, 64 A.L.R. 656.

However, the pendency of an action brought by an insurer of an automobile against damage by collision, against one whose negligence is claimed to have caused such damage, is not ground for dismissing an action brought by the owner of the car for personal injuries resulting from the collision. Ibid.

[13] Ford v. Maney, 251 Mich. 461, 232 N. W. 393, 70 A.L.R. 1315.

[14] See Abatement, Survival, and Revival, Vol. 1, p. 92, § 133.

[15] See Actions, Vol. 1, p. 426, § 34.

[16] See Municipal Corporations [Also 19 R. C. L. pp. 1040 et seq.]

[17] See Highways, Streets and Sidewalks [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 1].

[18] Touhey v. Decatur, 175 Ind. 98, 93 N. E. 540, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 350; Randolph v. Springfield, 302 Mo. 33, 257 S. W. 449, 31 A.L.R. 612; Cole v. St. Joseph, — Mo. —, 50 S. W. (2d) 623, 82 A.L.R. 742.

[19] See Actions, Vol. 1, p. 460, §§ 70 et seq.

[20] See discussion in Aldrich v. Tyler Grocery Co. 206 Ala. 138, 89 So. 289, 17 A.L.R. 617.

§ 585. Splitting Causes of Action.—In accordance with the rule followed in a majority of the states, that a single wrongful or negligent act or omission causing an injury to both the person and the property of the same individual, constitutes but one cause of action with separate items of damage,[2] it has been held, with respect to an action to recover damages resulting from an automobile accident, that the cause of action cannot be split, and that a recovery of a judgment for one item of damage may be pleaded in bar of an action to recover for another item of damage.[3]

An exception to the rule that a single tort causing injury to a person and to his property constitutes but one cause of action, which cannot be split, has been enunciated with respect to actions involving subrogation under insurance policies. After the insurer has paid the loss or damage under its policy, it becomes subrogated to the rights of the insured, and can maintain the action as the real party in interest. In such a case a judgment recovered by the insurance company, representing the damage to the car, is no bar to an action instituted by the insured to recover for personal injuries.[4] Some courts have, however, adopted the rule that damage to property and injury to the person, although the result of the same wrongful act, are infringements of different rights and give rise to distinct causes of action,[5] and where this view obtains, a recovery in an action brought to recover damages for injuries arising out of an automobile accident cannot be pleaded in bar of recovery on the other cause of action.[6]

§ 586. Defenses.—Those matters which may properly be set up as defenses in actions involving automobile accidents have already been considered in preceding sections, as, for example, the defense of contributory negligence,[7] or that of the absence of any proximate relationship between the acts attributed to the defendant and the accident.[8]

§ 587. —Payment of Insurance Money.—It is well settled that the receipt of money on an accident insurance policy by one who has suffered a personal injury does not preclude a recovery, or lessen the amount recoverable from the person who is responsible for the injury,[9] and it appears to be equally well settled that a recovery for death by wrongful act is not barred, or the amount of the recovery diminished, by the receipt by any of the beneficiaries of the suit, of money paid by an insurance company on a casualty insurance policy.[10] The fact that damage to an automobile is covered by insurance is no defense to an action by the owner against the one causing the damage.[10a] Nor is a conditional vendee of an automobile precluded from recovering full damages for its negligent destruction by the fact that the car was insured by the vendor, and the amount collected on the policy was credited on the contract price.[11]

---

[1] 3 Standard Pa. Prac. p. 73, § 64.

[2] See ACTIONS, Vol. 1, p. 494, § 114.

[3] Georgia R. & Power Co. v. Endsley, 167 Ga. 439, 145 S. E. 851, 62 A.L.R. 263; Sprague v. Adams, 139 Wash. 510, 247 P. 960, 47 A.L.R. 529.

[4] Lloyds Ins. Co. v. Vicksburg Traction Co. 106 Miss. 244, 63 So. 455, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 319; Underwood v. Dooley, 197 N. C. 100, 147 S. E. 686, 64 A.L.R. 656.

The injured automobile owner, after settling with the insurance company for the destruction of his car, and transferring his claim to it, may proceed against the wrongdoer for any claim for personal injuries, or injury to other property, caused by the act which destroyed the automobile. Hamilton F. Ins. Co. v. Greger, 246 N. Y. 162, 158 N. E. 60, 55 A.L.R. 921.

[5] See ACTIONS, Vol. 1, p. 495, § 114.

[6] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 672.

[7] See supra, §§ 407 et seq.

[8] See supra, § 164.

[9] Gatzweiler v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 136 Wis. 34, 116 N. W. 633, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 211, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1057, 16 Ann. Cas. 633.

Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 683.

[10] Carroll v. Missouri P. R. Co. 88 Mo. 239, 57 Am. Rep. 382; Lipscomb v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 95 Tex. 5, 64 S. W. 923, 55 L.R.A. 869, 93 Am. St. Rep. 804.

Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 686.

B. JURISDICTION AND VENUE

§ 588. Generally.—In the absence of a special statutory provision, the ordinary rules governing jurisdiction of civil actions brought to recover damages[12] apply in proceedings involving the operation of automobiles. Such actions are transitory, and may be maintained wherever the defendant may be found,[13] in accord with the general rule governing the venue of personal or transitory actions.[14] In many jurisdictions, however, there are special statutory provisions which extend this common-law rule as to venue. Some of such statutes permit an action for injuries caused by the operation of an automobile to be brought in the county where the injury occurs;[15] others permit such action to be brought in the county where the plaintiff resides. Still others applicable to motor transportation companies permit an action for injury to person or property by a common carrier bus or trucking company to be brought in any county on the road or line where service could be obtained on a driver.[16]

Such statutes have been sustained against attacks based on their constitutionality.[17]

Statutes which designate a state official as the proper person to receive service of process in actions against nonresidents for injuries arising out of the use of automobiles on the state highways[18] also have the effect of changing the common-law rule as to venue.[19]

C. PROCESS

§ 589. Generally.—In the absence of any special statutory provisions the service of process in automobile accident cases is governed by the practice in other civil actions.[20] Where, however, such an action is, pursuant to statutory authority, brought in the county where the injury occurs or where the plaintiff resides,[1] there are usually statutory provisions directing the method in which process shall be served upon the defendant.[2] There are also in most states statutes which provide for substituted or constructive service upon nonresidents in actions for tort in connection with the operation of automobiles within the state.[3]

§ 590. Provisions for Constructive Service upon Nonresident Motorist—Validity.—There are in many states statutes providing for constructive or substituted service of process on a nonresident motorist in an action growing out of an automobile accident in which such motorist was involved while operating his automobile in the state. These statutes usually designate a state official as the proper person to receive service of process.[4] Such statutes are constitutional[5] provided they contain provisions which make it reasonably probable that notice will be communicated to the person to be served,[6] as by requiring the mailing of a copy of the summons and complaint to his last known address.[7] The act of a nonresident in using the highways may properly be declared to be an agreement to accept service of summons through a designated state official in a suit growing out of such use.[8] The fact, however, that a nonresident had actual notice of the suit does not render valid the statute under which the suit was brought, which permitted service of process on a state official without providing for notice to defendant, or validate the judgment rendered in accordance with its provisions.[9]

[10a] Bader v. Marlin, 160 Wash. 460, 295 P. 160, 78 A.L.R. 914.

[11] Criez v. Sunset Motor Co. 123 Wash. 604, 213 P. 7, 32 A.L.R. 627.

[12] See COURTS [Also 7 R. C. L. p. 969].

[13] Loranger v. Nadeau, 215 Cal. 362, 10 P. (2d) 63, 84 A.L.R. 1264.

[14] See VENUE [Also 27 R. C. L. p. 776].

[15] 4 Ohio Jur. p. 797, § 194; 1 Standard Pa. Prac. p. 519, § 15.

[16] See MOTOR TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES.

[17] Schwarting v. Ogram, 123 Neb. 76, 242 N. W. 273, 81 A.L.R. 769; Allen v. Smith, 84 Ohio St. 283, 95 N. E. 829, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 611.

[18] See infra, § 590 et seq.

[19] 1 Standard Pa. Prac. p. 521, § 15.

[20] See PROCESS [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 1258.]

[1] See supra, § 588.

[2] 4 Ohio Jur. p. 801, § 199; 1 Standard Pa. Prac. 476, § 91; Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 1581, § 2197.

[3] See infra, §§ 590 et seq.

§ 591. —Application and Construction.—Statutes which provide for constructive or substituted service of process on nonresident motorists are in derogation of common rights and should be strictly construed, and strict compliance therewith must be observed, although provisions should not be read into such a statute which are not expressly stated or necessarily implied.[10] In construing such statutes the intention of the legislature must be ascertained from an examination of the whole act, and given effect, and the reason and spirit of the law must be considered.[11] Such statutes have no application to accidents occurring before they became effective; their operation is prospective and not retroactive,[12] although changes in the provisions of such a statute may be held to be applicable to actions brought subsequent to such changes, even though the cause of action may have arisen before their enactment.[13] Such statutes apply to corporations as well as to natural persons.[14]

An owner of an automobile, who has procured a license therefor within the state, but who resides in another state, is a "nonresident" within the meaning of some of such statutes.[15] But a nonresident employer of a resident owner of an automobile licensed within the state is not a "nonresident" within the meaning of such statute.[16]

---

[4] Annotation: 35 A.L.R. 951, s. 57 A.L.R. 1239; 82 A.L.R. 768, s. 96 A.L.R. 594.

[5] Wuchter v. Pizzutti, 276 U. S. 13, 72 L. ed. 446, 48 S. Ct. 259, 57 A.L.R. 1230; Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U. S. 352, 71 L. ed. 1091, 47 S. Ct. 632; Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 S. Ct. 30; Mann v. Humphrey, 257 Ky. 647, 79 S. W. (2d) 17, 96 A.L.R. 584; Pawloski v. Hess, 250 Mass. 22, 144 N. E. 760, 35 A.L.R. 945; Masci v. Young, 109 N. J. L. 453, 162 A. 623, 83 A.L.R. 869, affirmed in 289 U. S. 253, 77 L. ed. 1158, 53 S. Ct. 599, 88 A.L.R. 170; State ex rel. Cronkhite v. Belden, 193 Wis. 145, 211 N. W. 916, 214 N. W. 460, 57 A.L.R. 1218.

Annotation: 35 A.L.R. 951, s. 57 A.L.R. 1239.

[6] Wuchter v. Pizzutti, 276 U. S. 13, 72 L. ed. 446, 48 S. Ct. 259, 57 A.L.R. 1230.

[7] State ex rel. Cronkhite v. Belden, 193 Wis. 145, 211 N. Y. 916, 214 N. W. 460, 57 A.L.R. 1218.

[8] Wuchter v. Pizzutti, 276 U. S. 13, 72 L. ed. 446, 48 S. Ct. 259, 57 A.L.R. 1230.

The legislature may provide that the operation by a nonresident of a motor vehicle upon the highways of the state shall be deemed equivalent to an appointment by him of the registrar of motor vehicles for the time being as his agent to receive service of process in any action growing out of any accident or collision in which he may be involved during such operation, so that service of process on such registrar and the mailing of a copy to the nonresident at his place of residence will constitute due process of law and support a judgment in favor of the person injured. Pawloski v. Hess, 250 Mass. 22, 144 N. E. 760, 35 A.L.R. 945.

[9] Wuchter v. Pizzutti, 276 U. S. 13, 72 L. ed. 446, 48 S. Ct. 259, 57 A.L.R. 1230.

[10] Mann v. Humphrey, 257 Ky. 647, 79 S. W. (2d) 17, 96 A.L.R. 584.

[11] Ibid.

[12] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 769, s. 96 A.L.R. 595.

[13] Duggan v. Ogden, 278 Mass. 432, 180 N. E. 301, 82 A.L.R. 765.

Notice by service of process on the state registrar of motor vehicles as the statutory agent of nonresident motorists, of the commencement of an action growing out of an accident in which he was involved while operating a motor vehicle on the highways of the state, may be given him in a way other than that prescribed by statute in force at the time of the accident, but permitted by an amendment enacted prior to the institution of the action. Ibid.

[14] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 769, s. 96 A.L.R. 595.

[15] Mann v. Humphrey, 257 Ky. 647, 79 S. W. (2d) 17, 96 A.L.R. 584.

These statutes in general apply to nonresidents who operate their automobiles personally, or through or by an agent or employee acting within the scope of his employment; they generally do not apply to a nonresident owner whose car is being operated within the state, with his consent, by one who is not his agent.[17] Some statutes, however, apply to a nonresident owner whose automobile is being operated on the highways of the state by another with his consent.[18]

While some of such statutes by their terms are applicable only to suits by residents, others are construed to authorize constructive service upon officers of the state in actions brought by nonresident plaintiffs against nonresident defendants.[19]

Under a statute requiring a copy of the summons and complaint to be mailed to the nonresident defendant to his last known address, the address is not necessarily the last address known to the plaintiff; he is required at his peril to ascertain the last known address of the defendant as a matter of fact.[20] The term "last known address" means the last address so far as it is reasonably possible to ascertain it.[1]

In the absence of any provision indicating an intention to make substituted service upon the personal representative of the deceased nonresident motorist, a statute will be inapplicable to an action against his personal representative.[2]

D. PARTIES

§ 592. Generally.—The proper and necessary parties in an action for injuries arising from the operation of an automobile are determined by an application of the general rules which govern in the ordinary civil action based on a tort.[3] An intelligent determination as to whom to sue presupposes a workable knowledge of the substantive rules applicable to the specific situation. Active participation in the accident, or in the events leading thereto, is not the sole criterion by which to determine who may properly be named as defendants in the action. It is also clear that before one can determine with any reasonable degree of accuracy the proper defendants to an action, it is essential that the provisions of any local statute applicable to the situation, and definitive of the rights of the parties involved in the occurrence, be carefully studied, particularly in the light of any judicial rulings on that point.

In determining the proper party plaintiff in an action for an injury to or the conversion of an automobile, it should be borne in mind that under most practice statutes actions must be prosecuted by the real party in interest.[4] Such a statute does not prevent the conditional vendee of an automobile from bringing an action for damage to or conversion of it.[5] The conditional seller or his assignee may also maintain such an action.[6]

A person injured by the negligent operation of a rented automobile is the

---

[16] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 770.

[17] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 770, s. 96 A.L.R. 596.

[18] Annotation: 96 A.L.R. 596.

[19] Annotation: 96 A.L.R. 596.

[20] State ex rel. Cronkhite v. Belden, 193 Wis. 145, 211 N. W. 916, 214 N. W. 460, 57 A.L.R. 1218.

[1] Annotation: 82 A.L.R. 772, s. 96 A.L.R. 597.

[2] State ex rel. Ledin v. Davison, 216 Wis. 216, 256 N. W. 718, 96 A.L.R. 589.

[3] See PARTIES [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 660].

[4] See PARTIES [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 665, § 6].

[5] Stotts v. Puget Sound Traction, Light & P. Co. 94 Wash. 339, 162 P. 519, L.R.A. 1917D, 214.
Annotation: L.R.A.1917D, 217.
See SALES [Also 24 R. C. L. p. 1].

[6] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 808, § 1195.

"direct, sole, and exclusive" beneficiary of the contractual obligation imposed by a statute making the hirer of such automobile liable for any damage to person or property caused by its operation while so rented, and may maintain an action in contract against such hirer for the injuries sustained.[7]

In determining the proper person or persons to bring an action for wrongful death caused by the operation of an automobile, the local statutes should be consulted.

New parties defendant may be added by amendment of the process of the plaintiff's pleading, without notice to such parties of the motion to make the amendment; they must, however, be served with process;[8] the allowance of an amendment striking out the name of the owner of one of the automobiles, and substituting as defendant the person who was operating it at the time, with the owner's permission, but not as his agent, is proper.[9]

§ 593. Joinder of Parties.—The propriety and necessity of the joinder of several persons as parties plaintiff or parties defendant are governed by the general rules which govern such questions in other civil actions.[10] For example, an action for damage to an automobile owned by two persons jointly must be brought in the name of both joint owners; one joint owner cannot recover in an action brought in his own name only.[11] The familiar rule that two or more tort-feasors who by concurrent acts of negligence which, although disconnected, yet in combination inflict an injury, are all jointly liable,[12] and may at the election of the person injured be sued jointly,[13] applies in cases involving the joint liability of owners or operators of two or more automobiles for injuries to a third person or damage to his property.[14] Such persons may be sued jointly, even though they did not owe the injured person the same degree of care,[15] and notwithstanding that there may exist a difference in the degree of liability, or in the quantum of evidence necessary to support such liability.[16] The fact that there can be no contribution between the defendants joined does not affect the propriety of their joinder.[17] It is, however, optional with the person injured whether he will make all joint tort-feasors defendants in one action or sue each separately; he is not required to join them in one suit.[18]

An automobile liability insurer made directly liable by statute for a liability created by the owner of the automobile is properly joined as defendant in an action against the owner.[19]

Most of the courts seem to have regarded the rules as to the joinder of parties and causes of action as not sufficiently flexible to permit the trial in one action of claims against persons who are concurrently liable, each to the extent to which he may have occasioned the damage sustained, as in the case of simultaneous or successive injuries,[20] although there are some exceptions to this rule in cases where, by reason of some close relationship between the defendants, or of some conduct on their part, it is impossible to determine where the liability rests.[1]

---

[7] Levy v. Daniels' U-Drive Auto Renting Co. 108 Conn. 333, 143 A. 163, 61 A.L.R. 846.

[8] Johnson v. Carroll, 272 Mass. 134, 172 N. E. 85, 69 A.L.R. 1244.

[9] Ibid.

[10] See Parties [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 675, §§ 14 et seq.].

[11] Wiley v. Dobbins, 204 Iowa, 174, 214 N. W. 529, 62 A.L.R. 432.
Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 432.

[12] See Torts [Also 26 R. C. L. pp. 763 et seq.].

[13] See Parties [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 678, § 17].

[14] McDonald v. Robinson, 207 Iowa, 1293, 224 N. W. 820, 62 A.L.R. 1419; Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W. 117, 16 A.L.R. 463; Shafir v. Sieben (Mo.) 233 S. W. 419, 17 A.L.R. 637, later appeal in (Mo.) 274 S. W. 755; West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391; Carlton v. Boudar, 118 Va. 521, 88 S. E. 174, 4 A.L.R. 1480.
Annotation: 16 A.L.R. 465, s. 62 A.L.R. 1425.

[15] Carlton v. Boudar, 118 Va. 521, 88 S. E. 174, 4 A.L.R. 1480 (joinder of taxicab company and owner of automobile which collided with taxicab in action by passenger in taxicab).

[16] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1429.

[17] Carlton v. Boudar, 118 Va. 521, 88 S. E. 174, 4 A.L.R. 1480.

[18] McDonald v. Robinson, 207 Iowa, 1293, 224 N. W. 820, 62 A.L.R. 1419.

[19] Biller v. Meyer (C. C. A. 7th) 33 F. (2d) 440, 66 A.L.R. 436.

§ 594. —Master and Servant or Principal and Agent.—Both the principal or master, and his agent or servant, are liable for torts of the latter, committed in the course or scope of his employment.[2] This rule finds frequent application in automobile accident cases,[3] and according to the weight of authority the employer and employee may be sued jointly.[4] In some jurisdictions, however, a joint action against an employer and his employee for the recovery of damages resulting from the act of the employee cannot be maintained.[5]

The owner of an automobile and the one operating it at the time of a collision, not as agent of the owner, but with his permission and in his absence, may not be joined as defendants in an action for damages occasioned by the collision.[6]

§ 595. —Husband and Wife.—In conformity with what appears to be a well-settled rule, that in the absence of a statute modifying the common-law rule a husband and wife cannot maintain a single or joint action based upon a wrong affecting each in an individual capacity,[7] a husband and wife, both of whom were injured by an automobile driven by defendant, cannot maintain a joint action, alleging separate causes of action for injuries to each.[8]

In some instances, statutes have been held so to modify the common-law rule as to permit a husband and wife to maintain a joint action for the same wrong affecting both.[9]

E. Pleading

§ 596. Generally.—In actions to recover damages for injuries sustained through the operation of a motor vehicle, the general rules pertaining to pleading in civil actions,[10] particularly those which obtain in negligence actions,[11] are applicable.[12] As in other cases, averments of a pleading will be construed against the pleader.[13] Ultimate and issuable facts, as distinguished from evidentiary facts, should be pleaded.[14] Matters as to which the court will take judicial notice need not be averred.[15]

§ 597. Complaint, Declaration, Petition, or Statement of Claim.—In automobile accident cases, as in other civil actions,[16] the plaintiff's declaration, complaint, petition, or statement of claim should be a plain and concise statement of the ultimate facts constituting his cause of action; a detailed statement of the evidence upon which he relies to prove his case is neither necessary nor proper.[17] He should, of course, set forth a complete cause of action, although it is not necessary that each paragraph of his pleading set out a complete cause of action.[18] He should allege with sufficient clarity and definiteness the existence of a duty on the part of the defendant, or facts from which the law will imply such duty, its breach,[19] and the proximate relationship between such breach and the injuries alleged to have been sustained in the accident.[20] However, a mere allegation in a petition to recover damages for injuries, that each and every act, omission, and neglect stated was a proximate cause of the injury, without the operation of which the injury would not have occurred, is a mere legal conclusion.[1] Nor is an allegation that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff sufficient when not sustained by the averments that follow.[2] A general allegation of damages is sufficient to support a recovery of all damages which are the natural and necessary consequences of the cause of action stated, under a statute requiring the declaration to state concisely and with substantial certainty the substantive facts necessary to constitute the cause of action, but special or peculiar damages must be alleged.[3]

---

[20] Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 1224.

[1] Annotation: 41 A.L.R. 1231.

[2] See Agency, Vol. 2, p. 278, §§ 359 et seq.; p. 254, § 324; Master and Servant [Also 18 R. C. L. p. 775, §§ 236 et seq.].

[3] See supra, §§ 373 et seq.

[4] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. pp. 807, 1572, §§ 1207, 2178.

[5] See Agency, Vol. 2, p. 345, § 437; Master and Servant [Also 18 R. C. L. p. 480].

[6] Johnson v. Carroll, 272 Mass. 134, 172 N. E. 85, 69 A.L.R. 1244.

[7] See Husband and Wife [Also 13 R. C. L. pp. 1415, 1416].

[8] Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 744.

[9] Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 746.

[10] See Pleading [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 431].

[11] See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 174, §§ 145 et seq.].

[12] Saunders System Birmingham Co. v. Adams, 217 Ala. 621, 117 So. 72, 61 A.L.R. 1333.

[13] Ex parte Mobile Light & R. Co. 211 Ala. 525, 101 So. 177, 34 A.L.R. 921.

[14] Switzer v. Sherwood, 80 Wash. 19, 141 P. 181, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 216.

[15] Edwards v. Earnest, 206 Ala. 1, 89 So. 729, 22 A.L.R. 1387.

[16] See Pleading [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 431].

§ 598. —Ownership or Control of Automobile.—The allegations of the complaint, declaration, or petition should aver the ownership in the defendant of the vehicle involved in the accident, or that he had such operation or control over the automobile as will charge him with liability for its negligent management at the time of the accident.[4] Allegations that defendant's servant, acting within the scope of his authority, did the acts of negligence complained of, and that by reason of such negligent acts of defendant's servant the plaintiff sustained the damages claimed, without directly alleging that defendant did such acts, are sufficient on demurrer.[5] But a mere allegation of ownership of an automobile operated by another is insufficient to charge the alleged owner with the operator's negligence, where the complaint contains additional allegations by which it is attempted to invoke the family purpose doctrine, thereby negativing the presumption that the driver of the car was operating it as the owner's agent.[6] A mere allegation that the automobile which was damaged was in the possession of the person named raises only an implication that he was in possession as bailee.[7]

A cause of action based solely on the family purpose doctrine is stated by allegations that at the time of the accident the operator, the defendant's daughter, was a member of his family and household, and was living at home with the defendant; that the automobile involved in the accident was the family car and was owned, provided, and maintained for the general use, pleasure, and convenience of the family, and was being so used by a member of defendant's family at the time of the accident; that at such time the daughter was wholly supported by defendant, was herself without property, and was driving the car with the consent, knowledge, acquiescence, approval, and direction of the defendant, and was engaged upon the business for which the car was purchased, to wit, for the general use of the family of defendant; and that by reason of these facts the daughter, while driving the car, became and was the agent of the defendant.[8]

---

[17] Switzer v. Sherwood, 80 Wash. 19, 141 P. 181, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 216.

[18] Griffin v. Russell, 144 Ga. 275, 87 S. E. 10, L.R.A.1916F, 216, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 994.

[19] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 174, § 145]; PLEADING [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 501, § 65].

[20] See PLEADING [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 499].

[1] Howard v. Redden, 93 Conn. 604, 107 A. 509, 7 A.L.R. 198.

[2] Woodbury v. Tampa Waterworks Co. 57 Fla. 243, 49 So. 556, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1034.

[3] Antokol v. Barber, 248 Mass. 393, 143 N. E. 350, 32 A.L.R. 703.

[4] Gordon v. Rose, 54 Idaho, 502, 33 P. (2d) 351, 93 A.L.R. 984; Rowley v. Cedar Rapids, 203 Iowa, 1245, 212 N. W. 158, 53 A.L.R. 375.

[5] Burdette v. Henson, 96 W. Va. 31, 122 S. E. 356, 37 A.L.R. 489.

[6] Gordon v. Rose, 54 Idaho, 502, 33 P. (2d) 351, 93 A.L.R. 984.

[7] Morgan County v. Payne, 207 Ala. 674, 93 So. 628, 30 A.L.R. 1243.

§ 599. —Negligence.—The broad general rule that a pleader may allege negligence in an action therefor in general terms, or that a general allegation of negligence is sufficient,[9] is applicable in proceedings involving the operation of a motor vehicle.[10] The specific facts evidencing the negligence need not ordinarily be set out in the complaint, declaration, or petition,[11] the particular acts of negligence being a matter of proof.[12] A pleading which alleges that defendants negligently lost control of their automobile and drove recklessly over a part of the street which was several feet from the usual traveled way, without giving warning of their approach or slackening their speed, and negligently permitted the automobile to collide with plaintiff, and that the injury sustained by him was due solely to the negligence of defendants, pleads the ultimate and issuable facts as against a motion requiring plaintiff to specify the particulars of the negligence, and in what respect defendants lost control of the automobile or were careless in operating it.[13]

§ 600. —Gross Negligence.—Where in an automobile accident case liability is dependent upon gross negligence or wantonness or wilfulness on the part of the defendant,[14] the plaintiff's pleading must charge the defendant with gross negligence, wilfulness, or wantonness.[15] There can be no recovery where the complaint charges only ordinary negligence or want of ordinary care, and the cause is tried on that theory.[16] Gross negligence is not charged by an allegation that defendant's acts were reckless, negligent, and unlawful,[17] or by allegations that defendant permitted a boy of seventeen, known to be inexperienced and unskilful, to drive the automobile, and that by reason of the driver's inexperience, lack of skill, and incompetence, while driving at an excessive speed, he lost control of the car, which left the pavement and went into the ditch.[18]

§ 601. —Violation of Statute or Ordinance.—Where the complaint, declaration, or petition in an action for damages sustained in an automobile accident relies upon the violation of a statute in proof of negligence, the general rule that it is unnecessary for the pleader to set out the provisions of a statute or make any reference to it in his pleadings, in order to prove same at the trial,[19] is applicable.[20]

On the other hand, as a general rule, a municipal ordinance relied upon in an action brought in a court of general jurisdiction must be pleaded, although when a court is required, by statute, to take judicial notice of an ordinance, a pleading based upon a violation thereof need not necessarily allege that the ordinance was in force when the injury was inflicted.[1]

---

[8] Gordon v. Rose, 54 Idaho, 502, 33 P. (2d) 351, 93 A.L.R. 984.
Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 991.

[9] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[10] Saunders System Birmingham Co. v. Adams, 217 Ala. 621, 117 So. 72, 61 A.L.R. 1333.

[11] Ibid.

[12] Annotation: 59 A.L.R. 210.

[13] Switzer v. Sherwood, 80 Wash. 19, 141 P. 181, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 216.

[14] See supra, §§ 231, 234, 237-243.

[15] Annotation: 20 A.L.R. 1019.

[16] Bentson v. Brown, 186 Wis. 629, 203 N. W. 380, 38 A.L.R. 1417.

[17] Bentson v. Brown, 186 Wis. 629, 203 N. W 380, 38 A.L.R. 1417; Astin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 143 Wis. 477, 128 N. W. 265, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 158.

[18] Naudzius v. Lahr. 253 Mich. 216, 234 N. W. 581, 74 A.L.R. 1189.

[19] See PLEADING [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 443, § 7].

[20] Edwards v. Earnest, 206 Ala. 1, 89 So. 729, 22 A.L.R. 1387.

An averment that a motor vehicle which inflicted injury on a pedestrian was at the time of the accident, or "just immediately prior thereto," being operated in violation of an ordinance, is not insufficient as failing to show violation of the ordinance at the time of the injury.[2]

The fact that a complaint in an action for damages for injuries caused by the negligent operation of an automobile is based upon a void city ordinance will not prevent recovery if the allegations are sufficient to sustain a verdict for common-law negligence.[3]

§ 602. Plea, Answer, or Affidavit of Defense.—The general rules applicable to pleas and answers or to affidavits of defense in tort actions[4] are applicable in actions instituted to recover for injuries sustained in an automobile accident.[5] Such a pleading must generally be filed in order to prevent a judgment by default,[6] although under the practice in some jurisdictions an answer or affidavit of defense is necessary in such actions only where certain facts alleged, such as the agency of the operator or the ownership of the automobile, are to be put in issue.[7] Where this is the practice, if the defendant fails to file an answer or an affidavit of defense in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligent operation of a motor car, he admits responsibility for the manner in which it was operated, but does not admit that it struck the plaintiff, or that it was operated in the manner averred by the plaintiff.[8] Affirmative defenses must, of course, be pleaded. Thus, the majority rule that contributory negligence, to be available to the defendant in an action for personal injuries, must be specifically pleaded unless such negligence appears from the allegations of the plaintiff's petition or complaint,[9] applies to proceedings involving the operation of motor vehicles.[10] Where this is the rule, no consideration can be given, in an action to recover damages for injuries negligently inflicted, to an alleged ground of contributory negligence, which is not set up in the answer,[11] unless it appears from the plaintiff's own evidence that he was contributorily negligent. In many jurisdictions, however, the defense of contributory negligence is available under a general denial.[11a] In some jurisdictions a distinction is drawn between actions for personal injuries resulting from negligence and actions for death caused by wrongful act; in the latter action contributory negligence may be required to be pleaded even though such a plea is not necessary in ordinary negligence actions.[11b]

§ 603. Necessity of Asserting Set-off or Counterclaim.—Although the defendant in an automobile accident case, as in any other civil action, may, under the penalty of being barred from availing himself of such matters in any subsequent action, be required to set up all matters strictly of defense that he may have, he is not required to assert matters not strictly of defense, which are rather matters of set-off, counterclaim, or cross action.[12] A defendant in an action for damages for injuries arising out of an automobile collision is not bound, in order to protect his own claim for injuries growing out of the collision, to set it up by way of set-off or counterclaim in that action, but may maintain an independent action to recover his damages.[13]

---

[1] Ibid.

[2] Ibid.

[3] West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

[4] See NEGLIGENCE; PLEADING [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 431].

[5] Speight v. Simonsen, 115 Or. 618, 239 P. 542, 43 A.L.R. 1149.

[6] See PLEADING [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 431].

[7] 4 Standard Pa. Prac. p. 117, § 113, p. 394, § 392.

[8] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.

[9] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 182, § 151].

[10] Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone & Co. 153 Cal. 571, 96 P. 84, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1094; Olson v. Butte, 86 Mont. 240, 283 P. 222, 70 A.L.R. 1352; Speight v. Simonsen, 115 Or. 618, 239 P. 542, 43 A.L.R. 1149.

[11] Speight v. Simonsen, 115 Or. 618, 239 P. 542, 43 A.L.R. 1149.

[11a] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 182, § 151].

[11b] See DEATH [Also 8 R. C. L. p. 808, §§ 86 et seq.].

F. EVIDENCE

1. JUDICIAL NOTICE

§ 604. Generally.—The broad principle of evidence that courts will take judicial notice of whatever is generally known, or ought to be generally known, within the limits of their jurisdiction,[14] finds frequent application in actions growing out of automobile accidents. Thus, the courts will take judicial notice of statutes affecting or regulating the operation of automobiles,[15] but not of municipal ordinances,[16] unless required to do so by statute.[17]

The courts will also take judicial notice of facts which are commonly and generally known with reference to automobiles and their operation.[18] They will take judicial notice of the fact that the blowout of a tire can affect the direction of an automobile,[19] that tire punctures occur more frequently than such disabling of other parts of an automobile as to render it temporarily unusable,[20] and that motor trucks are operated or propelled by gasoline engines or motors.[1] It is a matter of common knowledge that emergency stops often must be made, of which there is no time to give a signal.[2] Judicial notice may be taken of the facts that commercial motor vehicle transportation is rapidly increasing, that the traffic on main highways is becoming more and more congested,[3] and that an automobile depreciates materially in value when once sold and used.[4] Courts also will take judicial notice that pedestrians, when traveling along the sidewalk of a street, are oftentimes engaged in thought about their own individual affairs.[5] As suggested above, however, judicial notice will be taken only of those matters relative to automobiles, and their use and operation, which are of general or common knowledge.[6] The court will not take judicial notice of the meaning of the phrase, "diffusing type of lens," in a statute regulating the lights to be carried by automobiles,[7] nor will it take judicial notice of the fact that a blowout of the front tire of an automobile running at 15 miles per hour cannot cause the car to leave a perfectly smooth roadway and plunge into the ditch at the side of the road,[8] or that a certain combination truck and semitrailer is less likely than others to weave and twist upon the highways.[9]

---

[12] See JUDGMENTS [Also 15 R. C. L. p. 554]; and PLEADING [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 431].

[13] Seager v. Foster, 185 Iowa, 32, 169 N. W. 681, 8 A.L.R. 690.

[14] See EVIDENCE [Also JUDICIAL NOTICE, 15 R. C. L. p. 1057, § 2].

[15] Steele v. Commercial Mill. Co. (C. C. A. 6th) 50 F. (2d) 1037, 84 A.L.R. 278 (judicial notice of state statute by Federal court).

[16] Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172.

[17] Edwards v. Earnest, 206 Ala. 1, 89 So. 729, 22 A.L.R. 1387.

[18] Re Berry, 147 Cal. 523, 82 P. 44, 109 Am. St. Rep. 160; People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790.

It is a matter of common knowledge that automobiles are more often driven without any reference to legal speed than in observance of it. Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669.

It is common knowledge that automobiles out of control often demolish standard structures which impede their progress. Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1405.

Judicial notice will be taken that for many years automobile races have been as common as, if not more so than, horse races. Swanbrough v. United Commercial Travelers, 66 Colo. 384, 181 P. 204, 6 A.L.R. 485.

[19] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1218.

[20] Long v. Steffen, 194 Wis. 179, 215 N. W. 892, 61 A.L.R. 1155.

[1] Haddad v. Commercial Motor Truck Co. 146 La. 897, 84 So. 197, 9 A.L.R. 1380.

[2] Ritter v. Johnson, 163 Wash. 153, 300 P. 518, 79 A.L.R. 1270.

[3] Iowa Motor Vehicle Asso. v. Railroad Comrs. 207 Iowa, 461, 221 N. W. 364, 75 A.L.R. 1, affirmed in 280 U. S. 529, 74 L. ed. 595, 50 S. Ct. 151.

[4] Lynch v. Sable-Oberteuffer-Peterson, 122 Or. 597, 260 P. 222, 55 A.L.R. 180.

[5] Henderson v. O'Leary, 177 Wis. 130, 187 N. W. 994, 24 A.L.R. 942.

[6] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 1604.

[7] Re Hinkelman, 183 Cal. 392, 191 P. 682, 11 A.L.R. 1222.

2. Presumptions and Inferences

§ 605. Generally.—As in other civil actions,[10] in the trial of automobile accident cases either party may be aided in his proof by presumptions which the law attaches to a given state of facts.[11] There is a presumption that a motorist is innocent in respect of any violation of the provisions of the law.[12] Thus, a person operating his automobile on the public highway will be presumed to have registered and to have obtained a license for his machine.[13] There is also a presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that trolley poles in a street were located under the direction of proper authorities.[14] Motorists are presumed to know the law, and are, therefore, presumed to know to whom a statute gives the right of way at a street intersection.[15]

In this class of actions, as in other kinds of actions, care must be taken to distinguish between an inference and a presumption. An inference is a deduction from facts which reason dictates; a presumption, in its true sense, is an arbitrary conclusion which the law directs to be made from certain facts.[16] No inference that the brakes on a rented car were not properly adjusted can be drawn from the testimony of the driver that on applying the brakes, while traveling at a speed of 30 miles an hour, the car swerved, there being no testimony to show what caused the automobile to swerve.[17]

The court must assume that the legislature, in enacting a statute limiting the liability of the owner or operator of an automobile for accidental injuries to a guest therein, was familiar with the decisions of the court permitting recovery by a guest in an automobile for injuries resulting from the negligence of the owner or operator, and that, in undertaking to legislate upon the subject, it intended to make some change in the existing law.[18]

§ 606. Of Negligence or of Contributory Negligence.—There is no presumption or inference as to the negligence of a driver of an automobile arising from the mere fact that it collided with another vehicle,[19] struck a pedestrian,[20] or caused other damage. Negligence in the operation of an automobile is not presumed.[1] That the driver of an automobile did not know what happened when an accident occurred, or what caused the accident, does not raise a presumption that he was heedless and reckless in the operation of the automobile.[2] The accompanying facts and circumstances may, however, call into operation the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, as where an automobile left the highway, ran upon the sidewalk, and there struck a pedestrian.[3]

---

[8] Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

[9] State v. Wetzel, 208 Wis. 603, 43 N. W. 763, 86 A.L.R. 274.

[10] See Evidence [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 867, §§ 10 et seq.].

[11] Doherty v. Ayer, 197 Mass. 241, 83 N. E. 677, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816, 125 Am. St. Rep. 355; Morris v. Bloomgren, 127 Ohio St. 147, 187 N. E. 2, 89 A.L.R. 831.

[12] One driving an automobile bearing license plates issued to another and delivered to a third person for safe-keeping will be presumed to have used them with the knowledge, consent, and permission of such third person, notwithstanding such use was in violation of a statute making it an offense to operate a motor vehicle bearing license plates other than those issued to the registered owner of such vehicle. State ex rel. Vesper-Buick Auto. Co. v. Daues, 323 Mo. 388, 19 S. W. (2d) 700, 67 A.L.R. 157.

[13] Doherty v. Ayer, 197 Mass. 241, 83 N. E. 677, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816, 125 Am. St. Rep. 355.

The fact that an automobile has been duly registered, and that this registration has expired, although the machine still bears the number of the old registration, is evidence that the machine is not duly registered and numbered. Feeley v. Melrose, 205 Mass. 329, 91 N. E. 306, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 445.

[14] Meese v. Goodman, 167 Md. 658, 176 A. 621, 98 A.L.R. 480.

[15] Morris v. Bloomgren, 127 Ohio St. 147, 187 N. E. 2, 89 A.L.R. 831.

[16] Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. Co. 136 Or. 1, 294 P. 588, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944.

[17] Eklof v. Waterston, 132 Or. 479, 285 P. 201, 68 A.L.R. 1002.

[18] Silver v. Silver, 108 Conn. 371, 143 A. 240, 65 A.L.R. 943, affirmed in 280 U. S. 117, 74 L. ed. 221, 50 S. Ct. 57, 65 A.L.R. 939.

[19] Millsaps v. Brogdon, 97 Ark. 469, 134 S. W. 632, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1177; Bloom v.

It will not be assumed that one who, while intoxicated and engaged in driving a truck as an agent, apparently deliberately ran into another vehicle and killed its driver, did not act negligently, but wilfully or maliciously.[4]

There is no presumption of contributory negligence on the part of the person injured. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the person injured or killed is presumed to have exercised at all times the requisite degree and amount of care for his own safety and preservation.[5] It will be presumed that a pedestrian, seeing a car approaching, did not walk in front of it deliberately, or so carelessly as to stumble and fall without cause other than his own negligence.[6]

§ 607. Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Doctrine.—While no presumption as to the negligence of the driver of an automobile arises from the mere fact that an accident occurred while it was being operated,[7] the accompanying facts and circumstances may call into operation the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur,[8] which is that when both the apparatus and the operation of it are within the control of defendant, and the accident is one which ordinarily could not happen except by reason either of defects in the apparatus or negligence in the operation, a presumption of one or the other arises from the happening of the accident sufficient to justify a verdict against defendant.[9]

To render this doctrine applicable in an automobile accident, the accident must be one which ordinarily could not happen except through fault in the operation of the car[10]—one which does not ordinarily happen when due care is exercised.[11] It is only where circumstances leave no room for a different presumption that the doctrine applies.[12] It must appear that the probable cause was within the control of the operator of the automobile against whom the doctrine is sought to be invoked.[13] Thus, where an injury results from the overturning of an automobile, and it is established that one of the front

---

Bailey, 292 Pa. 348, 141 A. 150, 57 A.L.R. 585.

[20] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963; Millsaps v. Brogdon, 97 Ark. 469, 134 S. W. 632, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1177; Beyrent v. Kaplan, 315 Pa 353, 172 A. 651, 92 A.L.R. 1515.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 1242, s. 64 A.L.R. 258, and 93 A.L.R. 1110.

[1] Bloom v. Bailey, 292 Pa. 348, 141 A. 150, 57 A.L.R. 585; Osborne v. Charbneau, 148 Wash. 359, 268 P. 884, 64 A.L.R. 251.

[2] Giddings v. Honan, 114 Conn. 473, 159 A. 271, 79 A.L.R. 1215.

[3] See infra, §§ 607, 608.

[4] Dixon v. Haynes, 146 Wash. 163, 262 P. 119, 55 A.L.R. 1218.

[5] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027 (pedestrian killed while walking along highway).

[6] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.

A child in the custody of its father, if charged with the father's negligence, is entitled to the benefit of a statute providing that in actions to recover for injuries, the person injured shall be presumed to have been in the exercise of due care, and contributory negligence on his part must be proved by the defendant. Gallagher v. Johnson, 237 Mass. 455, 130 N. E. 174, 15 A.L.R. 411.

[7] See supra, § 606.

[8] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 1240, s. 12 A.L.R. 668, 64 A.L.R. 256, and 93 A.L.R. 1102.

[9] Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 187, § 156].

[10] Giddings v. Honan, 114 Conn. 473, 159 A. 271, 79 A.L.R. 1215.

[11] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 1240, s. 12 A.L.R. 668, 64 A.L.R. 255, and 93 A.L.R. 1101.

[12] Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

[13] Giddings v. Honan, 114 Conn. 473, 159 A. 271, 79 A.L.R. 1215.

tires had blown out, the doctrine does not apply, it being a well-known physical fact that a deflated tire can readily cause such an accident.[14] Nor does the doctrine apply where there is evidence that the accident in question might have happened as a result of the concurrent negligence of two or more persons, or the concurrence of two or more causes.[15]

§ 608. —Particular Injuries Generally.—The most frequent application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in respect to automobiles is found in those cases where an automobile leaves the traveled portion of the highway and strikes a pedestrian, or causes other damage.[16] It has been applied in a number of cases where an automobile, stage bus, or taxicab ran off the highway on which it was traveling, and overturned, injuring passengers therein,[17] or where a private motor vehicle overturned on the highway, causing injury or damage;[18] other courts, however, have denied the application of the doctrine where an automobile traveling along a highway overturned when the driver lost control.[19] The doctrine has been applied where the detachment of a wheel caused injury or damage,[20] or where an automobile started from some unknown cause, after it had been parked,[1] as where a car parked on a grade started down the grade shortly after the owner left it.[2] The doctrine has been denied, however, where the car remained for some time standing in the position in which defendant parked it, and especially where shortly before it started other persons were seen in proximity to it.[3] The doctrine is not applicable where it is proved that the blowout of a tire might have caused the automobile to leave the highway.[4]

§ 609. —Collision between Automobiles.—Generally, it may be said that the mere happening of a collision between two motor vehicles does not present a situation for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.[5] This is so even though the collision is a rear-end collision.[6] The collision may, however, have occurred under such circumstances as to call for the application of the doctrine.[7] It has been held, for example, that the doctrine is applicable in an action against the driver of an automobile by his invited guest for injuries occasioned by the overturning of the car through the hooking of the front bumper with the rear bumper of another car, which crossed in front at a street intersection.[8] The doctrine has been applied also in several cases involving injuries to passengers while riding in an automobile bus or taxicab, as the result of colliding with another vehicle.[9] Nor is the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur restricted, in cases involving a collision between two vehicles in one of which the plaintiff was a passenger, to those only wherein the operator of such vehicle was a common carrier.[10]

---

[14] Ibid.

[15] Yellow Cab Co. v. Hodgson, 91 Colo. 365, 14 P. (2d) 1081, 83 A.L.R. 1156.

[16] Linberg v. Stanto, 211 Cal. 771, 297 P. 9, 75 A.L.R. 555; Brown v. Des Moines Steam Bottling Works, 174 Iowa, 715, 156 N. W. 829, 1 A.L.R. 835 (striking pedestrian on sidewalk).

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 1240, s. 12 A.L.R. 668, 64 A.L.R. 256, and 93 A.L.R. 1102, 75 A.L.R. 562.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies where a 4,000-pound automobile, after colliding with a truck at a street intersection, ran nearly across the street, climbed an elevation of nearly a foot on to the sidewalk, and crashed nearly one half its length into a frame building abutting on the walk, to show that it was exceeding the speed limit of 12 miles an hour when it reached the intersection. West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

Permitting a heavy autotruck to be diverted without warning from the street on to the sidewalk, to the injury of a person standing there, is prima facie evidence of negligence, to overcome which by proof of due care the burden is on the owner of the truck. Brown v. Des Moines Steam Bottling Works, 174 Iowa, 715, 156 N. W. 829, 1 A.L.R. 835.

As to presumption of negligence arising from mere fact that a pedestrian is struck by an automobile, see supra, § 606.

[17] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 256, s. 93 A.L.R. 1108.

[18] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 1120, 1121.

[19] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 1122.

[20] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 1123.

[1] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 1244, s. 64 A.L.R. 260, and 93 A.L.R. 1116; 66 A.L.R. 441.

[2] Biller v. Meyer (C. C. A. 7th) 33 F. (2d) 440, 66 A.L.R. 436.

[3] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 1244, 64 A.L.R. 260, and 93 A.L.R. 1116; 66 A.L.R. 443.

[4] Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

[5] Riggsby v. Tritton, 143 Va. 903, 129 S. E. 493, 45 A.L.R. 280.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 1243, s. 12 A.L.R. 668, 64 A.L.R. 259, and 93 A.L.R. 1111.

[6] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 1111.

[7] Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 1243, s. 12 A.L.R. 668, 64 A.L.R. 259, and 93 A.L.R. 1111.

§ 610. —Skidding.—The mere skidding of an automobile is not an occurrence of such an uncommon or unusual character as to constitute, if unexplained, evidence of the driver's negligence so as to render the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applicable. Nor will such circumstance, standing alone, generally invoke the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.[11] In other words, the mere skidding of an automobile does not, alone and unexplained, furnish evidence of the negligent operation of the car.[12]

§ 611. Presumptions Arising from Proof of Ownership.—The ownership of an automobile implies the right of possession and control,[13] and, according to one line of authority, from proof of the defendant's ownership of the automobile, a rebuttable presumption, or an inference, arises that at the time of the injury the automobile was in the owner's possession, and being operated by him or by his servant or agent under circumstances which would render him liable for their conduct under the doctrine of respondeat superior.[14] Many courts take the view, however, that proof of ownership alone is not sufficient to raise an inference of fact, or a presumption, that at the time of the accident the driver was an agent or servant of the owner or under his control.[15] According to the view expressed by some courts, to hold that ownership of a car creates the presumption that the person driving it at the time of the injury was the agent of the owner, and acting within the scope of his employment, would require the court to base one presumption or inference upon another presumption or inference.[16]

---

[8] Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 229 P. (2d) 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092.

[9] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 1114.

[10] Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P. (2d) 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092.

[11] Barret v. Caddo Transfer & Warehouse Co. 165 La. 1075, 116 So. 563, 58 A.L.R. 261; Lambert v. Eastern Massachusetts Street R. Co. 240 Mass. 495, 134 N. E. 340, 22 A.L.R. 1291; Osborne v. Charbneau, 148 Wash. 359, 268 P. 884, 64 A.L.R. 251; Linden v. Miller, 172 Wis. 20, 177 N. W. 909, 12 A.L.R. 665.

Annotation: 5 A.L.R. 1246, s. 12 A.L.R. 668, 64 A.L.R. 261, and 93 A.L.R. 1117; 58 A.L.R. 269; 3 B. R. C. 97.

No inference of contributory negligence on the part of the driver of an automobile can be conclusively drawn from the fact that the car skidded on an icy pavement. McCracken v. Curwensville, 309 Pa. 98, 163 A. 217, 86 A.L.R. 1379.

Generally, as to res ipsa loquitur as applied to automobile accidents, see annotations in 5 A.L.R. 1240, s. 12 A.L.R. 668.

[12] Osborne v. Charbneau, 148 Wash. 359. 268 P. 884, 64 A.L.R. 251.

[13] Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. Co. 136 Or. 1, 294 P. 588, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944.

[14] Heavilin v. Wendell, 214 Iowa, 844, 241 N. W. 654, 83 A.L.R. 872; Rose v. Balfe, 223 N. Y. 481, 119 N. E. 842, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 238; Potts v. Pardee, 220 N. Y. 431, 116 N. E. 78, 8 A.L.R. 785; Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161; Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. Co. 136 Or. 1, 294 P. 588, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 P. 1020, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59.

[15] Tice v. Crowder, 119 Kan. 494, 240 P. 964, 42 A.L.R. 893; Gardner v. Farnum, 230 Mass. 193, 119 N. E. 666, L.R.A.1918E, 997; White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 66 A. 525, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 10 Ann. Cas. 731; McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, 155 P. 437, L.R.A. 1916D, 618.

Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 908, s. 74 A.L.R. 958.

There is no presumption that a minor child is the agent of the father in driving the latter's car, or that when driving such car he is acting within the scope of his authority. Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127; Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490.

[16] Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127; Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490.

Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 909.

§ 612. Presumption that Driver Was Acting for Owner.—The fact that an employee was in charge of an automobile at the request of his employer gives rise to the inference, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he was in the performance of his duty at the time of a collision.[17] A slight deviation from the proper route of travel will not overcome this presumption or inference.[18] Again, if it is proved that the automobile in question was owned by defendant, and further proved that the driver was in the employment of defendant, a presumption then arises that such driver was within the scope of his employment when the accident occurred.[19] The burden of proof is then placed on the defendant to prove that at the time of the accident the driver was not acting for him, but was using the machine for his own purposes, or outside the scope of the employment.[20] But evidence that the owner told his chauffeur to deliver several friends and then drive home, a trip which would have taken an hour, and that the chauffeur ran into and injured plaintiff some six hours later, overcomes the presumption that the chauffeur was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident.[1] Proof that the defendant owned the car, and that it was being driven by his child, with his consent, at the time of the accident, is not sufficient to raise the presumption that the child was acting as the agent of the father and within the scope of his authority, thereby shifting the burden upon the father to prove the contrary. To do this would require the court to base one presumption upon another.[2]

A bookkeeper or cashier, employed in the office of a company, is not presumed, from that fact alone, to have the implied authority to use or operate an automobile purchased and owner by the company for the use and purchase of a traveling salesman.[3] But a husband driving his wife's automobile, even with the wife present, is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be in control of the car and solely responsible for its operation.[4]

3. BURDEN OF PROOF

§ 613. Generally.—The broad general principle that the burden of proof is upon the party asserting the affirmative of the issue as determined by the pleadings and the nature of the case[5] applies, of course, to actions arising out of the operation or ownership of automobiles. In such cases the burden of proof never shifts from the party who has the affirmative issue, but the burden of proceeding with the evidence sometimes does.[6] The burden of proving that one in whose name an automobile is registered is not in fact the owner is on the one asserting that it was not legally registered.[7] And one who assails the classification in a police regulation governing the operation of automobiles has the burden of showing that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis.[8]

---

[17] Babington v. Yellow Taxi Corp. 250 N. Y. 14, 164 N. E. 726, 61 A.L.R. 1354.

[18] Dixon v. Haynes, 146 Wash. 163, 262 P. 119, 55 A.L.R. 1218.

[19] Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127; Guthrie v. Holmes, 272 Mo. 215, 198 S. W. 854, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1123; Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490.

[20] See infra, § 615.

[1] Guthrie v. Holmes, 272 Mo. 215, 198 S. W. 854, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1123.

[2] Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490.

[3] White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082.

[4] Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280.

[5] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 898, § 48].

[6] Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. 136 Or. 1, 294 P. 588, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944.

[7] Balian v. Ogassin, 277 Mass. 525, 179 N. E. 232, 78 A.L.R. 1021.

The burden of proving affirmative defenses is on the defendant. Thus, it is incumbent on the defendant to prove that the plaintiff's vehicle was not registered according to law.[9] And the participation of an occupant of an unregistered automobile in its alleged operation is in the nature of a defense to an action by such occupant against the operator for personal injuries, to be established by the defendant, where a statute provides that the operation of an unregistered automobile on the highway shall not constitute a defense unless it is shown that the person injured knew, or had reasonable cause to know, that the statute requiring the registration of motor vehicles was being violated.[10]

§ 614. Negligence and Contributory Negligence.—There is no presumption of negligence on the part of the person operating an automobile, arising from the mere fact that it has caused injury to the person or property of another,[11] and one who alleges that he has been injured by the negligent operation of an automobile has the burden of establishing negligence on the part of the operator,[12] and of showing that such negligence was the proximate cause of his injury,[13] unless the common-law rule has been changed by a statute imposing upon the owner or driver of an automobile which, while being operated on the highway, has caused injury or damage to another, the burden of proving that the injury or damage did not arise through the negligence of the driver.[14] There is much controversy upon the question whether the plaintiff in a negligence action must show his own freedom from contributory negligence or whether the defendant has the burden of proving that the injury complained of was due to the plaintiff's fault.[15] The rule in an automobile accident case is determined by the rule applied in the particular jurisdiction in other negligence actions. In most jurisdictions the burden of proof is on the defendant,[16] unless the plaintiff's own evidence raises a presumption or inference of negligence on his part.[17] The burden of establishing contributory negligence is on the defendant, where plaintiff has made out a case from which his contributory negligence does not appear.[18] In several jurisdictions, however, a plaintiff in an automobile case, in order to make out a prima facie case, must prove not only negligence on the part of the defendant, but also that he, the plaintiff, was exercising due care.[19] In some jurisdictions in death actions the statutes impose upon the defendant the burden of proving contributory negligence.[20]

---

[8] Naudzius v. Lahr, 253 Mich. 216, 234 N. W. 581, 74 A.L.R. 1189.

[9] Potter v. Gilmore, 282 Mass. 49, 184 N. E 373, 87 A.L.R. 1462.

[10] Balian v. Ogassin, 277 Mass. 525, 179 N. E. 232, 78 A.L.R. 1021.

[11] See supra, § 606.

[12] Millsaps v. Brogdon, 97 Ark. 469, 134 S. W. 632, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1177; Osborne v. Charbneau, 148 Wash. 359, 268 P. 884, 64 A.L.R. 251.

In an action to recover for an injury resulting from defendant's bus striking the car in which plaintiff was riding, because of the failure of the brakes in the bus to work where it was shown that a pin on the brake evener had dropped off, but where there was no evidence as to the cause of its dropping, the burden of disproving negligence was upon the defendant under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and under a provision of the Motor Vehicle Act that when any injury is caused by a motor vehicle the onus of proof that it did not arise through the negligence of the driver or owner shall be on the owner or driver. Geel v. Winnipeg Electric Co. 16 Manitoba L. R. 18 [1930] 3 D. L. R. 781, 16 B. R. C. 321.

[13] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 1618, § 2235.

[14] McIntyre v. Coote, 19 Ont. L. Rep. 9, 16 Ann. Cas. 395; Mattei v. Gillies, 16 Ont. L. Rep. 558, 12 Ann. Cas. 970.

[15] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 195, § 162].

[16] Millsaps v. Brogdon, 97 Ark. 469, 134 S. W. 632, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1177; Waynick v. Walrond, 155 Va. 400, 154 S. E. 522, 70 A.L.R. 1014; Stewart v. Olson, 188 Wis. 487, 206 N. W. 909, 44 A.L.R. 1292.

The Federal rule is definitely settled that the burden of proving such contributory negligence rests, in all cases, upon the defendant. Miller v. Union P. R. Co. 290 U. S. 227, 78 L. ed. 285, 54 S. Ct. 172.

If the negligence of the parent is relied on as a defense to the action, the defendant has the burden of proving it. Gallagher v. Johnson, 237 Mass. 455, 130 N. E. 174, 15 A.L.R. 411.

[17] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186, overruled on other points in Morris v. Bloomgren, 127 Ohio St. 147, 187 N. E. 2, 89 A.L.R. 831; Tresise v. Ashdown, 118 Ohio St. 307, 160 N. E. 898, 58 A.L.R. 1476.

§ 615. Authority of Operator.—The plaintiff in an action for injuries sustained in an automobile collision has the burden of establishing that the driver of the automobile was the agent of defendant and was acting for defendant's benefit.[1] In many jurisdictions, however, a rebuttable presumption or inference arises from proof of the defendant's ownership of the automobile that it was in his possession, and was being operated by his servant or agent under circumstances which would render defendant liable for the conduct of such servant or agent.[2] Such a presumption, without shifting the burden of proof from plaintiff, imposes upon defendant, the burden of showing that in fact he was in no manner responsible for the acts of the driver,[3] for one seeking to absolve himself from liability for the act of his agent on the ground that he was not at the time acting within the scope of his employment has the burden of proving such fact.[4]

4. ADMISSIBILITY, COMPETENCY, RELEVANCY, AND MATERIALITY

a. IN GENERAL

§ 616. Generally.—The elementary rule of evidence that matters offered in evidence must be relevant to the issues of the case—must tend to prove or disprove them[5]—is, of course, applicable to the trial of automobile cases. Any evidence that is explanatory of the conduct of the persons involved, or pertinent in connection with evaluating the degree of care and caution exercised upon a specific occasion, is properly admissible.[1] In an action against an automobile manufacturer, for injuries due to a defect in one of the wheels of a purchased car, evidence as to the practice of manufacturers of automobiles and of the trade concerning the examination of wheels is relevant and admissible.[2] The mere fact, however, that the testimony may be logically relevant does not in all cases render it admissible; it may be rendered inadmissible because of remoteness, or because of some arbitrary rule, such as the rule excluding that which is hearsay or mere opinions of unqualified witnesses. Another applicable general rule is that the evidence must be confined to the issues raised by the pleadings.[3] The purpose here is to discuss the application of these general principles to actual situations within the scope of this article.

---

[18] McCracken v. Curwensville, 309 Pa. 98, 163 A. 217, 86 A.L.R. 1379; Stewart v. Olson, 188 Wis. 487, 206 N. W. 909, 44 A.L.R. 1292.

One who, driving upon a highway, fails to turn to the right, as required by statute, when meeting another vehicle, is prima facie negligent and has the burden of justifying his presence on the wrong side of the road. Bragdon v. Kellogg, 118 Me. 42, 105 A. 433, 6 A.L.R. 669.

[19] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 485.

[20] See, for example, Consolidated Laws of New York, Chap. 13, § 120.

[1] Heavilin v. Wendell, 214 Iowa, 844, 241 N. W. 654, 83 A.L.R. 872; Neff v. Brandeis, 91 Neb. 11, 135 N. W. 232, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 933; Kohlman v. Hyland, 54 N. D. 710, 210 N. W. 643, 50 A.L.R. 1437; Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. Co. 136 Or. 1, 294 P. 588, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944; Luckett v. Reighard, 248 Pa. 24, 93 A. 773, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 662.

[2] See supra, § 611.

[3] Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. Co. 136 Or. 1, 294 P. 588, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944.

[4] Crowell v. Duncan, 145 Va. 489, 134 S. E. 576, 50 A.L.R. 1425.

Where there is evidence of defendant's ownership of the car, coupled with proof that the driver was in his employment, at the time of the accident, the burden of proof is then placed on the defendant to prove that at the time of the accident the driver was not acting for him, but was using the machine for his own purposes, or outside the scope of the employment. Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490.

[5] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 925, §§ 87 et seq.]

[1] See NEGLIGENCE.

[2] Cadillac Motor Car Co. v. Johnson (C. C. A. 2d) 221 F. 801, L.R.A.1915E, 287, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 581.

The defendant should be allowed to show what inquiries it made before contracting for wheels, what answers it received, what reputation the company of which it purchased had as manufacturers, whether its wheels were as high priced, or higher priced than, any in the market, and that no similar accident had ever before been heard of. Ibid.

§ 617. To Prove Negligence.—In an action involving an automobile accident, the range or proof that may be introduced to show negligence, or the lack of it, upon the part of the driver or the person injured, is subject only to the general qualification of its competency, and its relevancy and materiality to the issues presented.[4] Evidence as to whether the municipal authorities had received any report of defendant's violating the speed ordinances on the day of the accident is irrelevant,[5] as is a question asked of defendant as to whether he would have run at a high or dangerous rate of speed with young ladies in his automobile.[6] And a question to defendant on cross-examination as to admissions in regard to his method of operating the car is immaterial.[7] The defendant cannot put in evidence his purpose in stopping after the accident, as no purpose, however benevolent, can excuse negligence.[8]

Violation of a statute or ordinance regulating traffic is evidence of negligence.[9] Thus, evidence that the plaintiff crossed an intersection in violation of traffic signals at the time of the accident is admissible as bearing upon the degree of care and caution exercised by him.[10] Generally an ordinance must be pleaded before it is admissible.[11] An ordinance may, however, be admitted in evidence to show negligence, where the action is not founded directly on the ordinance.[12] In many instances a violation of a traffic statute or ordinance is negligence per se, and, if a proximate cause of an accident, establishes negligence or contributory negligence.[13] Testimony that a passenger in an automobile struck by other cars was thrown from the car, struck a building near the second story, and fell to the sidewalk, from which he was picked up and carried into the building, is admissible as giving the jury a picture of the situation as it existed at the time of and shortly after the accident, and, the place where the passenger was found being a part of the same transaction as the accident, such evidence may be considered in determining the speed of the machines.[14]

The court may refuse to permit one who was a passenger in an automobile involved in a collision, when a witness in an action to recover damages for injuries resulting from the collision, to state which car ran into the other, where he states that he was not looking at the machines when they collided.[15]

§ 618. Habit or Custom.—The general rule that evidence of the habits of a person injured through the negligence of another is not admissible to show care, or lack of care, on his part at the time of the accident,[16] is applicable in cases involving automobile accidents.[17] Conversely, particular acts of negligence on the part of the defendant cannot be proved by evidence that he, or the driver for whose act it is claimed that he is responsible, was habitually negligent or had the reputation of being a careless driver;[18] nor is evidence that the defendant's chauffeur drove fast on another occasion admissible as tending to show reckless habits of which the defendant had knowledge.[19] As a general rule evidence which would tend merely to show that the operator charged with the particular act of negligence was ordinarily a careful, skilful, or prudent driver is excluded.[20] Clearly, if witnesses of the accident are available, their statements of what was actually done at the time are the best evidence of the driver's care or negligence,[1] and evidence of his habits will not be admitted on that point.[2] Evidence of the habits or custom of the person injured by the operation of the defendant's vehicle, or of the operator, may, however, become pertinent where there is a lack of witnesses to the accident.[3] The weight of authority inclines to the view that if a person is killed in an accident of which there are no eyewitnesses, evidence of his habits is admissible as tending to indicate his probable conduct at the time of the occurrence.[4] Some courts, however, take a different view[5] and hold that the fact that there is no living eyewitness of an automobile accident does not make competent evidence tendered on behalf of the plaintiff, tending to show the degree of care usually exercised by the decedent in the operation of his motor vehicle.[6] The mere fact that the veracity of alleged eyewitnesses of an accident resulting in death is challenged will not make admissible evidence of the habits of the decedent with respect to care and prudence.[7]

---

[3] Washington v. Seattle, 170 Wash. 371, 16 P. (2d) 597, 86 A.L.R. 113.

[4] See Evidence [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 847].

[5] McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 523, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139.

[6] Ibid.

[7] Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

[8] Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291.

[9] Milbury v. Turner Center System, 274 Mass. 358, 174 N. E. 471, 73 A.L.R. 1070.

[10] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963 (holding that disregard of traffic signals is itself some evidence of negligence).
Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 970.

[11] See supra, § 601.

[12] Jaquith v. Worden, 73 Wash. 349, 132 P. 33, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.

[13] See supra, § 163.

[14] Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174.

[15] Bradley v. Schmidt, 223 Ky. 784, 4 S. W. (2d) 703, 57 A.L.R. 1100.

Admission of evidence that plaintiff's driver had intemperate habits is not prejudicial where he was intoxicated at the time of the accident and the plaintiff must have known it.[8] So, plaintiff's testimony that the defendant drove the automobile as she usually did has been held admissible.[9]

A usage or custom may, according to the issue of a particular case, become relevant and admissible in evidence. Thus, if particular trades or occupations, or localities, are involved, evidence of the general custom or the local usage is competent, though such usages or customs do not furnish an absolute standard of care or negligence.[10]

§ 619. Financial Standing of Parties.—Under the rules of evidence applicable to other kinds of actions,[11] no inquiry may, as a general proposition, be made, or evidence admitted, concerning the wealth, financial responsibility, social standing, business, etc., of either party to an action for damages arising out of an automobile accident.[12]

---

[16] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 955, § 127]; NEGLIGENCE.

[17] Tresise v. Ashdown, 118 Ohio St. 307, 160 N. E. 898, 58 A.L.R. 1476.

Annotation: 15 A.L.R. 125, s. 18 A.L.R. 1109.

[18] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 1623, § 2242.

Upon the question whether or not one was negligent in accepting an invitation to ride in an automobile, evidence is not competent as to the past habits of the driver, or his incompetence, as disclosed to the invitee by his past conduct in driving. Marks v. Dorkin, 105 Conn. 521, 136 A. 83, 61 A.L.R. 1224.

[19] Flynn v. Lewis, 231 Mass. 550, 121 N. E. 493, 2 A.L.R. 896.

[20] State v. Goetz, 83 Conn. 437, 76 A. 1000, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 458.

[1] Petro v. Hines, 299 Ill. 236, 132 N. E. 462, 18 A.L.R. 1106.

[2] Annotation: 15 A.L.R. 125, s. 18 A.L.R. 1109.

[3] Annotation: 15 A.L.R. 125.

[4] Casey v. Chicago R. Co. 269 Ill. 386, 109 N. E. 984, L.R.A.1916B, 824; Dallemand v. Saalfeldt, 175 Ill. 310, 51 N. E. 645, 48 L.R.A. 753, 67 Am. St. Rep. 214.

Annotation: 15 A.L.R. 138, 144; 18 A.L.R. 1110.

[5] Annotation: 15 A.L.R. 142.

[6] Tresise v. Ashdown, 118 Ohio St. 307, 160 N. E. 898, 58 A.L.R. 1476.

[7] Petro v. Hines, 299 Ill. 236, 132 N. E. 462, 18 A.L.R. 1106.

[8] Lynn v. Goodwin, 170 Cal. 112, 148 P. 927, L.R.A.1915E, 588.

[9] Olson v. Hermansen, 196 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A.L.R. 1243.

[10] House v. Cramer, 134 Iowa, 374, 112 N. W. 3, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 655, 13 Ann. Cas. 461.

§ 620. Infancy of Party.—It being generally held that the youth of the person whose acts or omissions are being scrutinized is a fact to be taken into consideration in determining the reasonableness of his conduct,[13] evidence of the infancy of any of the persons involved in the accident, and whose standard of conduct is being evaluated, is generally admissible at the trial.[14] Since the age of a person is not the sole determinant in an appraisement of his conduct on a particular occasion, but such factors as his intelligence and experience are of equal importance in this connection,[15] any evidence that is pertinent in the explanation or clarification of these matters is also admissible at the trial.[16] It makes no difference in this respect whether the infant was the operator of the vehicle involved in the accident, or the pedestrian injured through its operation; evidence upon the issues above mentioned is admissible in either instance.[17]

§ 621. Lack of Registration or of Operator's License.—In a majority of jurisdictions the fact that a motor vehicle, or the driver of such a vehicle, was not licensed as required by statute, will not, as a matter of law, operate to charge the owner or operator with liability for injury or damage caused by its operation on the highway,[18] and the view has been taken in a number of cases that evidence of lack of proper registration of an automobile involved in an accident,[19] or of the failure of the operator to have the required operator's license,[20] is incompetent for the purpose of showing negligence in the operation of the car. It would seem, however, that under regulations which require as a condition to the granting of an operator's license that the applicant submit to and pass a driver's test, and restrict the right to operate to those shown to be qualified, the lack of such license would have a legitimate bearing upon the question of negligence in the operation of an automobile. Accordingly, in some jurisdictions evidence is admissible to show that the operator of a motor vehicle involved in an accident did not have the required operator's license;[1] and in at least one jurisdiction evidence that the automobile was not duly registered is admissible on the question of negligence.[2]

---

[11] See Evidence [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 957].

[12] Story v. Green, 164 Cal. 768, 130 P. 870, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 961; Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.

[13] See Infants [Also 14 R. C. L. pp. 259 et seq.]; Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. pp. 124 et seq.]

[14] Charbonneau v. MacRury, 84 N. H. 501, 153 A. 457, 73 A.L.R. 1266; McCaffrey v. Concord Electric Co. 80 N. H. 45, 114 A. 395, 17 A.L.R. 813.
Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1277.

[15] See supra, § 470.
See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[16] Charbonneau v. MacRury, 84 N. H. 501, 153 A. 457, 73 A.L.R. 1266; Kambour v. Boston & M. R. Co. 77 N. H. 33, 86 A. 624, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1188; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 77 Tex. 356, 14 S. W. 26, 19 Am. St. Rep. 755.
Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1277.

[17] Charbonneau v. MacRury, 84 N. H. 501, 153 A. 457, 73 A.L.R. 1266.

[18] See supra, §§ 130 et seq.

[19] Black v. Moree, 135 Tenn. 73, 185 S. W. 682, L.R.A.1916E, 1216.
Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 162, 164.

[20] Lindsay v. Cecchi, 3 Boyce (Del.) 133, 80 A. 523, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 699.
Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 163, 164.

[1] Kenyon v. Hathaway, 274 Mass. 47, 174 N. E. 463, 73 A.L.R. 156 (holding that the fact that the driver of an automobile involved in an accident was not licensed in the state in which the automobile was registered and in which the accident occurred should be taken into consideration as bearing on the question of his negligence, and on that of the owner's negligence in allowing him to operate the vehicle, although he had an operator's license issued in another state); Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 95 N. E. 404, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701; Doherty v. Ayer, 197 Mass. 241, 83 N. E. 677, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816, 125 Am. St. Rep. 355; Johnson v. Boston & M. R. Co. 83 N. H. 350, 143 A. 516, 61 A.L.R. 1178.

[2] Balian v. Ogassin, 277 Mass. 525, 179 N. E. 232, 78 A.L.R. 1021; Koonovsky v.

§ 622. Liability Insurance.—It is a broad general rule of evidence that the fact that an automobile owner carries liability insurance is not admissible as an admission of negligence, or as a fact tending to show negligence; on such issues it is technically irrelevant, and its admission is carefully guarded against;[3] however, the real reason which prompts the court to guard against admission of such evidence is the prejudicial effect which it is presumed to have upon the jury, because of the suggestion that it carries that an insurance company will have to pay the judgment.[4] And if the plaintiff makes no attempt to show that the defendant is indemnified against loss by an insurance company, it is not proper for the defendant to offer testimony showing that he is not indemnified;[5] if, however, the plaintiff has injected the question of insurance into the case by asking jurymen on the voir dire whether they were interested in insurance companies, the defendant may be permitted to testify that he had no liability insurance.[6] The general rule excluding evidence as to liability insurance is subject to other qualifications and exceptions; it is always competent when it tends to prove some material issue properly in the case.[7] Such evidence may also be admissible to show bias or interest of a witness,[8] and an admission of liability by the defendant may properly be admitted, even though it is developed that, in making it, he stated that he carried liability insurance.[9] Evidence is admissible that when remonstrance was made to the driver of an automobile as to his way of driving, he stated that he carried liability insurance.[10]

§ 623. Motive for Haste.—Motive for haste furnishes some ground for an inference of overspeeding. Thus, the fact that the automobilist was driving to keep an overdue engagement is an indication of an attempt to hasten to his destination.[11]

§ 624. Previous Acts and Conduct; Caution or Warning as to Danger.—The fact that the driver of an automobile drove fast on another occasion is not admissible upon the question of his liability for injury to a guest by the overturning of the car.[12] In an action against the owner of a taxicab for an injury inflicted by his driver while the latter was driving the taxicab when intoxicated, evidence that defendant had heard no complaints of the driver's conduct from postoffice authorities, although the driver's duties included the carrying of mail, is properly excluded.[13] Evidence of an exhibition of fright by a witness to an automobile accident is not admissible, in an action to hold the owner of a car liable for an injury caused by its being overturned, to show

---

Quellette, 226 Mass. 474, 116 N. E. 243, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1146 (expressive of Massachusetts rule that unregistered automobiles are absolutely outlawed, and that their occupants are deprived of the ordinary right to sue for another's mere negligence).

To the same effect, see Feeley v. Melrose, 205 Mass. 329, 91 N. E. 306, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 445.

Annotation: 87 A.L.R. 1469.

[3] Watson v. Adams, 187 Ala. 490, 65 So. 528, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 565; Akin v. Lee, 206 N. Y. 20, 99 N. E. 85, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 947; Lytton v. Marion Mfg. Co. 157 N. C. 331, 72 S. E. 1055, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 358; Vasquez v. Pettit, 74 Or. 496, 145 P. 1066, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 439; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 P. 1020, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 516; 56 A.L.R. 1419, s. 74 A.L.R. 850; Ann. Cas. 1914A, 948.

[4] Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 1421, 1422.

[5] Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.

Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 1431, 1432, s. 74 A.L.R. 853.

[6] Stehouwer v. Lewis, 249 Mich. 76, 227 N. W. 759, 74 A.L.R. 844.

[7] Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 1432, s. 74 A.L.R. 854.

[8] Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 1439, s. 74 A.L.R. 855.

[9] Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 1448, s. 74 A.L.R. 856.

[10] Herschensohn v. Weisman, 80 N. H. 557, 119 A. 705, 28 A.L.R. 514.

[11] Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.

[12] Flynn v. Lewis, 231 Mass. 550, 121 N. E. 493, 2 A.L.R. 896.

[13] Crowell v. Duncan, 145 Va. 489, 134 S. E. 576, 50 A.L.R. 1425.

negligence on the part of the chauffeur.[14] However, evidence that the driver had been cautioned by the occupants of the car against fast driving, as to the condition of the road, etc., has been held to be competent on the question of his negligence or of the contributory negligence of a guest in the car.[15] In an action for damages for the killing of a pedestrian walking upon a public highway at night, testimony of one who was his companion at the time of the accident, to the effect that deceased kept warning him to keep off the paved portion of the highway, is admissible.[16]

§ 625. Report of Accident.—The report of an automobile accident, made to a public official by the driver of an automobile involved therein, in pursuance of a statutory duty, is generally not admissible in evidence at the trial.[17] There is, however, a wide difference between a report made by a private citizen to a public officer, though made compulsory by statute, and one made by a public official in the performance of his duty; reliance can safely be placed on the action of the latter, taken under the sanction of his office, which cannot be had on a report made by a private citizen.[18]

b. Surrounding Circumstances

§ 626. Generally.—It may be stated generally that in an action growing out of an automobile accident any evidence of the conditions and circumstances leading up to and surrounding the accident which will throw light upon the conduct of the parties and the care, or lack of care, exercised by them, is admissible. It is proper to admit testimony showing the position of the wheel tracks of the vehicle or vehicles involved in the accident,[19] and testimony concerning the testing of the brakes shortly after the accident is admissible, their condition being substantially unchanged.[20] Evidence that occupants of an automobile were hurled out of it is always competent, as bearing on the force of the collision.[1] Evidence that the defendant's car, on hitting another car, lifted it bodily in the air, hurled it 20 or 25 feet, and turned it around, contradicts evidence that defendant's car was going only from 12 to 20 miles an hour.[2] In a collision case the driver of one car may testify that he could not see signals given by the driver of the other car because of the darkness and inability to see back of the headlights.[3] Failure to look for approaching automobiles in attempting to cross a city street having considerable automobile traffic is evidence of negligence.[4]

In an action by one who had been adjudged insane, to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from negligent collision with an automobile which he was driving, evidence is admissible as to his sanity at and after the time of the accident.[5]

---

[14] Flynn v. Lewis, 231 Mass. 550, 121 N. E. 493, 2 A.L.R. 896.

[15] Herschensohn v. Weisman, 80 N. H. 557, 119 A. 705, 28 A.L.R. 514.

[16] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

[17] Voegeli v. Waterbury Yellow Cab Co. 111 Conn. 407, 150 A. 303, 69 A.L.R. 902 (not admissible to prove the agency of the driver).
Annotation: 69 A.L.R. 905.

[18] Annotation: 69 A.L.R. 905.

[19] Opecello v. Meads, 152 Md. 29, 135 A. 488, 50 A.L.R. 1385; Haley v. State, 84 Tex. Crim. Rep. 629, 209 S. W. 675, 3 A.L.R. 779.

[20] Ragan v. MacGill, 134 Or. 408, 292 P. 1094, 72 A.L.R. 860.

[1] Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174.

[2] Schultz v. State, 89 Neb. 34, 130 N. W. 972, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 403, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 495.

[3] Webber v. Park Auto Transp. Co. 138 Wash. 325, 244 P. 718, 47 A.L.R. 590.

[4] Day v. Cunningham, 125 Me. 328, 133 A. 855, 47 A.L.R. 1229.

[5] Criez v. Sunset Motor Co. 123 Wash. 604, 213 P. 7, 32 A.L.R. 627.

§ 627. Other Accidents.—In certain classes of actions, such as actions arising out of injuries caused by the defective and dangerous condition of public thoroughfares, evidence of other accidents at the same place, suffered by persons other than the plaintiff, and at other and different times, has been held admissible.[6] And many cases have held that evidence of the occurrence of other automobile accidents at the same place at which the particular accident occurred is admissible to show the dangerous condition of the place and notice to the defendant of the condition.[7] The view has been expressed, however, with reference to actions involving automobile accidents, that evidence of a previous accident at the same place is generally incompetent upon the investigation of the cause of a second one, at least in the absence of a showing that it happened at the same place and under practically similar circumstances and conditions.[8] Cases involving injuries to pedestrians by reason of the unsafe condition of sidewalks are said not to be similar to automobile accident cases, inasmuch as it is a matter of common knowledge that pedestrians walking on the sidewalk proceed ordinarily at about the same speed and in the same manner.[9]

It has been held that testimony that the person suing for personal injuries arising out of an automobile collision had previously had an accident was irrelevant and properly excluded.[10]

§ 628. Position of Automobile.—Proof which tends to fix the relative positions of vehicles at the time of the accident is generally viewed as pertinent to the question of the degree of care properly exercisable at that time and is admissible, subject only to the broad rules of relevancy and competency applicable to other situations.[11] Evidence tending to show the positions of vehicles immediately after the accident tends to throw light on the issue of speed and direction of the vehicles' movements prior to, and at the time of, the accident.[12] An eyewitness may describe the position of the vehicles with respect to each other and with relation to a street intersection.[13]

Evidence that one of the vehicles was improperly parked upon the road is admissible.[14]

§ 629. Atmospheric Conditions.—Evidence of bad atmospheric conditions existing at the time of the accident, such as fog, dust, smoke, etc., is generally admissible at the trial, as bearing upon the range and extent of visibility, as well as upon the degree of care and caution properly exercisable by motorists and pedestrians under such conditions.[15] For this same purpose, the records of the weather bureau, duly authenticated, are admissible in evidence.[16]

§ 630. Speed.—Competent evidence[17] as to the rate of speed at which an automobile was traveling just prior to, and a short distance away from the scene of, an accident, bears upon the rate of speed at which it was traveling at the time of the accident,[18] and is admissible when the speed of a motor vehicle is charged as negligence,[19] or in support of a claim that the defendant's speed was lawful, or reasonable and proper under the circumstances. Statements based upon observation of witnesses who saw the progress of the car do not constitute the sole medium of proof upon this point. Various factors, such as skid marks,[20] distance traveled after impact, force of impact, etc.,[1] are pertinent in arriving at an estimate of the rate of speed of an automobile. The proof in this connection should relate to the speed of the vehicle at a reasonable time before, and at a reasonable distance from the place of, the accident.[2] Precisely what will constitute a distance or time so far removed from the occurrence as to make an estimate of the automobile's speed inadmissible is a question resting largely in the discretion of the trial court.[3]

---

[6] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 940, § 110].

[7] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, p. 1637, § 2263.

[8] Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Loesch, 215 Ky. 452, 284 S. W. 1097, 47 A.L.R. 347.

[9] Ibid.

[10] Alaga Coach Line v. McCarroll, 227 Ala. 686, 151 So. 834, 92 A.L.R. 470.

[11] Milbury v. Turner Center System, 274 Mass. 358, 174 N. E. 471, 73 A.L.R. 1070.

[12] People v. Benson, 321 Ill. 605, 152 N. E. 514, 46 A.L.R. 1056; West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

[13] West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

[14] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1077.

[15] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1020.

[16] Mears v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 75 Conn. 171, 52 A. 610, 56 L.R.A. 884, 96 Am. St. Rep. 192; Hufnagle v. Delaware & H. Co. 227 Pa. 476, 76 A. 205, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 982, 19 Ann. Cas. 850.

See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 1129].

[17] As to opinion evidence as to speed, see infra, § 651.

Although direct testimony as to speed is generally admitted where the witness saw the automobile in motion at the time in question, evidence as to the noise caused by the operation of an automobile on the occasion of an accident, supplemented by evidence that the particular machine when running at a high rate of speed usually made practically no noise, making much more noise when running at low speed, has been held to be too indirect, and therefore inadmissible upon the question of the speed of the machine at the time of an accident.[4]

§ 631. Condition of Brakes.—The fact that the brakes of an automobile were defective undoubtedly is a material element in the determination of the question of negligence or contributory negligence, in a case involving a collision with or by such machine; at least, where the driver knew, or should by the exercise of proper care have known, of the defect.[5] Evidence that the brakes on an automobile involved in a collision were defective is generally admissible at the trial.[6] It should be noted, however, that liability for an accident involving motor vehicles may not be predicated upon such evidence alone, it being essential to establish some causal relationship between the defective condition of the brakes and the accident.[7]

§ 632. Skidding.—An important, and sometimes decisive, factor in the trial of an automobile accident case is proof of the skidding of a vehicle involved in the accident. While evidence that the car skidded immediately before the accident is admissible,[8] it should be noted that the mere skidding of an automobile is not an occurrence of such an uncommon or unusual character that, unexplained, the jury can say that it furnishes evidence of the driver's negligence.[9] Although in some instances proof may amount to showing an intervening cause which will relieve what would be negligence in other respects, of its character as a proximate cause of the injury and an actionable wrong. In conjunction with such proof, and as explanatory thereof, evidence of the conditions surrounding the accident should be adduced, such as the character of the road, whether slippery or dry,[10] the presence of skid chains,[11] and any pertinent statutory provisions.[12]

---

[18] McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 523, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139.

[19] Schwarting v. Ogram, 123 Neb. 76, 242 N. W. 273, 81 A.L.R. 769.

[20] Evidence of skid marks admissible under certain circumstances. Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 475.

[1] See infra, § 633.

[2] Schwarting v. Ogram, 123 Neb. 76, 242 N. W. 273, 81 A.L.R. 769; Pease v. Cochran, 42 S. D. 130, 173 N. W. 158, 5 A.L.R. 936.

[3] Schwarting v. Ogram, 123 Neb. 76, 242 N. W. 273, 81 A.L.R. 769.

Upon the question of liability for frightening a horse by the excessive speed at which an automobile was driven, evidence is not admissible of the speed at which the car was driven some time before the accident and before it stopped to await its turn to cross a bridge, before meeting the frightened horse, if there is nothing to show its speed after it crossed the bridge, when it was first seen by the horse. Pease v. Cochran, 42 S. D. 130, 173 N. W. 158, 5 A.L.R. 936.

[4] Annotation: 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1131.

[5] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1339.

[6] Allen v. Schultz, 107 Wash. 393, 181 P. 916, 6 A.L.R. 676; Puhr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 171 Wis. 154, 176 N. W. 767, 14 A.L.R. 1334.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1339, s. 63 A.L.R. 403.

[7] Landry v. Hubert, 101 Vt. 111, 141 A. 593, 63 A.L.R. 396.

The jury must determine whether or not one discovering that the brakes of an automobile, which he had taken upon a public highway were not working properly was negligent in continuing to use the car, so as to be liable for a resulting accident, where the statute makes it negligence to have such a car upon the public highway, whether in motion or at rest.

§ 633. —Tire Tracks and Skid Marks.—Evidence as to tracks or other marks made by motor vehicles on the pavement or roadway is generally admissible in civil actions fcr injury or damage, where the witness testifying had an opportunity to make an observation of the marks before any change had taken place.[13] A proper foundation for the introduction of such evidence should first be laid, however, by showing how soon after the accident the witness observed the markings,[14] his opportunities for accurate observation,[15] and any other factors explanatory of the skid marks or tracks, and the conditions under which they were made.[16] It has been held that the testimony of a witness who saw an automobile collision, and afterwards examined the marks made in the road by one of the cars involved, as to the position of the cars when they collided, was not objectionable as involving an expression of an opinion based on statements of others, or on an assumption of fact.[17]

§ 634. Type, Size, and Weight of Vehicle.—Evidence as to the weight and size of the vehicles involved in the accident is frequently pertinent in connection with proof of negligence. It is the present tendency to increase the size and weight of motor vehicles used on the highways. Drivers of these vehicles have knowledge of their width and length; and, as they owe other travelers on the highway the duty to take these elements into consideration in the operation of their vehicles,[18] it is clear that the size and weight of such vehicles may become important factors in determining questions of negligence and contributory negligence in cases arising from collisions.[19]

§ 635. Physical Defect or Illness.—Evidence of any physical defect or illness existing at the time of the accident, upon the part of either the motorist or pedestrian, is admissible at the trial.[20] Respecting the motorist, such evidence is pertinent upon the issue as to whether due care was exercised in the operation of the vehicle while he was so disabled or affected, and to what extent, if any, such factor contributed to the accident.[1] Similarly as to the pedestrian, proof of a physical defect or illness is relevant to the question of the proper degree of care and caution required under the circumstances existing at the time of the accident,[2] as well as to the corresponding degree of care exacted of the motorist.[3]

---

[8] Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582; Nordby v. Sorlie, 35 N. D. 395, 160 N. W. 70, L.R.A.1917B, 753; Linden v. Miller, 172 Wis. 20, 177 N. W. 909, 12 A.L.R. 665.
Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 264.

[9] See supra, § 610.

[10] Lambert v. Eastern Massachusetts Street R. Co. 240 Mass. 495, 134 N. E. 340, 22 A.L.R. 1291.

[11] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 268.

[12] Any statutory provisions relating to skidding should be consulted. Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 268.
See also section immediately following.

[13] Alaga Coach Line v. McCarroll, 227 Ala. 686, 151 So. 834, 92 A.L.R. 470; Lange v. Affleck, 160 Md. 695, 155 A. 150, 79 A.L.R. 1274; Opecello v. Meads, 152 Md. 29, 135 A. 488, 50 A.L.R. 1385; Carson v. Turrish, 140 Minn. 445, 168 N. W. 349, L.R.A.1918F, 154.
Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 475.

[14] Carson v. Turrish, 140 Minn. 445, 168 N. W. 349, L.R.A.1918F, 154 (testimony as to observation of wheel marks made morning after accident held admissible).

[15] Opecello v. Meads, 152 Md. 29, 135 A. 488, 50 A.L.R. 1385.

[16] Lange v. Affleck, 160 Md. 695, 155 A. 150, 79 A.L.R. 1274.

[17] Lange v. Affleck, 160 Md. 695, 155 A. 150, 79 A.L.R. 1274.

[18] Annotation: 85 A.L.R. 1173.
See supra, § 258.

[19] Baldwin v. Bell [1933] (Can.) S. C. R. 1, 85 A.L.R. 1166.
Annotation: 85 A.L.R. 1173.

c. STATEMENTS, ADMISSIONS, AND DECLARATIONS

§ 636. Generally.—Trials of actions involving automobile accidents call for frequent applications of the broad general principle of evidence excluding extrajudicial declarations and statements and the various exceptions thereto,[4] such as the exception which admits statements or exclamations uttered by those involved in an accident, and contemporaneous therewith, under the res gestæ doctrine.[5] Mere statements of an occupant of an automobile which collided with another automobile as to both parties being at fault are inadmissible in an action by another occupant.[6] Admissions made by one of the parties involved may be used against him.[7] Such admissions may be shown in evidence without laying a foundation in the nature of impeachment.[8] Evidence that, immediately after an automobile collision said to have been caused by the defendant's car, the defendant transferred all of his real estate is admissible on the theory of an admission.[9] However, an admission by one injured in a collision with an automobile, that the accident was his own fault, is susceptible of explanation.[10]

§ 637. Admissions by Silence.—Evidence of conversations between the driver of an automobile and his guests therein concerning the necessity of hurrying to get to their common destination, and that there was no fear on the part of anyone about the manner in which the car was being driven or operated, shows a clear acquiescence on the part of all concerning the rate of speed at which the car was being driven at the time of an accident resulting in the death of one of the guests and injuries to another.[10a] The rule that a statement made in the hearing of another in regard to facts affecting his rights, to which he makes no reply, may be taken as a tacit admission of the facts stated, where he hears and understands the statement, comprehends its bearing, and has an opportunity to act freely,[11] has been applied in a number of cases where a person involved in an automobile accident remained silent in the face of statements made by another in his presence regarding the circumstances of the accident.[12]

---

[20] Wilson v. Bittner, 129 Or. 122, 276 P. 268, 64 A.L.R. 132.
Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 136.

[1] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 136.

[2] See supra, § 617.

[3] Meyers v. Tri-State Auto Co. 121 Minn. 68, 140 N. W. 184, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113; Wilson v. Bittner, 129 Or. 122, 276 P. 268, 64 A.L.R. 132.

[4] See EVIDENCE [Also ADMISSIONS AND DECLARATIONS, 1 R. C. L. p. 462].

[5] See infra, § 639.

[6] Lowery v. Jones, 219 Ala. 201, 121 So. 704, 64 A.L.R. 553.

[7] In Voegeli v. Waterbury Yellow Cab Co. 111 Conn. 407, 150 A. 303, 69 A.L.R. 902, it is held that evidence of a person injured in a collision between the automobile in which he was riding and a taxicab, that the manager of the taxicab company called upon him shortly after the accident, discussed it with him, and admitted that the defendant company owned the cab that was in the accident, is properly admitted in an action for damages occasioned by such collision.

Rejection of evidence of defendant as to admissions with respect to his method of driving, in an action to hold him liable for injury to a passenger by the overturning of an automobile, is nonprejudicial where he had already denied the facts assumed in the question, and the persons to whom the admission was alleged to have been made were not questioned with regard to it. Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

[8] Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

[9] Harmon v. Haas, 61 N. D. 772, 241 N. W 70, 80 A.L.R. 1131.

The fact that shortly after the accident deeds were placed on record from the defendant to his children is admissible to prove consciousness of liability and an intention to evade payment. Cusick v. Miller, 102 Kan. 663, 171 P. 599, L.R.A.1918D, 1086.

[10] Marton v. Pickrell, 112 Wash. 117, 191 P. 1101, 17 A.L.R. 68.

[10a] Olson v. Hermansen, 196 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A.L.R. 1243.

However, to render any such statements admissible upon the ground that silence amounts to an admission of the truth, they must have been made under such circumstances as to call for a reply.[13] Other elements of the rule are that the truth of the facts embracing the statement must be within the knowledge of the person against whose interest the statement is made, and that the statement must be made under such circumstances and by such persons as naturally to call for a reply, if he does not intend to admit what is said.[14] But where such conditions remain unsatisfied, the rule does not apply.[15] Thus, statements in regard to the circumstances of an automobile accident made by a stranger to a member of the highway police, in the physical presence of the person injured, cannot be taken as admissible against the latter upon the ground that his silence amounts to admission, where the situation is one of confusion and traffic congestion, and he is suffering severely from shock and injury.[16] It has been held that the conduct of the defendant's chauffeur after an accident was not relevant unless it was a part of the res gestæ.[17]

§ 638. Of Agent.—In accordance with the general rule that admissions or declarations of an agent with respect to an act, made after its occurrence, are not provable against the principal,[18] it has been held that statements by a servant or agent pertaining to an automobile accident in which he was a participant, and which were made after the occurrence, are not properly considered in determining the liability of the principal, or owner of the vehicle.[19] To be admissible, the agent's declaration must be spontaneous and sufficiently contemporaneous with the time and place of accident to bring it within the res gestæ doctrine.[20] Where both the driver and the owner of the automobile involved in the accident are joined as defendants in the action, the court should instruct the jury that such admissions or declarations so admitted in evidence should be considered only in determining the liability of the defendant actually causing the injuries or damages, and not in determining the liability of the defendant constructively liable for the fault or negligence of the other defendant.[1]

---

[11] See Evidence [Also Admissions and Declarations, 1 R. C. L. p. 478, § 15].

[12] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 1391.

[13] Gerulis v. Viens, 130 Me. 378, 156 A. 378, 76 A.L.R. 1387.

Uncontradicted statements made by a companion or relative of the defendant or the person injured, by a stranger, or even by the injured person, to the adversary or the latter's representative, when made under the conditions stated, have been regarded as admissions. Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 1394–1397.

[14] See Evidence [Also Admissions and Declarations, 1 R. C. L. p. 478, § 15].

[15] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 1392.

[16] Gerulis v. Viens, 130 Me. 378, 156 A. 378, 76 A.L.R. 1387.

[17] Minor v. Stevens, 65 Wash. 423, 118 P. 313, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178.

[18] See Evidence [Also Admissions and Declarations, 1 R. C. L. p. 510].

[19] Broderick v. Barry, 212 Iowa, 672, 237 N. W. 481, 75 A.L.R. 1530. Failure of the court to restrict the application of testimony in negligence action against the driver and owners of an automobile, where a statute made the owners liable for the driver's negligence, as to a statement not part of the res gestæ, made by the driver, to the question of the driver's personal liability is erroneous.

See Illinois C. R. Co. v. Houchins, 121 Ky. 526, 89 S. W. 530, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 375, 123 Am. St. Rep. 205; State ex rel. Vesper-Buick Auto. Co. v. Daues, 323 Mo. 388, 19 S. W. (2d) 700, 67 A.L.R. 157.

Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 1534.

Statements by the driver of an automobile, made at the police station at least an hour after the accident, that he was employed by an automobile company as a mechanic, that he received a commission on cars sold, and that he had the car in question out for demonstration and was on his way to his employer's place of business when the accident occurred, were not made while engaged in the performance of any duty or service to his employer, so as to make such declarations admissible in an action against the employer. State ex rel. Vesper-Buick Auto. Co. v. Daues, 323 Mo. 388, 19 S. W. (2d) 700, 67 A.L.R. 157.

[20] See infra, §§ 639, 641.

§ 639. Statements and Declarations Forming Part of Res Gestæ.—Under the broad rule that statements or exclamations uttered by those involved in an accident, which are contemporaneous with, and a part of, the occurrence, and are made under such circumstances as indicate their spontaneous character, may in a proper case become admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ,[2] it is generally held that any statements of a motorist or other person involved in an automobile accident, made spontaneously at or near the time and place of such accident, are properly received in evidence.[3] The same requirements apply to statements made under other circumstances, and which are sought to be admitted under the res gestæ rule.[4] Statements which are expressions of opinion rather than statements of facts, even though sufficiently spontaneous, and made near enough to the time and place of the accident, to satisfy the requirements of the res gestæ rule, are not admissible.[5] The relaxation of the hearsay rule so as to admit spontaneous contemporaneous statements as part of the res gestæ does not extend to expressions of opinion or statements about the accident which do not serve in some way to elucidate, clarify, or explain the occurrence.[6]

§ 640. —By Nondriving Occupants.—In some instances, statements made by nondriving occupants of cars involved in a collision, such as an exclamation as to the speed at which another car is approaching, may become admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ, it must appear, however, that the statement or exclamation offered was a spontaneous one, proceeding from impulse consequent upon the natural impression made by the acts of the parties in controversy, and in many instances declarations of such person have been excluded.[7]

§ 641. —By Driver.—Statements of the driver of an automobile directly involved in an accident, explanatory of his conduct or of other facts and circumstances surrounding the accident, whether they relate to the speed of the vehicle at the time of the accident, a defect in brakes, or other matters relevant to the issue, spontaneously made at or near the time and place of the accident, are generally held admissible against the employer as a part of the res gestæ.[8]

The rulings as to admissibility, in the cases in which drivers' statements have been regarded as part of the res gestæ as against principals or employers, presuppose that the driver had authority to make the statement, or at least that he was authorized to drive the car at the time and place of the accident.[9] Mere statements of opinion, however, are not admissible. Thus, a statement by a driver of an automobile that it was a good thing that he had run off the highway, or he would have had a head-on collision, is, even if sufficiently coincident in time and place with the accident to satisfy the requirements of the res gestæ rule, inadmissible as part of the res gestæ.[10]

---

[1] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 1534.

[2] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 974, §§ 157 et seq.]

[3] State ex rel. Vesper-Buick Auto. Co. v. Daues, 323 Mo. 388, 19 S. W. (2d) 700, 67 A.L.R. 157; Batchelor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 196 N. C. 84, 144 S. E. 542, 60 A.L.R. 1091.

Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 1121.

[4] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 170; 76 A.L.R. 1121.

[5] Field v. North Coast Transp. Co. 164 Wash. 123, 2 P. (2d) 672, 76 A.L.R. 1114.

[6] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 977, § 160].

[7] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 1128.

[8] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 1122, 1123.

[9] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 1122.

§ 642. —By Bystanders or Occupants of Other Cars.—The mere fact that a declaration, otherwise admissible under the rule of res gestæ, was made by one not an actor or participant in the accident, will not necessarily operate to exclude it. Involuntary spontaneous exclamations or statements of a bystander who observed an automobile accident, which are sufficiently coincident in time and place, may be admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ.[11] Thus, a bystander's remark to a driver, immediately after an accident, that he did not blow his horn, was held properly admissible as part of the res gestæ.[12] The statement made must, however, be something more than a mere expression of opinion. For example, a statement made to the driver of an automobile which collided with another car, immediately after the accident, criticizing the manner in which the car was driven, even if made sufficiently near the time and place, and sufficiently spontaneous, to satisfy the requirements of the res gestæ rule, is not admissible.[13]

5. TESTS AND EXPERIMENTS; PHOTOGRAPHS, MAPS, ETC.

§ 643. Generally.—In accordance with the broad rule that it is within the discretion of the trial court to admit any testimony relating to experiments, or similar occurrences, provided the conditions are substantially the same,[14] it has been held proper in some instances to show the results of tests or experiments made upon a vehicle involved in a collision.[15] The admissibility of experimental evidence rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.[16] If the essential conditions under which the experiment or observation is made are substantially the same as those surrounding the actual occurrence which is being investigated, any departure or minor variation goes to the weight rather than the admissibility of the evidence.[17]

§ 644. Distance within Which Car Can Be Stopped.—Testimony showing tests and experiments as to the distance within which an automobile of the type involved in the accident could be stopped, when traveling at various rates of speed, has been admitted, when such tests were shown to have been made under proper circumstances.[18]

---

[10] Field v. North Coast Transp. Co. 164 Wash. 123, 2 P. (2d) 672, 76 A.L.R. 1114.

[11] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 1129; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 133; 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 917.

In an action for damages for the killing of a pedestrian walking upon a public highway at night, it was held that testimony of one who was his companion at the time of the accident, to the effect that deceased kept warning him to keep off the paved portion of the highway, is admissible. Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

[12] Annotation: 76 A.L.R. 1129.

[13] Field v. North Coast Transp. Co. 164 Wash. 123, 2 P. (2d) 672, 76 A.L.R. 1114.

[14] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 1001, §§ 188-190].

[15] Ragan v. MacGill, 134 Or. 408, 292 P. 1094, 72 A.L.R. 860. The testimony of a traffic officer as a witness for plaintiff, who was injured in an automobile accident, that within about an hour and a half after the accident he went to the place of the accident and tested the brakes, that in making the test he drove the car at the rate of 25 miles an hour and applied the brakes, and stopped the car at a distance of about 8 feet, and that the brakes held evenly, is admissible, there having been no change in the condition of the brakes in the meantime.

Oral evidence as to the conditions of visibility most probably existing at the time and place of the accident, as indicated by the results of tests and experiments made subsequent thereto, is admissible where there has been a reasonably accurate reproduction of the conditions that prevailed at the time of the occurrence.

Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 866.

[16] Washington v. Seattle, 170 Wash. 371, 16 P. (2d) 597, 86 A.L.R. 113.

There is no abuse of discretion on the part of the court in excluding testimony as to an experiment made by a witness to show in what time he could stop an automobile going at a given speed, at the place where it was claimed the accident occurred. Annotation: 8 A.L.R. 33.

[17] Annotation: 8 A.L.R. 26 et seq.

The variation of the conditions of the experiment from those of the occurrence must not extend to a point where it is liable to confuse or mislead the jury. Kohlhagen v. Cardwell, 93 Or. 610, 184 P. 261, 8 A.L.R. 11.

§ 645. Photographs, Maps, and Diagrams.—The general rule that photographs are admissible in evidence when they appear to have been accurately taken and are proved to be a clear representation of the subject, which cannot itself be produced, and of such nature as to throw light upon a disputed point,[19] applies in automobile accident cases.[20] Photographs should, of course, be proved to have been taken at or near the time of the occurrence of the event in aid of which it is offered, and before there has been any change in the condition or position of affairs.[1] Thus, in an action based upon the operation of an automobile at an alleged improper speed at a street intersection, a photograph of the place where the accident occurred, which is a fair representation of the general conditions, is admissible.[2] A photograph of the scene of an automobile accident, which is obscure and indefinite in its details, and was taken when the foliage, shrubbery, and lighting conditions were different from those existing at the time of the accident, is not admissible.[3] Nor are photographs admissible that were taken at the instance of the witness to show his recollection of the location of the moving automobiles involved in the accident.[4] And a number of courts have looked with disfavor upon the admission of photographs of an attempted reproduction of the scene of an accident, showing the position according to the theory or contention of the party offering them, as recalled by his witnesses, of movable or moving objects.[5] Other cases, however, permit the introduction of posed photographs based upon a recollection as to the position of moving objects when proper foundation has been laid by preliminary testimony showing that the objects and situations portrayed are faithfully represented as to position.[6] Whether a photograph is sufficiently verified is a preliminary question of fact to be determined by the trial judge.[7]

It is also a well-established rule that diagrams and maps illustrating the scene of an accident and the relative location of objects, if proved to be correct, are admissible in evidence to enable the jury to understand and apply the established facts to the particular case, and to illustrate the position of the automobile involved.[8]

6. Opinion Evidence

§ 646. Generally.—The fundamental principle of the law of evidence, that a witness must state facts and not opinions or conclusions, is as fully applicable to automobile accident cases as to any other kind of action.[9] This rule precludes one from testifying that he did his best and all that could be done to avoid an accident,[10] or that the occupant of a car showed signs of fright when she saw the defendant's car,[1] or from giving an opinion that the condition of a wheel of a motor truck was such that defects therein could have been discovered by reasonable inspection.[2] Testimony that at the time of an accident an automobile driver was careful or negligent is a mere conclusion of the witness, and not admissible.[3] Opinion evidence in its proper sense is admissible only under some exception to the general law of evidence,[4] although of necessity testimony must at times be compounded of fact and opinion.[5] Moreover, it is often difficult to distinguish in the testimony of a witness facts within his knowledge or observation from his opinions on facts. A question propounded to the owner of the automobile which struck the plaintiff as to whether the car was being used in connection with his business is not objectionable as calling for a conclusion from the witness,[6] and a witness may testify as to the method by which defects in the wheel of a motor truck could be ascertained.[7]

---

[18] Ragan v. MacGill, 134 Or. 408, 292 P. 1094, 72 A.L.R. 860.
Annotation: 72 A.L.R. 865.

[19] See Evidence [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 1153, § 356].

[20] Annotation: 55 A.L.R. 1343.

[1] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 1676, § 2314.

[2] Washington v. Seattle, 170 Wash. 371, 16 P. (2d) 597, 86 A.L.R. 113.

[3] Snibbe v. Robinson (Surratt v. Robinson) 151 Md. 658, 135 A. 838, 50 A.L.R. 280.

[4] Nunnelley v. Muth, 195 Ky. 352, 242 S. W. 622, 27 A.L.R. 910.

[5] Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 913.

[6] Annotation: 27 A.L.R. 916.

[7] McKarren v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 194 Mass. 179, 80 N. E. 477, 10 Ann. Cas. 961.

[8] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, p. 1675, § 2313.
For general discussion, see Evidence [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 1153, §§ 355, 356].

[9] Demarais v. Johnson, 90 Mont. 366, 3 P. (2d) 283, 77 A.L.R. 553.

§ 647. Limitations upon General Rule.—Of necessity, testimony must at times be compounded of facts and opinions, and exceptions to the general rule that witnesses must testify to facts have been found to be necessary to the due administration of justice. It must be noted also that a witness may testify directly to a composite fact though in a sense his testimony may be the result of his conclusions from other facts, and may, where it is not practicable to place before the jury all the primary facts on which they are founded, state his opinion formed from such facts.[8] Testimony that an automobile, when struck by one car, was headed right into another car, is a conclusion of fact which the driver of the automobile is permitted to give.[9] Also, a witness who saw an automobile collision, and afterwards examined the marks made in the road by one of the cars involved, may testify as to the position of the cars when they collided.[10] Opinion evidence is not as a rule admissible when facts can be reproduced before the jury so as to show the conditions upon which the opinion is desired.[11]

Expert witnesses who have skill, learning, or experience in a particular science or trade may give an opinion in a proper case upon a given state of facts relating thereto.[12] Nor is the giving of opinion evidence limited to experts; in matters more within the common observation and experience of men, nonexperts may, in cases where it is not practicable to place before the jury all the primary facts upon which they are founded, state their opinions from such facts, where such opinions involve conclusions material to the subject of inquiry.[13]

As in other kinds of actions, the proper method of securing the opinion of a properly qualified expert witness is by hypothetical questions based upon facts assumed to have been proved at the trial, though no such question is necessary if the witness is personally acquainted with the material facts of the case.[14]

---

[10] State v. Campbell, 82 Conn. 671, 74 A. 927, 135 Am. St. Rep. 293, 18 Ann. Cas. 236.

[1] Flynn v. Lewis, 231 Mass. 550, 121 N. E. 493, 2 A.L.R. 896.

[2] Demarais v. Johnson, 90 Mont. 366, 3 P. (2d) 283, 77 A.L.R. 553.

[3] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 1117.

[4] See Evidence [Also Expert and Opinion Evidence, 11 R. C. L. p. 564, § 3].

[5] See infra, § 647.

[6] Brown v. Woolverton, 219 Ala. 112, 121 So 404, 64 A.L.R. 640.

[7] Demarais v. Johnson, 90 Mont. 366, 3 P. (2d) 283, 77 A.L.R. 553.

[8] See Evidence [Also Expert and Opinion Testimony, 11 R. C. L. pp. 568, 571, §§ 5, 6]. One injured in an automobile collision may testify that he is not able to work and has suffered pain since the accident. Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174.

[9] Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174.

[10] Lange v. Affleck, 160 Md. 695, 155 A. 150, 79 A.L.R. 1274.

[11] McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 523, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139.

[12] See infra, § 648.

[13] See Evidence [Also Expert and Opinion Evidence, 11 R. C. L. p. 568, § 5].

§ 648. Expert Opinion.—As in other civil actions,[15] a witness in an automobile accident case, who possesses special skill or knowledge of the subject-matter, may state an opinion, where the facts are such that inexperienced persons are likely to prove incapable of forming a correct judgment without the assistance of such opinion.[16] The question whether admission of an opinion of an expert is proper, and whether he is qualified,[17] and the determination of the competency or incompetency of nonexpert opinion evidence, rest largely in the judicial discretion of the trial judge.[18] The necessity for opinion evidence exists only where the facts in controversy are incapable of being detailed and described so as to give the jury an intelligible understanding concerning them.[19] An expert may give his opinion when the facts upon which it is based are within his own knowledge, but if they are in issue he may only state his opinion hypothetically.[20]

§ 649. Matters as to Which Opinion May Be Given.—Broadly speaking, expert opinion is admissible if the inquiry involves a question of science, art, mechanical skill, etc., while nonexperts may state their opinions as to matters of common observation or where it is not practicable to place all the primary facts before the jury.[21] It is generally held that any intelligent person who has had opportunity for adequate observation may be permitted to give an opinion as to the rate of speed at which an automobile was traveling at a particular time.[1] After a proper showing of the conditions existing at the time of an automobile collision, properly qualified witnesses may testify as to the distance in which a given car can be stopped,[2] and one familiar with automobiles and their operation may testify as to wheel marks found on the pavement after the accident, and give his opinion as an expert as to what they indicated as to the movements of the defendant's car.[3] One giving special attention to tracking automobiles by their tires may give his opinion as to the identity of an automobile which he tracked.[4] But an expert witness cannot give his opinion that an injury was inflicted in a certain manner, if the manner in which it was inflicted, or its extent, is controverted.[5]

Witnesses should not be permitted to testify that the lights on an automobile complied with the state law when they admit that they do not know the requirements of that law, or disclose a want of knowledge on the subject.[5a]

§ 650. —As to Care Exercised.—The cases are generally agreed that direct testimony as to whether, at the time of an accident, an automobile driver was careful or otherwise, is inadmissible.[6] It is improper to receive in evidence any direct characterizations respecting the care, or lack of care, of a person involved in an automobile accident, whether it be the driver of the vehicle or a pedestrian. Descriptions of a person's conduct as "careless," "proper," or "safe and cautious," are improperly admitted.[7] The reason uniformly assigned for the exclusion of such testimony is that it invades the province of the jury. It is for the witness to the automobile accident to state the facts and circumstances surrounding the occurrence as he observed them, and then leave it to the jury to draw such inferences therefrom as it deems warranted by the evidence.[8] However, in an action to hold the host liable for an injury to a guest, where the rule is that a guest accepts whatever risks attend the degree of proficiency of such driver and his usual and customary habits of driving,[9] testimony that the host, who was driving, handled the car as he usually did, and that he was not to be blamed for the manner in which he drove, is proper.[10]

---

[14] McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 523, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139.

[15] See EVIDENCE [Also EXPERT AND OPINION EVIDENCE, 11 R. C. L. p. 572, § 7].

[16] Demarais v. Johnson, 90 Mont. 366, 3 P. (2d) 283, 77 A.L.R. 553.

[17] McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 523, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139.

[18] Wolfe v. Ives, 83 Conn. 174, 76 A. 526, 19 Ann. Cas. 752.

[19] Demarais v. Johnson, 90 Mont. 366, 3 P. (2d) 283, 77 A.L.R. 553.

[20] McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 523, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139.

[21] See EVIDENCE [Also EXPERT AND OPINION EVIDENCE, 11 R. C. L. p. 590, §§ 19 et seq.]

[1] See infra, § 651.

[2] Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174; Elmendorf v. Clark, 143 La. 971, 79 So. 557, L.R.A.1918F, 802.
Annotation: 8 A.L.R. 33.

[3] Carson v. Turrish, 140 Minn. 445, 168 N. W. 349, L.R.A.1918F, 154.

[4] Ibid.

[5] McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 523, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139.

[5a] Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Loesch, 215 Ky. 452, 284 S. W. 1097, 47 A.L.R. 347.

The cases are not in agreement as to whether a witness may be allowed to testify as to whether there was anything the driver of an automobile should have done that he did not do to avoid an accident; some cases allow [11] and others reject such testimony.[12] The driver of an automobile may properly be permitted to testify that he knew of nothing he could have done that he did not do to avoid hitting a child, where the evidence for the defense tended to show that the child was hidden from sight by a car backing from a driveway, and ran suddenly out as the defendant was passing, and too close to enable him to avoid the accident.[13]

§ 651. —As to Speed.—Under the prevailing rule that any person, not necessarily an expert, or possessed of any particular qualifications, who has had an opportunity for adequate observation, is competent to testify as to the rate of speed of a moving object,[14] it is generally held that one of reasonable intelligence and ordinary experience in life is presumed to be capable, without proof of further qualification, to express an opinion as to how fast an automobile which came under his observation was going at a particular time.[15] A bystander, not possessed of technical or scientific knowledge, may give his opinion as to the speed of an automobile which ran down and injured a person in the highway.[16] The fact that the witness had not owned or operated an automobile does not preclude him from so testifying.[17]

---

[6] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 1117.

[7] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 1117.

[8] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 1118.

[9] See supra, § 236.

[10] Olson v. Hermansen, 195 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A.L.R. 1243.

[11] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 1117, 1119.

An adequate foundation is laid for asking one who was riding in an automobile which struck a child whether anything might have been done which was not done to avoid hitting the child, where the witness had described the manner in which defendant was driving, his control of the car, the surrounding circumstances, and the suddenness with which the child appeared in the road, and also had testified to his own familiarity with the operation of an automobile. Merrihew v. Goodspeed, 102 Vt. 206, 147 A. 346, 66 A.L.R. 1109.

[12] Annotation: 66 A.L.R. 1119.

[13] Merrihew v. Goodspeed, 102 Vt. 206, 147 A. 346, 66 A.L.R. 1109.

[14] See Evidence [Also Expert and Opinion Evidence, 11 R. C. L. 560].

[15] Wolfe v. Ives, 83 Conn. 174, 76 A. 526, 19 Ann. Cas. 752; McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130, 117 Am. St. Rep. 359, 8 Ann. Cas. 1087; Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174; Seager v. Foster, 185 Iowa, 32, 169 N. W. 681, 8 A.L.R. 690; Miller v. Jenness, 84 Kan. 608, 114 P. 1052, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 782; Lewis v. Miller, 119 Neb. 765, 230 S. W. 769, 70 A.L.R. 532; Kelly v. Weaver, 77 Or. 267, 150 P. 166, 151 P. 463, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 611; Dugan v. Arthurs, 230 Pa. 299, 79 A. 626, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 778.

Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 540; L.R.A.1918A, 705; 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 778; 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130; 19 Ann. Cas. 754; Ann. Cas. 1917D, 613.

A witness need not qualify as an expert in order to testify as to the rate of speed at which a vehicle was going, provided he is fully interrogated as to the knowledge on which his judgment is based, so that a jury can determine what weight should be given to his statement. Stehouwer v. Lewis, 249 Mich. 76, 227 N. W. 759, 74 A.L.R. 844.

Police officers, a part of whose business is to apprehend violators of speed ordinances, from observing the movement of vehicles within a given distance when compared with the time required in passing over the intervening space, can very closely estimate the speed of an automobile by seeing it pass. Kelly v. Weaver, 77 Or. 267, 150 P. 166, 151 P. 463, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 611.

The question as to the opportunity of the witness to judge, under the particular circumstances, the speed of an automobile, has been held, as a general rule, to go to the weight of his testimony rather than to its admissibility.[18] Thus, a witness who had shown himself otherwise qualified to give an opinion as to the speed of a moving automobile was permitted to express an opinion on this point, even though the vehicle was moving directly toward him;[19] such fact being viewed as affecting not his competency, but rather the weight to be given his opinion.[20] But where a witness has had no reasonable opportunity to judge the speed of an automobile, it is error to permit him to testify in regard thereto.[1] An estimate of speed may not be based upon the exhaust of the automobile, or the noise made by it as it approached the scene of the accident.[2]

The weight to be given to the testimony of a witness as to the speed of an automobile is a question for the jury,[3] whose exclusive province it is to determine whether or not his means of observation were such as to entitle his testimony to belief.[4] Experts have been allowed to give opinions as to the rate of speed of an automobile, based upon skid marks or other impressions made just before or at the time of the accident in question.[5] Nonexperts have also been allowed to give an opinion as to the speed of a car, based upon an examination of the marks left by it when it skidded, although there is a difference of opinion on this point.[6] In order to be competent to testify, the witness must have had reasonable opportunity to judge the speed of the automobile.[7] But where a witness testifies that he could not judge the rate of speed at which the car in question was moving, he should not be allowed to give an opinion as to whether it was traveling fast or slow.[8] Nor can a witness be permitted to state whether or not one of two automobiles involved in a collision was going faster than the other; he must state the speed of each and permit the jury to make the comparison.[9]

§ 652. —Form of Opinion as to Speed.—An opinion as to the speed of an automobile may be expressed by the witness in various forms. Such characterizations as "fast," "at a high rate of speed,"[10] "going fast," "pretty fast," or "awful fast" have been held proper.[11] But until it is shown that the witness had a reasonable opportunity to judge the speed of an automobile, any such estimates are improperly received in evidence.[12]

---

[16] Kelly v. Weaver, 77 Or. 267, 150 P. 166, 151 P. 463, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 611; Dugan v. Arthurs, 230 Pa. 299, 79 A. 626, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 778.

[17] Hiscock v. Phinney, 81 Wash. 117, 142 P. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1044.

[18] Kelly v. Weaver, 77 Or. 267, 150 P. 166, 151 P. 463, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 611.
Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 543.

[19] Lewis v. Miller, 119 Neb. 765, 230 N. W. 769, 70 A.L.R. 532.
In Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174, it is held that the driver of an automobile, injured in a collision with two other cars, may testify, when he shows himself properly qualified, concerning the speed of the two cars as they approached his car.

[20] Lewis v. Miller, 119 Neb. 765, 230 N. W. 769, 70 A.L.R. 532.

[1] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 547.

[2] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 547.

[3] Lewis v. Miller, 119 Neb. 765, 230 N. W. 769, 70 A.L.R. 532; Hiscock v. Phinney, 81 Wash. 117, 142 P. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1044.

[4] Kelly v. Weaver, 77 Or. 267, 150 P. 166, 151 P. 463, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 611.

[5] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 544.

[6] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 544.

[7] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 547.

[8] Seager v. Foster, 185 Iowa, 32, 169 N. W. 681, 8 A.L.R. 690.

[9] Ibid.

[10] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 542.

[11] Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620, 124 N. W. 527, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 435, 134 Am. St. Rep. 752; Lewis v. Miller, 119 Neb. 765, 230 N. W. 769, 70 A.L.R. 532.
A witness who saw an automobile at the

§ 653. —Condition of Vehicle.—The authorities generally have adhered to the rule that expert opinion as to the condition of an automobile or truck is admissible where the facts are such that the opinion of an expert can be of material assistance to the jury in weighing them.[13] The specific factors upon which the expert may render an opinion in this connection are not circumscribed; such opinion may embrace a wide variety of matters. He may, for example, properly testify that in his opinion the collapse of a wheel of a motor truck was due to loose spokes,[14] or that skid marks on the paving indicated that the brakes of the automobile making the same were holding on one side only,[15] or as to whether a steering gear was defective.[16] The rule governing the admissibility of expert opinion evidence as to the condition of a motor vehicle, not unlike the broad rules applicable to other situations on the same point,[17] indicates the standard by which the qualifications of an expert shall be determined. If the expert is to be of any assistance to the jury, it must be because he has acquired a special knowledge of the subject-matter, either by study of the recognized authorities or by practical experience.[18] Where it appears that a witness knows practically nothing about the mechanical construction of a car, it is error to permit him to state that a car is defective.[19] In the case of nonexpert or lay witnesses, the necessity or exigency of the occasion may render opinion evidence admissible, notwithstanding the fact that its admission involves a departure from the rule that conclusions from evidential facts are to be drawn by the jury; such testimony may be admissible also under the rule that a witness may give his testimony in the form of an opinion, where he cannot adequately present the facts in any other manner.[20] But an opinion of a witness that the condition of a wheel of a motor vehicle was such that defects therein could have been discovered by reasonable inspection is incompetent as invading the province of the jury.[1]

7. Weight and Sufficiency; Degree of Proof

§ 654. Generally.—Throughout this article it has been necessary, for a full understanding of various particular matters, to discuss the weight, effect, and sufficiency of evidence relative thereto. The purpose at this point is to discuss the general principles which govern the weight and sufficiency of evidence in automobile accident cases, giving illustrations of the application of these general principles to particular facts. No attempt is made to give exhaustive reference to the many cases in which the reviewing courts considering the weight and sufficiency of evidence have sustained the findings of the jury.

---

time of the accident in which it was involved may testify as to whether it was going fast or slow, even though the terms "fast" and "slow" are relative. The precise meaning of the witness may be drawn out on cross-examination. Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 548.

[12] Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537, 31 Am. Rep. 321.
Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 546; 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 42.

[13] Demarais v. Johnson, 90 Mont. 366, 3 P. (2d) 283, 77 A.L.R. 553; Ragan v. MacGill, 134 Or. 408, 292 P. 1094, 72 A.L.R. 860.
Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 559.

[14] Demarais v. Johnson, 90 Mont. 366, 3 P. (2d) 283, 77 A.L.R. 553.

[15] Ragan v. MacGill, 134 Or. 408, 292 P. 1094, 72 A.L.R. 860.

[16] Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 562.

[17] See Evidence [Also Expert and Opinion Evidence, 11 R. C. L. pp. 574 et seq.].

[18] Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 562.

[19] Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 563.

[20] Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 564.

[1] Demarais v. Johnson, 90 Mont. 366, 3 P. (2d) 283, 77 A.L.R. 553.
Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 565.

The weight which will be given to any evidence depends, of course, upon its reliability. This is a matter for the jury to pass upon, though its competency or admissibility is a question of law for the court.[2]

It is not absolutely essential in automobile cases that there be proof of an accident by eyewitnesses.[3]

Testimony that attempts to establish something physically impossible, or something utterly inconsistent with physical facts of nature within the knowledge of common experience, must be disregarded.[4]

However, evidence of witnesses contradicting infallible physical facts cannot be accepted.[5] As in other cases, proof as to any particular fact may be direct or circumstantial,[6] and may be negative in character as well as positive.[7] The mere number of witnesses who may support the claim of one of the parties to an action is not to be taken as the basis for solving disputed facts,[8] although in automobile cases as in other cases where the evidence is conflicting, some consideration should be given to the numerical preponderance of witnesses.

§ 655. Degree of Proof; Preponderance of Evidence.—Preponderance of evidence signifies the degree of proof ordinarily required in civil actions to sustain the burden of any particular case, or of the entire issue.[9]

In actions arising out of automobile accidents the plaintiff must discharge the burden imposed upon him, on making out his case, by proving every material allegation in his declaration, complaint, or petition by a preponderance of the evidence.[10] In automobile accident cases, as in other civil actions, particularly negligence actions,[11] the party who has the affirmative of an issue and the burden of proof[12] must establish such issue by a preponderance of the evidence. Thus, the person alleging that he has sustained an injury through negligence in the operation of an automobile has the burden of establishing, by a preponderance of the evidence, negligence on the part of the defendant,[13] and the burden rests upon the defendant to show the plaintiff's contributory negligence by a preponderance of the evidence.[14] A gratuitous bailee of an automobile, injured by a defect in it, must, in order to hold the bailor liable for the injury, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the bailor had knowledge of the defect.[15]

§ 656. Positive and Negative Testimony.—As in other civil actions, evidence in automobile accident cases is not to be ignored merely because it is negative in character.[16] The testimony of a witness in such cases is not confined to what he saw or heard; he may state what he did not see or hear.[17] Negative testimony by persons who at the time of the accident were awaiting an opportunity to cross a street, that standing automobiles gave no signal before starting, may outweigh the positive testimony of the occupants of the cars that such signals were given.[18] Testimony by occupants of an automobile hit by a railroad car at a crossing that they did not hear any signals given is merely negative, where the evidence shows that none of them was giving any heed to the railroad until the automobile was too close to the track to be stopped.[19]

---

[2] See infra, § 671.

[3] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 1654, § 2286.

[4] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 1665, § 2289.

[5] Lamp v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 305 Pa. 520, 158 A. 269, 84 A.L.R. 1217.

[6] Rodgers v. Saxton, 305 Pa. 479, 158 A. 166, 80 A.L.R. 280; O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

[7] See infra, § 656.

[8] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 1005, § 193].

[9] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 1012, §§ 204 et seq.].

[10] West v. Kern, 88 Or. 247, 171 P. 1050, L.R.A.1918D, 920.

[11] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 1012, § 204]; NEGLIGENCE.

[12] See infra, § 613.

[13] Osborn v. Charbneau, 148 Wash. 359, 268 P. 884, 64 A.L.R. 251.

[14] McCracken v. Curwensville, 309 Pa. 98, 163 A. 217, 86 A.L.R. 1379; Waynick v. Walrond, 155 Va. 400, 154 S. E. 522, 70 A.L.R. 1014.

[15] Johnson v. H. M. Bullard Co. 95 Conn. 251, 111 A. 70, 12 A.L.R. 766.

[16] See EVIDENCE [Also 10 R. C. L. p. 1010, §§ 201–203].

[17] Elias v. Collins, 237 Mich. 175, 211 N. W. 88, 52 A.L.R. 1118; Webber v. Park Auto

§ 657. Sufficiency of Evidence as to Negligence.—The plaintiff must prove negligence of the defendant against whom an action is brought for injuries arising out of an automobile accident by a preponderance of the evidence.[20] It is not negligence per se to use an automobile on a public highway,[21] and the mere fact that one is struck by an automobile on a public street is not sufficient to prove negligence on the part of the driver,[1] unless the circumstances of the accident are sufficient to call into operation the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.[2] The maxim, "res ipsa loquitur," will carry a case to the jury only where the circumstances leave no room for a different presumption from that raised thereby.[3] It is essential that the plaintiff produce proof from which reasonable minds may draw an inference that his injury was due proximately[4] to the negligent manner in which the defendant operated his automobile.[5] It is only necessary, however, to establish a charge of negligence by a preponderance or greater weight of the evidence.[6] Where there is substantial evidence of negligence on the part of the operator of the automobile at the time and place of the injury complained of, the reviewing court will not disturb a finding of negligence, even though it might have arrived at a different conclusion had the question been left to it for determination.[7] A motorist may be found guilty of negligence, notwithstanding his testimony that he did not see or hear the approaching locomotive which struck his automobile and injured his guest, that he was intently watching the

---

Transp. Co. 138 Wash. 325, 244 P. 718, 47 A.L.R. 590.

[18] Richter v. Dahlman & I. Co. 179 Wis. 7, 190 N. W. 841, 30 A.L.R. 747.

[19] Elias v. Collins, 237 Mich. 175, 211 N. W. 88, 52 A.L.R. 1118.

[20] See supra, § 655.

[21] Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 238, 6 Ann. Cas. 656.

[1] Beyrent v. Kaplan, 315 Pa. 353, 172 A. 651, 92 A.L.R. 1515.

[2] See supra, § 607.

[3] Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

[4] See infra, § 659.

[5] Reader v. Ottis, 147 Minn. 335, 180 N. W 117, 16 A.L.R. 463; O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

A jury is not warranted in finding that the defendant in an action for personal injuries resulting from a collision between an automobile driven by him on the proper side of the road and one proceeding in the opposite direction on the wrong side of the road was negligent in not sooner turning to the left side of the road, or in not stopping, where it only became apparent that the other automobile was not going to turn to its proper side of the road when the cars were so near together that at the speed at which they were traveling collision was inevitable. O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

[6] That an automobile traveling at night was being driven at an excessive speed may be established by proof that it struck and killed animals in the road, one of which it threw 57 feet, and then traveled 40 or 50 feet and buried its front end in a bank. Bombard v. Newton, 94 Vt. 354, 111 A. 510, 11 A.L.R. 1402.

[7] McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, 155 P. 437, L.R.A.1916D, 618; Walker v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. 214 Wis. 519, 252 N. W. 721, 92 A.L.R. 680.

Negligence of one driving an automobile at night in not discovering an animal on the road until within 15 feet of it may be found from the fact that his headlights were in good condition and lighted the whole road for a distance of 18 or 20 rods. Bombard v. Newton, 94 Vt. 354, 111 A. 510, 11 A.L.R. 1402.

A finding of negligence on the part of an automobile driver in striking one engaged in directing traffic at a street intersection is warranted by the fact that the person struck was wearing a policeman's cap and badge, had taken his station at the intersection about twenty minutes before, and might have been seen from the approaching car when 150 feet away. Beyrent v. Kaplan, 315 Pa. 353, 172 A. 651, 92 A.L.R. 1515.

highway in front of him, that his vision was obscured by the sun shining in his face, and that he did not see the railway signs as he approached the crossing, where the evidence showed the crossing to be an obstructed grade crossing which a statute made it unlawful to cross at a greater speed than 15 miles per hour, and by his own admission he was traveling at least 30 miles an hour at the time of the accident;[8] upon evidence that on approaching from the rear a car standing on the roadside he did not apply his brakes, traveled 68 feet after striking an occupant of the car, who was attempting to cross the road, turned a right angle, and tore up the turf of the adjoining yard over a space of 2½ feet in circumference;[9] in failing to give adequate warning on a dark and foggy evening to other motorists approaching from the rear, of the presence of his automobile or truck standing on the paved portion of the highway, where there is evidence that the tail light, which was the only warning signal, was obscured by dirt which had accumulated upon it, notwithstanding such evidence was contradicted by testimony that the light was clean and visible;[10] in "stopping" a motor truck on a highway where there is evidence of negligent failure to remove it from the traveled portion of the highway, though the mere bringing it to a halt was not negligence.[11]

The trial court is warranted in finding that defendant's negligence, and not that of the driver of another automobile which collided with his, was the cause of injury to a pedestrian who was struck when defendant's automobile ran up on the sidewalk, where the evidence offered was capable of sustaining the inference that defendant was negligent in attempting to pass in front of the other automobile, or in not stopping after being hit by the other car.[12]

A violation of traffic regulations is prima facie evidence of negligence,[13] and a violation of the statutory rules of the road by one driving an automobile is some evidence of negligence, though not conclusive.[14] However, a finding of negligence on the part of the driver of an automobile that collided with another at a street intersection is warranted by evidence that he was driving in the center of the highway, instead of on the right-hand side, and at a speed in excess of that fixed by statute.[15] Testimony that one driving an automobile at the time of an accident could stop a car going 18 miles an hour in 50 feet does not show that he could stop the car which he was driving within that distance.[16]

§ 658. Sufficiency of Evidence as to Freedom from Contributory Negligence.—If substantial evidence in support of the finding of the plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence at the time and place of an automobile accident is submitted to the jury, their findings on this fact will not be disturbed even though the reviewing court, had the question been left to it for determination, might have arrived at a different conclusion.[17]

---

[8] Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327.

[9] Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507.

[10] Walker v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. 214 Wis. 519, 252 N. W. 721, 92 A.L.R. 680.

[11] Walker v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. 214 Wis. 519, 252 N. W. 721, 92 A.L.R. 680 (holding that a jury may find the driver of a truck left standing on the paved portion of a highway pending repairs to a wheel to have been equally negligent with his employer, where the practicability of removing the truck from the traveled portion of the highway was shown, though the employer could also be considered negligent because another employee did not make repairs as quickly as he might have done).

[12] Linberg v. Stanto, 211 Cal. 771, 297 P. 9, 75 A.L.R. 555.

[13] Rowley v. Cedar Rapids, 203 Iowa, 1245, 212 N. W. 158, 53 A.L.R. 375.

[14] Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967.
See supra, § 654.

[15] Garrett v. Byerly, 155 Wash. 351, 284 P. 343, 68 A.L.R. 254.

[16] Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Dillon, 31 Del. 247, 114 A. 62, 15 A.L.R. 894.

[17] McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, 155 P. 437, L.R.A.1916D, 618.

One may be found to have been in the exercise of due care in crossing a road from a standing automobile, in front of an approaching car, if he had crossed the paved part of the road in safety, and was struck outside of it, and there was ample room for the approaching car to have passed between him and the standing car had such approaching car been under control.[18]

A finding that a motorist injured by running into an excavation across a highway used reasonable diligence is not against the weight of evidence where it appeared that the accident occurred early in the morning while it was dark and misty, that the barrier which he passed 180 feet from the excavation was of a character similar to other local barriers indicating repair spots, that the excavation was unmarked by lights, that his first intimation of its presence was on seeing an excavating machine, when 60 feet from the excavation, on the opposite side thereof, and that he immediately put on his brakes, but on account of the slippery condition of the pavement was unable to bring his car to a stop before reaching the excavation.[19] No inference of contributory negligence on the part of the driver of an automobile can be conclusively drawn from the fact that the car skidded on an icy pavement.[20] The fact that one drove an automobile onto a railroad track in front of a train without excitement, attempt to turn aside, or special effort to apply the brakes, is evidence that he did not see the train.[1]

§ 659. Proof of Causal Connection; Proximate Cause.—It is, of course, necessary that the plaintiff establish that the accident in which he claims to have suffered injury was caused by the defendant's act and not by some other act. However, the inference that plaintiff was struck by defendant's motor vehicle is warranted where there was testimony that she was found lying beneath it, and that there were no other cars in motion in the immediate vicinity.[2] It is necessary also to prove that the defendant failed to exercise care toward the plaintiff—that he was negligent.[3] Furthermore, the plaintiff's evidence must be sufficient to show that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.[4] Notwithstanding proof that the driver of an automobile was negligent at the time of the accident, his negligence may not have been the proximate cause thereof, since under the particular circumstances the accident might have happened even though he drove carefully; or other factors may have had a closer causal relation, or at least have proximately contributed, to the accident.[5] Thus, unless the evidence introduced at the trial is such as will establish defendant's excessive speed as the proximate cause of the accident, no finding of negligence may be made on that ground alone.[6] Nor does the proof of violation of a statute or ordinance in itself establish actionable negligence unless the violation can be shown to have been actually a proximate cause contributing to the injury suffered.[7]

---

[18] Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507.

[19] Martin v. J. A. Mercier Co. 255 Mich. 587, 238 N. W. 181, 78 A.L.R. 520.

[20] McCracken v. Curwensville, 309 Pa. 98, 163 A. 217, 86 A.L.R. 1379.

[1] Puhr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 171 Wis. 154, 176 N. W. 767, 14 A.L.R. 1334.

[2] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963 (holding that there was sufficient evidence to sustain a finding that plaintiff sustained a fracture of the skull through being struck by a motor truck while crossing the street, rather than through slipping or stumbling and falling, notwithstanding there was no mark or bruise on her body, where her companion testified to seeing the truck bearing down upon them, of jumping to save herself, and of hearing a scream, and another witness testified to seeing plaintiff lying underneath the truck).

[3] See supra, § 614.

[4] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 1652, § 2283.

[5] Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 599.

[6] O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597. Excessive speed cannot be said to have necessarily contributed to a collision between an automobile traveling at such speed on its proper side of the highway and a car proceeding in the opposite direction, not on its proper side of the highway.

Proximate cause need not, however, be shown by direct testimony, but may be determined from the circumstances of the case.[8] The act of one driving an automobile in a line of traffic, in looking at an object in a field at the side of the road, may be found to have been the proximate cause of injury to a guest from a collision with a preceding car, from the facts that the preceding car had stopped, and that, while he was so looking, the driver crashed into it.[9]

The stopping of a motor truck on the paved portion of the highway because some of the studs fastening the right rear wheels together had become broken may properly be found to have been the cause of the collision of an automobile therewith some hours later, where there was evidence showing that, notwithstanding its condition, the truck might have been moved to a private driveway 10 rods further on.[10]

Failure to remove dirt from the tail light of a motor truck may be found to have been the proximate cause of the collision of an automobile with it while it was standing upon the paved portion of the highway on a dark and foggy evening, where there was evidence that the tail light, which was the only warning signal, was so obscured that it was not seen by the occupants of the car which collided with the truck until they were within 60 feet of it, though they had observed tail lights of other vehicles 200 or 300 feet away.[11] That an automobile turned over on its left side upon the highway when running 25 or 30 miles an hour is not sufficient to show that the cause of the accident was not its being struck on its left front by a car passing from the rear.[12]

§ 660. Identity of Owner and Authority of Driver.—Where the defendant's car at the time and place of the injury complained of was being operated by another, the plaintiff's evidence must be sufficient to establish liability of the owner for its negligent operation by such other person.[13] However, in many jurisdictions, proof of the defendant's ownership of an automobile constitutes a prima facie case of the driver's agency for the owner.[14] That a taxicab involved in a collision was owned by the defendant and was being operated by its servant is established by testimony of the plaintiff that the car with which he collided had on it the name of the defendant, and that the defendant's manager, shortly after the accident, called on the plaintiff and discussed the matter with him.[15] Where the evidence permitted of the inference that the defendant (a merchant), for business reasons, adopted the practice of having the driver of his delivery automobile take customers and their companions to the customers' homes with packages purchased, it was open to the jury to find that the driver was authorized by the defendant to invite the plaintiff, a companion of a customer, to ride to the customer's house with the packages purchased, and hence to find that the defendant was liable for an injury to the plaintiff resulting proximately from want of reasonable care in driving the car.[16] That a man was acting under his wife's authority in driving her automobile at the time he caused injury with it may be found from the fact that he had general authority to use the car, and that she refrained from testifying that he was not acting under such authority at the time of the injury.[17] The testimony of the owner of an automobile which had been used as a taxicab, and of the driver, that the relation of master and servant had ceased at a specified time because business was discontinued at that time, is not conclusive, if other witnesses testify to employing the taxicab and to seeing it on the stand with the taxi sign on it subsequently to that time.[18] A finding that defendant knew that it was the practice of its truck drivers to use the trucks for the purpose of going to lunch, and never discharged any of them for so doing, is not justified by the statement of defendant's manager, in replying to the question as to whether truck drivers were permitted to take their trucks home to lunch, "No, they are not supposed to, but I guess they do;" such reply being a mere guess or surmise on his part, falling short of being testimony as to the practice.[19] A finding that a truck driver was, at the time when his truck collided with a pedestrian, on his way from a branch store of his employer to the main store, on the business of his employer and in the course of his employment, is not warranted by evidence that the driver, on leaving the branch store either to go immediately to the main store or to his lunch, it being his lunch hour, and his truck being empty, took with him, in violation of his employer's instructions, a fellow employee who wished to go down town, and, upon ascertaining that she was planning to go to a place about 2 miles off his route, turned off from the route to the store and, upon being asked by the fellow employee where he was going, replied that he was going to take her to such place, whereupon she rejoined that he was not, and requested to be let off at the next corner, and he, without replying, kept on up the street to the place of the accident.[20] No abandonment by a truck driver of his declared purpose of taking to a place 2 miles off his route, a fellow employee whom, in violation of instructions, he has permitted to ride with him, so as to render his negligent driving an act in the course of his employment for which his employer is responsible, can be inferred from the fact that, upon learning of his intention, after he had passed the corner where he should have turned in order to continue on the route to his employer's place of business, the fellow employee told him that he should not do so, and requested to be left at the next corner.[1]

---

[7] Milbury v. Turner Center System, 274 Mass. 358, 174 N. E. 471, 73 A.L.R. 1070.

[8] O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

A malignant tumor affecting the lower part of the spine of a person who had been struck in the lower part of the back by an automobile fender may properly be found to have been caused by the accident, where, although medical expert testimony to that effect was contradicted, it appeared that prior to the accident the person injured had been in good health, but about three weeks thereafter began to fail, and continuously lost ground, that about a month after the accident a pain developed in his back, which grew more intense, and a physician testified that the pain was due to the growth of the tumor. Loveless v. Red Top Cab Co. 158 Wash. 474, 291 P. 344, 79 A.L.R. 347.

[9] Silver v. Silver, 108 Conn. 371, 143 A. 240, 65 A.L.R. 943, affirmed in 280 U. S. 117, 74 L. ed. 221, 50 S. Ct. 57, 65 A.L.R. 939.

[10] Walker v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. 214 Wis. 519, 252 N. W. 721, 92 A.L.R. 680.

[11] Ibid.

[12] People v. Benson, 321 Ill. 605, 152 N. E. 514, 46 A.L.R. 1056.

[13] Tice v. Crowder, 119 Kan. 494, 240 P. 964, 42 A.L.R. 893; Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161.

To sustain a recovery for injuries caused by being run down by an automobile owned by the defendant while being operated by another, the plaintiff must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the person in charge of the machine was the defendant's servant and was, at the time of the accident, engaged in the master's business or pleasure with the master's knowledge and direction. Neff v. Brandeis, 91 Neb. 11, 135 N. W. 232, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 933.

[14] See infra, § 662.

An intention on the part of a truck driver to transport a fellow employee riding with him to her destination may be inferred from the fact that he turned off from the route leading to his employer's store, and in response to her question said that he was going to her destination.[2] The jury are warranted in finding that a certain person was driving an automobile at the time of an accident where there is evidence as to declarations made by him shortly after the accident that he was doing so, notwithstanding he and other occupants of the car testified at the trial that another person was driving.[3] The presumption that an automobile was under the control and operation of the owner at the time of an accident was held to be so conclusively overcome as to present no question for the jury, by the uncontradicted evidence that the car was being driven by the owner's son-in-law for his own business purposes, without the owner's knowledge.[4] The inference, arising from proof that defendant was the owner of the automobile which injured the plaintiff, that the driver was acting as the owner's agent, will not support a verdict for plaintiff where the fact of rental of the automobile to the driver is established by uncontradicted evidence of such substantial character as to leave no reasonable doubt.[5]

---

[15] Voegeli v. Waterbury Yellow Cab Co. 111 Conn. 407, 150 A. 303, 69 A.L.R. 902.

[16] Paiewonsky v. Joffe, 101 N. J. L. 521, 129 A. 142, 40 A.L.R. 1335.

[17] Wolf v. Sulik, 93 Conn. 431, 106 A. 443, 4 A.L.R. 356.

[18] Crowell v. Duncan, 145 Va. 489, 134 S. E. 576, 50 A.L.R. 1425.

[19] Hickson v. Walker Co. 110 Conn. 604, 149 A. 400, 68 A.L.R. 1044.

[20] Ibid.

[1] Ibid.

Where there is evidence to justify a finding that the person who had charge of the automobile at the time of the accident was a dealer in automobiles, evidence that such person had put his own registered number plate on the car, coupled with testimony of the owner of the car that he had given it to the dealer for sale, or for the purpose of renting it out, justifies a finding that the dealer was in control of the car for such purposes.[6]

§ 661. Proof of Ownership.—The license number on a motor vehicle is prima facie proof of the ownership thereof in the person whose name appears on the corresponding certificate of registration on file in the proper office.[7] This presumption may, however, be rebutted by competent evidence.[8] The presumption of ownership which arises from proof that the license was in defendant's name is not rebutted by testimony of defendant and his son that the car was licensed in the name of defendant instead of that of his son, the true owner, by mistake.[9] The fact that a manufacturer's license tag was attached to a car raises no inference that the car belonged to, or was under the control of, the manufacturer, where it appears that it was customary to leave such tags on cars sold and taken away by purchasers until such times as the latter could procure licenses for themselves.[10] Nor is the fact that an automobile involved in an accident bore the dealer's plates proof that it was being operated in the dealer's business, where the statute permits use for other than business purposes of vehicles bearing such plates.[11]

§ 662. Prima Facie Case from Proof of Ownership.—The general rule prevailing in the majority of jurisdictions may be stated to be that proof that an automobile causing damage or injuries was owned by the defendant at the time of the accident establishes a prima facie case for the plaintiff; that from such proof an inference arises that at the time of the injury the automobile was in the owner's possession and was being operated by him, or by his servant or agent under circumstances which would render him liable for the conduct of such agent or servant under the doctrine of respondeat superior.[12] As has been aptly pointed out, experience demonstrates that the probabilities are that an automobile involved in an accident was driven by the owner, or by someone for whose negligence he would be responsible, and if, in fact, it was being driven by one for whose acts the owner is not responsible, or by a servant on an unauthorized mission, it is but fair that the defendant, the owner of the car, should be compelled to show such facts affirmatively; they being matters as to which he alone would ordinarily have knowledge.[13] The fact that the person operating the automobile was a member of the owner's family adds to the strength of the presumption that it was being operated for his benefit, especially if the car was kept for family use.[14] The inference arising from ownership of an automobile inflicting an injury, that the driver was acting as the owner's agent, no longer obtains where there is uncontradicted evidence that the driver had rented it from the owner,[15] or when it is overcome by other substantial evidence rebutting such responsibility.[15a]

---

[2] Ibid.

[3] Trice v. Bridgewater, 125 Tex. 75, 81 S. W. (2d) 63, 100 A.L.R. 1014.

[4] Patterson v. Surpless, 107 N. J. L. 305, 151 A. 754, 74 A.L.R. 841.

[5] Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. Co. 136 Or. 1, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944.

[6] Koonovsky v. Quellette, 226 Mass. 474, 116 N. E. 243, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1146.

[7] Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161.
Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1163.

[8] Annotation: Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1164.
In an action for personal injuries caused by the negligent operation of a licensed taxicab, the statement of the ownership thereof in the registry of licenses is not conclusive, but may be rebutted by the person named as owner. Kemp v. Elisha, [1918] 1 K. B. 228, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 730—C. A.

[9] Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161.

[10] Janik v. Ford Motor Co. 180 Mich. 557, 147 N. W. 510, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 294, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 669.

[11] Caswell v. Maplewood Garage, 84 N. H. 241, 149 A. 746, 73 A.L.R. 433.

Many courts take the position that proof of ownership alone, without further proof that the person operating the automobile was in the owner's employ or driving it with his consent, is insufficient to establish prima facie that the owner is liable for the damage caused.[16] Consequently, in conformity with this view, if the jury have no evidence before them from which they can find that the person driving the automobile at the time of the accident was in fact engaged in the defendant's business at that time, or was operating the vehicle with the owner's consent, a verdict in favor of the plaintiff will be set aside.[17] Proof that an automobile involved in an accident bore license plates issued to the defendant, or that it was owned by the defendant, does not require submission to the jury of the question whether it was being operated on defendant's behalf.[18]

§ 663. —When Coupled with Proof that Driver Was Agent of Owner.— Even though mere proof of ownership of the automobile causing an injury may not be sufficient to establish a prima facie case of responsibility for the injury [19] additional proof tending to establish the agency of the driver or that he was acting for the defendant, considered in connection with the proof of the defendant's ownership of the automobile, may establish a prima facie case.[20] Thus, a prima facie case will be established if, in connection with proof of the defendant's ownership of the automobile the negligent operation of which caused the injury to plaintiff, the plaintiff proves that at the time of the accident it was being operated by one regularly employed to drive it.[1] And in several cases it has been held that proof of ownership of the automobile and that it was being operated at the time of the injury by a general employee of the defendant create a prima facie case.[2] Other courts, however, have refused to extend the rule to cases where the proof was merely that a general employee of the defendant was driving the car.[3] These courts take the position that a prima facie case of negligence against the owner is not made out, unless it appears affirmatively that the employee, at the time of the injury, was acting within the scope of his employment; at least, where driving the defendant's automobile was not within the scope of the usual duties of the employee.[4]

---

[12] Rose v. Balfe, 223 N. Y. 481, 119 N. E. 842, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 238; Potts v. Pardee, 220 N. Y. 431, 116 N. E. 78, 8 A.L.R. 785; Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161; West v. Kern, 88 Or. 247, 171 P. 413, 1050, L.R.A.1918D, 920; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 P. 1020, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59.

Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 899, s. 74 A.L.R. 951; 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, s. L.R.A.1918D, 924.

[13] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 903.

The truth and the weight of the explanation offered by the owner, tending to meet and control the prima facie case made out by the plaintiff under a statute making proof of ownership prima facie evidence of responsibility for the driver's negligence, are for the consideration of the jury. Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 956.

[14] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 902.

[15] Judson v. Bee Hive Serv. Co. 136 Or. 1, 294 P. 588, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944.

[15a] Rose v. Balfe, 223 N. Y. 481, 119 N. E. 842, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 238.

[16] Tice v. Crowder, 119 Kan. 494, 240 P. 964, 42 A.L.R. 893; Gardner v. Farnum, 230 Mass. 193, 119 N. E. 666, L.R.A.1918E, 997; Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127; White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 66 A. 525, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 10 Ann. Cas. 731; McFarlane v. Winters, 47 Utah, 598, 155 P. 437, L.R.A. 1916D, 618.

Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 908; 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1091.

[17] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 909.

[18] Caswell v. Maplewood Garage, 84 N. H. 241, 149 A. 746, 73 A.L.R. 433.

[19] See § 662, supra.

§ 664. —As Dependent upon Whether Automobile Is Used for Commercial Purposes or for Pleasure.—In determining what is sufficient to make out a prima facie case against the defendant in an automobile accident case, a distinction is sometimes drawn between cases where the injuries were caused by a pleasure automobile, and those where they were caused by a commercial truck.[5] In the latter case, there is obviously strong reason for assuming that the truck was being used in the owner's business, if at the time of the accident it was carrying or hauling goods ordinarily carried or hauled for the owner; while in the case of a pleasure car there is a likelihood that it was being used by members of the owner's family for their own pleasure, or even by a friend of the owner, or of his family. Upon this distinction the rules governing the proof necessary to establish a prima facie case where the accident was caused by the negligent operation of a commercial truck have been modified in some states.[6] In other words, although mere proof of defendant's ownership of a pleasure vehicle will not raise an inference or create a presumption that the person driving it is the owner's agent sufficient to establish a prima facie case of liability,[7] in the case of injuries by commercial vehicles, a contrary holding prevails, and proof of ownership is viewed as sufficient to create a presumption of liability.[8]

---

[20] West v. Kern, 88 Or. 247, 171 P. 413, 1050, L.R.A.1918D, 920.

Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 913, s. 74 A.L.R. 960; 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, s. L.R.A.1918D, 924.

Ownership of an automobile gives rise to no presumption of liability on the part of the owner for injuries to one struck by the automobile while it was being driven by the owner's son. Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127.

Proof of ownership of the automobile by the defendant, coupled with the fact that it was being driven by a member of his family, with his permission, and, further, that it was purchased and maintained for the use of his family, make a prima facie case of liability. King v. Smythe, 140 Tenn. 227, 204 S. W. 296, L.R.A.1918F, 293.

[1] Guthrie v. Holmes, 272 Mo. 215, 198 S. W. 854, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1123; White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082. Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 915, s. 74 A.L.R. 962.

[2] Stumpf v. Montgomery, 101 Okla. 257, 226 P. 65, 32 A.L.R. 1490.

Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 919, s. 74 A.L.R. 964.

[3] White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082.

[4] White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 102 N. E. 302, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082.

Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 920.

[5] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 921, s. 74 A.L.R. 966.

[6] Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W. 286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127; Guthrie v. Holmes, 272 Mo. 215, 198 S. W. 854, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1123.

[7] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 921.

[8] Hays v. Hogan, 273 Mo. 1, 200 S. W.

G. TRIAL

1. IN GENERAL

§ 665. Generally.—The trial of civil actions for injuries arising out of the operation of motor vehicles is determined by the general rules applicable to the trial of other civil actions;[9] in such actions a right to trial by jury exists, and may be insisted on by either party.[10] In cases where a jury trial is had, it is the distinctive province of the court to decide questions of law as distinguished from questions of fact, and of the jury to try the facts of the case; each party has a right to have issues raised by pleadings, when supported by any competent evidence, submitted to the jury under proper instructions,[11] and if the verdict is one that reasonable men might find, the court should not disturb the decision of fact which the law has confided to the jury.[12] The purpose here is to discuss the particular application of these general principles in the trial of automobile cases.

§ 666. Conduct of Trial.—The general course of procedure in the actual trial of an automobile accident case, such as the right to open and close the order of proof in the introduction of evidence, objections to and motions to strike out evidence, the powers, duties, and conduct of the trial judge, and the conduct and argument of the counsel, is governed by the rules which apply to other civil actions.[13] Thus, if improper testimony is admitted, but no motion is then made to strike it out, the court may properly refuse to do so on the following day after the opposite party has moved for a nonsuit and opened his case to the jury.[14]

It may be stated as the prevailing rule, subject to but few qualifications or exceptions, that the fact that the defendant carries automobile liability insurance cannot, directly or indirectly, be injected into the case by evidence, argument, or remarks, so as to influence the jury, and that the violation of this rule ordinarily constitutes reversible error.[15] Few matters have been so zealously guarded against by the courts as a showing by the plaintiff, through inadvertence or otherwise, of the insurance protection running to the defendant in the action. The assumption, whether well taken or not, that jurors are instinctively prejudiced against insurance companies, particularly in automobile

---

286, L.R.A.1918C, 715, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1127; Guthrie v. Holmes, 272 Mo. 215, 198 S. W. 854, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1123.

Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 921, s. 74 A.L.R. 966.

[9] See TRIAL [Also 26 R. C. L. p. 1008].

[10] See JURY [Also 16 R. C. L. p. 214, § 32].

[11] Packard v. O'Neil, 45 Idaho, 427, 262 P. 881, 56 A.L.R. 317.

[12] Bentson v. Brown, 186 Wis. 629, 203 N. W. 380, 38 A.L.R. 1417.

[13] See TRIAL [Also ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL, 2 R. C. L. p. 433; TRIAL, 26 R. C. L. p. 1008].

[14] Luckett v. Reighard, 248 Pa. 24, 93 A. 773, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 662.

[15] Watson v. Adams, 187 Ala. 490, 65 So. 528, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 565; Stehouwer v. Lewis, 249 Mich. 76, 227 N. W. 759, 74 A.L.R. 844; Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 132 P. 1020, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59.

Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 1418, s. 74 A.L.R. 850.

The trial judge should require discontinuance by the attorney for plaintiff, in an action to recover damages for injury through an automobile collision, of a course in the examination of jurors tending to create prejudice by suggesting that an insurer is interested in the defense. Schwalen v. W. P. Fuller & Co. 107 Wash. 476, 182 P. 592, 187 P. 367, 10 A.L.R. 296.

Refusal of the trial court to declare a mistrial in an action for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, because of improper questions, while the jury was being drawn, as to whether any of the jurors were stockholders in a certain insurance company, is an abuse of discretion requiring reversal of a judgment for the plaintiff, where the defendant's testimony, admitted without objection, that he was not insured, was stricken out on motion of plaintiff's counsel, and the trial court refused defendant's request at the conclusion of the testimony to disregard any question of insurance, the record not disclosing that any instruction was otherwise given to neutralize the injurious effect of the questions. Patterson v. Surpless, 107 N. J. L. 305, 151 A. 754, 74 A.L.R. 841.

accident cases, is so well grounded in the juridical concept upon the matter, that there appears to be no hesitancy in setting aside a verdict otherwise amply justified by the facts, merely because of the admission of such evidence, however innocuous or ineffective it may appear in its relation to other matters of a far more determinative character. It has been repeatedly held that the attorney for the plaintiff in a personal injury suit should not be permitted to bring out on direct examination of his witnesses, or by introducing into the evidence documents tending to show the fact that the defendant carries liability insurance, thereby leaving the inference that he will not be called upon to pay any judgment that may be recovered.[16] Whether made at the opening of the case, or in the closing argument, or at any stage of the trial, references to or remarks upon matters tending to bring out the fact that the defendant carries automobile liability insurance, or that he will not have to pay any judgment rendered in the case, are viewed as improper.[17]

§ 667. Taking Case from Jury.—In ruling on a motion for a nonsuit or for a directed verdict, or upon a demurrer to the evidence, based upon insufficiency of proof, the court in an automobile case is governed by the rules applicable in other civil actions,[18] especially negligence actions.[19] The court must accept the truth of the evidence of the party against whom the motion or demurrer is made and construe it most favorably to him; it cannot base its judgment on the evidence of the moving party, or draw inferences favorable to him.[20] A motion for a nonsuit or a directed verdict on the ground that the evidence clearly establishes certain facts must be refused if there is ground for debate as to what facts are established.[1] Such a motion cannot be granted for the defendant in an automobile accident case, if there is any substantial evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant[2] which has a causal connection with the accident, unless it is proved that the plaintiff's own lack of due care contributed to his injury.[3] Such a motion must be denied when the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, and the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, disregarding evidence in conflict therewith, tend to establish the defendant's negligence.[4] In the absence, however, of anything to show whether the accident in which the plaintiff was injured was caused by the negligence of the defendant, there is nothing to submit to the jury.[5] The defendant is entitled to a directed verdict where there is an entire failure of proof as to any essential fact of the plaintiff's case, or where the nonexistence of such fact is established.[6] And if the evidence in an action for damages occasioned by a collision of automobiles establishes the plaintiff's contributory negligence, a demurrer to his evidence is properly sustained.[7]

---

[16] Akin v. Lee, 206 N. Y. 20, 99 N. E. 85, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 947; Lytton v. Marion Mfg. Co. 157 N. C. 331, 72 S. E. 1055, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 358; Vasquez v. Pettit, 74 Or. 496, 145 P. 1066, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 439; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 133 P. 1020, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59.

Annotation: 56 A.L.R. 1418, s. 74 A.L.R. 850.

[17] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 858.

[18] See TRIAL [Also 26 R. C. L. p. 1060, §§ 68–87].

[19] See NEGLIGENCE.

[20] Wood v. North Carolina Pub. Serv. Corp. 174 N. C. 697, 94 S. E. 459, 1 A.L.R. 942; Marland Ref. Co. v. Duffy, 94 Okla. 16, 220 P. 846, 35 A.L.R. 52.

[1] West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

Where it appears that the deviation from the direct route of return to the garage at the time of an accident was not so great as to warrant the conclusion of law that defendant's employee was acting outside the scope of his employment, it is proper to refuse to direct a verdict for defendant. Luckett v. Reighard, 248 Pa. 24, 93 A. 773, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 662.

[2] Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967.

[3] Milbury v. Turner Center System, 274 Mass. 358, 174 N. E. 471, 73 A.L.R. 1070.

[4] Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327; Vandell v. Sanders, 85 N. H. 143, 155 A. 193, 80 A.L.R. 550.

Where there is evidence from which a jury might properly find that the defendant, knowing of plaintiff's exposed position on the running board, operated his automobile without due regard for plaintiff's safety, a motion for a nonsuit or a directed verdict must be denied. Vandell v. Sanders, 85 N. H. 143, 155 A. 193, 80 A.L.R. 550.

[5] Klein v. Beeten, 169 Wis. 385, 172 N. W. 736, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

The making of a prima facie case, where based solely upon an inference as distinguished from a presumption of law, does not preclude the court from withdrawing the cause from the jury after all the evidence is submitted.[8]

And if the testimony is incredible, or contrary to scientific principles or laws of nature, the case may be taken from the jury.[9]

2. Questions of Law and Fact

a. In General

§ 668. Generally.—In damage actions arising from the use and operation of automobiles, as in other civil actions tried before a jury,[10] where the evidence respecting an issue of fact is contradictory, the court cannot rule as a matter of law that the fact has or has not been proved, but must leave the determination of this question to the jury.[11] Generally, it may be said that when not only the facts constituting the conduct of the parties, but also the standard of care which they should have exercised, are to be determined, the case is entirely one of fact.[12] Ordinarily, whether an inference or presumption has been overcome is a question for the jury, but if the evidence is of such character that but one reasonable deduction can be made therefrom, the court may so declare as a matter of law.[13] It also is usually a question for the jury whether persons riding in an automobile were engaged in a joint enterprise so that the negligence of the driver would be imputable to the occupants, although the particular circumstances of the case may be such as to establish a joint adventure as a matter of law.[14] Throughout this article it has been necessary, for a complete understanding of the discussion of various particular matters arising in connection with the operation of the automobile causing the injury complained of, to discuss whether the particular matter was one of fact for the jury or a question of law for the court.

§ 669. Proximate Cause.—As in other negligence actions,[15] the question of proximate cause in automobile accident cases is ordinarily for the jury, even where the evidence is undisputed, if different inferences may fairly be drawn therefrom.[16] Where it is not plain that reasonable men could not reasonably find a causal relation between defendant's act and the injury, or a part of the injury, the court must leave it to the jury to find as a fact whether defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the injury, or part of the injury;[17] but the question is for the court where but one inference and conclusion can be drawn from the evidence.[18] In other words, where fair-minded men may differ as to the facts, or as to conclusions to be deduced therefrom, the question of proximate cause is for the jury; otherwise for the court;[19] whether only one inference may be drawn must necessarily ultimately rest with the court.[20] It is for the court to determine whether or not the facts in evidence support any reasonable inference of a causal relation between an act of negligence on defendant's part and the injury complained of, in whole or in part, and it must reach its conclusion by determining whether the evidence reasonably justifies the submission to the jury of the question whether defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing plaintiff's injuries.[1]

---

[6] Where the testimony both of the driver and the owner of the automobile which caused the accident, that it was loaned for a purpose other than that for which it was being driven, is uncontradicted by any fact or circumstance which would tend to cast doubt upon it, the owner is entitled to the direction of a verdict. Heavilin v. Wendell, 214 Iowa, 844, 241 N. W. 654, 83 A.L.R. 872.

[7] Ferguson v. Lang, 126 Kan. 273, 268 P. 117, 63 A.L.R. 1423.

Where uncontradicted evidence shows that an automobile collision which occurred when defendant's car, in turning to the left to pass a vehicle ahead of it, struck the car in which plaintiff was riding, which was trying to pass defendant's car, was wholly due to the failure of the driver of the passing car to signal his intention to pass as required by the traffic laws, the defendant is entitled to a directed verdict. Meese v. Goodman, 167 Md. 658, 176 A. 621, 98 A.L.R. 480.

[8] Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. Co. 136 Or. 1, 294 P. 588, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944.

[9] Seiwell v. Hines, 273 Pa. 259, 116 A. 919, 21 A.L.R. 139.

[10] See Trial.

[11] Bacon v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 256 Mass. 30, 152 N. E. 35, 47 A.L.R. 1100.

In an action for the death of a motorcyclist resulting from a collision with the defendant's automobile, refusal to take from the jury's consideration the question of the defendant's alleged failure to render aid and assistance to the motorcyclist after the accident is not error, where the plaintiffs' counsel had stipulated that the motorcyclist died as the result of the injuries received, since no intention was evidenced in the stipulation to eliminate the charge of negligence predicated on the failure of the defendant to render assistance. Packard v. O'Neil, 45 Idaho, 427, 262 P. 881, 56 A.L.R. 317.

[12] Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582.

[13] Judson v. Bee Hive Auto Serv. Co. 136 Or. 1, 294 P. 588, 297 P. 1050, 74 A.L.R. 944.

[14] Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1083.

[15] See Negligence; Trial.

It is for the jury to say whether allowing a windshield to become so clouded as to impair the driver's vision or view,[2] or the absence or insufficiency of lights upon an automobile,[3] or the circumstance that a motorist had violated a traffic regulation, was a causative factor in the accident involved,[4] unless it appears that there is no dispute concerning the facts and circumstances surrounding the occurrence and the inferences that may reasonably be drawn therefrom.[5] Thus, whether a violation by an automobile of a statute forbidding the cutting of corners in turning into an intersecting street[6] constituted the proximate cause of an accident is generally held to present a question of fact for the jury, unless the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident are undisputed, and admit of but one inference upon this issue.[7]

---

[16] Bachelder v. Morgan, 179 Ala. 339, 60 So. 815, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 888; Loveless v. Red Top Cab Co. 158 Wash. 474, 291 P. 344, 79 A.L.R. 347; O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 795, 796.

Whether a fracture of the skull sustained by an occupant of an automobile, who, though uninjured by the collision, fainted from fright and fell on stepping out of the car, was a proximate result of the collision, is a question of fact. Comstock v. Wilson, 257 N. Y. 231, 177 N. E. 431, 76 A.L.R. 676.

[17] Mahoney v. Beatman, 110 Conn. 184, 147 A. 762, 66 A.L.R. 1121.

[18] O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

[19] Wyatt v. Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. 158 Va. 470, 163 S. E. 370, 82 A.L.R. 386.

[20] O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

[1] Mahoney v. Beatman, 110 Conn. 184, 147 A. 762, 66 A.L.R. 1121.

[2] Schwalen v. W. P. Fuller & Co. 107 Wash. 476, 182 P. 592, 187 P. 367, 10 A.L.R. 296.

[3] See § 253, supra.

[4] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963; Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967. Putting a motor vehicle in motion against traffic direction or regulation is substantive evidence of negligence, and if there are any facts which excuse it, it is for the defendant to show them. Railway Express Agency v. Little, 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.

The question whether plaintiff's negligence in violating a statute limiting the rate of speed of vehicles at a street intersection was the proximate cause of his being struck by another automobile proceeding on the intersecting street is for the jury where there is testimony on behalf of the plaintiff that he was more than halfway across the street at the time of the collision, so that the approaching car would not have struck him had it remained on its proper side of the street, and had he reached the intersection before or at the same time the other car did so, he would have had the right of way, though, according to testimony on defendant's behalf, plaintiff's car had not reached the center of the street when defendant swerved to the left in an attempt to avoid it. Larsen v. Webb, 332 Mo. 370, 58 S. W. (2d) 967, 90 A.L.R. 67.

[5] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 795.

[6] See § 326, supra.

[7] Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 323.

The proximate cause of injury in an automobile accident case need not be shown by direct testimony, but may be determined from the circumstances in the case.[8]

§ 670. Intervening Cause.—Intervening acts of negligence, or other factors, do not necessarily affect the actionability of the primary inducing cause of an automobile accident; the test is found in the character of the intervening acts and in the natural and probable connection between the wrong done and the injurious consequences. The relationship between the acts complained of and the injuries sustained is generally one for the jury to decide in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[9]

§ 671. Credibility of Witnesses.—The general rules governing the determination of the credibility of witnesses upon the trial[10] apply to cases involving automobile accidents. The credibility of witnesses,[11] and the weight to be accorded their testimony,[12] are questions peculiarly within the province of the jury. It is the province of the jury to reconcile conflicting statements in plaintiff's evidence, whether of the same or of different witnesses, or to draw the line between them and say which shall prevail, unless the conflicting statements are so irreconcilable that a finding one way or the other would be a mere guess.[13] The jury is not bound to believe the testimony of an interested witness.[14] However, the uncontradicted testimony of a credible witness cannot be disregarded by the jury, especially if it is corroborated by other evidence.[15]

§ 672. Competency and Authority of Driver.—Where one, for purposes wholly apart from any business or enterprise of his, intrusted an automobile to a minor unaccustomed to its use, the question of competency is one for the jury under proper instructions.[16]

Whether or not a servant causing injury to a stranger was acting within the scope of his employment, so as to render the master liable[17] or whether he had so far departed from or exceeded the authority given him on the particular occasion, as to relieve defendant from liability for injury caused,[18] is usually a question for the jury although it may be a question for the court where there is no conflict in the evidence. When the owner is present in a car driven by another, the question whether the driver was under the owner's control, or whether they were engaged in a common enterprise, is for the jury.[19]

---

[8] O'Malley v. Eagan, 43 Wyo. 233, 2 P. (2d) 1063, 77 A.L.R. 582, rehearing denied in 43 Wyo. 350, 5 P. (2d) 276, 77 A.L.R. 597.

Annotation: 77 A.L.R. 598.

[9] Maloney v. Kaplan, 233 N. Y. 426, 135 N. E. 838, 26 A.L.R. 909. The questions of negligence and proximate cause are for the jury where a motor vehicle left standing in the street is set in motion by strangers, to the injury of a third person.

[10] See TRIAL.

[11] Hempel v. Hall, 136 Md. 174, 110 A. 210, 9 A.L.R. 1245 (police officer testifying with respect to an automobile accident); Carlton v. Boudar, 118 Va. 521, 88 S. E. 174, 4 A.L.R. 1480; Mitchell v. Churches, 119 Wash. 547, 206 P. 6, 36 A.L.R. 1132.

Annotation: 9 A.L.R. 1248.

[12] Crowell v. Duncan, 145 Va. 489, 134 S. E. 576, 50 A.L.R. 1425.

[13] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.

[14] Mitchell v. Churches, 119 Wash. 547, 206 P. 6, 36 A.L.R. 1132.

[15] Potts v. Pardee, 220 N. Y. 431, 116 N. E. 78, 8 A.L.R. 785.

[16] Elliott v. Harding, 107 Ohio St. 501, 140 N. E. 338, 36 A.L.R. 1128.

[17] Crowell v. Duncan, 145 Va. 489, 134 S. E. 576, 50 A.L.R. 1425.

Annotation: 45 A.L.R. 485.

Evidence, in an action against a partnership conducting an automobile garage business for injuries inflicted by an automobile, of a statement in a deposition by one partner that he thought it might be said that the driver of the car was on a partnership errand in procuring automobile parts, because they were not in stock in the garage, and that he was willing that the driver should be considered his agent in making the trip for the partnership, and of a statement by the other partner that he felt the partnership was responsible, is of doubtful sufficiency in substance to carry to the jury the question whether the driver of the car was the agent of the partnership. Caswell v. Maplewood Garage, 84 N. H. 241, 149 A. 746, 73 A.L.R. 433.

Whether or not an employee who, as part of his compensation, was entitled to the use of his employer's automobile was acting in the employer's business at the time he negligently brought the car into collision with a railroad train so as to prevent the owner from holding the railroad company liable for its negligence is a question for the jury where, although he took the car for a pleasure drive of his own, he stops on the way home to carry an express package for his employer without the latter's instructions to do so. Lloyd v.

Where the driver of a taxicab was in charge of it during business hours within the territory of his employment, with a taxi sign displayed, the mere fact that he had a friend in the taxi with him, and that he and the friend testify that they were pursuing their own pleasure, is not conclusive of the question, as a matter of law, in an action to hold the master liable for injury inflicted by the driving of the car.[20]

b. NEGLIGENCE OF DEFENDANT

(1) IN GENERAL

§ 673. Generally.—The question of the defendant's negligence, or the negligence of his agent or servant, in the operation of the motor vehicle alleged to have caused the injury or damage for which action is brought, is a question for the jury, where there is a reasonable doubt as to the facts, or as to the inference to be drawn from them; i. e., where reasonable men may differ as to the existence of such negligence.[1] When negligence may reasonably and legitimately be inferred from the evidence, it is for the jury to say whether from such evidence negligence ought to be inferred.[2] If there is evidence which would sustain a verdict against defendant, even though such evidence is simply of the violation of a legal requirement, the plaintiff is entitled to have the question of negligence submitted to the jury unless the negligent act had no causal connection with the accident, or his own lack of due care contributed to his injury.[3] To justify a court in characterizing conduct as negligent in law, it must involve some prominent and decisive act, in regard to the effect and character of which no room is left for ordinary minds to differ.[4] In determining whether conduct was negligent, it is for the jury to say whether an

---

Northern P. R. Co. 107 Wash. 57, 181 P. 29, 6 A.L.R. 307.

[18] Johnson v. Evans, 141 Minn. 356, 170 N. W. 220, 2 A.L.R. 891; Kohlman v. Hyland, 54 N. D. 710, 210 N. W. 643, 50 A.L.R. 1437.

The question whether the deviation of a servant, who was driving an automobile belonging to the defendant, from the prescribed route, resulted in such an abandonment of the master's service as to exonerate the latter from liability on account of the servant's tortious acts, is generally one of fact to be determined by the jury, and not a matter of law to be decided by the court. Kohlman v. Hyland, 54 N. D. 710, 210 N. W. 643, 50 A.L.R. 1437.

[19] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 891.

[20] Crowell v. Duncan, 145 Va. 489, 134 S. E. 576, 50 A.L.R. 1425.

[1] Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221; American Exp. Co. v. Terry, 126 Md. 254, 94 A. 1026, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 650; Pratt v. Western Bridge & Constr. Co. 116 Neb. 553, 218 N. W. 397, 58 A.L.R. 527, later appeal in 118 Neb. 736, 226 N. W. 324; Tullgren v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 82 N. H. 268, 133 A. 4, 46 A.L.R. 380; Auer v. Sinclair Ref. Co. 103 N. J. L. 372, 137 A. 555, 54 A.L.R. 623; Marland Ref. Co. v. Duffy, 94 Okla. 16, 220 P. 846, 35 A.L.R. 52; McClure v. Wilson, 109 Wash. 166, 186 P. 302, 18 A.L.R. 1421; Hiscock v. Phinney, 81 Wash. 117, 142 P. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1044.

It is for the jury to say whether the driver of an automobile, seeing a person alight from a street car and turn towards the sidewalk without ascertaining the whereabouts of automobiles, is negligent in continuing his course without warning, or apparently slackening his speed, and striking and injuring such person within the intersection of streets, where it is the duty of a driver to look out for persons alighting from street cars. McClure v. Wilson, 109 Wash. 166, 186 P. 302, 18 A.L.R. 1421.

[2] Auer v. Sinclair Ref. Co. 103 N. J. L. 372, 137 A. 555, 54 A.L.R. 623.

[3] Milbury v. Turner Centre System, 274 Mass. 358, 174 N. E. 471, 73 A.L.R. 1070.

[4] Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Merriken, 147 Md. 572, 128 A. 277, 41 A.L.R. 763.

average prudent person placed in the particular situation disclosed by the evidence, with the same knowledge and means of knowledge of the surrounding circumstances, would have acted in the same way.[5]

Where liability attaches only for gross negligence, it is for the jury, under proper instructions of the court, to pass upon the question whether such negligence exists.[6]

Under disputed facts, the court must submit the case to the jury upon the question of comparative negligence.[7]

(2) CONDUCT TOWARDS PARTICULAR PERSONS

§ 674. Pedestrians—Walking along Highway.—Whenever the evidence relative to the negligence or care of the driver of an automobile which struck a pedestrian is conflicting, or different inferences may reasonably be drawn from unconflicting testimony, the jury must be permitted to determine whether the defendant was negligent. The question of the negligence of the operator of an automobile in injuring a pedestrian walking along a street or highway, as affected by the operator's failure to give timely warning,[8] or by any other factors explanatory of the occurrence, such as absence of lights,[9] the crowding of the pedestrian,[10] or excessive speed,[11] is usually one for the jury to consider in connection with all the existing circumstances,[12] and in accordance with the general rules determinative of the relative rights and duties of motorists and pedestrians upon the highway,[13] unless, of course, the facts are undisputed and the inferences that may be drawn therefrom are not conflicting.[14]

The jury must determine the questions of relative negligence in case of collision between an automobile and a pedestrian who was walking along the extreme left of the road.[15]

§ 675. —Crossing Street.—The issue of a motorist's negligence in striking a pedestrian crossing the street at a regular crossing generally presents a factual question to be decided by the jury in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, unless the facts are undisputed, and conflicting inferences cannot be drawn therefrom.[16] The age of the person injured, whether an infant or adult,[17] the conditions of traffic at the place of the accident,[18] the place where the pedestrian attempted to cross,[19] the speed of the vehicle,[20] and any other factors explanatory of the degree of care exercised by those involved in the occurrence, are subject to proof at the trial.[1] A pedestrian who crosses a street between crossings is required to use greater care for his own safety than when he crosses at the place provided for pedestrians;[2] Whether such additional measure of care was exercised is generally held to present a question of fact for the jury.[3] It has been ruled that in arriving at such determination the jury must be guided by the conventional test of what the ordinarily prudent person would have done under similar circumstances.[4]

---

[5] Charbonneau v. MacRury, 84 N. H. 501, 153 A. 457, 73 A.L.R. 1266.

[6] Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327.

[7] Pratt v. Western Bridge & Constr. Co. 116 Neb. 553, 218 N. W. 397, 58 A.L.R. 527, later appeal in 118 Neb. 736, 226 N. W. 324.

[8] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 102, s. 93 A.L.R. 556.

[9] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 103, s. 93 A.L.R. 557.

[10] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 108, s. 93 A.L.R. 559.

[11] Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291.

Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 105, s. 93 A.L.R. 558.

[12] Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291; Marton v. Pickrell, 112 Wash. 117, 191 P. 1101, 17 A.L.R. 68.

Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 97, s. 93 A.L.R. 551.

[13] See supra, §§ 187 et seq.

[14] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

[15] Marton v. Pickrell, 112 Wash. 117, 191 P. 1101, 17 A.L.R. 68.

[16] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1176, s. 67 A.L.R. 313.

[17] See supra, § 185.

[18] See supra, §§ 264 et seq.

[19] See supra, § 211.

[20] See supra, § 259.

[1] Negative testimony by persons awaiting an opportunity to cross a street, that standing automobiles gave no signal before starting, may outweigh positive testimony of the occupants of the cars that such signals were given. Richter v. Dahlman & I. Co. 179 Wis. 7, 190 N. W. 841, 30 A.L.R. 747.

§ 676. —On Sidewalk.—When an automobile leaves its accustomed place of travel in the street and runs upon the sidewalk and there strikes a pedestrian, the cases have quite uniformly held that the plaintiff establishes a prima facie case by the mere proof of the accident.[5] Where the motorist presents proof tending to show that the accident was due to causes not under his immediate control, such as the fact that he was driven on to the sidewalk by the negligent operation of another vehicle,[6] a question of fact for the jury is generally presented as to the proximate cause of the accident.[7]

§ 677. —Boarding or Alighting from Street Car.—Not unlike other situations involving injuries to pedestrians through the operation of motor vehicles, it is generally held that where an automobile strikes a pedestrian who is boarding or alighting from a street car,[8] whether the motorist was negligent is a question of fact for the jury to decide.[9] Where the facts in the case are not in dispute, and the inferences that may be drawn therefrom do not conflict, the issue of the motorist's negligence may properly be decided as a matter of law.[10]

§ 678. Persons Repairing Vehicle in Road.—It being well settled that the driver of a vehicle approaching a person engaged about an automobile in the highway owes him the duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring him, it is generally held that the question whether such care has been used in any particular case depends upon the facts and circumstances which are made to appear, and is generally one of fact for the determination of the jury.[11] There are numerous factors that must be taken into consideration in arriving at such determination, such as conditions of visibility, the character of the road, the speed of the vehicle, the position of the person injured at the time of the accident, and any other factors explanatory of the occurrence.[12]

§ 679. Person Darting in Front of Automobile.—The negligence of an automobilist who strikes a person that suddenly darts in front of the vehicle is ordinarily a factual question for the jury to decide,[13] in accordance with the well-settled rules on the subject, particularly in the light of the established rule that a motorist has the right to assume that the pedestrian will remain in the place of safety until the car has passed, and will not suddenly dart into a place of danger.[14] To precisely what point in the series of events leading up to the accident the motorist was justified in relying upon such assumption is for the jury to decide upon the basis of the available facts.[15]

---

[2] See supra, § 454.

[3] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1178.

[4] Peterson v. Ballantine, 205 N. Y. 29, 98 N. E. 202, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1147; Watts v. Plymouth, 255 Pa. 185, 99 A. 470, 3 A.L.R. 1110.
Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1184.

[5] Linberg v. Stanto, 211 Cal. 771, 297 P. 9, 75 A.L.R. 555.
Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 559.

[6] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 567.

[7] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 567.

[8] See supra, § 211.

[9] Day v. Cunningham, 125 Me. 328, 133 A. 855, 47 A.L.R. 1229. An automobile driver passing a car which has stopped to take on or discharge passengers should not pass close to the car, and, if he does so, and strikes a person alighting or embarking, his negligence is for the jury.
Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1237.

[10] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1233.

[11] Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507; Grein v. Gordon, 280 Pa. 576, 124 A. 737, 34 A.L.R. 1513; Humes v. Schaller, 39 R. I. 519, 99 A. 55, L.R.A. 1917B, 316; Long v. Steffen, 194 Wis. 179, 215 N. W. 892, 61 A.L.R. 1155; Schacht v. Quick, 178 Wis. 330, 190 N. W. 87, 25 A.L.R. 130.
Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 134, s. 34 A.L.R. 1513, and 61 A.L.R. 1159.

[12] Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 134, s. 34 A.L.R. 1513, and 61 A.L.R. 1159.

[13] Klink v. Bany, 207 Iowa, 1241, 224 N. W. 540, 65 A.L.R. 187; Burvant v. Wolfe,

§ 680. Traffic Officer or Person Directing Traffic.—The question whether the driver of a motor vehicle was negligent in causing injury to one who was directing traffic is generally for the jury to decide,[16] unless the facts surrounding the occurrence are undisputed, and present no conflicting inferences.[17] The issue of the motorist's negligence is to be considered in the light of the well-settled rule that while the drivers of automobiles owe a traffic officer the same duty that they owe other pedestrians,[18] he is not required to use the same degree of care and caution in looking for approaching vehicles as an ordinary pedestrian.[19]

§ 681. Bicyclist.—In accordance with the well-settled rule that the rights and duties of motorists and bicyclists are reciprocal, and that each owes to the other the duty to exercise reasonable care and caution to avoid injury,[20] whether such care was exercised, and to what extent the negligence of the motorist, or bicyclist, proximately contributed to the accident, ordinarily presents a question of fact for the jury, unless the facts are not in dispute, and are such as to admit of but one inference upon these issues.[1]

§ 682. Infants.—It being well settled that an infant charged with actionable negligence is not held to the same standard of care and caution as an adult, but only to such behavior as may reasonably be expected of a child of like age, intelligence, and experience,[2] it is generally held in actions for injuries sustained by minors in automobile accidents that a question for the jury is presented as to whether the conduct of the infant conformed to the test of what might have been expected of another person of like intelligence, experience, and years, placed in a similar situation.[3]

§ 683. Guests.—In conformity with the rule prevailing in the majority of jurisdictions, that the driver of an automobile owes an invited guest the duty of exercising reasonable care in its operation, so as not unreasonably to expose him to danger and injury by increasing the hazard of travel,[4] it has been held to be a factual question properly to be decided by the jury as to whether the requisite degree of care was exercised in a specific situation,[5] unless the inferences that may be drawn from the undisputed facts are not in conflict.[6]

---

126 La. 787, 52 So. 1025, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 677.

Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 192.

[14] See supra, § 195.

[15] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 192.

[16] Beyrent v. Kaplan, 315 Pa. 353, 172 A. 651, 92 A.L.R. 1515.

Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1518.

[17] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1518.

[18] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1518.

[19] Beyrent v. Kaplan, 315 Pa. 353, 172 A. 651, 92 A.L.R. 1515.

[20] See supra, § 184.

[1] Rogers v. Phillips, 206 Mass. 308, 92 N. E. 327, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 944.

Annotation: 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 944.

[2] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. 125, § 105].

[3] Charbonneau v. MacRury, 84 N. H. 501, 153 A. 457, 73 A.L.R. 1266; Buch v. Amory Mfg. Co. 69 N. H. 257, 44 A. 809, 76 Am. St. Rep. 163; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 77 Tex. 356, 14 S. W. 26, 19 Am. St. Rep. 755; Briese v. Maechtle, 146 Wis. 89, 130 N. W. 893, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 574, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 176.

[4] For detailed treatment of subject of liability of motorist for injuries to guest, see supra, §§ 229 et seq.

[5] Avery v. Thompson, 117 Me. 120, 103 A. 4, L.R.A.1918D, 205, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1122.

[6] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 956.

Where the liability of an owner or operator of an automobile to a guest is limited to gross negligence or the like, it is the province of the jury in an action by a guest, to determine, upon the facts introduced in evidence, whether or not the driver was guilty of such negligence.[7]

§ 684. Persons Riding outside Car.—The question whether the operator of an automobile was negligent in respect of the duty owed to one riding on the running board of the automobile or some other place outside of the car is, ordinarily, a question of fact for the jury.[8]

(3) Particular Acts and Situations

§ 685. Violation of Law of Road.—In accordance with the well-settled rule that the conventional law of the road is not an inflexible, hard and fast rule, the violation of which will necessarily render the offender guilty of negligence, or contributory negligence, as a matter of law,[9] it is generally held that whether a motorist, in turning improperly or otherwise violating the rules of the road, acted as a reasonably prudent traveler would have done under similar circumstances, is a factual question for the jury to decide.[10] Any circumstances explanatory of the motorist's failure to comply with the rules of the road are admissible in evidence at the trial; as, for example, proof that he swerved from the lane of traffic to avoid an obstruction or a person in the road.[11] Whether such acts of the driver constituted the proximate cause of the accident is similarly a question of fact for the jury to decide.[12]

§ 686. Skidding.—Where the evidence is conflicting, and different inferences of fact can be drawn therefrom, whether a motorist was negligent in skidding generally presents a question for the jury to decide in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[13] In some instances, proof of the skidding of a car, even without negligence on the part of its driver, may be found by the jury to amount to an intervening cause, relieving negligence in other respects of its character as a proximate cause of the injury and an actionable wrong.[14]

§ 687. Backing.—The inquiry whether the defendant was negligent in the manner in which he backed his vehicle,[15] and the extent to which such negligence contributed to the accident resulting in the injuries complained of, are generally matters for the jury to decide, where the evidence on these points is conflicting, and different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom.[16]

In determining whether or not one backing an automobile in a public street, and colliding with a pedestrian on the street, was guilty of negligence resulting in the injury, the jury must consider all the facts of the case,—the direction in which the car was traveling, the rate of speed, whether any signal or warning was given, the condition of the street, the situation and surroundings of the parties, the manner in which the injured person was crossing the street, and what observation, if any, the one in charge of the car made while backing it.[17]

---

[7] Annotation: 74 A.L.R. 1198, s. 86 A.L.R. 1145, and 96 A.L.R. 1479.

[8] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 557.

[9] See supra, §§ 264 et seq.

[10] Lawson v. Dye, 106 W. Va. 494, 145 S. E. 817, 63 A.L.R. 271.
Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 277.

[11] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 277.

[12] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 279.

[13] Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co. 180 Cal. 32, 179 P. 203, 15 A.L.R. 401.
Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 276.

[14] Annotation: 58 A.L.R. 265.

[15] See supra, § 328.

[16] Annotation: 2 A.L.R. 1499; 67 A.L.R. 651.

§ 688. Driving while Asleep.—Whether or not one going to sleep while driving an automobile was negligent so as to render him liable for injury caused by the running of the car while he was in that condition is a question of fact upon consideration of all the circumstances, including the fact that sleep does not come upon one without warning of its approach.[18] It has been held, however, that the mere fact that one driving an automobile permitted himself to go to sleep justified an inference of negligence sufficient to make a prima facie case in favor of one injured by the car while the driver was in that condition, if no circumstances tending to excuse or justify his conduct are proven.[19]

§ 689. Speeding.—Upon issues of negligence and contributory negligence, where the evidence is in conflict as to the speed of each of the vehicles and as to the distance of each of the vehicles from the point at which the accident occurred at the time when the driver of each car first had a reasonable opportunity to observe the approach of the other, elements are presented which the triers of the facts must consider in their estimate of conduct.[20] It is generally for the jury to decide whether the speed of the vehicle proximately contributed to the accident,[1] and whether such speed was excessive, considering in connection therewith the hazards of the surrounding circumstances.

§ 690. Reliance upon Traffic Signal.—It being well settled that a motorist is not permitted to rely blindly upon traffic signals which give him the right of way,[2] it has been held that the question to what extent the motorist was justified in relying upon the signals is ordinarily for the jury to decide, except, of course, where the facts of the case are undisputed, and only one inference may properly be drawn therefrom.[3]

§ 691. Parking on Wrong Side of Street.—It being clear that the mere fact of stopping an automobile on the left, or wrong, side of the highway, does not under all conditions necessarily constitute negligence or contributory negligence,[4] it is generally held that the question as to whether such act constituted the proximate cause of the accident is for the jury to decide, and that ordinarily it is not the function of the court to rule that the parking of a motor vehicle on the wrong side of road did, or did not, proximately contribute to the accident,[5] unless the facts and the inferences that may be drawn therefrom are not in conflict.[6]

§ 692. Collision—At Intersection.—Although rights of way have been given by statutes and ordinances to certain travelers, as, for example, to those approaching an intersection from the right, these are to be construed as only relative rights, dependent upon the particular circumstances, such as speed and the distance of the vehicles from the intersection;[7] it is generally held, in cases of accidents at intersections, that it is for the jury to fix the precise relationship of a traffic regulation to the accident,[8] as well as to any acts of negligence or carelessness on the part of those involved therein, considering in connection therewith any circumstances explanatory of the relative degrees of care exercised by those involved in the occurrence.[9]

---

[17] Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493 (the mere backing of an automobile is not negligence per se).

[18] Bushnell v. Bushnell, 103 Conn. 583, 131 A. 432, 44 A.L.R. 785; Meyers v. Tri-State Auto Co. 121 Minn. 68, 140 N. W. 184, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 136.

[19] Bushnell v. Bushnell, 103 Conn. 583, 131 A. 432, 44 A.L.R. 785.

[20] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

[1] Cowart v. Lewis, 151 Miss. 221, 117 So. 531, 61 A.L.R. 1229. The negligence of the driver of an automobile in driving at an excessive speed during rain, resulting in his losing control of the car, which overturned, injuring a passenger was held to be a question for the jury.

[2] See supra, § 308.

[3] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 970.

[4] See supra, § 335.

[5] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1027.

[6] Waynick v. Walrond, 155 Va. 400, 154 S. E. 522, 70 A.L.R. 1014; Barnes v. Ashworth, 154 Va. 218, 153 S. E. 711, citing R. C. L.

§ 693. —Vehicles Traveling in Same Direction.—In the case of a collision between vehicles traveling in the same direction, the issue of the negligence of a driver involved in such accident is ordinarily a factual one, to be decided by the jury in the light of all the surrounding circumstances,[10] except where the undisputed facts lend themselves to but one conclusion upon this point.[11] Pertinent in this connection are numerous factors, such as the speed with which the vehicles were proceeding,[12] the signals given,[13] stopping without lights,[14] and any other facts explanatory of the occurrence.

§ 694. Towing Car.—The mere towing of an automobile through a street by means of a rope which is attached to another automobile ahead of the towed car does not constitute negligence per se, and where an accident occurs,[15] it is for the jury to determine whether the motorist towing the vehicle exercised a degree of care and caution commensurate with the hazards of the situation, unless the undisputed facts and circumstances are such as to admit of but one inference upon this point.[16]

(4) PARTICULAR CONDITIONS

§ 695. Generally.—The fact that the brakes of an automobile are defective undoubtedly is a material element in the determination of the question of negligence in a case involving a collision with or by such machine; at least, where the driver knew, or should by the exercise of proper care have known, of the defect. There appears to be little doubt that a driver falling within this category is placed under a duty to exercise a greater degree of care and caution in his use of the public streets than would be exacted under normal conditions;[17] and the broad inquiry whether the care exercised was proportionate to the hazards of the surrounding circumstances is generally a question of fact for the jury to determine.[18] Similarly, whether the lights were sufficient, in view of statutory requirements, is a question within the province of the jury to decide.[19]

The question whether the failure of an automobile driver to give a signal proximately contributed to the accident is usually one for the jury under all the circumstances of the case.[20] In general, the jury will be guided by the exigencies of each situation in determining the necessity for a signal by a motorist, and whether his neglect or omission in this respect was sufficient to constitute it the proximate cause of the accident.[1]

---

[7] Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 838, 839.

[8] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.
Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 838, 839.

[9] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

[10] Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967.

[11] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 970.

[12] See supra, § 259.

[13] Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967.
Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 971.

[14] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 972.

[15] Richter v. Dahlman, 179 Wis. 7, 190 N. W. 841, 30 A.L.R. 747.
Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 750.

[16] Annotation: 30 A.L.R. 751.

[17] See supra, § 252.

[18] Puhr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 171 Wis. 154, 176 N. W. 767, 14 A.L.R. 1334.

[19] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 795.

[20] Riccio v. Ginsberg, 49 R. I. 32, 139 A. 652, 62 A.L.R. 967.

§ 696. Defects in Highway or Street.—Where an automobile accident upon the public highway is alleged to have been due to a defect or obstruction in the road,[2] or to the absence of sufficient lights, barriers, or warning devices,[3] it is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury to decide as to whether such condition proximately contributed to the accident,[4] unless the surrounding circumstances are such as to leave room for but one inference respecting the issue of negligence.[5] Similarly, it is generally within the province of the jury to decide what will constitute a sufficient railing, barrier, or warning device.[6] But it has been held that such issues necessarily become questions of fact under statutory provisions giving to any person injured by means of a defective road a right of action to recover damages from the party bound to keep it in repair, and giving to any persons so injured a right of action to recover damages.[7]

§ 697. Blinding Lights.—In accordance with the general rule that where a person driving a car at night is blinded by a glare of light, he must use such care as to avoid injuring any person or other vehicle that may be using the street, while he is unable to see what is before him,[8] it is generally held that a question of fact is presented for the jury as to whether a motorist driving under such conditions exercised a degree of care and caution commensurate with the existing hazards,[9] unless the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident, and the inferences deducible therefrom, are such as to admit of but one conclusion upon this point.[10]

§ 698. Slippery Road.—In an action against a municipality for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, due to the slippery condition of a street or road,[11] a question of fact as to whether the condition was of such character as to impose any duty of correction upon the municipality is generally presented to the jury[12] which should consider in connection therewith all factors explanatory thereof, such as duration of the slippery condition, density of traffic in the vicinity, visibility, etc. Similarly, the question whether the slippery condition constituted the proximate cause of the accident is one for the jury to decide, unless the facts are not in dispute, and the inferences that may be drawn therefrom do not conflict.[13–16]

---

[1] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 970.

[2] See HIGHWAYS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 432, §§ 354 et seq.].

[3] See HIGHWAYS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 384, §§ 313 et seq.].

[4] Strickfaden v. Greencreek Highway Dist. 42 Idaho, 738, 248 P. 456, 49 A.L.R. 1057.

Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1404.

See HIGHWAYS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 354].

[5] Martin v. J. A. Mercier Co. 255 Mich. 587, 238 N. W. 181, 78 A.L.R. 520; McCracken v. Curwensville, 309 Pa. 98, 163 A. 217, 86 A.L.R. 1379.

What would be a reasonable warning of an excavation was held a question of fact for the jury, which should consider the place, nature of the road, kind of travel, probable speed of vehicles, and the general situation. Strickfaden v. Greencreek Highway Dist. 42 Idaho, 738, 248 P. 456, 49 A.L.R. 1057.

Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 525.

See HIGHWAYS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 517].

[6] Martin v. J. A. Mercier Co. 255 Mich. 587, 238 N. W. 181, 78 A.L.R. 520. Whether and when a hole or an excavation would be noticed by a careful driver, especially on a misty and dark morning, is necessarily so uncertain and dependent on circumstances that ordinarily it is an issue of fact.

[7] Annotation: 86 A.L.R. 1404.

[8] See supra, § 270.

[9] Annotation: 10 A.L.R. 295.

[10] Jaquith v. Worden, 73 Wash. 349, 132 P. 33, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.

Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 1531.

[11] See HIGHWAYS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 408, § 335].

[12] Gabrielsen v. Seattle, 150 Wash. 157, 272 P. 723, 63 A.L.R. 200, affirmed on rehearing in 152 Wash. 700, 278 P. 1071, 63 A.L.R. 207.

Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 200.

§ 699. Atmospheric Conditions.—The precise degree or quantum of care properly exercisable by a motorist, or pedestrian, under varying atmospheric conditions, such as fog, smoke, dust, etc.,[17] is ordinarily a question for the jury.[18] Whether the exercise of reasonable care required a complete stop, a slowing down, or any other precautions dictated by the standard of ordinary prudence, is generally within the province of the jury to decide, in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[19] The jury should be permitted to find, under proper instructions, whether the driver was negligent in allowing his windshield to become so clouded as to prevent him from having a clear and unobstructed view.[20]

§ 700. Obstruction in Road.—In an action to recover damages for injuries sustained as a result of an automobile being driven against an obstruction in the street, the jury must determine whether or not a reasonably prudent man, driving in a reasonably careful manner, would have seen the obstruction in time to have stopped before striking it,[1] and whether the failure to make such timely observation constituted the proximate cause of the accident.[2]

§ 701. Emergency.—One who acted in a sudden emergency cannot be expected to exercise the same discretion and judgment which would be exhibited by an ordinarily prudent person acting with deliberation,[3] whether one acted as a reasonably prudent man would have acted in a similar situation generally is held to present a factual question for the jury.[4] In other words, the question whether an automobile driver even when acting in an emergency, was or was not negligent must be determined by the standard of reasonableness under the particular circumstances, considering the emergency as one of the circumstances.[5]

§ 702. Disability or Illness.—The fact that one has a physical defect will not, in itself, render him liable, or prevent his recovering, for an injury resulting from the operation of an automobile, where the defect is not such as to render the operation of the car by him negligence;[6] it is for the jury to determine to what extent such disability or illness contributed to the accident,[7]

[13-16] Gabrielsen v. Seattle, 150 Wash. 157, 272 P. 723, 63 A.L.R. 200, affirmed on rehearing in 152 Wash. 700, 278 P. 1071, 63 A.L.R. 207.

[17] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1020.

[18] Peasley v. White, 129 Me. 450, 152 A. 530, 73 A.L.R. 1017; Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.
Annotation: 37 A.L.R. 587, s. 73 A.L.R. 1020.

[19] Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

[20] Schwalen v. W. P. Fuller & Co. 107 Wash. 476, 182 P. 592, 187 P. 367, 10 A.L.R. 296.
Annotation: 10 A.L.R. 299.

[1] Morehouse v. Everett, 141 Wash. 399, 252 P. 157, 58 A.L.R. 1482.
See Highways [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 478].
See also annotation in 19 A.L.R. 870.

[2] Where the statutes or decisions of the courts require red lights as a warning of danger on any object in the highway, and such lights were not present, it is for the jury to determine whether one who was driving at night should have seen the obstruction notwithstanding the absence of red lights. Morehouse v. Everett, 141 Wash. 399, 252 P. 157, 58 A.L.R. 1482.

[3] See supra, §§ 171 et seq.

[4] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1280.

[5] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1283.

[6] See supra, §§ 178–181.

[7] In an action by one who had been adjudged insane, to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from negligent collision with an automobile which he was driving, evidence is admissible as to his sanity at and after the time of the accident. Criez v. Sunset Motor Co. 123 Wash. 604, 213 P. 7, 32 A.L.R. 627.
Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 136.

unless the facts in connection therewith are undisputed, and only one inference may properly be drawn therefrom.[8]

c. Contributory Negligence of Plaintiff

§ 703. Generally.—In automobile accident cases, as in other negligence actions,[9] whether the question of contributory negligence of the person injured in the accident out of which the suit arose is one of law for the court, or of fact for the jury, must be determined on the facts of the particular case,[10] where the evidence on that question is conflicting, or different inferences may be drawn therefrom,—where an honest difference of opinion between men of average intelligence can arise as to the effect of the evidence, presented on this question,—a case is presented for the jury.[11] The issue of contributory negligence in an action to recover damages for negligent killing by operation of an automobile must be submitted to the jury where it is raised by the answer and supported by evidence.[12] The jury must determine whether or not one riding a bicycle close behind a truck which obscured his view of the road ahead, who was injured by a vehicle coming from the opposite direction when he turned out to pass the truck as it suddenly stopped in front of him, was guilty of negligence which will prevent his holding the owner of the truck liable for the injury.[13]

§ 704. Walking along Highway.—In the absence of an applicable statute or ordinance, a pedestrian has the right to walk longitudinally in a street or highway, and is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in doing so;[14] the question as to whether such a traveler is precluded by his own negligence from recovering for any injuries sustained in an accident involving an automobile being driven upon the highway is generally one of fact for the jury to decide in the light of all the surrounding circumstances,[15] unless, of course, the facts are not in dispute and leave room for but one conclusion respecting the pedestrian's lack of care.[16]

§ 705. Crossing Street.—There is no imperative rule of law requiring a pedestrian under all circumstances to look for approaching automobiles before crossing a street or highway;[17] it is generally held that the question whether a pedestrian has by his own lack of care and caution constituted himself contributorily negligent so as to preclude his recovery for injuries sustained while crossing a street is properly decided by the jury.[18]

Where statutes or ordinances give pedestrians the right of way at street crossings, creating a preferential and not an absolute right in their favor,[19] the question of contributory negligence on the part of the pedestrian is generally one of fact.[20] Thus, it is generally a question of fact to be submitted to the jury whether a pedestrian, crossing a street, was at fault in failing to look and listen.[1] Also, whether a pedestrian should have looked again, or continued to look, for automobiles while crossing a street or highway, depends on the circumstances and is a question for the jury.[2] Whether a pedestrian should have looked for automobiles turning into the street which he was crossing also presents a question of fact for the determination of the jury.[3] When, however, it appears from the plaintiff's undisputed evidence, in an action by a pedestrian seeking damages for injuries by an automobile, that he was wanting in ordinary care, the question is one of law for the court and not one of fact for the jury.[4]

---

[8] Meyers v. Tri-State Auto. Co. 121 Minn. 68, 140 N. W. 184, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113.

[9] See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[10] Crowley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 204 Iowa, 1385, 213 N. W. 403, 53 A.L.R. 964; Gibbs v. Almstrom, 145 Minn. 35, 176 N. W. 173, 11 A.L.R. 227; Idell v. Day, 273 Pa. 34, 116 A. 506, 20 A.L.R. 1429.

[11] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

[12] Sims v. Eleazer, 116 S. C. 41, 106 S. E. 854, 24 A.L.R. 1293.

[13] Simpson v. Snellenburg, 96 N. J. L. 518, 115 A. 403, 24 A.L.R. 503.

[14] Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co. 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.

Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 109, s. 93 A.L.R. 561.

[15] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 113, s. 93 A.L.R. 561.

[16] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 113.

[17] See supra, §§ 446 et seq.

[18] Ivy v. Marx, 205 Ala. 60, 87 So. 813, 14 A.L.R. 1173; Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493; Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620, 124 N. W. 527, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 435, 134 Am. St. Rep. 752 (negligence of infant crossing street held for jury).

It is not negligence as a matter of law for a pedestrian to cross a street at the regular crossing without stopping, looking, and listening for automobiles. Bachelder v. Morgan, 179 Ala. 339, 60 So. 815, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 888.

Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 321.

[19] See supra, §§ 289 et seq.

§ 706. —At Point Other than Intersection.—The fact that a pedestrian undertook to cross a street at a place other than a regular crossing will not, of itself, constitute contributory negligence, so as to defeat an action for his injury,[5] but is a circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining whether he was contributorily negligent.[6] Whether the pedestrian, in making such crossing, exercised a degree of care commensurate with the hazards involved, is generally held a question of fact for the jury, unless the circumstances surrounding the accident, and the inferences that may be drawn therefrom, admit of but one conclusion upon this point.[7]

Whether an occupant of an automobile that was standing beside the road was negligently attempting to cross the road, which was being used by other cars, is, under all the circumstances of the case, a question for the jury, especially where he was compelled to act in an emergency.[8]

§ 707. Boarding or Alighting from Street Car.—One alighting from a street car in front of a moving automobile cannot be said to have been negligent as a matter of law, where he testifies that, immediately before attempting to alight, he looked for an automobile and failed to see one.[9]

Whether a person is chargeable with contributory negligence for failure to look in both directions, after alighting from a street car, before starting to cross the street, is a question for the jury to determine, in accordance with the well-settled rule that such a person is not bound as a matter of law to look in both directions, but only to exercise reasonable care under all the circumstances.[10] It also is generally a question of fact for the jury whether a person who walked towards the sidewalk diagonally from a street car, and was struck by an automobile, was guilty of contributory negligence,[11] unless the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident are undisputed, and admit of but one inference upon that question.[12] Similarly, it has been held to be a question for the jury whether a person who was standing in the street at the regular stopping place of an approaching street car, intending to board the car, was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to observe the approach of an automobile.[13] Precisely what will constitute reasonable care in any given situation falling within this category is ordinarily a factual question for the jury to decide.

---

[20] Horwitz v. Eurove, 129 Ohio St. 8, 193 N. E. 644, 96 A.L.R. 782.
Annotation: 96 A.L.R. 788.

[1] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1081.

[2] Ritter v. Hicks, 102 W. Va. 541, 135 S. E. 601, 50 A.L.R. 1505; Deputy v. Kimmell, 73 W. Va. 595, 80 S. E. 919, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 989, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 656.
Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1088.

[3] Hemple v. Hall, 136 Md. 174, 110 A. 210, 9 A.L.R. 1245.
Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1091.

[4] Stewart v. Olson, 188 Wis. 487, 206 N. W. 909, 44 A.L.R. 1292.

[5] See supra, §§ 211 et seq.

[6] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1183.

[7] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1185, s. 67 A.L.R. 322.

[8] Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507.

[9] Wood v. North Carolina Pub. Serv. Corp. 174 N. C. 697, 94 S. E. 459, 1 A.L.R. 942.

[10] Wolfe v. Ives, 83 Conn. 174, 76 A. 526, 19 Ann. Cas. 752.
Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1244.

[11] McClure v. Wilson, 109 Wash. 166, 186 P. 302, 18 A.L.R. 1421.
Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1249.

[12] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1249.

§ 708. Darting in Front of Vehicle.—The question as to whether a person was contributorily negligent in suddenly darting in front of an automobile is generally one of fact for the jury to decide, in the light of all the surrounding circumstances,[14] unless there is no conflict in the evidence, and only one inference may be drawn from the facts in the case.[15] In determining whether a child, who, while playing in the street, suddenly ran from a place of safety into the path of a motor vehicle, was contributorily negligent,[16] the jury must decide whether the child acted as another person of the same age, intelligence, and experience would have acted if placed in a similar situation.[17]

§ 709. Repairing Vehicle in Road.—A traveler engaged about an automobile in the highway is under a duty to use reasonable care for his own safety;[18] whether such care was exercised, and whether one was guilty of contributory negligence, depend upon the facts in each case, and is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury.[19]

It has been held, however, that a truck driver who, to repair a punctured tire, places his truck on the side of the road with ample passenger space in the highway, with lights lighted, and a person on guard to signal approaching cars while he works in front of the car within its protection, is free from contributory negligence as a matter of law.[20]

§ 710. While Walking on Sidewalk.—While it is well settled that ordinarily a pedestrian walking or standing on a sidewalk is under no obligation to take any precautions against automobiles,[1] where a motor vehicle did leave the road, injuring a person on the sidewalk, and conflicting inferences of fact arise respecting the measure of care exercised by the pedestrian at the time of the accident, a question of fact for the jury is generally presented as to whether the pedestrian is barred from recovery for the injuries sustained through any acts of contributory negligence on his part.[2] The jury must determine whether one hit by an autotruck while standing on a sidewalk waiting to cross the street was guilty of contributory negligence.[3]

§ 711. Child Crossing or Playing in Street.—It is for the jury to determine from the available facts and circumstances whether a child injured by an automobile while crossing the street exercised such care as persons of his age, experience, and intelligence ordinarily exercise under like circumstances.[4] They must also determine whether or not a twelve-year-old boy racing across a street which he knew to be much used by automobiles failed to look, or attempted to pass in front of an approaching car, which struck and killed him.[5] Whether or not one coasting on a public highway is exercising the care and diligence to avoid danger which would be expected of a reasonably careful and prudent man under like circumstances is a question for the jury where the evidence as to the danger is conflicting and the inferences to be drawn are not clear.[6]

---

[13] Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 4 Ann. Cas. 396.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 1252.

[14] Klink v. Bany, 207 Iowa, 1241, 224 N. W. 540, 65 A.L.R. 187; Zoltovski v. Gzella, 159 Mich. 620, 124 N. W. 527, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 435, 134 Am. St. Rep. 752 (contributory negligence of child); Humes v. Schaller, 39 R. I. 519, 99 A. 55, L.R.A.1917B, 316.

Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 202, 210.

[15] Annotation: 65 A.L.R. 202.

[16] See supra, §§ 198–200.

[17] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 125].

[18] See supra, § 442.

[19] Southall v. Smith, 151 La. 967, 92 So. 402, 27 A.L.R. 1194; Daughraty v. Tebbets, 122 Me. 397, 120 A. 354, 34 A.L.R. 1507; Humes v. Schaller, 39 R. I. 519, 99 A. 55, L.R.A.1917B, 316; Long v. Steffen, 194 Wis. 179, 215 N. W. 892, 61 A.L.R. 1155; Schacht v. Quick, 178 Wis. 330, 190 N. W. 87, 25 A.L.R. 130.

Annotation: 25 A.L.R. 136, s. 34 A.L.R. 1515, and 61 A.L.R. 1164.

[20] Long v. Steffen, 194 Wis. 179, 215 N. W. 892, 61 A.L.R. 1155.

[1] See supra, § 460.

[2] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 575.

[3] Brown v. Des Moines Steam Bottling Works, 174 Iowa, 715, 156 N. W. 829, 1 A.L.R. 835.

§ 712. Guest or Occupant of Automobile.—The duty of an invited passenger in an automobile is so dependent upon special circumstances, and upon such varied and conflicting notions of the propriety of interference in the management of the automobile, that in cases of accident the courts are loath to hold such a passenger guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[7] Ordinarily, the question of the contributory negligence of a guest in an automobile involved in a collision, is for the jury to decide in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[8]

§ 713. Traffic Officer.—The question of the contributory negligence of one struck by a motor vehicle while directing traffic is generally for the jury to decide,[9] except, of course, where there is no conflict in the facts of the case, or the inferences deducible therefrom.[10] Their determination must be governed by the broad and well-settled rule that a traffic officer is not held to the same degree or extent of care and caution in watching for approaching vehicles as the ordinary pedestrian.[11]

§ 714. Workman in Road.—A person employed at work in a street must necessarily devote his attention to his work, and is not guilty of contributory negligence for failure to keep a sharp lookout for approaching traffic.[12] The decisions are uniform in holding that a workman on a public road has the right to rely on the exercise of such degree of care by drivers of automobiles as will protect him from injury, and that he will not be charged with contributory negligence if he fails to observe the negligence of a driver in approaching him.[13] However, where the facts are in dispute concerning the degree of care exercised by the workman, and conflicting inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, the issue of contributory negligence properly becomes one for the jury to decide.[14]

---

[4] Annotation: 14 A.L.R. 1191.

[5] Bentson v. Brown, 186 Wis. 629, 203 N. W. 380, 38 A.L.R. 1417.

[6] Idell v. Day, 273 Pa. 34, 116 A. 506, 20 A.L.R. 1429.

[7] Powell v. Berry, 145 Ga. 696, 89 S. E. 753, L.R.A.1917A, 306; Ford v. Maney, 251 Mich. 461, 232 N. W. 393, 70 A.L.R. 1315.

[8] Powell v. Berry, 145 Ga. 696, 89 S. E. 753, L.R.A.1917A, 306; Crowley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 204 Iowa, 1385, 213 N. W. 403, 53 A.L.R. 964; Sharp v. Sproat, 111 Kan. 735, 208 P. 613, 26 A.L.R. 1421; Archer v. Chicago, M. St. P. & P. R. Co. 215 Wis. 509, 255 N. W. 67, 95 A.L.R. 851.

Annotation: 18 A.L.R. 311; 20 A.L.R. 1026, s. 26 A.L.R. 1428, 40 A.L.R. 1341, and 91 A.L.R. 556.

The question of the contributory negligence of a guest in an automobile approaching a railroad crossing is for the jury where he failed to look in the direction from which the train was coming at the first opportunity, the automatic signaling device was not working, and there was as much reason to expect a train from the opposite direction as from that from which the train came, while the former track would be crossed first in passing over the crossing. Crowley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 204 Iowa, 1385, 213 N. W. 403, 53 A.L.R. 964.

The contributory negligence of a wife riding on the back seat of an automobile driven by her husband when it collided at night with a train at a railroad crossing is for the jury where she testified that she looked to the left, and then looked in the direction of the watchman's shanty and did not see a watchman, and inferred from his absence that no train was approaching. Archer v. Chicago, M. St. P. & P. R. Co. 215 Wis. 509, 255 N. W. 67, 95 A.L.R. 851.

Where an automobile was driven at a reckless speed only a short distance before the accident occurred, and there was little time for the guest to observe the danger and protest, or take other precautions for his own safety, it is a question of fact for the jury to determine whether he had time and opportunity to do so. Sharp v. Sproat, 111 Kan. 735, 208 P. 613, 26 A.L.R. 1421.

[9] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1520.

[10] Annotation: 92 A.L.R. 1520.

[11] Beyrent v. Kaplan, 315 Pa. 353, 172 A. 651, 92 A.L.R. 1515.

[12] Chaney v. Moore, 101 W. Va. 621, 134 S. E. 204, 47 A.L.R. 800.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 809.

§ 715. Collision—At Intersection.—In accidents at intersections,[15] the question of the contributory negligence of a motorist involved in the occurrence, is generally a factual one for the jury to decide,[16] unless there is no conflict in the inferences that may be drawn from the surrounding facts and circumstances. The provisions of local statute or ordinance respecting the regulation of traffic at intersections are pertinent in this connection, although a violation thereof does not necessarily operate to withdraw the issue of negligence or contributory negligence from the consideration of the jury.[17] But where it appears that the injury occurred at a time when the plaintiff, driving an automobile, was attempting to pass the defendant driving another automobile, and that the ordinance prohibits such passing, the question of contributory negligence of the defendant becomes a matter of law to be charged by the court.[18]

§ 716. —Automobile and Street Car.—The mere fact that a collision takes place between a street car and an automobile at a street intersection does not, in itself, establish the fact that it was caused by negligence so that an automobilist so injured cannot recover,[19] no conclusive inference as to the motorist's contributory negligence may be drawn as a matter of law from the accident itself.[20] Whether a motorist when about to cross a street railway track at a street intersection was negligent, under a given set of circumstances, in failing to stop, look, and listen for approaching cars, is a question for the jury.[1]

The question of the automobilist's negligence, speed, and lack of control in approaching the intersection, or his negligence in failing to discover approaching street cars, due to lack of sufficient light, obstructed vision, etc., is ordinarily one for the jury.[2] Nor does the fact that an automobilist misjudged the speed of an approaching street car, and attempted to pass in front of it, convict him of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[3] Of course, the undisputed facts may be such as to leave room for but one inference respecting the measure of care exercised by the person injured.[4] There are many decisions holding, under the circumstances enumerated therein, an automobilist to be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in failing to look, listen, or otherwise make an effort to discover an approaching street car.[5]

He may be held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where he looked before approaching the street car tracks and saw an approaching street car, or even where he saw no street car, and failed to look again before entering the danger zone, especially where, when he looked, his view was obstructed.[6] The manner in which the motorist approached the street car intersection, as where he approached at a high rate of speed, or otherwise failed to have his automobile so under control that it could be stopped in time to avoid a collision upon the appearance of danger, may be sufficient to charge him with contributory negligence as a matter of law.[7]

---

[13] Chaney v. Moore, 101 W. Va. 621, 134 S. E. 204, 47 A.L.R. 800.

Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 807.

See HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND SIDEWALKS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 282].

[14] Annotation: 47 A.L.R. 809.

[15] See supra, § 431.

[16] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 838, 839.

[17] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

Annotation: 89 A.L.R. 839.

[18] Gosma v. Adams, 102 Fla. 305, 135 So. 806, 78 A.L.R. 1193.

[19] See supra, § 431.

[20] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 257.

[1] Union Traction Co. v. Moneyhun, 192 Ind. 288, 136 N. E. 18, 28 A.L.R. 211.

Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 257, s. 46 A.L.R. 1028.

[2] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 257, s. 46 A.L.R. 1028.

[3] Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 1030.

[4] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 257.

[5] Annotation: 28 A.L.R. 264, s. 46 A.L.R. 1032.

§ 717. —Vehicles Traveling in Same Direction.—The question of the contributory negligence of a motorist involved in a collision with a vehicle proceeding in the same direction is generally a factual one, to be decided by the jury in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances,[8] except where the facts of the case are undisputed, and admit of but one inference upon this point.[9]

§ 718. Backing Automobile.—Where the issue is presented of the plaintiff's contributory negligence in so backing his vehicle as proximately to contribute to the accident,[10] it is ordinarily a question for the jury to decide, on the basis of all the facts and circumstances, whether the acts of the plaintiff were of such character that they may reasonably be held to preclude recovery on his part for the injuries sustained.[11]

§ 719. Improper Parking.—In accordance with the well-settled rule that the mere parking of a motor vehicle on the wrong side of the road or highway does not constitute contributory negligence,[12] at least in the absence of statutory authority to the contrary,[13] it is generally held that whether such improper parking constituted the proximate cause of the accident, so as to bar recovery by the plaintiff for the resulting injuries, is a question of fact for the jury to decide.[14]

§ 720. Disregard of or Reliance upon Traffic Signals.—Where a person injured in an automobile accident was violating or disregarding traffic signals, it is generally a question for the jury to decide, where conflicting issues of fact are involved, to what extent such acts of the person injured contributed to the accident, and whether they constitute contributory negligence so as to preclude his recovery.[15] Similarly, in accordance with the well-settled rule that a pedestrian is not absolutely absolved from the duty of exercising some degree of care merely because the traffic signal is in his favor,[16] it has been held to fall within the province of the jury to decide whether the person injured exercised such care, in relying upon the traffic signals in his favor, as might be expected of a reasonably prudent traveler placed in the same situation.[17]

§ 721. Acts in Emergency.—The emergency rule is equally applicable whether the question is contributory negligence of the plaintiff or negligence on the part of the defendant,[18] and it is generally held, where the existence of a sudden peril or emergency is drawn in issue, that the question whether the plaintiff is barred by his own acts from recovering against the defendant is a factual one, properly decided by the jury,[19] unless, of course, there is no conflict in the facts of the case, or the inferences that may be drawn therefrom.[20]

---

[6] Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 1032, 1033.

[7] Annotation: 46 A.L.R. 1033.

[8] Whether the plaintiff was passing or attempting to pass the defendant's car at a given time and place is for the jury to determine. Gosma v. Adams, 102 Fla. 305, 135 So. 806, 78 A.L.R. 1193.

[9] Annotation: 62 A.L.R. 970.

[10] See supra, § 434.

[11] Annotation: 67 A.L.R. 647.

[12] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1027.
See supra, § 435.

[13] See supra, § 335.

[14] Annotation: 70 A.L.R. 1027.

[15] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 970, 975.

[16] Melville v. Rollwage, 171 Ky. 607, 188 S. W. 638, L.R.A.1917B, 133.
Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 970.
See supra, § 453.

[17] Annotation: 75 A.L.R. 970.

[18] Landry v. Hubert, 100 Vt. 268, 137 A. 97, later appeal in 101 Vt. 111, 141 A. 593, 63 A.L.R. 396.

§ 722. Physical Defect or Illness.—It being well settled that the mere disability or illness of a pedestrian is an insufficient basis upon which to predicate a finding of contributory negligence so as to preclude recovery for injuries sustained in an automobile accident,[1] it has been held a question for the jury to decide, upon the basis of all the available facts and circumstances, to what extent a pedestrian's disability or illness proximately contributed to the accident, and whether he acted as a reasonably prudent man would have acted under similar circumstances.[2]

§ 723. Violating Rules of Road.—It being well settled that a violation of the rules of the road, apart from the mere disregard of traffic signals, will not constitute contributory negligence,[3] it has been held that whether such violation constituted the proximate cause of the accident, so as to preclude the injured person from recovering, is a question for the jury to decide, unless the facts, and the inferences that may be drawn therefrom, are not in conflict.[4]

§ 724. Riding on Running Board.—In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a person riding on the running board of an automobile is not thereby contributorily negligent, so as to preclude recovery for injuries sustained;[5] whether a person so injured acted as a reasonably prudent person would have acted under similar circumstances ordinarily presents a factual question for the jury to decide, except, of course, where the facts, and the inferences that may be drawn therefrom, do not conflict.[6]

§ 725. Impaired Visibility.—Generally where the driver of an automobile has been injured, or his car damaged, in a motor accident where his view was obscured by dust, smoke, or atmospheric conditions, it is a question for the jury whether his conduct constituted contributory negligence,[7] unless the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident, and the inferences that may be drawn therefrom, are not in dispute.[8] Factors to be considered in connection with arriving at a determination of the motorist's contributory negligence are the speed of his automobile, extent of visibility, control of car, and any other matters explanatory of the proper degree of care and caution demanded under the circumstances.[9]

§ 726. Blinding Lights.—The issue as to whether a person operating a motor vehicle was contributorily negligent, where he continued to drive while blinded by the glare of the headlights of an approaching vehicle, and met with an accident, is ordinarily one within the province of the jury to decide[10] in the absence of specific statutory authority to the contrary, unless the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident are not in dispute, and the inferences that may be drawn therefrom do not conflict.[11]

---

[19] Dickinson v. Erie R. Co. 81 N. J. L. 464, 81 A. 104, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 150.
Annotation: 6 A.L.R. 683.

[20] Annotation: 79 A.L.R. 1289.

[1] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 136.
See Negligence [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[2] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 137.

[3] See supra, §§ 420 et seq.

[4] Annotation: 63 A.L.R. 277.

[5] Vandell v. Sanders, 85 N. H. 143, 155 A. 193, 80 A.L.R. 550.
See supra, § 484.

[6] Annotation: 80 A.L.R. 557.

[7] Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582.
Annotation: 37 A.L.R. 594, s. 73 A.L.R. 1027.

[8] Annotation: 73 A.L.R. 1026.

[9] Rozycki v. Yantic Grain & Products Co. 99 Conn. 711, 122 A. 717, 37 A.L.R. 582; Peasley v. White, 129 Me. 450, 152 A. 530, 73 A.L.R. 1017.

The question of the negligence of an automobile driver in continuing in the nighttime, at a rate of speed which prevented his stopping within his range of vision after a passing vehicle had filled the air with dust, so that he collided with an unlighted parked truck, is for the jury. Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

§ 727. Defects in Road.—The question whether a motorist who sustained injuries in an accident due to a defect or obstruction in the highway was contributorily negligent in not having discovered the dangerous condition in sufficient time to avoid it is ordinarily a factual one for the jury to decide,[12] unless the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident were such as to leave room for but one inference respecting the issue of negligence.[13-17]

3. INSTRUCTIONS.

§ 728. Generally.—The general rules govering instructions to the jury in civil actions are applicable in actions to recover damages for injuries sustained through the negligent operation of automobiles.[18] In such cases the instructions should define the relative degrees of care and caution properly exercisable by those involved in the accident,[19] and, in general, state the issues of fact clearly and concisely, as well as the law applicable to the case.[20] However, the mere statement of abstract principles of law, without any pertinency to the evidentiary facts in the case, is not in itself ground for reversal, unless of course, its tendency is to confuse or mislead the jury.[1] The corresponding duties of those who participated in the occurrence, under the surrounding facts and circumstances, should be stated by the court in its instructions to the jury.[2] Instructions are proper that lay down appropriate rules by which the jury should be guided in determining the necessity for a warning signal by a motorist on a specific occasion,[3] or define the standard of conduct that will meet the requirements of ordinary care,[4] or make clear the intent of a statute covering the particular situation.[5] An instruction that assumes a fact is not erroneous if it expressly requires the jury to find such fact.[6]

---

[10] Annotation: 10 A.L.R. 295.

[11] Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291 (similarly as to water on the windshield); Ruth v. Vroom, 245 Mich. 88, 222 N. W. 155, 62 A.L.R. 1528; Schwalen v. W. P. Fuller & Co. 107 Wash. 476, 182 P. 592, 187 P. 367, 10 A.L.R. 296.

[12] Martin v. J. A. Mercier Co. 255 Mich. 587, 238 N. W. 181, 78 A.L.R. 520.

Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 529.

[13-17] Davis v. Mellen, 55 Utah, 9, 182 P. 920, 7 A.L.R. 1193.

Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 525.

See HIGHWAYS [Also 13 R. C. L. p. 462, §§ 378 et seq.].

[18] Heacock v. Baule, 216 Iowa, 311, 249 N. W. 437, 93 A.L.R. 151; Nunnelley v. Muth, 195 Ky. 352, 242 S. W. 622, 27 A.L.R. 910; Anderson v. Asphalt Distributing Co. — Mo. —, 55 S. W. (2d) 688, 86 A.L.R. 1033; Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508; West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391; Gabrielsen v. Seattle, 150 Wash. 157, 272 P. 723, 63 A.L.R. 200.

[19] Saliba v. Saliba, 178 Ark. 250, 11 S. W. (2d) 774, 61 A.L.R. 1348; Heacock v. Baule, 216 Iowa, 311, 249 N. W. 437, 93 A.L.R. 151; Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508; Maloney v. Kaplan, 233 N. Y. 426, 135 N. E. 838, 26 A.L.R. 909 (holding that motorist is entitled to an instruction defining the degree of care which would relieve him from liability for the accident); Harmon v. Haas, 61 N. D. 772, 241 N. W. 70, 80 A.L.R. 1131.

[20] West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

An automobile bus company sued jointly with an insurer for the benefit of persons injured by the operation of its vehicles is entitled to have the jury advised by proper instruction as to the limit of the insurer's liability. Field v. North Coast Transp. Co. 164 Wash. 123, 2 P. (2d) 672, 76 A.L.R. 1114.

[1] Gabrielsen v. Seattle, 150 Wash. 157, 272 P. 723, 63 A.L.R. 200.

[2] Nunnelley v. Muth, 195 Ky. 352, 242 S. W. 622, 27 A.L.R. 910. In an action to recover damages for driving a truck against a boy in a highway, it is reversible error to refuse an instruction as to the duty of the driver to give a signal when he saw the boy, where the evidence is conflicting as to the speed of the truck and the distance of the boy from it when he could have been first seen.

[3] Heacock v. Baule, 216 Iowa, 311, 249 N. W. 437, 93 A.L.R. 151; Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508.

[4] West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

§ 729. Form and Contents Generally.—The general rules respecting the form and manner of giving of instructions[7] apply in actions brought to recover damages for injuries sustained in an automobile accident.[8] Such instructions should be clear and understandable, whether they purport to define issues of fact or to state the law applicable to a particular situation;[9] in such action the plaintiff and defendant alike are entitled to have issues of fact presented by the pleadings submitted to the jury without the introduction of extraneous matter that may mislead them or divert their minds from a consideration of the evidence pertinent to the real issues;[10] the instructions should be founded upon and applicable to the particular issue joined and upon which proof has been adduced. Mere abstract legal rules applicable to any case, or mere statements of law in general terms, even though correct, should not be given unless they are made applicable to the issues in the case at bar.[11] While instructions should be so given that the jury will understand to what questions they refer, it is not necessary that an instruction should be separately stated in immediate connection with every question upon which it bears, if, from the nature of the instruction, the jury will understand the relation.[12]

The instructions should be complete and cover all the issues that are properly raised for determination.[13] However, where the trial court instructs upon the issues raised by the pleadings and justified by the evidence, it is not error for it to fail to instruct on all theories which may be drawn from the evidence presented, in the absence of requests for such instructions.[14] An instruction which tells the jury they should find for plaintiff if they believe certain enumerated facts is defective if there is wholly omitted from such enumeration a fact which the evidence strongly tends to prove, which, if true, would require a different verdict.[15]

§ 730. Requests to Charge.—In accordance with the well-established practice that permits counsel, by means of appropriate requests, to call the attention of the court to any omissions from its charge to the jury,[16] counsel for either party in an automobile accident case will generally be allowed to request such instructions of the court as will make the charge already given more complete, definite, or fuller in scope.[17] In fact, where the trial court gives instructions upon the issues raised by the pleadings and justified by the evidence, which are correct in law and sufficient to guide the jury, its charge is not open to objection because it fails to instruct on all the theories which may be drawn from the evidence introduced, unless a request for further instructions is made.[18] Error cannot be predicated upon such omissions to charge, where no request to charge was made.[19] It may happen that certain phases of the court's charge will be clouded as to their true meaning, particularly to a lay mind. A party believing instructions given to be misleading or obscure should request an explanatory charge.[20] In automobile cases, as in other cases, however, requested instructions, even though correctly stating the law, which ignore an essential phase of a case that is supported by evidence,[1] or are without basis in the evidence,[2] or are not applicable to the situation disclosed by the evidence,[3] or assume facts not supported by the evidence,[4] or are included in[5] or fully covered by those given,[6] will be refused. Nor as a general rule can a party complain because requested instructions were not given to the jury in the exact language of the request,[7] although in some jurisdictions requested instructions, if proper, must be given in the form requested.

---

[5] Ibid.

[6] Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508.

[7] See TRIAL [Also INSTRUCTIONS, 14 R. C. L. p. 764].

[8] Hanson v. Matas, 212 Wis. 275, 249 N. W. 505, 93 A.L.R. 546.

[9] Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Burgess, 119 Ala. 555, 25 So. 251, 72 Am. St. Rep. 943; Jacobs v. Bangor, 16 Me. 187, 33 Am. Dec. 652.

See TRIAL [Also INSTRUCTIONS, 14 R. C. L. p. 798].

[10] Jessup v. Davis, 115 Neb. 1, 211 N. W. 190, 56 A.L.R. 1403.

[11] Undisputed testimony that an injury to one assisting in pushing an automobile out of a ditch might have occurred because of the failure of the driver to apply the brakes prevents regarding as abstract an instruction to the effect that the driver would be liable if he negligently released the brakes, or negligently failed to apply them, even though the complaint alleges that the negligence of the driver consisted in his suddenly and carelessly reversing the gear of the car and increasing the supply of gasoline, thereby causing the car to lurch and roll backward. Saliba v. Saliba, 178 Ark. 250, 11 S. W. (2d) 774, 61 A.L.R. 1348.

[12] Hanson v. Matas, 212 Wis. 275, 249 N. W. 505, 93 A.L.R. 546, holding that where, in giving general instructions as to what constitutes ordinary care, the court expressly stated that they were given for the purpose of defining the word "negligence" as used in all questions submitted as to the negligence of both parties involved in the accident, it was unnecessary to repeat them in connection with the submission of each question.

[13] Harmon v. Haas, 61 N. D. 772, 241 N. W. 70, 80 A.L.R. 1131.

[14] Ibid.

[15] Lawson v. Dye, 106 W. Va. 494, 145 S. E. 817, 63 A.L.R. 271.

[16] See TRIAL [Also INSTRUCTIONS, 14 R. C. L. p. 795].

---

[17] Anderson v. Asphalt Distributing Co. — Mo. —, 55 S. W. (2d) 688, 86 A.L.R. 1033; Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508; Merrihew v. Goodspeed, 102 Vt. 206, 147 A. 346, 66 A.L.R. 1109. If the court fails to charge on all essential matters, it is the duty of counsel to call its attention to the claimed shortage or error, so that it may be corrected.

It is reversible error to refuse an instruction as to the duty of the driver to give a signal when he saw the boy in the highway against whom he drove his automobile, where the evidence is conflicting as to the speed of the automobile, and the distance of the boy from it when he could have been first seen. Nunnelley v. Muth, 195 Ky. 352, 242 S. W. 622, 27 A.L.R. 910.

[18] Harmon v. Haas, 61 N. D. 772, 241 N. W. 70, 80 A.L.R. 1131.

In the absence of a specific request, reversible error cannot be predicated upon the failure of the court to instruct, in an action by a passenger in a motor car to hold the owner liable for injury caused by its reckless operation, which he encouraged, or in which he acquiesced, that he might recover if before the accident he requested careful operation. Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Ellzey, 275 U. S. 236, 72 L. ed. 259, 48 S. Ct. 80.

[19] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963; Giddings v. Honan, 114 Conn. 473, 159 A. 271, 79 A.L.R. 1215.

[20] Brown v. Woolverton, 219 Ala. 112, 121 So. 404, 64 A.L.R. 640.

[1] Thixton v. Palmer, 210 Ky. 838, 276 S. W. 971, 44 A.L.R. 1379 (refusal to instruct upon contributory negligence); Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508.

Where defendant relies upon the negligence of plaintiff in driving on the wrong side of the road, thus forcing defendant to turn to the left in order to avoid a head-on collision, it is not error to refuse an instruction which would have told the jury that the operator of a vehicle, in meeting another vehicle coming from the opposite direction, should turn to the right of the center of the road, and, if they believed that defendant did not turn to the right of the center of the road on the occasion of the accident, and in consequence thereof, and as a proximate result thereof, the damages sued for were caused, they should find for plaintiff, if they further believe that plaintiff at the time was exercising ordinary care, because the requested instruction ignores such defense. Lawson v. Dye, 106 W. Va. 494, 145 S. E. 817, 63 A.L.R. 271.

[2] Opecello v. Meads, 152 Md. 29, 135 A. 488, 50 A.L.R. 1385; Potter v. Gilmore, 282 Mass. 49, 184 N. E. 373, 87 A.L.R. 1462.

A requested instruction with reference to the contributory negligence of a child struck by an automobile, based upon the assumption that, in running out into the road, he did so to get out of the way of a car backing out of the driveway, is properly refused where there is no direct evidence that he was in the path of the backing car. Merrihew v. Goodspeed, 102 Vt. 206, 147 A. 346, 66 A.L.R. 1109.

[3] Merrihew v. Goodspeed, 102 Vt. 206, 147 A. 346, 66 A.L.R. 1109.

[4] West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

[5] Merrihew v. Goodspeed, 102 Vt. 206, 147 A. 346, 66 A.L.R. 1109; Washington v. Seattle, 170 Wash. 371, 16 P. (2d) 597, 86 A.L.R. 113.

[6] Marland Ref. Co. v. Duffy, 94 Okla. 16, 220 P. 846, 35 A.L.R. 52; Crowell v. Duncan, 145 Va. 489, 134 S. E. 576, 50 A.L.R. 1425.

Refusal of a requested instruction regarding the emergency doctrine applicable to the driver of an automobile is not error where the subject has been covered by an instruction given, which, unlike that requested, conditions the doctrine upon the driver's freedom from negligence in bringing about the perilous situation. McDowell v. Hurner, 142 Or. 617, 20 P. (2d) 395, 88 A.L.R. 578.

[7] Lange v. Hoyt, 114 Conn. 590, 159 A. 575, 82 A.L.R. 486.

A request for an instruction that the evidence clearly shows a fact is properly refused if the evidence in regard thereto is not clear.[8]

§ 731. Charges after Jury Have Retired.—As in other civil cases,[9] instructions given in automobile cases should be read in open court, and if, after the jury have retired for deliberation, the necessity arises for further instructions or communications of any kind concerning the case, these should be given in open court in the presence of the parties or their counsel,[10] unless the parties or their counsel have waived the right to be present, or to be notified of the return of the jury.[11]

§ 732. Duplication of Instructions.—An instruction should not be duplicative of what has already been charged.[12] Accordingly, a definition of contributory negligence need not be included in an instruction in which the court declares the law and tells the jury that the plaintiff is entitled to recover if they find a particular condition to exist, unless he himself was guilty of contributory negligence, where such negligence is defined in other instructions.[13] So, where, in giving general instructions as to what constitutes ordinary care, the court expressly stated that they were given for the purpose of defining the word "negligence" as used in all questions submitted as to the negligence of both parties, it is not necessary to repeat them in connection with the submission of each question.[14] The fact, however, that a proposition of law applicable to the facts which the evidence tends to prove may be given to the jury in one instruction does not preclude another instruction covering the same subject, but which is intended to and does define with greater particularity and clearness the rights of the party depending thereon.[15]

§ 733. Invading Province of Jury; Assuming Facts.—In giving instructions in automobile accident cases the trial court must observe the general rule that the court must not by its instructions invade the province of the jury.[16] Thus, the court cannot, upon conflicting evidence, instruct the jury that a fact, such as that a chauffeur in charge of a car in which a guest was injured was guilty of gross negligence, has been established.[17] An instruction should not assume as true the existence or nonexistence of any material fact in issue,[18] concerning which there is a conflict in the evidence.[19] Accordingly, the factual inquiry as to whether the brakes of a car were defective at the time of the accident cannot properly be answered either one way or the other by the court in its charge to the jury, where the evidence introduced upon this point is in conflict.[20] But an instruction in an action to recover damages for injuries to a pedestrian struck by an automobile, where the brakes of the vehicle are alleged to have been defective, that the plaintiff cannot recover if the jury shall be reasonably satisfied from the evidence that the sole proximate cause of the injury was the rapid rate at which the car was being driven, does not necessarily assume that the car was being driven at a rapid rate of speed.[1] Nor is an instruction erroneous in assuming a fact, if it expressly requires the jury to find such fact.[2] The mere statement by the trial judge, in expounding to the jury the terms of a relevant statute, that it would be a breach of the statute to attain a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour, is not reversible error because of absence of evidence that such speed existed, if the jury were told that fact.[3]

---

[8] West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

[9] See Trial [Also Instructions, 14 R. C. L. p. 723].

[10] Taulborg v. Andresen, 119 Neb. 273, 228 N. W. 528, 67 A.L.R. 642.

[11] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.

[12] Saliba v. Saliba, 178 Ark. 250, 11 S. W. (2d) 774, 61 A.L.R. 1348.

Trial [Also Instructions, 14 R. C. L. pp. 751 et seq.]

[13] Saliba v. Saliba, 178 Ark. 250, 11 S. W. (2d) 774, 61 A.L.R. 1348.

[14] Hanson v. Matas, 212 Wis. 275, 249 N. W. 505, 93 A.L.R. 546.

[15] Chaney v. Moore, 101 W. Va. 621, 134 S. E. 204, 47 A.L.R. 800.

[16] Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P. (2d) 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092; McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 523, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139.

[17] Flynn v. Lewis, 231 Mass. 550, 121 N. E. 493, 2 A.L.R. 896.

[18] Pratt v. Western Bridge & Constr. Co. 116 Neb. 553, 218 N. W. 397, 58 A.L.R. 527, later appeal in 118 Neb. 736, 226 N. W. 324, holding that an instruction which advises the jury that if they should find the plaintiff guilty of negligence, and that "such negligence . . . was slight in comparison with the gross negligence of the defendant, then you will find for the plaintiff," is erroneous in that "the gross negligence of the defendant" is thereby assumed.

See generally Trial [Also Instructions, 14 R. C. L. p. 738].

[19] Jessup v. Davis, 115 Neb. 1, 211 N. W. 190, 56 A.L.R. 1403, writ of error dismissed in 276 U. S. 593, 72 L. ed. 722, 48 S. Ct. 300.

§ 734. Instruction as to Particular Matters.—The particular matters to be covered in the instructions in automobile accident cases depend upon the issues joined by the pleading and supported by the evidence.[4] They must be pertinent to the facts of the case as proved at the trial.[5] Their correctness as to substance is determined by the rules of substantive law stated above. An allegation that defendant was under the influence of intoxicating liquors includes the condition of his having been in a state of intoxication, and authorized the court to give an instruction in the language of a statute that if defendant was in a state of intoxication, he is conclusively deemed to have been unable to control the automobile.[6]

Instructions given in an automobile accident case, as a guide to the jury in determining the character and extent of a general disability following the injuries, upon which evidence was introduced at the trial, are not different from those given in any other suit to recover damages for injuries negligently inflicted.[7] In an action against the owner of an automobile to recover for injuries sustained in an accident which occurred while the car was being driven by a member of the owner's family to take another member to consult a doctor, an instruction that when the owner of an automobile directs or permits another to operate such car under such circumstances that the one so operating it may be deemed to be performing a service for the owner, whether such service is one of profit for the owner or to promote for the owner the pleasure or wish of his guest, then the person operating the automobile will be the agent or servant of the owner, and the owner will be liable for the negligence of such person, is not inapplicable to the facts of the case.[8] In an action to recover for an injury inflicted by an automobile owned by the defendant husband and driven at the time by the defendant wife, the court may properly instruct that the husband is liable for the consequences of his wife's act if at the time of the accident complained of they were "engaged in a common enterprise."[9]

---

[20] Saunders System Birmingham Co. v. Adams, 217 Ala. 621, 117 So. 72, 61 A.L.R. 1333.

[1] Saunders System Birmingham Co. v. Adams, 217 Ala. 621, 117 So. 72, 61 A.L.R. 1333.

[2] Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508.

[3] Annotation: 49 A.L.R. 666.

[4] See Trial [Also Instructions, 14 R. C. L. p. 782, §§ 49 et seq.].

[5] The giving of an instruction in an action for injuries sustained by a pedestrian when struck by an automobile while crossing a road, that failure to comply with a statute requiring an automobile to sound a signal on approaching the tops of hills, where the operator's view is obscured, constitutes negligence, is not warranted where the accident occurred at a point 256 feet beyond the top of the hill. Heacock v. Baule, 216 Iowa, 311, 249 N. W. 437, 93 A.L.R. 151.

[6] Packard v. O'Neil, 45 Idaho, 427, 262 P. 881, 56 A.L.R. 317.

[7] Mazziotte v. Bridgeport & W. Pass. Service, 116 Conn. 32, 163 A. 409, 87 A.L.R. 908.

[8] Harmon v. Haas, 61 N. D. 772, 241 N. W. 70, 80 A.L.R. 1131.

[9] Crawford v. McElhinney, 171 Iowa, 606, 154 N. W. 310, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 221.

Under a rule not unlike that applicable to other civil proceedings brought to recover damages,[10] the court may properly instruct the jury as to the presumptive effect of the suppression of material evidence in an automobile accident case.[11] On the other hand, it may properly omit to comment upon the driver's testimony that he did not know what happened, or what caused the accident, where he testified to a conversation which took place during the drive, and that he recalled passing an intersecting road, and there is no suggestion that there were any unusual incidents preceding the accident which it might be claimed that the driver should have noted and recalled, especially where his injuries were such as to render him unconscious for hours.[12] In instructing the jury regarding the testimony of a witness who testified falsely, the court should so draw its instruction as to permit the jury to disregard the testimony of such witness only when it appears that he intentionally testified falsely, and that the false testimony was in regard to some "material" fact, although it is not essential to use the term "material" provided the same meaning is conveyed by other language.[13]

§ 735. —Negligence.—It is ordinarily within the province of the jury to determine from the facts presented at the trial whether negligence was established,[14] and such determination should be made on the basis of proper instructions from the court as to the law applicable to the specific situation.[15] However, an instruction which omits to require a finding that the defendant knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, that the person injured was in danger and was oblivious thereto, is harmless if the evidence shows that the defendant could have discovered the peril had he but looked and observed the injured person with any degree of care.[16] The court may explain to the jury what constitutes ordinary care as a matter of law; an instruction that, to recover for the alleged negligent injury, plaintiff must show that he was exercising reasonable care and diligence for his own safety, cannot be regarded as making the question of negligence one of law.[17] The fact that liability for the automobile accident is sought to be predicated upon a statute does not affect this broad rule. Thus, where, pursuant to a particular statute, liability attaches only for gross negligence, it is for the jury, under proper instructions by the court, to determine whether such negligence exists.[18] An instruction by the court that if the jury shall find that certain facts are established by the evidence presented at the trial, the defendant shall be conclusively presumed to have been guilty of negligence, is not improper where such facts, if established, compel the conclusion that he was negligent as a matter of law.[19] Error in reading to the jury a requested instruction which predicates defendant's liability entirely on the question of his negligence, without regard to the contributory negligence of plaintiff, is harmless where the court instructs fully upon the bearing of contributory negligence.[20]

---

[10] See TRIAL [Also INSTRUCTIONS, 14 R. C. L. p. 723].

[11] Saliba v. Saliba, 178 Ark. 250, 11 S. W. (2d) 774, 61 A.L.R. 1348, holding that an instruction that the law presumes that evidence under the control of a party, which is withheld, would be against him if introduced, is proper as against the driver of an automobile within whose knowledge peculiarly rests the answer to a question of fact, and who failed to give his version of the occurrence.

[12] Giddings v. Honan, 114 Conn. 473, 159 A. 271, 79 A.L.R. 1215.

[13] Larsen v. Webb, 332 Mo. 370, 58 S. W. (2d) 967, 90 A.L.R. 67.

[14] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[15] Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327; Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508.

In an action arising from a collision with defendant's automobile, which was either in the center or on his lefthand side of the street, the giving of an instruction that the rights of the defendant and the person injured, who was riding a bicycle in the opposite direction, were the same, is prejudicial, where an ordinance required travelers to keep as near the righthand curb as possible, and the jury, after receiving the instructions, returned, requesting further instructions as to whether the defendant had the right to the center of the street. Hiscock v. Phinney, 81 Wash. 117, 142 P. 461, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1044.

[16] Hornbuckle v. McCarty, 295 Mo. 162, 243 S. W. 327, 25 A.L.R. 1508.

[17] Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 31, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487.

[18] Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327.

See JURY [Also 16 R. C. L. p. 189].

The giving of an instruction that if the injury complained of was the result of mere accident or misadventure, without the fault of anyone, the plaintiff cannot recover, is proper only where there is something in the record tending to show that the casualty resulted from some unknown cause, and is improper where it resulted from known actions of known persons and things, and the contention is that the cause of injury was the negligent act of one not a party to the suit.[1]

§ 736. —Weight of the Evidence.—The well-settled and firmly intrenched doctrine that the issues of fact in civil cases must be determined in accordance with the preponderance or weight of evidence[2] is applicable to the trial of automobile accident cases, and governs any instructions given therein that pertain to the existence, sufficiency, or weight of the evidence introduced.[3] Judicial attempts to define the term "preponderance of evidence" have frequently served to cloud the issue and confuse the precise intent and meaning inherent in the use of this phrase.[4] Thus, the instruction in an automobile accident case that by a preponderance of credible evidence is meant the "greater weight of the testimony," and that which best satisfies the mind as to its truth, has been held to place an unwarranted burden on the plaintiff.[5] In most jurisdictions, instructions variously worded, defining the term "preponderance or weight of evidence" as meaning evidence which, in the judgment of the jury, is entitled to the greater weight, have been held to be correct and sufficient.[6]

§ 737. —Rights and Duties.—An instruction as to the relative rights and duties of a pedestrian and a motorist under particular circumstances is proper when justified by the evidence introduced at the trial.[7] Accordingly, in an action for injury to a pedestrian by an automobile, where the parties disagree as to whether the accident occurred at a street crossing or a street intersection, the jury should be separately instructed as to the rights and duties of the parties with respect to crossings and at intersections, although by ordinance the pedestrian has the right of way in both cases.[8] In an action arising out of a collision of automobiles approaching one another on intersecting streets, the trial court should charge that if both approached the intersection at approximately the same time the one on the right, if proceeding at a lawful rate of speed, had the right of way.[9] Such an instruction is not incomplete in failing to define defendant's rights if it should be found that he entered the intersection first, where the evidence, without substantial conflict, was that both cars approached the intersection at approximately the same time.[10] In connection with a charge that one who steps into a street must remember that vehicles, etc., have a right of way, and act accordingly, the court may charge that a man must use his senses in any transaction, and that in considering plaintiff's conduct the jury should ask themselves whether a man of ordinary prudence, under all the circumstances, would have acted as plaintiff did, and that if so plaintiff would not be negligent.[11] In an action by a guest for injuries sustained in an accident to the car in which he was riding, the court should instruct the jury as to the duties which the law imposes upon, and the care to be exercised by, the guest for his own safety.[12] In an action by one who attempted to turn an automobile driven by him into an intersecting street in front of a machine coming from the opposite direction, to recover damages for injuries resulting from the ensuing collision, the jury should be instructed that it was plaintiff's duty to guide his automobile in a careful and prudent manner, and if he saw, or in the exercise of ordinary care should have seen, the approach of defendant's car, it was his duty not to drive across the path of such car so near as to make a collision probable or unavoidable.[13]

---

[19] Krause v. Rarity, 210 Cal. 644, 293 P. 62, 77 A.L.R. 1327.

[20] Roth v. Chatlos, 97 Conn. 282, 116 A. 332, 22 A.L.R. 1554.

[1] Hogan v. Kansas City Pub. Serv. Co. 322 Mo. 1103, 19 S. W. (2d) 707, 65 A.L.R. 129.

[2] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 155.

[3] Heacock v. Baule, 216 Iowa, 311, 249 N. W. 437, 93 A.L.R. 151; West v. Jaloff, 113 Or. 184, 232 P. 642, 36 A.L.R. 1391.

[4] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 155, and cases there collected.

[5] Heacock v. Baule, 216 Iowa, 311, 249 N. W. 437, 93 A.L.R. 151.

[6] Annotation: 93 A.L.R. 157.

See Trial [Also Instructions, 14 R. C. L. p. 723].

[7] Brown v. Woolverton, 219 Ala. 112, 121 So. 404, 64 A.L.R. 640; Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P. (2d) 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092; St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co. v. Prince, 145 Okla. 194, 291 P. 973, 71 A.L.R. 357.

An instruction that the operator of an automobile must anticipate the presence of other vehicular traffic and keep his vehicle under such control as will enable him to avoid collision with another automobile which is operated with reasonable care, and, if the situation so requires, must exercise reasonable care to slow down, and, if reasonably necessary, to stop, is not erroneous as taking from the jury the question of what constitutes ordinary care under the circumstances. Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P. (2d) 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092.

[8] Schwalen v. W. P. Fuller & Co. 107 Wash. 476, 182 P. 592, 187 P. 367, 10 A.L.R. 296.

The court should not instruct the jury in general terms that the law gives the right of way to the driver of the vehicle upon the main thoroughfare, without stating the conditions of and limitations upon that right.[14]

An abstract instruction, in an action for personal injuries growing out of an automobile collision, that all persons have an equal right to use the highways in an equal manner, is error when it wholly ignores the fact that under the evidence, and under a statute giving the right of way to vehicles approaching an intersection from the right when there is danger of collision, the jury may find that defendant's car had the right of way.[15]

§ 738. —Proximate Cause.—The court should define with sufficient clarity and definiteness the rule of proximate cause,[16] and then leave it to the jury, under proper instructions as to the issues of fact and the law applicable to the case, to determine the proximate cause of the accident in the light of the rule stated.[17] In an action for injuries resulting from an automobile collision, in which the jury were charged that the defendant's negligence, to be actionable, must have been the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries, the usual definition of proximate cause being given, and that if the negligence of the driver of the other car was the sole proximate cause of the accident, the defendant could not be held liable, it was held unnecessary to point out to the jury the application of the rule of proximate cause to the facts claimed to have been proven.[18] An instruction that the word "cause," as used in some of the questions submitted to the jury, "presents the simple question whether the relation of cause and effect exists between negligence on the part of the defendants and the damages which the plaintiff sustained," is insufficient in failing to impress upon the jury that the cause must have been the efficient and not a remote cause.[19]

---

[9] Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P. (2d) 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092.

[10] Ibid.

[11] McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 523, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139.

[12] Sharp v. Sproat, 111 Kan. 735, 208 P. 613, 26 A.L.R. 1421.

[13] Webber v. Park Auto Transp. Co. 138 Wash. 325, 244 P. 718, 47 A.L.R. 590.

[14] Heidle v. Baldwin, 118 Ohio St. 375, 161 N. E. 44, 58 A.L.R. 1186.

[15] Judd v. Rudolph, 207 Iowa, 113, 222 N. W. 416, 62 A.L.R. 1174.

[16] See NEGLIGENCE [Also 20 R. C. L. p. 1].

[17] Mazziotte v. Bridgeport & W. Pass. Service, 116 Conn. 32, 163 A. 409, 87 A.L.R. 908.

[18] Ibid.

§ 739. —Standard of Care.—It is the function of the court to instruct the jury as to the general standard of care required of motorists and pedestrians, and then leave it to the jury to determine whether such care was exercised upon a specific occasion.[20] The instruction should not operate to take from the jury the issue of whether the degree of care exercised at the time of the accident was adequate in the light of the surrounding circumstances.[1] Instructions to a jury in a negligence case that plaintiff is not entitled to recover if they find that defendant used due care, or that the plaintiff failed to use due care, are not objectionable as leaving to the jury the question of the meaning of "due care," where the court had defined negligence in its general charge.[2] An instruction that the operator of an automobile must anticipate the presence of other vehicular traffic and keep his vehicle under such control as will enable him to avoid collision with another automobile which is operated with reasonable care, and, if the situation so requires, must exercise reasonable care to slow down, and, if reasonably necessary, stop, is similarly not erroneous as taking from the jury the question of what constitutes ordinary care under the circumstances.[3]

§ 740. —Contributory Negligence.—Generally, it is within the province of the jury to decide from the facts in the case whether the plaintiff is guilty of such negligence contributing to the injury as will preclude his recovery,[4] and this determination is to be based upon proper instructions from the court respecting the law applicable to the case.[5] The court may, in a proper case, instruct the jury that if the accident happened in a specified manner, under stated conditions, the plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery.[6] The court may without committing prejudicial error give an instruction that there is a presumption that a person injured in a collision was exercising due care for the protection of his person at the time of the accident, but that the presumption is not conclusive where there were eyewitnesses who testified directly as to his acts.[7] Generally speaking, an instruction is erroneous which places defendant's liability entirely on his own act, without regard to the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence,[8] unless the action is based upon alleged wanton, wilful, and reckless conduct.[9] However, in an action to hold an automobile driver liable for injuring a pedestrian, an instruction cannot be given exempting defendant from liability if she temporarily took her eyes off the street to give attention to her children, without any reference to the circumstances under which the act was done.[10] An instruction, in the language of the statute, that "no person shall stand or loiter on any roadway other than in a safety zone if such act interferes with the lawful movement of traffic," is properly given in a case where a deaf person was struck by a motor vehicle while he was standing in the middle of a narrow road with his back to a blind turn a short distance away.[11] Nor, where such person, when his clothing was brushed by the front of the automobile approaching him from behind, turned toward it instead of jumping away from it, and in consequence was struck by the projecting box of the truck, is he entitled to an instruction on the emergency rule, since he acted before he was aware of his danger.[12]

---

[19] Walker v. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. 214 Wis. 519, 252 N. W. 721, 92 A.L.R. 680.

[20] Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P. (2d) 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092.

[1] Brown v. Woolverton, 219 Ala. 112, 121 So. 404, 64 A.L.R. 640.

[2] Ibid.

[3] Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P. (2d) 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092.

[4] See supra, §§ 703 et seq.

[5] Keir v. Trager, 134 Kan. 505, 7 P. (2d) 49, 81 A.L.R. 181; Stehouwer v. Lewis, 249 Mich. 76, 227 N. W. 759, 74 A.L.R. 844.

The refusal of the court, in an action for injuries sustained by a blind person who, when walking alone across a street intersection was hit by an automobile, to instruct the jury that the blind have as much right to use the streets as those who have possession of their faculties, and that it is not negligence as a matter of law for a blind person to walk unattended, without a cane, upon a public street, is reversible error where improper instructions relative to contributory negligence were equivalent to a directed verdict for the defendant. Weinstein v. Wheeler, 127 Or. 411, 271 P. 733, 62 A.L.R. 574.

[6] Stehouwer v. Lewis, 249 Mich. 76, 227 N. W. 759, 74 A.L.R. 844.

Where the defendant claimed that the boy injured ran into the side of the car, the claim being supported by the absence of marks on the front of the car and the presence of marks on its side, there is no error in charging the jury that, if the accident was due to the sudden and unanticipated act of the boy, and the defendant did not know, or have reason to anticipate, that he was going to run into the side of the automobile, the plaintiff cannot recover. Ibid.

An instruction in an action for injury to a pedestrian struck by an automobile that if the plaintiff was guilty of some negligence in walking across the street at a point other than the intersection, which either in whole or in part proximately contributed to her alleged injuries, a verdict should not be found in her favor, is not an incorrect statement of the law. Brown v. Woolverton, 219 Ala. 112, 121 So. 404, 64 A.L.R. 640.

A definition of contributory negligence need not be included in an instruction in which the court declares the law and tells the jury that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, if they find that a particular condition existed, unless he himself was guilty of contributory negligence, where such negligence is defined in other instructions.[13] Nor is an instruction that plaintiff is not entitled to recover if he failed to use due care objectionable as leaving to the jury the question of the meaning of "due care," where the court had defined negligence in its general charge.[14]

§ 741. —Emergency.—The court, in instructing on the issue of negligence, may properly define the standard of conduct applicable in an emergency, but no reversible error is committed if the court fails specifically to apply the instruction to a party to the accident, where the evidence introduced fails to show that such person acted upon his own judgment in an emergency of imminent peril not created by his own negligence.[15] Any error in giving an instruction on the emergency rule on behalf of a motorist or of a pedestrian injured by the operation of the vehicle is nonprejudicial in an action for injuries thereby occasioned, where the jury finds such person to have been negligent.[16] Refusal of a requested instruction regarding the emergency doctrine applicable to the driver of an automobile is not error where the subject is covered by an instruction given, which, unlike that requested, conditions the doctrine upon the driver's freedom from negligence in bringing about the perilous situation.[17]

---

[7] Packard v. O'Neil, 45 Idaho, 427, 262 P. 881, 56 A.L.R. 317.

[8] Roth v. Chatlos, 97 Conn. 282, 116 A. 332, 22 A.L.R. 1554.

An instruction that if the jury should believe that defendant's car was being driven at the time of the collision by another with his knowledge and consent, or at his request, about his business, he is liable to the plaintiff for any negligent act or omission of the driver which proximately caused or contributed to the injury and death of plaintiff's daughter, is misleading and erroneous as permitting a recovery even though the jury may have believed from the evidence that the person killed was guilty of contributory negligence. Fuller v. Darnell, 100 Fla. 773, 129 So. 915, 74 A.L.R. 1.

[9] Where an action for injury sustained by one operating an unregistered motor vehicle on a highway, in a collision with another vehicle, went to the jury only on a count of the declaration alleging wilful, wanton, and reckless conduct, there was no error in charging that the contributory negligence of plaintiff would not bar recovery. Potter v. Gilmore, 282 Mass. 49, 184 N. E. 373, 87 A.L.R. 1462.

[10] Bourland v. Baker, 141 Ark. 280, 216 S. W. 707, 20 A.L.R. 525.

[11] Hanson v. Matas, 212 Wis. 275, 249 N. W. 505, 93 A.L.R. 546.

[12] Ibid.

[13] Saliba v. Saliba, 178 Ark. 250, 11 S. W. (2d) 774, 61 A.L.R. 1348.

[14] Brown v. Woolverton, 219 Ala. 112, 121 So. 404, 64 A.L.R. 640.

[15] Hanson v. Matas, 212 Wis. 275, 249 N. W. 505, 93 A.L.R. 546.

§ 742. —Speed.—Where there is a lack of evidence tending to establish the excessive speed of an automobile involved in an accident, it is error for the court to instruct as to the unreasonable speed of the vehicle.[18] But where the evidence introduced at the trial is of such a character as to justify an instruction respecting the reasonableness of the speed of a motor vehicle, it is proper for the court to instruct the jury upon that point.[19] An instruction that it was not negligence to drive at statutory speed, in the absence of warning of "danger ahead," is proper, where there is no allegation or proof of negligence, except with respect to speed.[20]

4. VERDICT, FINDINGS, AND JUDGMENT

§ 743. Generally.—In actions for injuries to person or property arising from the operation of an automobile, the general rules which govern the form and sufficiency of the findings or verdict of the jury in the ordinary civil action[1] apply.[2] The jury may be polled for the purpose of ascertaining for a certainty that each juror agrees upon the verdict.[3] As in any other case, a verdict for the plaintiff implies that the jury accepted that part of the evidence favorable to the plaintiff, and that, where different inferences were possible, it drew those favorable to the plaintiff's case.[4] A quotient verdict, in an automobile accident action, obtained through an agreement whereby each juror put down the amount he thought proper, the twelve amounts were added and divided by twelve, and the quotient, by agreement, was the verdict, is invalid; but not so if, in the course of reaching an agreement, the amounts representing the views of the individual jurors were divided by twelve, and upon consideration the quotient was agreed upon as the verdict.[5]

A verdict in an action for personal injuries sustained by a pedestrian when struck by a motor truck, finding that the driver of the truck, who testified that he saw plaintiff as soon as he rounded a turn in the road, was not negligent as to lookout, and that the plaintiff, who was shown to have been exceedingly deaf and to have been standing in the middle of a narrow road with his back toward a blind turn 40 feet away, was negligent as to lookout, need not be set aside as inconsistent.[6] When the jury is required to make special findings of fact supplementing a general verdict,[7] such special findings must be consistent with the general verdict; otherwise the verdict cannot stand.[8] The form of a question to the jury in an action by a wife against her husband for injuries occasioned by his negligence in operating an automobile which collided with a train at a railroad crossing, as to whether the defendant, just prior to the collision, had failed to exercise ordinary care not to increase the danger assumed by the plaintiff upon entering the automobile, with respect to the speed at which he operated the automobile, is not such as to render the verdict for plaintiff defective on the ground that the form of the question made it impossible to determine whether the jury concluded that defendant was not driving at an excessive speed, or that he was so driving, and that plaintiff assumed the risk.[9] In automobile accident cases which are tried by a court without a jury, the court in making its findings of fact and conclusions of law is governed by the rules applicable to other civil actions.[10] In such cases a finding on the issue of contributory negligence is not necessary where the court finds that defendant's negligent acts were the sole and proximate cause of the injury sued for.[11] And notwithstanding a statutory provision that findings of fact and conclusions of law must be separately stated, a finding may be regarded as one of fact although mistakenly placed among the conclusions of law.[12]

---

[16] Ibid.

[17] McDowell v. Hurner, 142 Or. 617, 20 P. (2d) 395, 88 A.L.R. 578.

[18] Saunders System Birmingham Co. v. Adams, 217 Ala. 621, 117 So. 72, 61 A.L.R. 1333.

[19] An instruction on excessive speed of an automobile is proper in an action to recover damages for injury to a pedestrian struck by it, where it traveled 16 feet, plus the width of the street, while the pedestrian was walking from the street car track to the curb. Riddel v. Lyon, 124 Wash. 146, 213 P. 487, 37 A.L.R. 486.

[20] Strickfaden v. Greencreek Highway Dist. 42 Idaho, 738, 248 P. 456, 49 A.L.R. 1057.

[1] See TRIAL [Also VERDICT, 27 R. C. L. p. 831].

[2] Babbitt, Motor Vehicle Law, 4th ed. p. 1579, § 2194.

[3] Hoffman v. St. Paul, 187 Minn. 320, 245 N. W. 373, 86 A.L.R. 198.

[4] Railway Exp. Agency v. Little (C. C. A. 3d) 50 F. (2d) 59, 75 A.L.R. 963.

[5] Hoffman v. St. Paul, 187 Minn. 320, 245 N. W. 373, 86 A.L.R. 198.

[6] Hanson v. Matas, 212 Wis. 275, 249 N. W. 505, 93 A.L.R. 546.

The general rules respecting judgments in civil proceedings[13] apply to judgments recovered in actions based upon injuries sustained in automobile accidents.[14] A judgment in one action will bar recovery in another action involving the same tort and the same accident, although the damages demanded in each action are for a different injury.[15]

5. New Trial; Review

§ 744. Generally.—The procedure and the grounds for a new trial in automobile cases are the same as, and are governed entirely by the general rules applicable, in other civil actions; reference should be made to the general article.[16]

The broad rules governing appeals in civil actions generally[17] apply to appeals in actions instituted to recover damages for injuries sustained in automobile accidents.[18] In the absence of practice or local statute to the contrary, the procedural aspects of such appeals are no different from those of an appeal in any other civil proceeding. And, as in other actions,[19] a judgment in a proceeding involving the operation of a motor vehicle will not be reversed for error that is harmless or nonprejudicial to the other side,[20] whether such error relates to arguments of counsel,[1] admission of evidence,[2] or matters connected with the pleadings.[3]

---

[7] See Trial [Also Verdict, 27 R. C. L. p. 866, § 39].

[8] Marsh v. Boyden, 33 R. I. 519, 82 A. 393, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 582; Minor v. Stevens, 65 Wash. 423, 118 P. 313, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1178.

[9] Archer v. Chicago, M. St. P. & P. R. Co. 215 Wis. 509, 255 N. W. 67, 95 A.L.R. 851.

[10] See Trial.

[11] Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A.L.R. 291.

[12] Linberg v. Stanto, 211 Cal. 771, 297 P. 9, 75 A.L.R. 555.

[13] See Judgments [Also 15 R. C. L. p. 554].

[14] Verhoeks v. Gillivan, 244 Mich. 367, 221 N. W. 287, 65 A.L.R. 1083; Underwood v. Dooley, 197 N. C. 100, 147 S. E. 686, 64 A.L.R. 656.

[15] Underwood v. Dooley, 197 N. C. 100, 147 S. E. 686, 64 A.L.R. 656.

[16] See New Trial [Also 20 R. C. L. p 214].

[17] See Appeal and Error, Vols. 2 and 3.

[18] Voegeli v. Waterbury Yellow Cab Co. 111 Conn. 407, 150 A. 303, 69 A.L.R. 902; Ragan v. MacGill, 134 Or. 408, 292 P. 1094, 72 A.L.R. 860; Ryder v. Hayward (Sturtevant v. Hayward) 98 Vt. 106, 126 A. 491, 36 A.L.R. 453.

[19] See Appeal and Error, Vol. 3, p. 555, §§ 1002 et seq.

[20] Ryder v. Hayward (Sturtevant v. Hayward) 98 Vt. 106, 126 A. 491, 36 A.L.R. 453.

X. DAMAGE TO VEHICLES

§ 745. Generally.—The measure of damages for destruction of or injury to an automobile has been variously stated by the courts, the variations of statement representing in the main not difference of judicial opinion, but merely different methods of arriving at full compensation to the owner. The familiar doctrine that an invasion of property rights calls for an award of substantial, as distinguished from nominal, damages, is applicable to claims for damages to both pleasure and commercial vehicles. The jury should award fair and reasonable compensation according to the circumstances of each case. If the actual injury is trifling, the damages will be small, but in any event, they are in the nature of substantial and not nominal damages.[4] In accordance with this general proposition, the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate for all of the detriment proximately caused.[5] Generally, when an automobile that has been damaged by the negligence of another can be repaired, the proper measure of damages is the cost of the repairs[6] and the value of the loss of the use of it while it is being repaired.[7] If it cannot be repaired, then the measure of damages is the difference between the market value of the automobile before it was damaged and the value of the wreckage.[8]

§ 746. Difference in Market Value before and after Injury.—When an automobile is totally destroyed the measure of damages is its reasonable market value before its destruction.[9] Where an automobile has been damaged by the wrongful act of another, and cannot by repair be placed in as good a condition as it was in before the injury,[10] the measure of damages is the difference between the market value of the automobile immediately before the accident and its market value immediately afterwards.[11] This is the rule applicable where the automobile is used for pleasure purposes,[12] as well as where the vehicle damaged is used for business purposes.[13] The basis for computation in this respect is the market value of the vehicle, irrespective of the fact that the owner procured it at a lower price.[14]

---

[1] Ragan v. MacGill, 134 Or. 408, 292 P. 1094, 72 A.L.R. 860.

An error in permitting an unwarranted statement by counsel to stand does not require reversal if prejudice is not made to appear. Ryder v. Hayward (Sturtevant v. Hayward) 98 Vt. 106, 126 A. 491, 36 A.L.R. 453.

[2] Ryder v. Hayward (Sturtevant v. Hayward) 98 Vt. 106, 126 A. 491, 36 A.L.R. 453.

Example of judgment reversed for prejudicial error in admission of evidence. Voegeli v. Waterbury Yellow Cab Co. 111 Conn. 407, 150 A. 303, 69 A.L.R. 902.

[3] Gardiner v. Solomon, 200 Ala. 115, 75 So. 621, L.R.A.1917F, 380.

[4] Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1350.

Generally as to measure of damages for injury to or loss or destruction of personal property, see DAMAGES [Also 8 R. C. L. p. 486, §§ 47 et seq.].

[5] Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319; Weick v. Dougherty, 139 Ky. 528, 90 S. W. 966, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 348; Perkins v. Brown, 132 Tenn. 294, 177 S. W. 1158, L.R.A.1915F, 723, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 124.

Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 910.

[6] See infra, § 749.

[7] See infra, § 750.

[8] See infra, § 746.

[9] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 918.

[10] See infra, § 749.

[11] Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319; Louisville & I. R. Co. v. Schuester, 183 Ky. 504, 209 S. W. 542, 4 A.L.R. 1344; Chambers v. Cunningham, 153 Okla. 129, 5 P. (2d) 378, 78 A.L.R. 905.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1352, s. 32 A.L.R. 706, and 78 A.L.R. 910.

See DAMAGES [Also 8 R. C. L. p. 486].

[12] Marland Ref. Co. v. Duffy, 94 Okla. 16, 220 P. 846, 35 A.L.R. 52.

Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 711, s. 78 A.L.R. 917.

Where a new automobile purchased by a dealer for resale has been disfigured by scratching and writing a name on the body of the car which penetrates the paint and varnish, the proper measure of damages is the difference in the value of the car immediately before and immediately after the injury. Broadie v. Randall, 114 Kan. 92, 216 P. 1103, 32 A.L.R. 708.

[13] Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319; Louisville & I. R. Co. v. Schuester, 183

§ 747. —Time and Place of Valuation.—Ordinarily, the value of the property damaged is to be determined as of the time and place of its damage or injury.[14a] Proof of its value within a reasonable time, under the circumstances of the particular case before and after the injury, is competent, provided the valuation was not too far removed from the accident, either in time or place.[15] The rules herein stated are not affected by the existence or nonexistence of a market value at such time or place. If there is a market value, the same should be applied. If not, then the actual or intrinsic value should govern.[16]

§ 748. —Evidence as to Value.—In showing the actual cash value of the car at the time of loss, insured is entitled to show all the circumstances bearing upon that question. In the case of a used car, evidence as to the original cost thereof is admissible on the issue as to its value at the time of loss, under the general rule that the present value of a used article can be determined with a reasonable degree of certainty by taking such original cost and making due allowance for depreciation on account of age, use, conditions, and other elements.[17] The owner himself is competent to testify as to the value of the car at the time of loss,[18] even though he may not possess sufficient knowledge or skill to testify as an expert on the subject.[19] Determination of the qualification of a witness to testify as to the value of the car at the time of loss is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court.[20]

In determining the value of an automobile after injury, for the purpose of fixing the damages to be allowed therefor, evidence is admissible as to the reasonable value of repairs necessary to restore it to usable condition.[1]

§ 749. Cost of Repairs as Measure of Damages.—While the general rule is that the measure of damages in respect of an injured automobile is the difference in its value immediately before and immediately after the injury, this measure may be established by showing the reasonable cost of necessary repairs to restore it to its previous condition. Where that character of proof is resorted to, the injured party must show that the cost of the repairs is reasonable, and the bill for the repairs must not exceed the difference in the market value of the car before and after the injury.[2] The cost of repairs is the proper measure of damages for injury to an automobile, if the machine is not substantially destroyed or rendered valueless, and can be repaired at reasonable expense,[3] although, in addition thereto, the owner may recover compensation

---

Ky. 504, 209 S. W. 542, 4 A.L.R. 1344; Chambers v. Cunningham, 153 Okla. 129, 5 P. (2d) 378, 78 A.L.R. 905.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1350, s. 32 A.L.R. 706, and 78 A.L.R. 910.

[14] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 919.

[14a] Damages recoverable for conversion of automobile are limited to value at the time of conversion with interest on that sum to the date of trial. Mims v. Bennett, 160 S. C. 39, 158 S. E. 124, 78 A.L.R. 361.

[15] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 918.

[16] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 918.

[17] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 176.

For more detailed treatment of the subject of insurance as it pertains to automobiles, see §§ 504 et seq. supra.

[18] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 174.

[19] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 175.

[20] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 176.

[1] Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

As to cost of repairs as measure of recovery, see infra, § 749.

[2] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 919.

[3] Carruthers v. Campbell, 195 Iowa, 390, 192 N. W. 138, 28 A.L.R. 949; Thrapp v. Meyers, 114 Neb. 689, 209 N. W. 238, 47 A.L.R. 585; Marland Ref. Co. v. Duffy, 94 Okla. 16, 220 P. 846, 35 A.L.R. 52; Stubbs v. Molberget, 108 Wash. 89, 182 P. 936, 6 A.L.R. 318.

See also Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 911.

It is not reversible error to permit the damages allowed for injuries to an auto-for the loss of use of the car while the repairs are in progress.[4] The rule applies whether such vehicle is one used solely for pleasure,[5] or a commercial vehicle.[6]

But it often happens that no repairs can restore the original value of the automobile. To meet this situation it has been held that the measure of damages is the cost of repair plus the difference, if any, between the value of the car after repair and its value before the injury.[7] Likewise, it may happen that repairs will increase the value of the car beyond its market value before it was injured. Accordingly, it has been said that the amount to be allowed is not the actual cost of repairs, since they may increase the value, but what it would reasonably cost to place the car in its original condition.[8] In an action for damage to an automobile, it is not a condition precedent to recovery for items of damage for repairs that plaintiff should have actually expended the sums or incurred liability therefor.[9]

§ 750. Compensation for Loss of Use during Repairs.—Whether an automobile is used for pleasure only, or for commercial purposes, in case of injury thereto the owner may recover, in addition to the cost of repair, the value of its use during the time in which he was necessarily deprived thereof,[10] at least when such damages are pleaded.[11] Damages for this purpose may be measured by the cost of hiring another automobile while the repairs are being made;[12] that is, by the rental, or, as it is sometimes termed, the "usable," value of the car,[13] and this is true notwithstanding the fact that no other automobile was mobile to be based upon the cost of repairs rather than upon the difference in value of the machine immediately before and immediately after the injury, in the absence of evidence tending to show that the cost of repairs exceeded such difference in value. Murphy v. Hawthorne, 117 Or. 319, 244 P. 79, 44 A.L.R. 1397.

---

[4] See infra, § 750.

[5] Carruthers v. Campbell, 195 Iowa, 390, 192 N. W. 138, 28 A.L.R. 949; Marland Ref. Co. v. Duffy, 94 Okla. 16, 220 P. 846, 35 A.L.R. 52; Bader v. Marlin, 160 Wash. 460, 295 P. 160, 78 A.L.R. 914; Stubbs v. Molberget, 108 Wash. 89, 182 P. 936, 6 A.L.R. 318.

Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 712, s. 78 A.L.R. 917.

[6] Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319; Thrapp v. Meyers, 114 Neb. 689, 209 N. W. 238, 47 A.L.R. 585; Chambers v. Cunningham, 153 Okla. 129, 5 P. (2d) 378, 78 A.L.R. 905.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1352, s. 32 A.L.R. 706, and 78 A.L.R. 910.

[7] Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319.

Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 712.

[8] Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 712.

[9] Chambers v. Cunningham, 153 Okla. 129, 5 P. (2d) 378, 78 A.L.R. 905.

[10] Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319; Louisville & I. R. Co. v. Schuester, 183 Ky. 504, 209 S. W. 542, 4 A.L.R. 1344; Antokol v. Barber, 248 Mass. 393, 143 N. E. 350, 32 A.L.R. 703; Chambers v. Cunningham, 153 Okla. 129, 5 P. (2d) 378, 78 A.L.R. 905; Maryland Ref. Co. v. Duffy, 94 Okla. 16, 220 P. 846, 35 A.L.R. 52; Perkins v. Brown, 132 Tenn. 294, 177 S. W. 1158, L.R.A.1915F, 723, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 124; Stubbs v. Molberget, 108 Wash. 89, 182 P. 936, 6 A.L.R. 318.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1355, s. 32 A.L.R. 706, and 78 A.L.R. 910; Ann. Cas. 1917A, 127.

[11] An allegation of great damage by negligent collision with an automobile justifies a recovery for loss of its use while the injuries are being repaired. Antokol v. Barber, 248 Mass. 392, 143 N. E. 350, 32 A.L.R. 703.

A judgment will not, however, be reversed for allowing the cost of hiring a substitute automobile while one injured by another's negligence is being repaired, although special damages are not pleaded, where the result would have been the same had the correct rule been followed, so that no harm was done. Antokol v. Barber, 248 Mass. 393, 143 N. E. 350, 32 A.L.R. 703.

[12] Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 713, s. 78 A.L.R. 917.

[13] Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319; Louisville & I. R. Co. v. Schuester, 183 Ky. 504, 209 S. W. 542, 4 A.L.R. 1344; Perkins v. Brown, 132 Tenn. 294, 177 S. W. 1158, L.R.A.1915F, 723, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 124.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1359, s. 32 A.L.R. 706, and 78 A.L.R. 910.

Whether the two terms, "rental value" and "usable value," may be treated as equivalent when applied to property so detained, is a matter on which the authorities seem to differ. The Connecticut court in Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319, holds to the view that they are not equivalent. On the other hand, the intermediate appellate courts of New York and Illinois hold that the rental value of a car during the period of loss of its use is a proper actually procured during such interval.[14] It is not strictly accurate, however, to say that the owner is entitled to recover as damages the amount actually paid for the hire of another car; the amount which he pays is merely evidence of rental value.[15] Nor can the owner of a motor car kept for pleasure, and used only a small portion of each day, recover as damages for the loss of the use of the machine the full daily rental value of machines in that vicinity.[16] While it seems that in the case of articles of constant and daily use usable value, being well known and readily ascertained, constitutes a proper element of damage, the loss sustained by reason of the deprivation must not be left to conjecture.[17] The value of the use may be recovered, though the reason that another car was not procured was that the plaintiff could not afford to pay for it, and not because similar cars were not to be had.[18] It has also been held that the value of the use may be recovered, though this, with the amount allowed for depreciation of value, exceeds the market value of the car.[19] On the other hand, it has been held that where the depreciation of value is taken as the measure of damages, no allowance should be made for loss of use.[20] In estimating the value of the use of a car during repairs, only a reasonable time for repair is to be allowed.[1] To establish the rental value of an automobile during a certain period of time, the opinions of expert witnesses familiar with the subject may be admitted.[2]

§ 751. Compensation for Loss of Profits through Being Deprived of Use.—While the loss of prospective profits may, in certain circumstances, be considered as an element of damages for injury to a commercial vehicle, the weight of authority is to the contrary.[3] In no event, however, may one recover for loss of profits that are purely speculative or problematical.[4]

§ 752. Interest on Value of Car.—It seems to be the generally accepted rule that it is within the discretion of the jury to allow interest on the value of a commercial vehicle in an action for negligent injury thereto, if an accurate estimate of the value can be made.[5]

§ 753. Expenses of Removal and Storage.—The expense incident to removing a damaged vehicle and the storage charges incurred while awaiting repairs measure of plaintiff's damages. Perkins v. Brown, 132 Tenn. 294, 177 S. W. 1158, L.R.A. 1915F, 723, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 124.

---

Rental value includes a substantial allowance for depreciation and repairs, for the overhead expenses, and for the lost profits from renting the car. Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319.

[14] Jackson Architectural Iron Works v. Hurlbut, 158 N. Y. 34, 52 N. E. 665, 70 Am. St. Rep. 432; Allen v. Fox, 51 N. Y. 562, 10 Am. Rep. 641; Perkins v. Brown, 132 Tenn. 294, 177 S. W. 1158, L.R.A.1915F, 723, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 124.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1359, s. 32 A.L.R. 706, and 78 A.L.R. 910.

In New York no recovery can be had for loss of use unless a substitute car is actually hired. Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 714, s. 78 A.L.R. 917.

[15] Antokol v. Barber, 248 Mass. 393, 143 N. E. 350, 32 A.L.R. 703.

[16] Perkins v. Brown, 132 Tenn. 294, 177 S. W. 1158, L.R.A.1915F, 723, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 124.

[17] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 1359.

[18] Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 714, s. 78 A.L.R. 917.

[19] Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 714, s. 78 A.L.R. 917.

[20] Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 714.

[1] Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 714. Accordingly, recovery cannot be had for loss of use for thirty days, the time the car was in the shop, when the work done did not take more than three days.

[2] Moses v. Lockwood, 54 App. D. C. 115, 295 F. 936, 33 A.L.R. 1467.

[3] Weick v. Dougherty, 139 Ky. 528, 90 S. W. 966, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 348.

Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1361.

[4] Annotation: 78 A.L.R. 913.

[5] Louisville & I. R. Co. v. Schuester, 183 Ky. 504, 209 S. W. 542, 4 A.L.R. 1344; Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, 92 A. 413, L.R.A.1915C, 319.

When the injury is less than a total loss, the measure of damage is the difference in the value of the vehicle before and after loss, with interest from the date of loss. Cook v. Packard Motor Car Co. 88 Conn. 590, L.R.A.1915C, 319, 92 A. 413.

may be considered by the jury as elements of damages.[6] It should appear that such charges are reasonable, in view of the services rendered.[7]

§ 754. Pleading and Proof as to Value in Action on Insurance Policy.—The general rules governing pleadings in other civil proceedings[8] are applicable in the instance of actions upon automobile fire, theft, or collision insurance policies to recover for loss of or damage to the car insured.[9] Where, as is usually the case under such a policy of insurance, the amount recoverable is limited to the actual value of the car at the time of the loss, it is ordinarily incumbent upon the insured, in an action upon the policy to recover as for a total loss, to show the value of the car at the time of the loss.[10] There can be no recovery where there is neither allegation nor proof as to the value of the car at that time,[11] although if the insured proves the value of the car at the time of the loss, any defect in his petition by reason of its failure specifically to allege the value of the car at that time is cured after verdict.[12] The absence of an allegation as to the value of the car, even though required by the terms of the policy, is not a fatal defect, no demurrer to the plaintiff's pleadings having been made.[13] But in the absence of evidence from which the jury could arrive at the value of the automobile at the time of its injury sometime after the issuance of the policy, a verdict found for the plaintiff, in an amount representing the face value of the policy is unauthorized.[14] The foregoing rules apply, notwithstanding the circumstance that the policy may be one subject to a valued policy law, whereby it is provided, in effect, that no property shall be insured for more than three fourths of its value at the time the policy is issued, and that, when so insured, "its value shall not be questioned in any proceeding," since a statute of that kind establishes the value of the property insured only as of the date the policy is issued, and not as of the date of the loss.[15]

Under policy of insuring a mortgagee, a conditional vendor of an automobile, against loss by reason of conversion, etc., if the policy is construed as not limiting the measure of recovery to the value of the car at the time of its conversion, etc., no evidence need be offered as to the value of the car at that time.[16] If, on the other hand, the policy is to be construed as limiting the measure of recovery to the value of the car at the time of its conversion, etc., the insured, in order to recover an amount equal to the indebtedness owed him by the mortgagor or conditional vendee, must show that the car was worth that amount at the time of its conversion; in other words, he must show that the car at that time was worth at least whatever amount was claimed upon the policy.[1]

---

[6] Annotation: 32 A.L.R. 707. The cost of towing away and storing an injured car may be recovered. Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1364.

[7] Annotation: 4 A.L.R. 1364.

[8] See PLEADING [Also 21 R. C. L. p. 431].

[9] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 172.

[10] Bonesteel Motor Co. v. National Union F. Ins. Co. 128 Or. 554, 275 P. 608, 64 A.L.R. 166.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 172.

[11] Bonesteel Motor Co. v. National Union F. Ins. Co. 128 Or. 554, 275 P. 608, 64 A.L.R. 166.

Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 172, 173.

The failure to allege and prove the value, at the time of loss by fire, of a motor truck insured for a stated sum, but with the proviso that the insurer would be required to pay the insured only the market value at the time of loss, is fatal to recovery on the policy. Bonesteel Motor Co. v. National Union F. Ins. Co. 128 Or. 554, 275 P. 608, 64 A.L.R. 166.

[12] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 172.

It is the duty of the insurer to give notice of its intention, in such a case, to rely upon the issue as to the value of the car at the time of loss. Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 172.

[13] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 172.

[14] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 173.

[15] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 174.

[16] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 175.

[1] Automobile Finance & Secur. Co. v.

Where, in an action for the cost of repairs merely, an insurer by special plea raises the contention that the repair bill exceeds the value of the car at the time it was damaged, its liability being limited to the acual cash value of the car at that time, it is no part of the insured's case to negative that proposition, but the burden is upon the insurer to establish it as a part of its defense.[2]

In showing the actual cash value of the car at the time of loss, the insured is entitled to show all the circumstances having a bearing upon that question.[3] Opinions as to value may be given by properly qualified witnesses; the owner himself is competent to testify as to the value of the car.[4]

Proof of the value of the car at the time the policy was issued, without other testimony showing how the car was afterwards used, its condition at the time of the loss as compared with its condition at the time it was insured, or other facts from which the value of the car at the time of the loss can be ascertained, is insufficient for the purpose of establishing its value at the time of the loss.[5] Similarly, evidence as to the purchase price of the car is not, of itself, sufficient for the purpose of establishing its value at the time of the loss a short time later, and so, will not support a judgment for even a lesser amount.[6]

Upon conflicting evidence as to the value of the car at the time of loss, the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses are questions for the jury.[7]

XI. CRIMES INCIDENT TO OWNERSHIP OR OPERATION

A. In General

§ 755. Generally.—The advent and ever-increasing use of automobiles has led to the enactment of numerous regulatory provisions, violations of which are made criminal offenses. Speeding,[8] reckless driving,[9] failure to stop when signaled or in case of accident,[10] are offenses against the public safety. The operation of a motor vehicle without sufficient brakes or signal devices, the failure to dim headlights upon the approach of another automobile, neglect to carry lights after dark, are statutory crimes. Stealing an automobile, and buying or concealing a stolen automobile knowing it to have been stolen, are criminal offenses.[11] Driving while intoxicated is likewise a crime.[12] Killing a person while operating a motor vehicle in violation of law,[13] or negligently,[14] constitutes homicide, usually manslaughter.[15] Injuring a person under like conditions constitutes an aggravated assault,[16] an assault with a deadly weapon,[17] or an assault and battery.[18] The penalty provided for violations

---

Globe Indemnity Co. (1926) 161 La. 303, 55 A.L.R. 823, 108 So. 545.

[2] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 174.

[3] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 176.

[4] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 174, 175.

[5] Automobile Finance & Securities Co. v. Globe Indem. Co. 161 La. 303, 108 So. 545, 55 A.L.R. 823; Bonesteel Motor Co. v. National Union F. Ins. Co. 128 Or. 554, 275 P. 608, 64 A.L.R. 166.

[6] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 177.

[7] Annotation: 64 A.L.R. 180.

An insurance adjuster may be found to have elected to repair a stolen car recovered in a damaged condition, from evidence that he took possession of it, gave the work to a repair man, and took it from him and employed another to complete it, while the owner never contracted for its repair himself, or authorized, recognized, or ratified such contract. Councill v. Sun Ins. Co. 146 Md. 137, 126 A. 229, 51 A.L.R. 29.

[8] See infra, § 806.

[9] See infra, § 802.

[10] See infra, § 780.

[11] See infra, §§ 798, 801.

[12] See infra, § 766.

[13] See infra, § 788.

[14] See infra, § 789.

[15] See infra, § 787.

[16] See infra, 764.

[17] See infra, § 763.

[18] See infra, § 763.

is often a fine,[19] though not infrequently imprisonment. Often the violation of such a statute is made a misdemeanor, though occasionally it is made a felony, as is driving while intoxicated,[20] or leaving the scene of an accident without stopping and giving information required by law.[1]

Payment of a so-called "wheel tax" may be enforced by fine.[2] In some jurisdictions the violation of a municipal ordinance relating to automobiles gives rise merely to an action which, although commenced by affidavit and warrant, is not a criminal but a civil proceeding.[3]

§ 756. Right of Legislature to Prohibit Use of Automobile on Public Thoroughfare.—The legislature may, with a view to the safety of the public, provide for the complete exclusion of automobiles from a highway on which, in its judgment, they should not be allowed.[4] The right to operate a motor vehicle is not an unrestricted right, but a privilege which can be exercised only in accordance with the legislative restrictions fixed thereon.[5]

§ 757. Applicability of Principles of Criminal Law.—The principles of criminal law [6] apply to violations of criminal statutes regulating the operation of motor vehicles. As in other criminal prosecutions, persons charged with violations of the motor vehicle law have the right to trial by jury,[7] and guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[8] At common law a criminal intent is an essential element of a crime, but is not always a necessary element of statutory crimes.[9] Under many statutes making noncompliance with motor vehicle regulations a penal offense neither intent to violate a regulation nor knowledge that it is being violated constitutes an element of the offense.[10] The only question involved is whether the defendant did the forbidden act.[11]

§ 758. Right to Jury Trial.—The general rules governing the right to trial by jury in criminal cases are discussed under another title; [12] here, however, it may be observed that when applying those rules to the crime under discussion the gravity of the offense under the statute involved, including the nature of the penalty that may be imposed, is determinative of the right to a trial by jury.[13] This is true as to prosecutions for driving while intoxicated,[14] as well as to prosecutions for other crimes.[15]

---

[19] State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, L.R.A.1915E, 264, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513.

Re Rogers, 7 East L. Rep. (P. E. Island) 212, 15 Ann. Cas. 1167.

Annotation: 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502.

[20] See infra, § 767.

[1] See infra, § 780.

[2] Chicago v. Morell, 247 Ill. 383, 93 N. E. 295, 139 Am. St. Rep. 340.

[3] Chicago v. Morell, 247 Ill. 383, 93 N. E. 295, 139 Am. St. Rep. 340. And see Actions, Vol. 1, p. 433, § 42.

[4] State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512; Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 S. E. 848, L.R.A.1915E, 264, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513.

See People v. Rosenheimer, 209 N. Y. 115, 102 N. E. 530, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 977.

Annotation: L.R.A.1915E, 264.

Forbidding the use of automobiles on highways constructed over deep ravines and along the edges of cliffs, to protect the lives of their occupants and of those attempting to use horses along such roads, is a reasonable regulation. State v. Mayo, 106 Me. 62, 75 A. 295, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 502, 20 Ann. Cas. 512.

[5] Ex parte Kneedler, 243 Mo. 632, 147 S. W. 983, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 622, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 923.

[6] See Criminal Law [Also 8 R. C. L. p. 38].

[7] See infra, § 758.

[8] See Evidence [Also Criminal Law, 8 R. C. L. pp. 218 et seq.].

[9] See Criminal Law [Also 8 R. C. L. pp. 60, 62].

[10] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1434.

A statute making possession of a motor vehicle with the manufacturer's serial number removed, defaced, or changed a penal offense is a valid exercise of the police power, as against the contention that one might be guilty under the act if he merely had in his possession a car from which the numbers had been removed without his knowledge. See infra, § 800.

A city ordinance regulating operation of motor vehicles on the streets of the city, and requiring a red rear light to be displayed between certain hours, may impose a penalty for its violation without making a specific intent or guilty mind an essential element of the misdemeanor. See infra, § 778.

[11] Annotation: 11 A.L.R. 1434.

[12] See Jury [Also 16 R. C. L. pp. 192 et seq., §§ 13 et seq.].

§ 759. Persons Liable.—The owner or person in control of an automobile may be criminally liable for an offense committed in operating it, not only when he is operating it personally, but also when he procures or permits the car to be driven by another person who is in the car with him. This is true where a homicide is committed in operating the automobile.[16] If the owner of an automobile permits or authorizes a person whom he knows to be intoxicated to drive it, he may be convicted of manslaughter or a degree of murder for a death caused by the reckless driving of such person.[17] An intoxicated person in charge of an automobile, who directs another intoxicated person to drive the car, will be liable for the criminal negligence of the latter in the operation of the car, which results in the killing of a person in the highway.[18]

All who join in an enterprise to take a pleasure ride in an automobile on a highway are liable in case the one having control of the machine is guilty of reckless driving.[19]

The owner of an automobile may be criminally liable for violation by a servant of the terms of the license or a regulation.[20]

---

[13] District of Columbia v. Colts, 282 U. S. 63, 75 L. ed. 177, 51 S. Ct. 52.

[14] Annotation: 42 A.L.R. 1513, s. 49 A.L.R. 1401, and 68 A.L.R. 1375.

In New Jersey it has been held that a statute prohibiting the driving of an automobile upon a public highway while under the influence of intoxicating liquor does not violate the state Constitution by depriving defendant of a right of trial by jury. Annotation: 75 L. ed. 208.

[15] In District of Columbia v. Colts, 282 U. S. 63, 75 L. ed. 177, 51 S. Ct. 52, it was held that one charged with having driven an automobile, not merely at a forbidden rate of speed, or recklessly, but so as to endanger property and individuals, has a constitutional right to a jury trial.

[16] Story v. United States, 57 App. D. C. 3, 16 F. (2d) 342, 53 A.L.R. 246, writ of certiorari denied in 274 U. S. 739, 71 L. ed. 1318, 47 S. Ct. 576; State v. Campbell, 82 Conn. 671, 74 A. 927, 135 Am. St. Rep. 293, 18 Ann. Cas. 236; Com. v. Horsfall, 213 Mass. 232, 100 N. E. 362, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 682; Ex parte Liotard, 47 Nev. 169, 217 P. 960, 30 A.L.R. 63; State v. Hopkins, 147 Wash. 198, 265 P. 481, 59 A.L.R. 688, writ of certiorari denied in 278 U. S. 617, 73 L. ed. 540, 49 S. Ct. 21.

Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 771; Ann. Cas. 1914A, 684.

One who puts a dangerous instrumentality like an automobile in the immediate control of a careless and reckless driver, sits by his side, and permits him, without protest, so recklessly and negligently to operate the car as to cause the death of another, is responsible as principal for the act. Story v. United States, 57 App. D. C. 3, 16 F. (2d) 342, 53 A.L.R. 246, writ of certiorari denied in 274 U. S. 739, 71 L. ed. 1318, 47 S. Ct. 576.

[17] Story v. United States, 57 App. D. C. 3, 16 F. (2d) 342, 53 A.L.R. 246, writ of certiorari denied in 274 U. S. 739, 71 L. ed. 1318, 47 S. Ct. 576; Ex parte Liotard, 47 Nev. 169, 217 P. 960, 30 A.L.R. 63; State v. Trott, 190 N. C. 674, 130 S. E. 627, 42 A.L.R. 1114 (guilty of second degree murder); State v. Hopkins, 147 Wash. 198, 265 P. 481, 59 A.L.R. 688, writ of certiorari denied in 278 U. S. 617, 73 L. ed. 540, 49 S. Ct. 21 (guilty of manslaughter).

Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 772.

The owner of an automobile cannot jeopardize the lives of others by placing it in the hands of one under the influence of liquor, with permission to use it, or by allowing such person to use it with his knowledge and approval, without becoming liable criminally, where a statute prescribes punishment for one causing bodily injury by the operation of such instrumentality while intoxicated. Ex parte Liotard, 47 Nev. 169, 217 P. 960, 30 A.L.R. 63.

[18] State v. Trott, 190 N. C. 674, 130 S. E. 627, 42 A.L.R. 1114, wherein a conviction of murder in the second degree was sustained, it appearing that the accused, while intoxicated, directed another intoxicated person to drive his car, and that the car, containing the accused and several others, was driven on a main street at a speed of over 60 miles per hour, colliding with another car and killing a passenger in the accused's car. The court said that killing under such circumstances was murder, being an unlawful killing with malice aforethought, implied from the nature of the acts leading up to the homicide, and also that the intoxication of the accused did not prevent the imputation to him of a criminal intent.

[19] State v. Davis, 88 S. C. 229, 70 S. E. 811, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 295.

[20] Griffiths v. Studebakers [1924] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 102, 12 B. R. C. 1062—Div. Ct.

Annotation: 12 B. R. C. 1066.

The owner of a motor car is liable to the penalty imposed by the Roads Act for a violation of a road vehicle regulation au-

§ 760. Applicability of Motor Vehicle Regulations to Public Officials or Employees.—In many jurisdictions statutes and ordinances expressly give fire and police apparatus the right of way over other vehicles,[1] and in some instances regulations governing the speed of motor vehicles expressly except from their operation police and fire department vehicles, or provide that such apparatus shall not be limited as to speed while being used in the performance of the duties of such departments.[2] Apart from these express provisions, however, many courts take the view that public officers or employees cannot be subjected to criminal prosecution for violation of speed regulations while in the discharge of duties to the efficient performance of which speed is essential.[3] This rule has been applied to municipal fire departments,[4] to peace officers in the pursuit of fleeing criminals,[5] to the War Department,[6] and to police officers while engaged in the performance of their duty,[7] though as to the last proposition there is some authority to the contrary.[8]

Public officers, etc., are subject to other regulations.

For instance, a statute exempting municipal property from taxation does not relieve the municipality from the necessity of obtaining a license to operate motor vehicles on the public highways, although the fees are designed in part to raise revenue for governmental purposes, where the licensing statute expressly provides for the exemption of certain other vehicles from its operation.[9]

§ 761. Applicability of Motor Vehicle Regulations to Motorcycles.—By express provision, or by construction, motor vehicle acts in many jurisdictions thorizing limited trade licenses, subject to the observance of certain conditions, one of which was "that not more than two persons in addition to the driver shall be carried," where a limited trade license had been issued on the owner's car, which was driven on the highway by one of its servants with more than two persons in addition to the driver, although this was without the knowledge of the owner and contrary to his express orders, mens rea not being an essential ingredient of the offense. Griffiths v. Studebakers [1924] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 102, 12 B. R. C. 1062—Div. Ct.

---

[1] See supra, § 40.

[2] Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 460, s. 23 A.L.R. 418.

[3] Kansas City v. McDonald, 60 Kan. 481, 57 P. 123, 45 L.R.A. 429; State v. Sheppard, 64 Minn. 287, 67 N. W. 62, 36 L.R.A. 305; State v. Burton, 41 R. I. 303, 103 A. 962, L.R.A.1918F, 559; State v. Gorham, 110 Wash. 330, 188 P. 457, 9 A.L.R. 365.

Annotation: 9 A.L.R. 367; 19 A.L.R. 460, s. 23 A.L.R. 418; Ann. Cas. 1917D, 565.

Statutes or ordinances regulating the speed of motor vehicles on the street are inapplicable to police or fire apparatus while on active duty, notwithstanding the fact that the act establishing the speed limit employs the words "all vehicles," "any vehicle," or "any person." Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 460, s. 23 A.L.R. 418.

It would seem that the reason underlying the general rule would make it applicable to the drivers of ambulances of municipal or state hospitals in emergency calls, but in the limited authority bearing on the question it was held that the driver of a horse-drawn ambulance, apparently owned by a private hospital, was subject to a speed-regulating ordinance, and that such ordinance was not affected by another ordinance giving ambulances the right of way over other vehicles. Annotation: 9 A.L.R. 368.

[4] State v. Sheppard, 64 Minn. 287, 67 N. W. 62, 36 L.R.A. 305.

Annotation: 9 A.L.R. 367.

[5] State v. Gorham, 110 Wash. 330, 188 P. 457, 9 A.L.R. 365.

Annotation: 9 A.L.R. 368.

[6] State v. Burton, 41 R. I. 303, 103 A. 962, L.R.A.1918F, 559.

Annotation: 9 A.L.R. 368.

In State v. Burton, 41 R. I. 303, 103 A. 962, L.R.A.1918F, 559, it was held that a member of the United States Naval Reserve force on duty as a despatch rider was not subject to state speed laws when traveling on a public highway, in time of war, under orders of his superior officers to proceed with all possible despatch in the performance of a duty assigned him, the reason given being that the rules established by the general assembly regulating the use of the highways and the streets are subordinate to the exigencies of military operations by the Federal government in time of war.

[7] State v. Gorham, 110 Wash. 330, 188 P. 457, 9 A.L.R. 365.

[8] Annotation: 19 A.L.R. 461, s. 23 A.L.R. 418.

[9] Annotation: 23 A.L.R. 418.

embrace motorcycles, making the drivers thereof subject to the penalties prescribed for failure to comply with such motor vehicle regulations.[10]

§ 762. Constitutionality of Statutes.—The constitutionality of motor vehicle acts is generally upheld.[11] Such statutes must be definite in specifying the conduct which is condemned or prohibited, to the end that the ordinary member of society may know how to comply with their requirements.[12]

A law regulating the use of automobiles alone, of all the vehicles which use the highways, is not invalid special legislation.[13]

Requiring an automobile to carry a number does not violate the constitutional provision against unreasonable searches, or compel the owner to testify against himself, or deprive him of property without due process of law.[14] The general rule against delegation of legislative power does not preclude conferring upon a local subdivision or administrative officer the power to prescribe or vary regulations concerning motor vehicles used on the highways.[15]

B. Particular Crimes

1. Assault and Battery

§ 763. Generally.—In accordance with principles of the common law, as well as by express statutory provisions, a criminal assault and battery may be committed by striking a person with an automobile.[16] It is sometimes broadly stated that a person is guilty of assault and battery who, while intentionally violating a statute regulating the operation of motor vehicles, as, for example, a statute prohibiting the driving of an automobile beyond a certain speed limit, unintentionally runs into, strikes, and injures a person rightfully passing upon or across such street,[17] but there is considerable authority for the proposition that the violation of a statute while operating a motor vehicle is merely a circumstance to be considered in passing on the guilt of the driver.[18] While the injury of a person by the negligent operation of an automobile is not necessarily a criminal assault, yet where the injury was the result of reckless, wanton, and wilful conduct, showing an utter disregard of the safety of others, the law imputes to the wrongdoer a wilful and malicious intention, even though he may not in fact have entertained such intention.[19] However, a person who strikes another in a highway with a defective automobile which he is driving in excess of the statutory speed limit, without lights, in dark and storm, cannot, on the theory that one intends the natural consequences of his act, be convicted of assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury if he did not know of the presence of the injured person, or have any intent to injure him.[20] The jarring of the occupant of a vehicle by the wrongful propelling of a motor vehicle against it may constitute an assault and battery, although such occupant is not thrown from the car or struck in any part of his body.[1]

---

[10] Annotation: 48 A.L.R. 1090, s. 70 A.L.R. 1253.

A motorcycle comes within the meaning of a statute providing for the registration and identification of motor vehicles, where the words "motor vehicle" are defined to mean all vehicles propelled by power other than muscular power, except traction engines and such motor vehicles as run only upon rails or tracks. People v. Smith, 156 Mich. 173, 120 N. W. 581, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 607.

In Re Kessler, 26 Idaho, 764, 146 P. 113, L.R.A.1915D, 322, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 228, it was apparently assumed that a motorcycle was a motor vehicle.

[11] As to the constitutionality of statutes making the driving of an automobile while intoxicated a criminal offense, see § 767.

As to the constitutionality of statutes penalizing a failure to stop, give information, etc., in case of an injury to person or property, see infra, § 785.

As to the constitutionality of statutes declaring the possession of an automobile from which the identifying numbers have been removed to be a criminal offense, see infra, § 800.

[12] People v. Grogan, 260 N. Y. 138, 183 N. E. 273, 86 A.L.R. 1266.

[13] State v. Swagerty, 203 Mo. 517, 102 S. W. 483, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671.

[14] People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L.R.A. 345, holding that power to require the registering and numbering of automobiles is conferred upon the city council by charter authority to control, prescribe, and regulate the manner in which the streets shall be used and enjoyed.

[15] Re Hinkelman, 183 Cal. 392, 191 P. 682, 11 A.L.R. 1222; Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 85 N. E. 848, L.R.A.1915E, 264, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513.

Annotation: 87 A.L.R. 547.

The right to use the public highways in the business of carrying passengers or freight is subject to the powers of the state, through legislative enactment, to impose reasonable and impartial regulations upon such use; and this power may be delegated by the legislature to the governing bodies of municipal corporations. Annotation: 87 A.L.R. 551.

A statute expressly providing for the quality of headlights which shall be used on motor vehicles, and for the establishment of testing agencies to determine whether or not the lights in use comply with the law, is not invalid as a delegation of legislative power. Re Hinkelman, 183 Cal. 392, 191 P. 682, 11 A.L.R. 1222.

[16] Brimhall v. State, 31 Ariz. 522, 255 P. 165, 53 A.L.R. 231; Williamson v. State, 92 Fla. 980, 111 So. 124, 53 A.L.R. 250.

Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 835; L.R.A.1917D, 950.

[17] Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 835.

§ 764. Aggravated Assault.—An aggravated assault is one where the means or instruments used are highly dangerous, or where the assailant has some ulterior and malicious motive.[2] Mere negligence on the part of the operator of an automobile, resulting in a personal injury, is not therefore enough to establish an aggravated assault.[3] But one who operates an automobile recklessly, wantonly, or wilfully, and shows an utter disregard of the safety of others, may be convicted of aggravated assault, although there was no intent on his part to inflict injury. Such a conviction may rest upon the fact that the defendant, while driving an automobile at a reckless speed in the night, without headlights, on the wrong side of the road, in violation of positive law, ran against and injured another person.[4] An automobile may be so used as to constitute a deadly weapon and the driver may be guilty of an aggravated assault,[5] or an assault with a deadly weapon.[6]

§ 765. —Voluntary Drunkenness as a Defense.—As a general rule voluntary drunkenness is not an excuse for, or a defense to a charge of, the commission of a crime.[7] Consequently, it is not a defense to a prosecution for an aggravated assault committed by driving an automobile in such a manner as to injure another person.[8]

---

[18] State v. Sudderth, 184 N. C. 753, 114 S. E. 828, 27 A.L.R. 1180.
Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 835.

[19] Brimhall v. State, 31 Ariz. 522, 255 P. 165, 53 A.L.R. 231.
Annotation: L.R.A.1917D, 950.

[20] State v. Richardson, 179 Iowa, 770, 162 N. W. 28, L.R.A.1917D, 944.
Annotation: L.R.A.1917D, 950.

[1] State v. Sudderth, 184 N. C. 753, 114 S. E. 828, 27 A.L.R. 1180.

[2] See Assault and Battery, Vol. 4, p. 142, § 26.

[3] Brimhall v. State, 31 Ariz. 522, 255 P. 165, 53 A.L.R. 231.

[4] Ibid.
Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 768.

[5] Williamson v. State, 92 Fla. 980, 111 So. 124, 53 A.L.R. 250.
Annotation: 99 A.L.R. 835.

Where, in a prosecution for the offense of "aggravated assault by means of an automobile," the indictment so describes the instrumentality used and the manner of its use as to show that the same constituted a deadly weapon, but omits expressly to allege that it was a deadly weapon, the trial court will not be held to have committed a reversible error in denying a motion in arrest of judgment based upon such omission. Williamson v. State, 92 Fla. 980, 111 So. 124, 53 A.L.R. 250.

[6] People v. Benson, 321 Ill. 605, 152 N. E. 514, 46 A.L.R. 1056.

One attempting to pass an overtaken automobile in a highway under conditions rendering his conduct so reckless and wanton as to show an utter disregard of the safety of the persons in the overtaken car may, if he strikes such car and causes injury to its occupants, be found guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon. Ibid.

[7] See Criminal Law [Also 8 R. C. L. p. 129, § 106].

2. Driving while Intoxicated

a. Under Common Law

§ 766. Generally.—At common law driving an automobile while intoxicated is an indictable offense only when such driving amounts to a common nuisance; that is to say, only when the public has been inconvenienced or endangered thereby.[9]

b. Under Statutes

